Should we, as this opponent does argue from the ſufferings of a perſon, and the hatred and oppoſition he and his doctrine meets with, that therefore he is a wicked man, or an impoſtor, we of all people ſhould be moſt unjuſt ; we ſhould be in danger of being unjuſt to the memory of ſome of the beſt men that ever were. Solomon ſays, a juſt man falleth [into trouble] ſeven times, and riſeth up again, Prov. xxiv. 16. and his Father David ; many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivers them out of them all, Pſ. xxxiv. 9. and Solomon in another place ſays, an unjuſt man is an abomination to the juſt ; and he that is upright in the way, is abomination to the wicked, Prov. xxix. 27. agreeable to which laſt obſervation is that of Petronius Arbiter, who tho' an heathen, ſays, "That a man can no ſooner be an enemy to all vice, and walk in the way of virtue, but he becomes the object of hatred ;" apud Grot. in Matt. x. 22. Socrates, who had the honour to be pronounced by the oracle of Apollo, to be the wiſeſt man, and who has ſince almoſt univerſally had the character of the beſt man among the Greeks, (ſee Ælian. hiſt. var. l. 2. c. 13.) was put to death by his countrymen, the Athenians, a people more renowned for civility and good humour than the Jews. He was always apprehenſive of ſuffering, and ſenſible of the danger he incurred by oppoſing the evil practices of men. He is ſo plain as to tell the Athenians, "That it is impoſſible for any man to be ſafe among them, or any where elſe, who honeſtly and courageouſly oppoſes vice and injuſtice." He alſo ſays, that he had choſen a private life, as beſt ſuited to anſwer his deſign ; and that if he had been in the magiſtracy, and taken the courſe he had done of inſtructing and admoniſhing all people, his days muſt have been ſhort ; ſee Plat. Apolog. Socrat. p. 31. E. And Tully obſerved in his time, that philoſophy, which propoſed to cure the minds of men, was ſuſpected and generally hated as a dangerous thing ; Cicero's Tuſc. Q. l. 3. init. We could mention ſeveral ſovereign princes who loſt their lives in attempts of reformation, how then can it be brought with the leaſt pretence of reaſon, as an argument againſt the great reformation of the world by the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, that he was not careſſed, but perſecuted to death by the Jews? Their obſtinacy and barbarity will never conquer the truth of his doctrine and goodneſs ; therefore, for any one ſeriouſly to mention the enmity of the Jews againſt Jeſus, as an objection againſt him, can be owing to nothing, in my opinion, but ſtrange ignorance or prejudice, or a moſt contemptuous opinion of all the reaſon and obſervation of mankind. Beſides,

There are innumerable proofs in the Evangeliſts, not only that the raiſing of Lazarus was a real miracle, but alſo that the Phariſees knew it to be ſo. Their not putting Lazarus or any other perſon to death, as an accomplice with Jeſus, is a demonſtration that this and the other miracles of Jeſus were known to be real, and not impoſtures. It is apparent from the trial of Jeſus, that the truth of his miracles could not be called in queſtion. If they had, the Evangeliſts, who have recorded ſo many charges againſt Jeſus, and ſo many ſpiteful, ſcurrilous reproaches on him, would not have omitted this. Yet

Foraſmuch as that jewdaizing chriſtian (Woolſton) has triumphed chiefly in a perſuaſion, that he has baffled the literal ſenſe, and conſequently the veracity of this miracle, I ſhall give you the ſtrength of his argument, and our anſwer, and leave it to the reader to judge how much he has failed in his impious attempt.

In his fifth diſcourſe (p. 38.) he ſays, that the ſtory of Lazarus is long and brimful of abſurdities ; but that he will ſingle out only three or four of them at preſent, &c.

Firſt then, ſays Mr. W. obſerve, that Jeſus is ſaid to have wept and groaned for the death of Lazarus. —— Patience and reſignation unto God upon the death of our deareſt friends and relations is what all philoſophers have rightly taught ; and Jeſus, one would think, ſhould have been the moſt heroical example of theſe graces. —— A ſtoical apathy had better became him than ſuch childiſh and effeminate grief, p. 38.

It does not appear from St. John, that Jeſus did weep and groan for the death of Lazarus. He ſays, indeed, that Jeſus wept : Then ſaid the Jews, Behold how he loved him. But it does not follow, that in this they judg'd right, any more than in ſome other reflections paſs'd on Jeſus at other times ; which though the Evangeliſts knew to be falſe, they do not concern themſelves to refute them. But ſuppoſing he did out of love for Lazarus weep for his death ; there is nothing in this inconſiſtent with patience and reſignation to God ; ſee Dr. Harris's Remarks on the caſe of Lazarus, p. 75. Nor is there any thing therein weak and effeminate. The ancients, who by many are thought beſt to have underſtood human nature, did not think tears unmanful, or diſgraceful to a man of true fortitude ; as might be amply ſhewn, if needful. For my own part, I never loved ſtoical principles or diſpoſitions ; and I believe Jeſus had as tender ſentiments as any man. Suppoſing then the death of Lazarus, and the affection Jeſus had for him to have been the cauſe of theſe tears, I ſee no abſurdity in them. But there were other things before Jeſus of an affecting kind, which might have drawn forth theſe tears of compaſſion. He might at that time be affected with the thought of the many afflictions, to which human nature is liable in this ſtate ; or he might be affected with the exceſs of ſorrow, which the ſiſters of Lazarus and other perſons then preſent ſeem to have ſhewed on this occaſion.

As for the groans of Jeſus ; they were not owing to the death of Lazarus, but to ſomewhat elſe, as is very plain from the account ; which is this : Then when Mary was come where Jeſus was, and ſaw him, ſhe fell down at his feet, ſaying unto him, Lord, if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died. When Jeſus therefore ſaw her weeping, and the Jews alſo weeping which came with her, he groaned in the ſpirit, and was troubled. Here are two juſt grounds of grief and concern, namely, the exceſs of ſorrow and mourning of Mary and her friends for the loſs of Lazarus ; and ſecondly, the tokens which ſhe and the reſt gave of want of faith in his power to raiſe him up after his death. For Mary ſays to him; if thou hadſt been here, my brother had not died. Which implies her doubting his power to raiſe him up. Which was a great fault in her, conſidering the proofs he had before given of his power; conſidering all the appearances from Heaven in his favour, and all the other evidences that had been given, that he was the Chriſt. It was alſo juſt matter of concern, that the faith of the people with her was ſo far from anſwering the proofs he had given of his power.

The occaſion of his laſt groaning was thus: And ſome of them ſaid, Could not this man which opened the eyes of the blind, have cauſed that even this man ſhould not have died? Jeſus therefore again groaning in himſelf, cometh to the grave. Here alſo was another ſign of want of faith in his power to raiſe dead Lazarus; which ſhewed, they did not fully believe him to be the Chriſt, though he had given more than ſufficient proofs of it. There are other places alſo, in which our Lord is ſaid to have been angry, or grieved: The cauſe or occaſion of which grief or anger appears plainly to be the ſame with that here aſſigned by me of his groaning; Mark iii. 5. And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts; ſee Mark viii. 12. It is alſo highly probable, that our Bleſſed Lord was now touched with the thought of their continued future unbelief, and the miſeries it would bring upon them. As they had not admitted a full conviction of his character from the works they had already ſeen him do, ſo he foreſaw they would not be convinced neither by the great work he was now going to do in raiſing Lazarus to life, but would after all, perſiſt in their obſtinate malice and unbelief. And ſuppoſing Jeſus to have really done thoſe things which we are told of him in the Goſpels, I think no one can deny, but that the hardneſs of heart which was in that people, was matter of juſt grief to any wiſe and good man.

Secondly, Obſerve, ſays the author, p. 40. that John ſays it was with a loud voice, that Jeſus called Lazarus forth out of his grave.——Was dead Lazarus deafer than Jairus's daughter, or the widow's ſon? &c.

It is neceſſary, when a miracle is wrought for the proof of the character or Divine Miſſion of any perſon, that it appears to be done by him, and not to be a caſual thing. It has been common therefore for all the Prophets and extraordinary meſſengers of God to make uſe of ſome external action at the ſame time that they performed a miracle, though that external action was in it ſelf of no real virtue. When the Red-ſea was to be opened to give a paſſage for the children of Iſrael, God ſaid to Moſes: Lift up thy rod, and ſtretch thine hand, over the ſea, and divide it; Exod. xiv. 16. And when they had paſſed thro', God ſaid unto Moſes, ſtretch out thine hand, over the ſea, that the waters may come again upon the Egyptians, ver. 26. The ſtretching the hand did not divide the ſea, but the Divine Power that accompanied that action. Nevertheleſs the action was of great uſe, to convince the people, that the dividing or returning of the waters, which immediately followed thereupon, was not a caſual natural event, but that God was with Moſes, their leader. The ſame thing may be ſaid of any other external actions, made uſe of by Moſes, or other ancient Prophets. Jeſus in like manner, when he intended a miracle, ſometimes laid his hands on the perſon to be cured; or elſe ſaid, Be thou clean, Be thou healed, or uſed ſome ſuch other words; that the people might be aſſured, that the cure was wrought by him, and might believe that God had ſent him. For this reaſon, when he raiſed Jairus's daughter, he took her by the hand, and ſaid unto her, Damſel, ariſe. And when he raiſed the widow's ſon at Naim, he ſaid; young man, I ſay unto thee, Ariſe. And when he raiſed Lazarus, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. There is no abſurdity in the loudneſs of the voice. It well became ſo ſolemn and awful an event. When he raiſed Jairus's daughter, there was no occaſion for a loud voice; ſhe being raiſed to life in the chamber, where ſhe lay, where there were no more than five perſons preſent. But at Lazarus's grave a loud voice was not at all improper, when there was by a great multitude of people, that all might know Lazarus was raiſed to life by Jeſus. Whether Jeſus ſpoke with a loud voice, when he raiſed the widow of Naim's ſon, is not related, and we are under no obligation to conjecture. I think Jeſus might ſpeak in what voice he pleaſed, upon ſuch great occaſions as theſe. There can be no cavils formed, but what are at firſt ſight unreaſonable.

Thirdly, Becauſe that a miracle ſhould be well guarded againſt all ſuſpicion of fraud, I was thinking to make it an abſurdity, that the napkin, before Jeſus raiſed Lazarus, was not taken from his face, that the ſpectators might behold his mortified looks, and the miraculous change of his countenance from death unto life, p. 41. But however this was, They [the ſpectators] could not but take notice of the napkin about his face all the while; which Jeſus, to prevent all ſuſpicion of cheat, ſhould have firſt ordered to be taken off, that his mortified countenance might be viewed, before the miraculous change of it to life was wrought, p. 51, 52.

The napkin over Lazarus's face is one proof, that he was ſuppoſed by his friends to be dead, when they buried him. Do not all civilized people out of decency cover the face of a corps with a napkin, or ſome ſuch other thing, as well as the other parts of it? If any one had been ſent into the ſepulchre by Jeſus, before he commanded Lazarus forth, it might have given ground of ſuſpicion, that the perſon had been ordered in to ſee whether Lazarus was alive, and capable to come out of himſelf, and concur with the command pronounced to come forth. Or it might have been pretended, that he went in to daub his face with ſome juices, that might make him look like a mortified corps. Any meddling with the body beforehand might have cauſed ſome ſuſpicion, but now there was none at all. And the napkin is a circumſtance, I am very glad John did not forget. It very much corroborates other proofs of Lazarus's real death.

Fourthly and laſtly, Obſerve, St. John ſays, ver. 45. that many of the Jews, who had ſeen the things that Jeſus did here, believed on him; and ſome of them, ver. 46. who did not believe, went their ways to the Phariſees, and told them what things Jeſus had done in this pretended miracle, and how the buſineſs was tranſacted, p. 41.

It is true, that ſome went to the Phariſees, and told them what things Jeſus had done. But it does not follow that they were perſons who did not believe. They did not indeed believe Jeſus to be Chriſt, as many other Jews did hereupon; but they believed the miracle, and knew it, and went and told the Phariſees of it. That theſe perſons told the Phariſees of a miracle done by Jeſus, is evident from the ſpeeches of the Phariſees upon occaſion of the report brought them, ver. 47. Then gathered the chief prieſts and the Phariſees a council, and ſaid, What do we? for this man doth many miracles.

Mr. W. goes on, p. 42. Whereupon the chief prieſts and Phariſees were ſo far incenſed, as ver. 53. from that day forth they took council together to put him to death; and, chap. xii. 10. conſulted that they might put Lazarus alſo to death. Jeſus therefore (and his diſciples, and Lazarus fled for it, for they) ver. 54. walked no more openly among the Jews, but went thence into a country near to the wilderneſs (a convenient hiding-place) and there continued with his diſciples; otherwiſe, in all probability they had been all ſacrificed.

I muſt take leave to obſerve, that it is no where ſaid, that Lazarus abſconded or fled for it. Nor is there any account of the Phariſees having at this time any deſign againſt Lazarus. Afterwards, when Jeſus came again to Bethany, we find that Lazarus was then at home. And many of the Jews came thither, not for Jeſus ſake only, but that they might ſee Lazarus alſo, whom he had raiſed from the dead. But the chief prieſts conſulted, that they might put Lazarus to death: Becauſe that by reaſon of him, many of the Jews went away and believed on Jeſus; John xii. 9, 10, 11. Lazarus therefore did not abſcond, but was at Bethany; and the miracle wrought on him was ſo certain, that many for that reaſon believed on Jeſus. And the reaſon why the Phariſees conſulted that they might put Lazarus to death, was not becauſe any impoſture was detected, but becauſe the miracle was too clear to be denied, and induced great numbers of the Jews, even followers of the Phariſees, to go away fro them, and believe in Jeſus.

But this retirement of Jeſus with his diſciples into a country near the wilderneſs, is judged ſo mighty an objection, that it is repeated again in the Jew's letter. Why did Jeſus and his diſciples, with Lazarus, run away and abſcond upon it?——Is there not here a plain ſign of guilt and fraud? Men that have God's cauſe, truth and power on their ſide, never want courage and reſolution to ſtand to it, p. 44.

The judgments of men are ſurely very unfair and unequal. When any of the firſt Chriſtians are obſerved to have been too forward in expoſing themſelves, they are repreſented as a company of madmen, and hot-headed enthuſiaſts. Jeſus now for avoiding a danger is taxed with want of courage and reſolution; nay, his retirement for only a very ſhort time is termed, a plain ſign of guilt and fraud. Thus the deſire of ſerving a preſent low purpoſe prevails over all the regards of juſtice and equity. "So hard is it, (as Socrates obſerved, ap. Xen. Memor. l. 2.) though you are free from all faults to eſcape unfair judges." But wiſdom is juſtified of her children.

It might be ſufficient here to remind men of Chriſt's returning in a ſhort time to Bethany again, and appearing publickly at Jeruſalem, and teaching in the temple. But let us at preſent obſerve only this hiſtory of his raiſing Lazarus from the grave. When Jeſus heard of the ſickneſs of Lazarus, he was in the country beyond Jordan; John x. 40. and when he propoſed to his diſciples to go unto Judea again, they, remembring the attempts of the Jews againſt him, endeavour all they can to divert him from the journey. His diſciples ſay unto him, Maſter, the Jews of late ſought to ſtone thee, and goeſt thou thither again; chap. xi. 8. Jeſus then argues with them, that they need not apprehend any danger to him as yet. Theſe things ſaid he, and after that ſaith unto them, Our friend Lazarus ſleepeth, but I go, that I may awake him out of ſleep, ver. 11. They from thence take occaſion to argue again, that then their journey to Bethany was not needful: Then ſaid his diſciples, Lord, if he ſleep, he ſhall do well. After that he tells them, that Lazarus was dead, and declares his reſolution to go to Bethany: Nevertheleſs let us go unto him. Whereupon Thomas filled with a kind of indignation, that Jeſus ſhould have no more concern for himſelf nor them, than to expoſe them all to certain death, but at the ſame time ſenſible of his duty to follow him, ſays to his fellow diſciples; Let us alſo go that we may die with him, ver. 16.

So that our Bleſſed Lord, when he was in a place of ſafety, reſolved to come to Bethany near Jeruſalem for the ſake of Lazarus; and herein ſhewed great courage and reſolution. And what is there, I pray, blameable in his retiring again to ſome diſtance from Jeruſalem, when he had performed the buſineſs for which he came into its neighbourhood?

Thus I hope it will appear that this miracle of raiſing Lazarus from the dead, was no contrivance nor fraud, but in reality the wonderful work of God.

Ver. 47. Then gathered the chief prieſts and the Phariſees a council, and ſaid, What do we? For this man doth many miracles.] In which verſe we are to obſerve the connection with the former miracle; for by then is meant the time when the chief prieſts and Phariſees were told of the great miracle wrought by Jeſus in raiſing Lazarus from the dead, even that ſame day, when, if there had been any fraud or contrivance, it might have been ſoon detected. But they were ſo far certified of the truth of the deed, that they only upbraided their own negligence for not having before conſulted on meaſures to cut off Jeſus, whoſe doctrine, ſupported by miracles, was likely to be propagated, and would infallibly overthrow all their worldly ſchemes, to which they had made the religion of the Jewiſh nation ſubſervient; therefore they ſay, What do we? For this man doth many miracles, which is a plain and open confeſſion made in the great council of the Jewiſh nation, that Chriſt not only had raiſed from the dead, (for they were more eſpecially aſſembled on that account) but that he had done many more miracles, which proved that God was with him. Not that hereby they were inclined to believe in him, but this they blabbed out in their paſſion. Thus it ſhould be obſerved that envy hath no bounds; it will hurt it ſelf, not knowing what it ſaith. So while theſe prieſts and Phariſees combined thro' envy, to uſe their greateſt endeavours to conceal and ſmother the miracles wrought by Jeſus Chriſt, they became the great inſtruments in the hand of Providence, to publiſh and make them known to all the world. For, as it follows,

Ver. 48. If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him.] They in theſe words expreſſly declare, that his miracles were ſo true, open, and cogent, that ſhould Chriſt continue to work more ſuch as they had heard of and ſeen, all men would be convicted of their own error and blindneſs, and muſt in conſcience embrace his doctrine.

— Our place.] The temple at Jeruſalem, which theſe Jews had in their proper charge, and in which they repoſed much truſt and confidence.

Ver. 49.—The ſame year.] In which they conſulted to take away the life of Jeſus; ſee Maldonate in loc.

Ver. 52.—That nation.] Of the Jews.

— The children of God.] All the nations or Gentiles, who, the Jews believed from many prophecies ſhould one day believe on, and be gathered in one unto the people of the God of Abraham, to be made partakers of the ſame holy covenant.

— Scattered abroad.] Becauſe the Gentiles were not one body of people; they did not live under one law as the Jews did; but every nation and people were governed by their own laws, and worſhipped different gods. Yet our Redeemer calls them, who were then Idolaters, the children of the living God, not as being ſo then, but that they would ſoon be ſo by right of Redemption; compare this with chap. x. ver. 16.

Ver. 53. Then from that day forth they took counſel together to put him to death.] i. e. They decreed, without giving Jeſus a hearing, right or wrong, to put him to death. So that what followed afterwards, when Jeſus was apprehended, and, from an appearance of juſtice, was carried and queſtioned before the council and the governor; we can look upon it as no more than farce, and to delude the people who believed in him for his works ſake.

Ver. 55.—The Jews' paſſover.] i. e. The laſt paſſover which Chriſt a few days after kept with his diſciples, in the night of his Paſſion and Death.

— To purify themſelves.] See Numb. ix. 6. 2 Chron. xxx. 15. Heb. ix. 9, 10.

CHAP. XII.

1 Jeſus excuſeth Mary anointing his feet. 9 The people flock to ſee Lazarus: 10 The chief prieſts conſult to kill him. 12 Chriſt rideth into Jeruſalem. 20 Greeks deſire to ſee Jeſus: 23 He foretelleth his death. 37 The Jews are generally blinded: 42 yet many chief rulers believe, but do not confeſs him: 44 therefore Jeſus calleth earneſtly for confeſſion of faith.

THEN Jeſus, ſix days before the paſſover, came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raiſed from the dead.

2 There they made him a ſupper, and Martha ſerved: but Lazarus was one of them that ſat at the table with him.

3 Then took Mary a pound of ointment of ſpikenard, vety coſtly, and anointed the feet of Jeſus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the houſe was filled with the odour of the ointment.

4 Then ſaith one of his diſciples, Judas Iſcariot, Simons ſon, which ſhould betray him,

5 Why was not this ointment ſold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6 This he ſaid, not that he cared for the poor; but becauſe he was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

7 Then ſaid Jeſus, Let her alone: againſt the day of my burying hath ſhe kept this.

8 For the poor always ye have with you; but me ye have not always.

9 Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there: and they came not for Jeſus ſake only, but that they might ſee Lazarus alſo, whom he had raiſed from the dead.

10 ¶ But the chief prieſts conſulted, that they might put Lazarus alſo to death;

11 Becauſe that by reaſon of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jeſus.

12 ¶ On the next day much people that were come to the feaſt, when they heard that Jeſus was coming to Jeruſalem,

13 Took branches of palm-trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hoſanna, Bleſſed is the king of Iſrael that cometh in the name of the Lord.

14 And Jeſus, when he had found a young aſs, ſat thereon; as it is written,

15 Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy King cometh ſitting on an aſſes colt.

16 Theſe things underſtood not his diſciples at the firſt: but when Jeſus was glorified, then remembred they that theſe things were written of him, and that they had done theſe things unto him.

17 The people therefore that was with him when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raiſed him from the dead, bare record.

18 For this cauſe the people alſo met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle.

19 The Phariſees therefore ſaid among themſelves, Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after him.

20 ¶ And there were certain Greeks among them, that came up to worſhip at the feaſt:

21 The ſame came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethſaida of Galilee, and deſired him, ſaying, Sir, we would ſee Jeſus.

22 Philip cometh and telleth Andrew: and again, Andrew and Philip told Jeſus.

23 ¶ And Jeſus anſwered them, ſaying, The hour is come, that the Son of man ſhould be glorified.

24 Verily verily I ſay unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

25 He that loveth his life, ſhall loſe it: and he that hateth his life in this world, ſhall keep it unto life eternal.

26 If any man ſerve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there ſhall alſo my ſervant be: if any man ſerve me, him will my Father honour.

27 Now is my ſoul troubled; and what ſhall I ſay? Father, ſave me from this hour: but for this cauſe came I unto this hour.

28 Father, glorify thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven, ſaying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again.

29 The people therefore that ſtood by, and heard it, ſaid that it thundred: others ſaid, An angel ſpake to him.

30 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, This voice came not becauſe of me, but for your ſakes.

31 Now is the judgment of this world: now ſhall the prince of this world be caſt out.

32 And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.

33 (This he ſaid, ſignifying what death he ſhould die)

34 The people anſwered him, We have heard out of the law, that Chriſt abideth for ever: and how ſayſt thou, The Son of man muſt be lift up? who is this Son of man?

35 Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you: walk while ye have the light, leſt darkneſs come upon you: for he that walketh in darkneſs, knoweth not whither he goeth.

36 While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light. Theſe things ſpake Jeſus, and departed, and did hide himſelf from them.

37 ¶ But though he had done ſo many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him:

38 That the ſaying of Eſaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

39 Therefore they could not believe, becauſe that Eſaias ſaid again,

40 He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they ſhould not ſee with their eyes, nor underſtand with their heart, and be converted, and I ſhould heal them.

41 Theſe things ſaid Eſaias, when he ſaw his glory, and ſpake of him.

42 ¶ Nevertheleſs among the chief rulers alſo many believed on him; but becauſe of the Phariſees they did not confeſs him, leſt they ſhould be put out of the ſynagogue.

43 For they loved the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God.

44 ¶ Jeſus cried, and ſaid, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that ſent me.

45 And he that ſeeth me, ſeeth him that ſent me.

46 I am come a light into the world, that whoſoever believeth on me, ſhould not abide in darkneſs.

47 And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to ſave the world.

48 He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have ſpoken, the ſame ſhall judge him in the laſt day.

49 For I have not ſpoken of my ſelf; but the Father which ſent me, he gave me a commandment, what I ſhould ſay, and what I ſhould ſpeak.

50 And I know that his commandment is life everlaſting: whatſoever I ſpeak therefore, even as the Father ſaid unto me, ſo I ſpeak.

Ver. 4.——One of his diſciples, Judas Iſcariot.] He was permitted, ſays Dr. Whitby, among the Apoſtles perhaps, to teach us, that there ſhould never be wanting bad men even in the higheſt places of the Church; That we are to judge of the members of the Church, not from the evil lurking in their hearts, which we cannot diſcern, but from their outward profeſſion, which qualified Judas for the Paſſover, if not for the participation of the Sacrament, and, That inward holineſs is not neceſſary to render the offices belonging to the miniſterial function valid, and effectual to the receiver. For, Judas preaches Chriſt, and is ſent out to do it with the power of healing diſeaſes, and caſting out of devils, Matt. x. 1.—10. tho' he himſelf had a devil. Ver. 12. On the next day.] Which was the tenth day of the month Niſan, when the Paſchal Lamb was taken up and reſerved 'till the Paſſover, Chriſt, the true Paſchal Lamb, cometh up to Jeruſalem. From hence to the 16th verſe; ſee Matt. xxi. 8, &c.

Ver. 16. Theſe things underſtood not his diſciples at the firſt.] To be done in fulfilling of any Prophecy concerning Jeſus; but when their maſter was riſen and aſcended to the throne of his Majeſty in Heaven, and had ſent upon them the Spirit of his truth, and the Divine Illumination which he had promiſed; they not only underſtood that theſe things were done according to the words of Zachary, ix. 9. but alſo that his kingdom was not to be of this world, but ſpiritual, or a dominion over the hearts and conſciences of men, ſubdued to the obedience of the truth.

Ver. 20.——Certain Greeks among them, that came up to worſhip at the feaſt.] Dr. Hammond thinks theſe Greeks were proſelytes of the gate, who worſhipped the God of the Jews, at leaſt, as the Creator of Heaven and Earth, ſuch as were Cornelius, and the treaſure of the Queen of Candace, for theſe perſons uſed to worſhip God in the court of the Gentiles, and to offer ſacrifices to him alſo; as may be learnt from Solomons prayer, 1 Kings viii. 41, 42. and Joſephus de bello Jud. l. 2. c. 30. Theſe Greeks, ſays Grotius, ſeem to have been Syrophœnicians, about Tyre and Sidon, and ſo might eaſily be acquainted with the Galileans, with whom they had commerce, and conſequently with Philip of Bethſaida to whom they applied for to ſee Jeſus.

Ver. 23.——Should be glorified.] By the Gentiles, when the Jews, his own people, ſet him at nought, and ſought to kill him.

Ver. 27. Now is my ſoul troubled, &c.] In which words we may obſerve, he ſhews the ſame natural concern for croſſes, afflictions, &c. as other men naturally have, only he over-ruled it by a deſire to promote his Father's glory.

Ver. 23.——I have both glorified it.] By the Power with which Jeſus raiſed up Lazarus from the dead; chap. xi. 4. and did ſo many more and great miracles in teſtimony of his miſſion; chap. ii. 11. and in all the Goſpels, Paſſim.

——And I will glorify it again.] By raiſing up Jeſus from the dead; exalting him to the right hand of Glory, Acts iii. 13. by the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles, the witneſſes of that Reſurrection; John xvi. 14. and by giving Jeſus a name above every name; Eph. i. 20, 21. Philip. ii. 9, 10.

Ver. 31. Now is the judgment of this world] i. e. Now is the time when the people of this world ſhall be convinced of a future judgment, wherein they ſhall be condemned for their ſin, becauſe they believe not in me; John xvi. 9.

——The prince of this world.] That is, Satan, ſo called, becauſe the whole world, or all the inhabitants of the earth, except the Jews, worſhipped they knew not what, and were thereby ſubject to his idolatrous ſervice.

Ver. 32. If I be lifted up.] i. e. On the croſs; the original reads it thus, ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ and therefore it ſhould be tranſlated, when I be lifted up, for ἐὰν is ſo rendered properly in Deut. vii. 1 Judges. vi. 3. 2 Sam. vii. 12.

——I will draw all men after me.] By the evidence of my reſurrection; the miſſion of my ſpirit; the excellency of my doctrine, and the miracles, which ſhall attend the preaching of it. I will do what is ſufficient to prevail with all men to believe in me; I will actually engage many throughout all parts of the world ſo to do, and render them, who do not believe in me, inexcuſable. The event, ſays Dr. Whitby, ſhew that Chriſt and the Father draw many who come not to him, ſee chap. vi. 44.

Ver. 34.——We have heard out of the law.] Where note, by the law, the Jews alſo comprehended the books of the Prophets, except they particularized it by the addition of the law of Moſes.

——That Chriſt abideth for ever.] This they gathered from Dan. vii. 14. Ezek. xxxvii. 25. Iſa. ix. 7. and from the promiſe that David's ſeed ſhould endure for ever; Pſ. lxxxix. 35, 36. But this was like thoſe that argue only from an imperfect knowledge of one ſide of a queſtion. For, if at the ſame time they had compared theſe to the other prophecies which informed them of the Meſſiah's human nature, infirmities, ſufferings, and death, which are plainly ſet forth in Pſ. xxii. 16. and xl. 6. Iſa. liii. 2, 12. Dan. ix. 26. then they would rightly have underſtood that Chriſt indeed was to abide for ever after his reſurrection; Pſal. xl. 10. Acts iii. 24. in a ſtate of eternal glory; 1 Pet. i. 11.

Ver. 35.——Leſt darkneſs come upon you.] See the note on Luke ii. 32.

Ver. 40. He hath blinded their eyes.] The original has it τετύφλωκεν αὐτῶν τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς, where there is not Greek for the word he, which is impertinently foiſted into our tranſlation; for it ought to be rendered, malice or wickedneſs hath blinded their eyes; as in Wiſdom. ii. 21. or imperſonally, their eyes are blinded and their hearts hardned; ſee Matt. xiii. 14. Acts xxviii. 27. yet tho' this miſtake gives a quite different ſenſe to the original from what it ought, we find the ſame in Iſa. xliv. 18. He hath ſhut their eyes that they cannot ſee, and their hearts that they cannot underſtand; and yet both the Greek and the Chaldee Paraphraſt read it thus, ἀπημαυρώθησαν, their eyes are ſhut, and darkened, leſt they ſhould ſee; and that we are ſo to underſtand the Prophet, that not God, but Satan, and their own evil inclinations and diſpoſitions had done this, is evident from this conſideration, That this is ſpoken to the ſhame of them, who made and worſhipped ſenſeleſs images; ver. 9, 11. and to convince them of their want of conſideration; ver. 19. and now to apply this to our preſent text, we learn that this muſt be the ſenſe of this place, not only from the Septuagint, Syriack, and the Arabick, which render theſe words of Iſaiah thus: The heart of the people is waxed groſs, and their eyes have they cloſed, leſt they ſhould ſee with their eyes: But alſo from our bleſſed Saviour, who (in Matt. xiii. 15.) and from his Apoſtle Paul, who (Acts xxviii. 26, 27.) exactly follow this laſt tranſlation of the words of the Prophet.

Ver. 47. I judge him not.] In that decretorial manner, as every one ſhall be judged at the laſt day of judgment. For Chriſt, when upon earth, was to be conſidered as our Saviour and Redeemer; in Heaven as our High-Prieſt and interceſſor; but at the laſt day he will come in the clouds of Heaven; in the midſts of his Angels to judge both the quick and the dead.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Jeſus waſheth the diſciples feet: exhorteth them to humility and charity: 18 He foretelleth and diſcovereth to John by a token, that Judas ſhould betray him: 31 commandeth them to love one another: 36 and forewarneth Peter of his denial.

NOW before the feaſt of the paſſover, when Jeſus knew that his hour was come, that he ſhould depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

2 And ſupper being ended, (the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iſcariot, Simons ſon, to betray him)

3 Jeſus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God.

4 He riſeth from ſupper, and laid aſide his garments, and took a towel and girded himſelf.

5 After that, he poureth water into a baſon, and began to waſh the diſciples feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, doſt thou waſh my feet?

7 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, What I do, thou knoweſt not now; but thou ſhalt know hereafter.

8 Peter ſaith unto him, Thou ſhalt never waſh my feet. Jeſus anſwered him, if I waſh thee not, thou haſt no part with me.

9 Simon Peter ſaith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but alſo my hands and my head.

10 Jeſus ſaith to him, He that is waſhed, needeth not, ſave to waſh his feet, but is clean every whit: and ye are clean, but not all.

11 For he knew who ſhould betray him, therefore ſaid he, ye are not all clean.

12 So after he had waſhed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was ſet down again, he ſaid unto them, Know ye what I have done to you?

13 Ye call me Maſter, and Lord: and ye ſay well; for ſo I am.

14 If I then your Lord and Maſter, have waſhed your feet, ye alſo ought to waſh one anothers feet.

15 For I have given you an example, that ye ſhould do as I have done to you.

16 Verily verily I ſay unto you, The ſervant is not greater than his Lord, neither he that is ſent, greater than he that ſent him.

17 If ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them.

18 ¶ I ſpeak not of you all; I know whom I have choſen: but that the ſcripture may be fulfilled, He that eateth bread with me, hath lift up his heel againſt me.

19 Now I tell you before it come, that when it is come to paſs, ye may believe that I am he.

20 Verily verily I ſay unto you, He that receiveth whomſoever I ſend, receiveth me: and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me.

21 When Jeſus had thus ſaid, he was troubled in ſpirit, and teſtified, and ſaid, Verily verily I ſay unto you, that one of you ſhall betray me.

22 Then the diſciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he ſpake.

23 Now there was leaning on Jeſus boſom, one of his diſciples whom Jeſus loved.

24 Simon Peter therefore beckened to him, that he ſhould ask who it ſhould be of whom he ſpake.

25 He then lying on Jeſus breaſt, ſaith unto him, Lord, who is it?

26 Jeſus anſwered, He it is to whom I ſhall give a ſop, when I have dipped it.

And when he had dipped the ſop, he gave it to Judas Iſcariot, the ſon of Simon.

27 And after the ſop, Satan entred into him. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, That thou doſt, do quickly.

28 Now no man at the table knew for what intent he ſpake this unto him.

29 For ſome of them thought, becauſe Judas had the bag, that Jeſus had ſaid unto him, Buy thoſe things that we have need of againſt the feaſt: or that he ſhould give ſomething to the poor.

30 He then having received the ſop, went immediately out: and it was night.

31 ¶ Therefore when he was gone out, Jeſus ſaid, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him.

32 If God be glorified in him, God ſhall alſo glorify him in himſelf, and ſhall ſtraightway glorify him.

33 Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye ſhall ſeek me: and as I ſaid unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; ſo now I ſay unto you.

34 A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye alſo love one another.

35 By this ſhall all men know that ye are my diſciples, if ye have love one to another.

36 ¶ Simon Peter ſaid unto him, Lord, whither goeſt thou? Jeſus anſwered him, Whither I go, thou canſt not follow me now; but thou ſhalt follow me afterwards.

37 Peter ſaid unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will lay down my life for thy ſake.

38 Jeſus anſwered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my ſake? Verily verily I ſay unto thee, The cock ſhall not crow, till thou haſt denied me thrice.

CHAP. xiii. See the notes on Matthew xxvi, Mark xiv, and Luke xxii. In which you will find what is neceſſary to explain thoſe paſſages, not animadverted upon in this place.

Ver. 34. A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye alſo love one another.] Theſe words contain one part of our Saviour's dying injunctions, which he gave to his diſciples at the time of his taking leave of them before his paſſion came on. The duty enjoined is the Chriſtian love and charity which he himſelf had all his life ſo really and emblematically enforced and practiſed in the whole courſe of his life, and now more immediately when he waſhed his Apoſtles feet; in a word, if we conſider either the value of the gift he was then going to beſtow, or the unworthineſs of thoſe for whom he intended it, we can't but acknowledge, that he was the greateſt pattern and example that ever was. For, the gift was no leſs than the life of the Son of God incarnate; and they, for whom he was to lay it down, were his profeſſed enemies. — A love never to be forgot! A law never before enacted! A new commandment indeed; for tho' the law by Moſes enjoined us to love our neighbours as our ſelves; ſee Luke x. 27. Yet it no where expreſſes, that we ſhould love our enemies as this new commandment implies, and that even we ſhould lay down our lives, if thereby we could ſave their ſouls, as the words in the text import; for this was what Chriſt did, and how can we love one another as Chriſt loved us, if we don't, when in our power, and neceſſity requires, alſo be ready and prove, that we love one another in the ſame manner as he has exemplified his love to us? So

If we conſider this Chriſtian charity in that extenſive meaning as to the objects; and in that intenſeneſs in which he has enjoined it, as to the meaſures and degrees of it, we ſhall find it is a new commandment indeed; and ſuch as no other inſtitution but that which is delivered to us by Jeſus Chriſt, ever laid upon its profeſſors. Therefore,

To attain to a thorough knowledge of this duty, we muſt view it in that extent preſcribed in the Goſpel of Chriſt; and then we ſhall ſoon learn how to practiſe it; how to love one another as Chriſt loved us. Now,

This duty is particularly to be gathered from that ſummary of Chriſtian practice, recorded by the Evangeliſt Luke, who introduceth Chriſt teaching his diſciples, and ſaying, "Love your enemies; do good to them which hate you; bleſs them that curſe you; and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you; —— judge not —— condemn not —— forgive —— give to every man that asketh of thee —— and it ſhall be given unto you; —— do good and lend, hoping for nothing again —— for, as ye would that men ſhould do unto you, do ye alſo to them likewiſe." Theſe, and ſuch like paſſages in Luke vi, and other parts of the Goſpels, are the particulars by which Chriſt himſelf explained the new commandment in the text, and tho' from hence it appears, that the relief of the neceſſitous is not the only duty hereby enjoined, yet it is plain, both from the premiſes, and innumerable other texts of Scripture, that ſuch a care is principally incumbent upon us, as well from his example and command, and from the nature of the thing, we being better able in our human capacity to imitate God in his mercy, than in any other attribute, and therefore Chriſt enforces it more particularly; Be ye merciful, ſays he, as your Father alſo is merciful. And conſequently this ſhall be my immediate care to enquire, who are the proper objects; which are the juſt meaſures; and what is the right principle of this charity.

1. The proper objects are ſuch whoſe wants are real; who are well-diſpoſed to induſtry and labour, but are either diſabled by weakneſs, and impotence, ſickneſs or old age, or by ſome other methods of God's wiſe providence. Or, they may be ſuch, who tho' they be able to work, cannot get employment, tho' they deſire and lay out their endeavours to find it. Or, again, ſuch as have ſo large a family, that their honeſt labour and diligence cannot ſupport them; poor houſe-keepers, priſoners, widows, orphans, &c. though they be Turks, Jews or Infidels, as we are taught by that excellent parable which our Saviour told in anſwer to the lawyer's queſtion, Who is my neighbour? Luke x. 29. where our Saviour repreſents a Jew, then the only choſen people of God, aſſaulted in his journey by thieves, ſtripped, and wounded, and left half dead in the way; a Samaritan travelling that road, ſaw him in that pitiful condition, and had compaſſion on him, he put on bowels of mercy towards him, and not only ſo, but kindneſs alſo; he did not only pity, but relieve him too, and that ſuitably and proportionably to his wants; for he went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and ſet him on his own beaſt, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him, and when he departed, he gave the hoſt money and charge of him, promiſing alſo to repay whatever ſhould be further expended upon the wounded man's account.

Now we are to conſider, that the Jews and Samaritans were profeſſed enemies, and haters of one another; there was not ſo much as any civil commerce between them: When our Saviour, tired with his journey, ſat on Jacob's well, and deſired that ſmall courteſy of a woman that came thither to draw water, to give him a little to drink, ſhe wondered, that he being a Jew, ſhould ask even that poor favour, or rather act of common humanity, of her that was a Samaritan, John iv. Another time, when he ſent his diſciples into a village of Samaria, to make ready for him, the Samaritans would give him no reception, becauſe his face was as though he would go to Jeruſalem, Luke ix. On the other hand, what thoughts the Jews had of the Samaritans, may be gathered from that expreſſion of theirs to our Saviour, in the 8th of John; who being baffled by him, and having no return to make but reviling and ill language, call him, as the moſt reproachful title they could give him, a Samaritan; Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan? They knew very well, that he was not a Samaritan; but as a Turk is uſed among us as an expreſſion for a cruel barbarous man, and a Jew to ſignify a covetous, griping extortioner, though they are not Turks or Jews; ſo here they uſed the word Samaritan to Chriſt, as the moſt odious name they could call him by: And yet, notwithſtanding all the diſtance, and hatred, and enmity, that was between them, our Lord, in anſwer to the queſtion, Who is my neighbour? gives an inſtance of a Samaritan, performing the moſt kind and charitable offices to a diſtreſſed Jew; thereby intimating, that any perſon in want or miſery, though a ſtranger or enemy to us, muſt be looked upon as our neighbour, and an object of ſuch relief and aſſiſtance as we are able to give him.

Yet, though no difference of country, opinion, party or religion: No affronts, or offences againſt us muſt be any obſtructions to our charity, or hinder us from affording them ſuch relief as their wants require, and our abilities will allow us to give; if our charity can't reach to the relief of all the objects, we may lawfully uſe our diſcretion, and if their neceſſities, wants and circumſtances are alike, we may have regard to the relation that any of them bear to us, whether it be natural, civil or ſpiritual; or give a preference to their worth and deſerts; but all this partiality ſhould be avoided where extreme neceſſity calls for our aſſiſtance. But,

2. As to the meaſures of our charity; God has left it to every man's own diſcretion, to do as he purpoſeth in his own heart: Yet, no doubt, but that it is every man's duty to do acccording to his circumſtances of life, and therefore the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaking of this very thing, tells the Corinthians, That every man ſhould lay up in ſtore weekly (for the relief of the poor) as God hath proſpered him; 1 Cor. xvi. 2. i. e. that which is his own, which he came honeſtly by, and which his family cannot want. For, if a man gives to the poor what he has got by oppreſſion, fraud or any evil methods; what he oweth to his creditors, or is neceſſary for the ſupport of his own houſhold, his charity is not ſo accounted of in the ſight of God; becauſe that is not the ſtore with which God hath proſpered him. We muſt only give to the moſt high according as he hath enriched us, ſays the ſon of Sirach. And then, ſays Tobit, if we have abundance we muſt give alms accordingly; ſee alſo 2 Cor. ix. But,

3. If we diſtribute our charity never ſo prudently, and juſtly, and we at the ſame time do it to be ſeen of men, we can expect no praiſe of God, who accepts of no offerings, but ſuch as proceed from obedience, love and faith; becauſe it is our duty commanded; a token of our gratitude in return for that love and bounty which Chriſt has ſhewn to us; and a firm perſuaſion that God will reward my preſent works of charity in that mannner as he has promiſed. Hence

Let us proceed to view the engagements we lie under to perform this duty. And,

1. Nature binds all men principally to this duty, becauſe that they are all brethren, in reſpect of their origin, as being made of one blood, and deſcended from the loins of one common parent, and that therefore they ought to love as brethren, and be pitiful; that no man is ſelf-ſufficient, but in ſome reſpect or other wants the aſſiſtance of others; and therefore 'tis highly reaſonable that every one ſhould give that help to his brother, which his own wants and infirmities may make him ſome time or other ſtand in need of from him. Thus, by nature we are all brethren; But,

2. As Chriſtians, we are all members of one body.

This conſideration Paul inſiſts largely upon, in the 12th chapter of his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, to perſuade them to a ſympathy, and fellow-feeling with each other, in their ſeveral circumſtances; to a tender concern for, and mutual care of one another: He urges that the body natural, though it have many members, is yet one body; that though the foot is not the hand, and the ear is diſtinct from the eye, yet each of them are members of the ſame one body; that no one of the members can ſay, it has no need of another; but the weakeſt and leſs honourable are uſeful and neceſſary in their proper places; that God hath ſo temper'd the body, and diſpoſed or ſet every one of the members, that there ſhould be no diviſion, no ſeparate intereſts in it; but that each ſhould have the ſame kind regard to another as to itſelf; ſympathizing with the others in all conditions, whether of pain or pleaſure; feeling the ſmart when any other member receives hurt, and being eaſed when that is relieved; that as the natural body is one, being inform'd by one ſoul, which animates all the parts of it; ſo the myſtical body, the ſociety of Chriſtians, being inform'd by one ſpirit, communicated to it from the Head Chriſt Jeſus, which gives ſpiritual life and motion to all the living members of it, is one likewiſe; from whence he infers, that therefore all the members of this ſpiritual body ſhould have the ſame ſympathy with one another, as thoſe of the natural have, Rejoicing with them that rejoice, and weeping with them that weep, putting on, as becomes perſons ſo cloſely united to them, bowels of mercy and kindneſs to their ſuffering fellow-members, heartily compaſſionating, and readily relieving them, as bearing a ſhare in their afflictions with them. And

The performance of this duty of charity, is made by our Saviour the diſtinguiſhing mark, by which his diſciples are to be known, from men profeſſing any other religion; A new commandment, ſays he in the text, I give unto you, that ye love one another. By this ſhall all men know that you are my diſciples, if ye have love one to another. As if he ſhould have ſaid; no other inſtitution ever enjoin'd this duty in ſo extenſive a meaning as to the objects, or in ſo intenſe and high a degree as to the exerciſe, and inſtances of it, as mine does; and therefore by your faithful diſcharge of it, in the ſenſe in which I require it, the world will know you to be Chriſtians, and diſtinguiſh you from the followers of any other maſter. Now will it not be very unſeemly for a Chriſtian to appear without his livery, without the badge of his profeſſion? Will it not look as if he were aſhamed of his maſter, or his ſervice? And may he not expect that his maſter in his turn will be aſhamed of him, when he ſhall come in the glory of his Father, with the holy Angels? A diſciple of Chriſt without love to his brethren; an uncharitable Chriſtian! They are contradictions, they are incompatible denominations; whoever is one, is not the other; he that is a Chriſtian, is not uncharitable; and he that is uncharitable, is no Chriſtian: And this will appear yet more clearly from Another obligation to this duty, peculiar to Chriſtianity; namely, the example of Chriſt, which was ſuch a one as the world never heard of before or ſince; Now to this end has Chriſt left us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps; and in no one inſtance has he more frequently or earneſtly called upon us to imitate him, than in that of love: See how pathetically he urges his love to them, as a motive to engage his diſciples to love one another, John xv. 12, &c. This is my commandment, ſays he, that ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends, ye are my friends.——I have called you not ſervants, but friends——Ye have not choſen me, but I have choſen you. Here he ſets forth the greatneſs of his love to them, in that he was ready to give the higheſt inſtance of love, that any one could give to his deareſt friend, even that of dying for them; in that he had treated them all along not at that diſtance, which the relation of maſter and ſervant might call for, but with the intimacy and freedom of boſom-friends; and in that he had placed his affections upon them, before they had made any advance towards him: And to what end does he inſiſt upon all this? Why, only to prevail with them to obey that command which he gave them in the beginning of this diſcourſe, and which he here immediately repeats, Theſe things I command you, that ye love one another.

The example of Chriſt ought ſurely to be a moſt forcible motive with Chriſtians, to imitate him in any inſtance, wherein he has propoſed himſelf as a pattern to them; for it is our very profeſſion to follow the example of Chriſt, and be made like to him; but in this there is ſomething ſo peculiar, that if it cannot prevail upon us any other way, yet at leaſt it muſt ſhame us into a compliance with it; for with what face can I profeſs my ſelf a diſciple of the compaſſionate and bountiful Jeſus, whoſe whole employment was to go about doing good, miniſtring to, and relieving the corporal and ſpiritual wants and ailments of all miſerable objects that were preſented to him, if I, having this world's good, can ſee my brother have need, and ſhut up my bowels of compaſſion from him?

Has my liberal maſter given me all things richly to enjoy, all things appertaining to this life and godlineſs, all things neceſſary to my ſafe paſſage through this world, and to my happineſs in the next? And can I ſee my poor brother grappling with neceſſity, preſſed down by afflictions, and refuſe to communicate out of the abundance which I have freely received, towards the ſupplying his wants, and ſupporting him under his preſſures?

Alas! what can I ſay in juſtification or excuſe of my ſelf? Is my poor brother much my inferior, far below me? Why, what was I to Chriſt, poor duſt and aſhes to him, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever? Is he incapable of meriting any kindneſs from me, or returning any to me? Why, what had I deſerved from Chriſt, when he left the boſom of his Father, the glory he had with him before the world was, to come down upon this earth, to live a perſecuted life, and ſuffer a ſhameful death for my ſalvation? His love to me preceded my very being, and ſuppoſed my rebellion againſt him that gave it me; and what reward am I able to render unto him for all his benefits? All my goodneſs cannot extend to him; I cannot be profitable to him, nor is it gain to him if my ways were perfect: Nay, is my brother my provoking, ungrateful enemy; has he wilfully injured me, when I had deſerved well from him? Why, on what terms was I, and were all mankind with Chriſt, when he undertook that amazing work of the redemption of the world? Did he not hereby recommend his love to us, that while we were ſinners, He died for us? If this love of Chriſt cannot conſtrain us to follow his example; if the circumſtances of it cannot anſwer all objections againſt our charity to our brethren; I ſhall add but one motive more; namely,

4. The conſequences which the Goſpel aſſures will attend our performance or neglect of this duty: It is through the Goſpel that life and immortality are brought to light; i. e. there are more clear revelations made in the Goſpel of a future judgment, and the rewards and puniſhments of another life, than the world enjoyed before: And he that is to execute that judgment, and aſſign thoſe rewards and puniſhments to men, accordingly as they ſhall have obey'd, or not obey'd his laws, has given ſuch a deſcription of his intended procedure, in the 25th of Matt. as if this branch of charity, the relieving thoſe that are in diſtreſs, were in the letter, the fulfilling of the whole law; and he would enquire into nothing elſe, but how men had behaved themſelves, with relation to that royal law of love: For when he paſſes the ſentence of Glory upon the Bleſſed, he gives no other reaſon for it, but becauſe they had miniſter'd to the neceſſities of his poor members: Nor does he aſſign any other cauſe, for the ſentence of condemnation upon the wicked, but becauſe they had deny'd thoſe inſtances, which he there mentions, of charity to them.

We muſt not indeed imagine, but that all the actions of our whole lives will be then brought into judgment, and account be then required of our whole carriage, with reſpect to all the commands of the Goſpel; but from this deſcription, we may very reaſonably infer, that there will be a very particular enquiry into the obſervance of this duty; and a ſpecial regard had by our judge, to the diſcharge or neglect of it, in his pronouncing them, Come ye bleſſed, or, Go ye curſed.

Ver. 36.—Whither I go thou canſt not follow me now; but thou ſhalt follow me afterwards.] This may be well interpreted two ways; 1. That Peter's faith would fail him at the time of Chriſt's approaching Paſſion; ſee ver. 38. ſo that he could not accompany him through that diſmal ſcene of affliction: But that his faith being afterwards ſtrengthned, he in good time ſhould have courage to lay down his life for Chriſt's ſake. And this I believe to be the real and proper ſenſe of the words: Tho' 2dly, Theodorus Heracleates gives it another turn, ſaying, That he could not follow Jeſus now, foraſmuch as his time was not yet come, it being not expedient as yet for Peter alſo to die with his Lord, becauſe he was firſt to preach the Goſpel, and to endure many things.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Chriſt comforteth his diſciples with the hope of heaven: 6 profeſſeth himſelf the way, the truth, and the life, and one with the Father. 13 Aſſureth their prayers in his name to be effectual: 15 Requeſteth love and obedience, 26 promiſeth the holy Ghoſt the comforter, 27 and leaveth his peace with them.

LET not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.

2 In my fathers houſe are many manſions; if it were not ſo, I would have told you: I go to prepare a place for you.

3 And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto my ſelf, that where I am, there ye may be alſo.

4 And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

5 Thomas ſaith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goeſt, and how can we know the way?

6 Jeſus ſaith unto him, I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

7 If ye had known me, ye ſhould have known my Father alſo: and from henceforth ye know him, and have ſeen him.

8 Philip ſaith unto him, Lord, ſhew us the Father, and it ſufficeth us.

9 Jeſus ſaith unto him, Have I been ſo long time with you, and yet haſt thou not known me, Philip? He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father; and how ſayſt thou then, Shew us the Father?

10 Believeſt thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I ſpeak unto you, I ſpeak not of my ſelf: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doth the works.

11 Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or elſe believe me for the very works ſake.

12 Verily verily I ſay unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do, ſhall he do alſo, and greater works than theſe ſhall he do; becauſe I go unto my Father.

13 And whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.

14 If ye ſhall aſk any thing in my name, I will do it.

15 ¶ If ye love me, keep my commandments.

16 And I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;

17 Even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you.

18 I will not leave you comfortleſs; I will come to you.

19 Yet a little while, and the world ſeeth me no more: but ye ſee me: becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo.

20 At that day ye ſhall know, that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you.

21 He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me, ſhall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifeſt my ſelf to him.

22 Judas ſaith unto him, not Iſcariot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifeſt thy ſelf unto us, and not unto the world?

23 Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

24 He that loveth me not, keepeth not my ſayings: and the word which you hear, is not mine, but the Fathers which ſent me.

25 Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, being yet preſent with you.

26 But the Comforter, which is the holy Ghoſt, whom the Father will ſend in my name, he ſhall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid unto you.

27 Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

28 Ye have heard how I ſaid unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoyce, becauſe I ſaid, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I.

29 And now I have told you before it come to paſs, that when it is come to paſs, ye might believe.

30 Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me.

31 But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even ſo I do. Ariſe, let us go hence.

Ver. 1. Let not your heart be troubled.] Don't faint in a good cauſe, nor let your faith waver, when ye ſee me executed and dead. For, though this my human body ſhall really ſuffer, and my whole manhood ſhall truly undergo the fate of mortality, you muſt not thence conclude that I am no more than a mere man; for as I told you before, I and the Father are one. Therefore it Follows, — Ye believe in God, believe alſo in me.] i. e. If ye believe in God, ye ought alſo to believe in me. This is Auſtin's argument from the text; and adds, that it is a proof that Chriſt was God; ſee the notes and diſſertation on the firſt chapter of John.

Ver. 2. In my Father's houſe are many manſions.] In heaven there is room for all good ſpirits of juſt men made perfect. How then does this agree with the next verſe.

Ver. 3. I will go and prepare a place for you.] i. e. Tho' there are many manſions in my Father's houſe; yet no one can aſcend into the Heavens, before I am aſcended to open them a free paſſage at the price of my own blood; ſee Heb. xi. 36---40.

Ver. 6. I am the way.] To thoſe who look upon me as the author and finiſher of their faith. For none can come to the manſions of bliſs, who don't embrace my doctrine; believe in me; chap. iii. 6. imitate my good works, and lay hold upon my merits.

— And the truth.] i. e. There is no truth in any doctrine than what I teach you; and therefore, ſays the Apoſtle, if an Angel from Heaven ſhould come and preach any other Goſpel, we muſt not believe him.

— And the life.] i. e. By me you will attain everlaſting life, "for God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life," John iii. 16.

From hence Theophylact collects a proof for the equality of the Father and Son of God; for as it was ſaid by Jeſus before, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him;" here he on the contrary tells us, that none can come to the Father but by him. And this whole ſucceeding context will prove the ſame equality.

Ver. 15. If ye love me keep my commandments.] As if our Bleſſed Lord had ſaid, Ye all profeſs to love me, and declare your reſolutions to convince me of your real ſervice, by ſome notable teſtimonies thereof; if then ye love me, as ye profeſs, ye can ſhew it in no better way than by keeping my commandments. Thus we learn that the beſt teſtimony of man's love to God Almighty is collected from the ſincerity of man's obedience to God's revealed will: This is the love of God, ſays the beloved diſciple, that we keep his commandments; John. v. 3. Therefore he that ſaith, "I know him, and keep not his commandments, the ſame is a liar, and the truth is not in him," John ii. 4.

Ver. 16. And I will pray the Father.] Chriſt hereby teacheth his diſciples, that they were not to claim any thing of merit; but that they muſt firſt prove their love to God by keeping his commandments, and then that he would pray for them, that the Father may enlighten them with his Holy Spirit, as it follows;

— He ſhall give you another Comforter.] i. e. The Holy Ghoſt. Now we may collect from this verſe the certainty of the three perſons in the Godhead; for, 1. We read I (the Son) will ask, — 2. He (the Father) ſhall give, 3. Another comforter, that is, the Holy Ghoſt. A moſt plain ground for the doctrine of the holy and ever bleſſed Trinity, and a moſt evident diſtinction of the Perſons.

— For ever.] As long as the world endures.

Ver. 19. Yet a little while, and the world ſeeth the no more: but ye ſee me.] This was proved in fact after Chriſt's reſurrection. For he was only ſeen by his diſciples from that time, till he was taken up into glory. Or, as ſome interpret this place, Here by the world, we may underſtand thoſe that are at enmity with God, and conſequently will be deprived of the beatifick viſion, and at the laſt day ſent into outer darkneſs; and by ye, we may underſtand all the faithful who die in Chriſt, and are to riſe again to his glory. And indeed this ſenſe of the words is very much countenanced by the following Scripture, Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo, i. e. as I live, ſo ye who keep my commandments, ſhall live alſo.

Ver. 20.—I am in my Father.] Coeternally, eſſentially and coequal.

— And you in me.] You ſhall be exalted to my glory.

— And I in you.] So that my preſence ſhall make you eternally happy, and make you the creature ſo far partaking, and equal to the Creator as your nature can poſſibly arrive to in a ſtate of glory; ſee ver. 21.

Ver. 28.—My Father is greater than I.] i. e.. Than I, in this my ſtate of humiliation, in the form of a ſervant, clothed with human nature; ſee Maldonate on this text. This, Chriſt told his diſciples that they ſhould not think it ſtrange, that he could be put to death, as may be collected from the next verſe.

CHAP. XV.

1 The conſolation and mutual love between Chriſt and his members, under the parable of the vine. 18 A comfort in the hatred and perſecution of the world. 26 The office of the holy Ghoſt, and of the Apoſtles.

I AM the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.

2 Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

3 Now ye are clean through the word which I have ſpoken unto you.

4 Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of it ſelf, except it abide in the vine: no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing.

6 If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and caſt them into the fire, and they are burned.

7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye ſhall ask what ye will, and it ſhall be done unto you.

8 Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, ſo ſhall ye be my diſciples.

9 As the Father hath loved me, ſo have I loved you: continue ye in my love.

10 If ye keep my commandments, ye ſhall abide in my love: even as I have kept my Fathers commandments, and abide in his love.

11 Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

12 This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

13 Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

14 Ye are my friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you.

15 Henceforth I call you not ſervants; for the ſervant knoweth not what his lord doth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you.

16 Ye have not choſen me, but I have choſen you, and ordained you, that you ſhould go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit ſhould remain: that whatſoever ye ſhall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.

17 Theſe things I command you, that ye love one another.

18 If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

19 If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

20 Remember the word that I ſaid unto you, The ſervant is not greater than the lord. If they have perſecuted me, they will alſo perſecute you: if they have kept my ſaying, they will keep yours alſo.

21 But all theſe things will they do unto you for my names ſake, becauſe they know not him that ſent me.

22 If I had not come, and ſpoken unto them, they had not had ſin: but now they have no cloke for their ſin.

23 He that hateth me, hateth my Father alſo.

24 If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had ſin: but now have they both ſeen, and hated both me and my Father.

25 But this cometh to paſs, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, They hated me without a cauſe.

26 But when the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth which proceeded from the Father, he ſhall teſtify of me.

27 And ye alſo ſhall bear witneſs, becauſe ye have been with me from the beginning.

Ver. 1. I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.] Grotius thinks the occaſion of this parable was taken from the Lord's Supper he had then juſt celebrated, or was inſtantly to celebrate; for as in chap. vi. diſcourſing of his Paſſion, he calls himſelf the true bread, ſo here he calls himſelf the true vine, nouriſhing to life eternal, with relation to that element, which was the fruit of the vine; Luke xxii. 18. and thus it ſeemed neceſſary to ſpeak of the fruit of his death; becauſe his diſciples were offended at it, and their faith wavered on that account. Others think that having ſpoken of Judas as a branch not purged but withered, and fit only for the fire; chap. xiii. 10, 11.

10, 11. he admoniſheth them to be careful that they become not ſuch branches, and as he had ſaid there, ver. 10. ſo he repeats that ſaying here, ver. 3. Ye are clean, &c. But let this be as it will, we are ſure that Chriſt calls himſelf the true vine, thereby ſignifying naturally that he will give vital juice to render all his branches (i. e. faithful) fruitful, and that his fruit will refreſh and fill their hearts with joy, even as the fruit of the vine doth to the body; Judges ix. 13. Pſal. civ. 15.

— My Father is the husbandman.] Who takes care of thoſe foreſaid branches, cutting off the ſuckers, and the withered branches, pruning the vine, and purging the fruitful branches, that they may bring forth more fruit.

Ver. 2. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit.] i. e. They who are only Chriſtians by baptiſm and profeſſion, or who have faith, but can ſhew no works; ſee James ii. 26.

Ver. 4.—Remain in me.] By faith, love, ver. 9. and obedience; ver. 10.

— And I will remain in you.] By my Spirit.

Ver. 7. Ask what ye will, &c.] According to the will of God, 1 John v. 14. in faith, Mark xi. 24. and in my name, xvi. 23. ſee alſo Matth. xxi. 21.

Ver. 8.—And ye ſhall be my diſciples.] i. e. It will appear that you are my genuine diſciples, if you thus bring forth much fruit to the glory of God.

Ver. 15. All things which I have heard from my Father, I have made known to you.] i. e. All things relating to his ſalutary Paſſion, his glorious reſurrection and aſcenſion, the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, the future judgment, and the promiſe of eternal life, as were fit to be told them then.

Ver. 16. I have choſen you.] From the reſt of the Jews, to bear witneſs of me, ver. 27. and to be my Apoſtles; ſee Dr. Whitby on this place.

Ver. 24.—They had not had ſin.] Or, the ſin of infidelity; ſeeing my works, and denying my Power and miſſion from God.

Ver. 25. But.] Supply, this cometh to paſs, or, this they are permitted to do, That the word, &c. and we have ſeveral examples of this kind of eliptical ſpeech in this Goſpel; ſee chap. ix. 3. But this hath happened that the works of God might be made manifeſt. Again, chap. xiii. 18. But this hath happened to Judas, that the Scripture might be fulfilled; chap. xiv. 31.

Ver. 26. But when the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, &c.] From hence we poſitively learn that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, are three diſtinct Perſons in the Godhead; and that the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth from the Father and from the Son; for the Son is ſaid to ſend him; and as to the Father, the Holy Ghoſt, the Comforter, is ſaid expreſly to proceed from him: And if the Holy Ghoſt doth not proceed from the Son, why is he called the Spirit of the Son; Gal. vi. 6. or, why is he here ſaid to be ſent by the Son? The Comforter, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father. In fine, if the Spirit doth not proceed from the Son, what perſonal relation can we conceive between the Son and the Spirit?

— He ſhall teſtify of me.] He will ſhew you how I have been ſcandalized and evil treated, and enable you to work many miracles, and inſpire you with divers tongues, for the propagation of my doctrine.

CHAP. XVI.

1 Chriſt comforteth his diſciples againſt tribulation by the promiſe of the holy Ghoſt, and by his reſurrection and aſcenſion: 23 Aſſureth their prayers made in his name to be acceptable to his Father. 33 Peace in Chriſt, and in the world affliction.

THESE things have I ſpoken unto you, that ye ſhould not be offended.

2 They ſhall put you out of the ſynagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you will think that he doth God ſervice.

3 And theſe things will they do unto you, becauſe they have not known the Father, nor me.

4 But theſe things have I told you, that when the time ſhall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And theſe things I ſaid not unto you at the beginning, becauſe I was with you.

5 But now I go my way to him that ſent me, and none of you asketh me, Whither goeſt thou?

6 But becauſe I have ſaid theſe things unto you, ſorrow hath filled your heart.

7 Nevertheleſs, I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will ſend him unto you.

8 And when he is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgment;

9 Of ſin, becauſe they believe not on me;

10 Of righteouſneſs, becauſe I go to my Father, and ye ſee me no more;

11 Of judgment, becauſe the prince of this world is judged.

12 I have yet many things to ſay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now.

13 Howbeit, when he the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he ſhall not ſpeak of himſelf; but whatſoever he ſhall hear, that ſhall he ſpeak: and he will ſhew you things to come.

14 He ſhall glorify me: for he ſhall receive of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.

15 All things that the Father hath, are mine: therefore ſaid I, that he ſhall take of mine, and ſhall ſhew it unto you.

16 A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me: and again, a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me, becauſe I go to the Father.

17 Then ſaid ſome of his diſciples among themſelves, What is this that he ſaith unto us, A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me: and again, a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me: and, Becauſe I go to the Father?

18 They ſaid therefore, What is this that he ſaith, A little while? we cannot tell what he ſaith.

19 Now Jeſus knew that they were deſirous to ask him, and ſaid unto them, Do ye enquire among your ſelves of that I ſaid, A little while, and ye ſhall not ſee me: and again, a little while, and ye ſhall ſee me?

20 Verily verily I ſay unto you, that ye ſhall weep and lament, but the world ſhall rejoyce: and ye ſhall be ſorrowful, but your ſorrow ſhall be turned into joy.

21 A woman when ſhe is in travail, hath ſorrow, becauſe her hour is come: but as ſoon as ſhe is delivered of the child, ſhe remembreth no more the anguiſh, for joy that a man is born into the world.

22 And ye now therefore have ſorrow: but I will ſee you again, and your heart ſhall rejoyce, and your joy no man taketh from you.

23 And in that day ye ſhall aſk me nothing: Verily verily I ſay unto you, Whatſoever ye ſhall aſk the Father in my name, he will give it you.

24 Hitherto have ye aſked nothing in my name: aſk, and ye ſhall receive, that your joy may be full.

25 Theſe things have I ſpoken unto you in proverbs: the time cometh, when I ſhall no more ſpeak unto you in proverbs, but I ſhall ſhew you plainly of the Father.

26 At that day ye ſhall aſk in my name: and I ſay not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you.

27 For the Father himſelf loveth you, becauſe ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God.

28 I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.

29 His diſciples ſaid unto him, Lo, now ſpeakeſt thou plainly, and ſpeakeſt no proverb.

30 Now are we ſure that thou knoweſt all things, and needeſt not that any man would aſk thee: by this we believe that thou cameſt forth from God.

31 Jeſus anſwered them, Do ye now believe?

32 Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye ſhall be ſcattered, every man to his own, and ſhall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, becauſe the Father is with me.

33 Theſe things I have ſpoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye ſhall have tribulation: but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.

Ver. 1. Theſe things, &c.] Concerning the hatred of the world, and the reaſons of it; and of thoſe conſiderations which may induce you to bear it patiently.

— That ye ſhould not be offended.] Or deterred from my ſervice by the ſufferings you will be expoſed to, for my ſake in the world.

Ver. 4.—That when the time ſhall come, ye may remember, &c.] And ſo be aſſured of my Divine Preſence, or foreknowledge and veracity; and therefore may not doubt of that aſſiſtance and conſolation I have promiſed you under theſe troubles.

— Theſe things I ſaid not unto you at the beginning.] This hath been urged as a contradiction to that Scripture, where in the firſt miſſion of the Apoſtles to preach in the cities of Judea, Chriſt uſeth almoſt the ſame words; Matt. x. 17, 18. and again, the like words are read in Matt. xxiv. 9. Luke vi. 22. To which it is properly anſwered, that what was ſpoken in Matt. xxiv. 9. was ſaid about this time; and ſo Chriſt might well ſay, he ſaid it not to them from the beginning. And the Scripture of Matt. x. and Luke vi. plainly reſpects the times which were to come upon them, after our Lord's departure from them; for the words of Chriſt in Matt. x. from ver. 16 to 36, reſpect thoſe times when they were to give teſtimony to him before the Gentiles, ver. 18. and were to be filled with the Holy Spirit, ver. 20. and ſo do the words of Luke alſo, as appears from the particle ὅταν, i. e. When theſe things ſhall happen; what therefore Chriſt there foretels as future, he ſpeaks of here as inſtant, even ready to befal them.

Ver 5.—None of you asketh me, Whither goeſt thou?] This Peter aſked, chap. xiii. 36. but received no direct anſwer, becauſe they did not aſk ſo as to know; chap. xiv. 5. much leſs to conſider duly whither he was a going; ſee John xx. 17. or why he went; ſee John xiv. 2. or, none of them aſked now his departure was at hand, and ſo gave greater reaſon for this enquiry, whither he was going.

Ver. 7. It is expedient for you that I go away.] Becauſe the Comforter, who was to lead them into all truth, was not to come till Chriſt was glorified, and aſcended into Heaven; John vii. 39.

Ver. 8, 9. He will reprove the world of ſin.] The Holy Spirit returning upon the diſciples of Chriſt, after its long abſence of 400 years, from the Jews, will convince them of ſin and infidelity; ſee Acts ii. 37—41.

Ver. 10, Of righteouſneſs, becauſe I go to the Father.] Becauſe the miſſion of the Holy Spirit from Heaven, and the miraculous powers done by him in the name of Jeſus evinced, that he who had ſent this Spirit from Heaven, was himſelf tranſlated thither.

Ver. 11. Of judgment, becauſe the prince of this world is judged.] i. e. Becauſe Satan, the prince of this world, is now to be condemned, and caſt out of his dominions; and they that ſerve him inſtead of Chriſt, will periſh in his judgment.

Ver. 12. I have yet many things to ſay unto you, &c.] Concerning the abrogation of the ceremonial law, and the calling of the Gentiles; the rejection of the Jews, and the aboliſhment of the ſabbath.

——— But ye cannot bear them now.] Becauſe the Comforter is not come, who alone is able to bear up your minds againſt the ſtrong prejudices of your education, which teach you the contrary belief; ſee Origen contr. celſ. lib. ii. and the next verſe.

Ver. 13. The Spirit of truth ſhall lead you into all truth.] Therefore, the Apoſtles in comprizing the canon of Scripture, under ſuch a dictator and guide, learned all truth, and has left to future ages, all that truth which is neceſſary for the ſalvation of believers; and conſequently all things neceſſary to be believed or done by Chriſtians, are fully and clearly contained in thoſe Scriptures.

—— Teach you.] The Apoſtles; becauſe they only had heard what he had ſaid to them.

Ver. 31. Do ye now believe?] Our Saviour finding, that the affections of his diſciples were raiſed and enlivened with his promiſe, that, though he was gone from them, that the Father ſhould give them all that they aſked in his name, takes them up ſhort with this wholeſome and well-timed rebuke:

— Do ye now believe?] Which is a manifeſt rebuke, and ſeems to charge the faith that the diſciples had now profeſs'd with a three-fold defect, that it was late, that it was cheap, and that it was miſtaken: For each of theſe may be naturally infer'd from the import of the queſtion. (ex. gr.)

Firſt, Do ye now believe? But why did you not believe ſooner? Have you not had ſufficient means of conviction till now? Have you not long ſince ſeen my miracles and heard my doctrine? Have I not told you heretofore, that I came forth from the Father, and that I and the Father are one? Wherefore your faith is reproachable, for that it is ſo late.

Secondly, Do ye now believe? But what does it coſt you to do ſo? What temptation have you to the contrary? Your faith now only lays hold of my promiſes, and is not at all diſcourag'd by any of your own fears: For what difficulties are you brought to? What peril do you run by this private confeſſion of me? And therefore your faith is not to be boaſted of, 'tis rather reproachable, for that it is ſo cheap.

Thirdly, Do ye now believe? i. e. Are you ſure you do believe? Do you not think too indulgently of your ſelves? Have you examin'd your own hearts, and ſecur'd the grounds of your confidence? Indeed, you ſeem to your ſelves to believe; but I (who know you better than you do your ſelves) find that you do not believe as you ought: For a true faith will never be a deſerter; but you will by and by deſert me: And therefore your faith is reproachable, for that it is ſo miſtaken.

Perhaps all theſe three defects were to be found in the preſent faith of the diſciples, at leaſt in ſome meaſure: For,

Tho' they did believe and make the ſame confeſſion before: Yet we muſt acknowledge that their faith was hitherto weak, and labouring and perplex'd: And the reaſon of all, was the prejudice they were bred in, (viz.) That the Meſſiah was to ſet up a worldly kingdom. So that when our Saviour diſcours'd to them concerning perſecution and the croſs, tho' the veneration they had for his awful goodneſs, would not ſuffer them to diſbelieve what he ſaid; yet their rooted belief of another thing inconſiſtent with this, could not but hold their faith under an intricate ſuſpence: But now (this evening) our Saviour had by a more free and full diſcovery weeded this prejudice out of their minds: He had ſatisfy'd them that the Meſſiah's kingdom was Heavenly; that the redemption by Him was moral, not from ſuffering, but from ſin; that the world, and they, were of different families, different faſhions, different fortunes: From which diſcovery their faith grew conſiſtent, it no longer contradicted it ſelf; and therefore it was now profeſs'd, as if it were perfectly new; Now we believe.

Let us obſerve from hence, that no man can have an approvable or ſteady faith, till ſuch time as he has rendred himſelf indifferent to the world. For,

He whoſe piety varies and fluctuates according to the different faces of the world; that ſwells at gain, and ebbs at loſs, and ſometimes ſinks either in the calm of pleaſures, or under the preſſure of affliction; ſuch a one is (as the Apoſtle expreſſes him) like a wave of the ſea, driven about and toſſed; let him not expect to receive any thing from the Lord.

The ſecond thing to be reflected on, is the cheapneſs of the diſciples faith; and that muſt be eſtimated from the encouragements that they had juſt then received: They had juſt received full aſſurances of their Maſter's endearment, of the love of the Father, of the cohabitation of the ſpirit, of the income of their Prayers, of a future eternal reward: And no wonder if the warmth of ſuch encouragements as theſe made their faith ſpring up to a promiſing blade; but yet we ſee that for want of a deeper root the next trial made it wither. Let us obſerve from hence——never to truſt that religion that grows from an occaſional complacency or elevation of ſpirits.

But he that will entertain any reaſonable hopes of his own Chriſtianity muſt find it in the experiences of temptation; what he can forgive when injury provokes him; what he can ſuffer when danger preſents it ſelf; what he can forego of his own to promote the intereſts of Piety? And without theſe experiences all our profeſſions, tho' never ſo couragious, are but like Ephraim's carrying about his arms and his bow as the badges of his valour, and yet running away in the day of battle.

The laſt circumſtance we are to reflect upon, is, the diſciples miſtake of their faith: It was their own hearts they pronounced upon, and yet they were deceived; and they cried very unſeaſonably, now we believe, juſt at the moment when they were ready to confute their pretence. Let us obſerve hence—That men are naturally apt to harbour too indulgent an opinion of themſelves. For now theſe very diſciples were neareſt the time of their great deſertion of their maſter. And had they but diſtruſted that faith, which they ſo confidently pronounced, they had infallibly ſecured it; had they but cried (as once before) Lord increaſe our faith, inſtead of now we believe, they had infallibly prevented the ſhame of their approaching fall. But as it is the firſt method of God's good pleaſure to give grace unto the humble, ſo the next act of his compaſſion is to bring the confident to ſhame; that they may be made acquainted with humbleneſs as a neceſſity, who were not wiſe enough to prefer it as a virtue.

Ver. 33. — I have overcome the world.] He had juſt told them, that in the world they ſhould have great tribulation, or that the world would perſecute them, but he now adds, ye ſhall have me, who being a more powerful helper, will overcome the prince of this world. Which victory, though it was not conſummated but by the death and reſurrection of Chriſt; yet he ſpeaks of it now as finiſhed, becauſe it was ſo near at hand, even as he had ſaid before, Now is the prince of this world caſt out, John xiv. 30.

To conquer the prince of the world, was the ſame as to have conquered the world itſelf; therefore Chriſt bids the Apoſtles to be of good cheer, becauſe he had overcome their adverſary. Yet, though this was particularly and immediately ſpoken to the Apoſtles alone, the Apoſtle Paul ſhews, that it is applicable to all Chriſtians, ſaying, Thanks be to God, who has given us the victory through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. xv. 57. And John ſays, I write to you, young men, becauſe ye have overcome the wicked one, 1 John ii. 13. For whatſoever is born of God, overcometh the world, ch. v. 4. And they overcame him, [the world or the Devil, the prince of the world] by the blood of the Lamb, Revel. xii. 11. which has enabled all men, if they will, to overcome the world, fleſh, and the Devil, ſee Eph. vi. 12.

CHAP. XVII.

1 Chriſt prayeth to his Father to glorify him: 6 to preſerve his Apoſtles, 11 in unity, 17 and truth: 20 to glorify them, and all other believers with him in heaven.

THESE words ſpake Jeſus; and lift up his eyes to heaven, and ſaid, Father, the hour is come: glorify thy Son, that thy Son alſo may glorify thee.

2 As thou haſt given him power over all fleſh, that he ſhould give eternal life to as many as thou haſt given him.

3 And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent.

4 I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do.

5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own ſelf, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

6 I have manifeſted thy name unto the men which thou gaveſt me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gaveſt them me; and they have kept thy word.

7 Now they have known that all things whatſoever thou haſt given me, are of thee.

8 For I have given unto them the words which thou gaveſt me; and they have received them, and have known ſurely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didſt ſend me.

9 I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou haſt given me, for they are thine.

10 And all mine are thine, and thine are mine, and I am glorified in them.

11 And now I am no more in the world, but theſe are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name, thoſe whom thou haſt given me, that they may be one, as we are.

12 While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: thoſe that thou gaveſt me I have kept, and none of them is loſt, but the ſon of perdition: that the ſcripture might be fulfilled.

13 And now come I to thee, and theſe things I ſpeak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themſelves.

14 I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, becauſe they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

15 I pray not that thou ſhouldſt take them out of the world, but that thou ſhouldſt keep them from the evil.

16 They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

17 Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth.

18 As thou haſt ſent me into the world, even ſo have I alſo ſent them into the world.

19 And for their ſakes I ſanctify my ſelf, that they alſo might be ſanctified through the truth.

20 Neither pray I for theſe alone, but for them alſo which ſhall believe on me through their word:

21 That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee; that they alſo may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou haſt ſent me.

22 And the glory which thou gaveſt me, I have given them: that they may be one, even as we are one.

23 I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that thou haſt ſent me, and haſt loved them, as thou haſt loved me.

24 Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory which thou haſt given me: for thou lovedſt me before the foundation of the world.

25 O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee; but I have known thee, and theſe have known that thou haſt ſent me.

26 And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou haſt loved me, may be in them, and I in them.

Chriſt having ended his diſcourſe to his diſciples, and being now retired alone in the garden of Gethſemane, he makes his prayer to the Father, that as the time of his ignominious death was approaching, he would, for the ſatisfaction of his diſciples, who would be ſcattered and offended at his ſufferings, ſhew ſuch ſigns and wonders in his death and paſſion, as would neceſſarily raiſe their ſpirits, and convince them with power, that he was really the Son of God.

Ver. 2. — Over all fleſh.] To gather together all nations and men in the belief and practiſe of his faith and doctrine. And this was ſaid in oppoſition of that narrowneſs of God's diſpenſation, circumſcribed within the ſmall corner of the earth, the land of Judea. Becauſe that by the ſun-ſhine of the Goſpel, all men were at liberty to enter into covenant with God, and to ſit down with Abraham and Iſaac in the kingdom of Heaven.

Ver. 9. I pray for them, I pray not for the world.] Chriſt had hitherto prayed for what principally regarded himſelf, or for what he deſired the Father to do in reſpect to him. But here he begins to pray for them, his diſciples, who had followed him in the regeneration; not for the wicked obſtinate reprobates, who blaſphemouſly reject the Goſpel of peace, and liſt themſelves under the ſtandard of ſin and Satan.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 Judas betrayeth Jeſus. 6 The officers fall to the ground. 10 Peter ſmiteth off Malchus ear. 12 Jeſus is taken, and led unto Annas and Caiaphas. 15 Peters denial. 19 Jeſus examined before Caiaphas. 28 His arraignment before Pilate. 36 His kingdom. 40 The Jews ask Barabbas to be let looſe.

WHEN Jeſus had ſpoken theſe words, he went forth with his diſciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entred, and his diſciples.

2 And Judas alſo which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jeſus oft-times reſorted thither with his diſciples.

3 Judas then having received a band of men, and officers from the chief prieſts and Phariſees, cometh thither with lanterns, and torches, and weapons.

4 Jeſus therefore knowing all things that ſhould come upon him, went forth, and ſaid unto them, Whom ſeek ye?

5 They anſwered him, Jeſus of Nazareth. Jeſus ſaith unto them, I am he. And Judas alſo which betrayed him, ſtood with them.

6 Aſſoon then as he had ſaid unto them, I am he, they went backward and fell to the ground.

7 Then asked he them again, Whom ſeek ye? And they ſaid, Jeſus of Nazareth.

8 Jeſus anſwered, I have told you that I am he. If therefore ye ſeek me, let theſe go their way:

9 That the ſaying might be fulfilled which he ſpake, Of them which thou gaveſt me, have I loſt none.

10 Then Simon Peter having a ſword, drew it, and ſmote the high-prieſts ſervant, and cut off his right ear. The ſervants name was Malchus.

11 Then ſaid Jeſus unto Peter, Put up thy ſword into the ſheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, ſhall I not drink it?

12 Then the band, and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jeſus, and bound him,

13 And led him away to Annas firſt (for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the high-prieſt that ſame year.)

14 Now Caiaphas was he which gave counſel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man ſhould die for the people.

15 ¶ And Simon Peter followed Jeſus, and ſo did another diſciple. That diſciple was known unto the high-prieſt, and went in with Jeſus into the palace of the high-prieſt.

16 But Peter ſtood at the door without. Then went out that other diſciple which was known unto the high-prieſt, and ſpake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

17 Then ſaith the damſel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou alſo one of this mans diſciples? He ſaith, I am not.

18 And the ſervants and officers ſtood there, who had made a fire of coals, (for it was cold) and they warmed themſelves: and Peter ſtood with them, and warmed himſelf.

19 ¶ The high-prieſt then asked Jeſus of his diſciples, and of his doctrine.

20 Jeſus anſwered him, I ſpake openly to the world; I ever taught in the ſynagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always reſort, and in ſecret have I ſaid nothing.

21 Why askeſt thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have ſaid unto them: behold, they know what I ſaid.

22 And when he had thus ſpoken, one of the officers which ſtood by, ſtruck Jeſus with the palm of his hand, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou the high-prieſt ſo?

23 Jeſus anſwered him, If I have ſpoken evil, bear witneſs of the evil: but if well, why ſmiteſt thou me?

24 (Now Annas had ſent him bound unto Caiaphas the high-prieſt.)

25 And Simon Peter ſtood and warmed himſelf: They ſaid therefore unto him, Art not thou alſo one of his diſciples? He denied it, and ſaid, I am not.

26 One of the ſervants of the high-prieſt, (being his kinſman whoſe ear Peter cut off) ſaith, Did not I ſee thee in the garden with him?

27 Peter then denied again, and immediately the cock crew.

28 ¶ Then led they Jeſus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment: and it was early, and they themſelves went not into the judgment-hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled: but that they might eat the paſſover.

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and ſaid, What accuſation bring you againſt this man?

30 They anſwered and ſaid unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee.

31 Then ſaid Pilate unto them, Take ye him and judge him according to your law, The Jews therefore ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death:

32 That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, ſignifying what death he ſhould die.

33 Then Pilate entred into the judgment-hall again, and called Jeſus, and ſaid unto him, Art thou the king of the Jews?

34 Jeſus anſwered him, Sayeſt thou this thing of thy ſelf, or did others tell it thee of me?

35 Pilate anſwered, Am I a Jew? Thine own nation, and the chief prieſts have delivered thee unto me: What haſt thou done?

36 Jeſus anſwered, My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my ſervants fight, that I ſhould not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate therefore ſaid unto him, Art thou a king then? Jeſus anſwered, Thou ſayeſt that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould bear witneſs unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth, heareth my voice.

38 Pilate ſaith unto him, What is truth? And when he had ſaid this, he went out again unto the Jews, and ſaith unto them, I find in him no fault at all.

39 But ye have a cuſtom, that I ſhould releaſe unto you one at the paſſover: will ye therefore that I releaſe unto you the king of the Jews?

40 Then cried they all again, ſaying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

CHAP. XIX.

1 Chriſt is ſcourged, crowned with thorns, and beaten. 4 Pilate is deſirous to releaſe him, but being overcome with the outrage of the Jews, he delivered him to be crucified. 23 They caſt lots for his garments. 26 He commendeth his mother to John. 28 He dieth. 31 His ſide is pierced. 38 He is buried by Joſeph and Nicodemus.

THEN Pilate therefore took Jeſus, and ſcourged him.

2 And the ſoldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe.

3 And ſaid, Hail king of the Jews: and they ſmote him with their hands.

4 Pilate therefore went forth again, and ſaith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him.

5 Then came Jeſus forth, wearing the crown of thorns; and the purple robe. And Pilate ſaith unto them, Behold the man.

6 When the chief prieſts therefore and officers ſaw him, they cried out, ſaying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate ſaith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him.

7 The Jews anſwered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God.

8 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, he was the more afraid;

9 And went again into the judgment-hall, and ſaith unto Jeſus, Whence art thou? But Jeſus gave him no anſwer.

10 Then ſaith Pilate unto him, Speakeſt thou not unto me? knoweſt thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to releaſe thee?

11 Jeſus anſwered, Thou couldſt have no power at all againſt me, except it were given thee from above: therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater ſin.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate ſought to releaſe him: but the Jews cried out, ſaying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Ceſars friend: whoſoever maketh himſelf a king, ſpeaketh againſt Ceſar.

13 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, he brought Jeſus forth, and ſat down in the judgment-ſeat, in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

14 And it was the preparation of the paſſover, and about the ſixth hour: and he ſaith unto the Jews, Behold your king.

15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate ſaith unto them, Shall I crucify your king? The chief prieſts anſwered, We have no king but Ceſar.

16 Then delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jeſus and led him away.

17 And he bearing his croſs, went forth into a place called the place of a ſkull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha.

18 Where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either ſide one, and Jeſus in the midſt.

19 ¶ And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the croſs. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20 This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jeſus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

21 Then ſaid the chief prieſts of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The king of the Jews; but that he ſaid, I am king of the Jews.

22 Pilate anſwered, What I have written, I have written.

23 ¶ Then the ſoldiers, when they had crucified Jeſus, took his garments (and made four parts, to every ſoldier a part) and alſo his coat: now the coat was without ſeam, woven from the top throughout.

24 They ſaid therefore among themſelves, Let us not rent it, but caſt lots for it, whoſe it ſhall be: that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, which ſaith, They parted my raiment among them, and for my veſture they did caſt lots. Theſe things therefore the ſoldiers did.

25 ¶ Now there ſtood by the croſs of Jeſus, his mother, and his mothers ſiſter,

Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

26 When Jeſus therefore ſaw his mother, and the diſciple ſtanding by, whom he loved, he ſaith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy ſon.

27 Then ſaith he to the diſciple, Behold thy mother. And from that hour that diſciple took her unto his own home.

28 ¶ After this, Jeſus knowing that all things were now accompliſhed that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, ſaith, I thirſt.

29 Now there was ſet a veſſel full of vinegar: and they filled a ſpunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyſſop, and put it to his mouth.

30 When Jeſus therefore had received the vinegar, he ſaid, It is finiſhed: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghoſt.

31 The Jews therefore becauſe it was the preparation, that the bodies ſhould not remain upon the croſs on the ſabbath-day (for that ſabbath-day was an high day) beſought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the ſoldiers, and brake the legs of the firſt, and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jeſus, and ſaw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs.

34 But one of the ſoldiers with a ſpear pierced his ſide, and forthwith came there out blood and water.

35 And he that ſaw it, bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he ſaith true, that ye might believe.

36 For theſe things were done, that the ſcripture ſhould be fulfilled, A bone of him ſhall not be broken.

37 And again another ſcripture ſaith, They ſhall look on him whom they pierced.

38 ¶ And after this, Joſeph of Arimathea (being a diſciple of Jeſus, but ſecretly for fear of the Jews) beſought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jeſus: and Pilate gave him leave: He came therefore and took the body of Jeſus.

39 And there came alſo Nicodemus (which at the firſt came to Jeſus by night) and brought a mixture of myrrhe and aloes, about an hundred pound weight.

40 Then took they the body of Jeſus, and wound it in linen clothes, with the ſpices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41 Now in the place where he was crucified, there was a garden: and in the garden a new ſepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42 There laid they Jeſus therefore, becauſe of the Jews preparation-day, for the ſepulchre was nigh at hand.

Chap. xviii. and xix. In theſe chapters are contained the ſufferings of our Bleſſed Saviour, concerning which I have already remarked many things in Matt. xxvi, xxvii. Mark xv, xvi. Luke xxii, xxiii. And now I ſhall conclude my Annotations on thoſe Scriptures by the following Diſſertations.

A view of the Circumſtances of our Saviour's laſt Sufferings.

In the hiſtory of our Saviour's laſt ſufferings at Jeruſalem there is mention made of four perſons of diſtinction, viz. Caiaphas the high-prieſt, Pontius Pilate the governor, his wife, and Herod the tetrarch of Galilee. For,

Matthew ſays, "Then aſſembled together the chief prieſts and the ſcribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high-prieſt, who was called Caiaphas," xxvi. 3. Then they that had laid hold on Jeſus, led him away to Caiaphas the high-prieſt, ver. 57. John likewiſe aſſures us, that at this time, Caiaphas was the high-prieſt, and has informed us of a particular omitted by Matthew, namely, that our Saviour was firſt carried to Annas, father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the high-prieſt that ſame year; John xviii. 3—24.

That Caiaphas was now high-prieſt, appears hence: He was made high-prieſt by Valerius Gratus, predeceſſor of Pontius Pilate, and was put out of that office by Vitellius, preſident of Syria, after Pilate was ſent away out of the province of Judea. Joſephus informs us of Caiaphas's advancement to the prieſthood in theſe words: "And a year after, he (Gratus) removed him (Eleazar the ſon of Ananus), and gave the high-prieſthood to Simon the ſon of Camithus. He, having enjoyed this honour not above a year, was ſucceeded by Joſeph, who is alſo called Caiaphas. After this, Gratus went away for Rome, having been eleven years in Judea. And Pontius Pilate came thither as his ſucceſſor." Antiq. 18. c. 2. The ſame hiſtorian gives us the account of Caiaphas's removal in this manner. Vitellius, whilſt in Syria, ſent orders to Pilate to repair to Rome; after which, Vitellius went up to Jeruſalem, and there gave directions concerning ſeveral matters. "Having done theſe things, ſays Joſephus, he took away the prieſthood from the high-prieſt Joſeph, who is alſo called Caiaphas, and appointed Jonathan the ſon of Ananus high-prieſt: And then returned to Antioch," ibid. c. 5.

It is evident therefore, that Caiaphas was high-prieſt, all the time that Pilate was in Judea.

We ſhall preſently have occaſion to take notice of ſeveral things concerning Pilate; I ſhall here only ſhew that Pilate was at this time governor of Judea. Luke ſays, Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Ceſar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, the word of God came unto John the ſon of Zacharias in the wilderneſs, Luke iii. 1, 2. If Luke in this text intends, not the fifteenth year of Tiberius's reign from the death of Auguſtus, but the fifteenth year of his proconſular power, when he was made colleague of Auguſtus; it may poſſibly admit a debate, whether Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea, when John the Baptiſt began to preach: But there can be no queſtion made, but that Pilate was governor of Judea, at the time of our Saviour's crucifixion; whether Luke be underſtood, in that place, to ſpeak of the proconſular power of Tiberius, or of his ſole empire after the death of Auguſtus.

The fifteenth year of Tiberius's proconſular empire, and the twelfth of his ſole empire are pretty near co-incident. For the fifteenth of his proconſular empire is ſuppoſed to begin (vid. Pagi Crit. in Baron. A. D. 25) about the 27th of Auguſt, A. D. 25. And the 12th of his ſole empire began the 19th of Auguſt in the ſame year.

There is undoubtedly ſome difficulty in computing exactly the time, which the Evangeliſts have allotted to John the Baptiſt's and our Saviour's miniſtry. But whether we underſtand Luke to ſpeak of the fifteenth of Tiberius's proconſular power, or of his ſole empire; I think, that the earlieſt date of our Saviour's crucifixion muſt be that of the Jewiſh paſſover, which happened in the fifteenth year of Tiberius's ſole empire, A. D. 29, and the lateſt date the Jewiſh paſſover, which happened in the 19th year of Tiberius's ſole empire, A. D. 33.

Take any year from 29 to 33 incluſively; and Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea.

This may be made appear in this manner. Tiberius died the 16th of March, A. D. 37. Vid. Pagi Critic. in Bar. A. 37. n. ii. Vitellius received the tidings of it at Jeruſalem. Joſeph. Ant. lib. 18. cap. vi. p. 806. in. But Pilate had been removed ſometime before this, (ibid. cap. 5. ſect. 2.) as is allowed by all: How long before, we will not now enquire. Pilate therefore was removed from his government before the paſſover, A. D. 37. when he had been there ten years. So Joſephus ſays expreſly: "And Pilate, having been ten years in Judea, haſtened away to Rome, in obedience to the orders he had received from Vitellius, not daring to refuſe." (Ibid.) Subſtract ten from 37, and it appears that Pilate was governor of Judea, before the paſſover in A. D. 27, and conſequently before our Saviour's laſt ſufferings.

That our Saviour was crucified in Judea, in the reign of Tiberius, under Pontius Pilate, is the unanimous teſtimony of Chriſtian writers, is particularly mentioned by Tacitus, Ann. l. 15. c. 44. an Heathen author, and is not denied by any. But this being a principal fact, I am not obliged to produce any paſſages relating to it now. All I am concerned to do at preſent is, to ſhew, that according to the notes of time, mentioned by the Evangeliſts, Pontius Pilate muſt have been governor of Judea, when our Saviour was crucified. This I preſume I have made appear from Joſephus, who muſt be allowed to have known, what government his own country was under at that time.

Matthew ſays, that when he (Pilate) was ſet down on the judgment-ſeat, his wife ſent unto him, ſaying, Have thou nothing to do with that juſt man: for I have ſuffered many things this day in a dream, becauſe of him, Matt. xxvii. 19.

So long as the commonwealth ſubſiſted, it was very unuſual for the governors of the provinces to take their wives with them: And afterward, Auguſtus ſeems not much to have approved of it. Sueton. in Aug. c. 24. But however, the contrary cuſtom prevailed. It is evident from Tacitus, that at the time of Auguſtus's death, Germanicus had his wife Agrippina with him in Germany. Tacit. Ann. l. i. c. 40, 41. And in the beginning of Tiberius's reign, he carried her with him him into the Eaſt. Id. lib. ii. c. 54. And Piſo, the prefect of Syria, took his wife alſo along with him, at the ſame time. Ibid. c. 55. But there is nothing can render this more apparent than a motion, made in the Roman ſenate by Severus Caecina, in the 4th conſulſhip of Tiberius, and 2d of Druſus Caeſar, A. D. 21. "That no magiſtrate, to whom any province was aſſigned, ſhould be accompanied by his wife; (Id. l. iii. c. 33.) except the ſenates rejecting it, and that with ſome indignation, ibid. c. 34.

Luke ſays, that when Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilean. And as ſoon as he knew, that he belonged to Herod's juriſdiction, he ſent him to Herod, who himſelf was alſo at Jeruſalem at that time, Luke xxiii. 7. As this Herod was the ſon of Herod the Great, and a Jew, there is all the reaſon in the world to ſuppoſe, that he often went to Jeruſalem at the Jewiſh feaſts. Joſephus has particularly mentioned his being there at one of their feaſts, A. D. 37. which I believe, none will deny to be the feaſt of the paſſover. He is ſpeaking of Vitellius, preſident of Syria. Having given directions about theſe matters, he (Vitellius) went up to Jeruſalem with Herod the tetrarch and his friends to worſhip God, a feaſt of the Jews being nigh at hand, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 18. c. 6.

Having diſpatched theſe general things, we may now take the remaining particulars in the order, in which they lie.

Whilſt our Saviour was under examination before the high-prieſt and rulers of the Jews, after they had in vain attempted to get evidence againſt him from witneſſes, 'tis related, that the high-prieſt ſaid unto him; I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt, the Son of God. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thou haſt ſaid: nevertheleſs, I ſay unto you, hereafter ſhall ye ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of Heaven. Then the high-prieſt rent his clothes, ſaying, He hath ſpoken blaſphemy, Matt. xxvi. 63. —65.

It has been thought by ſome, that the high-prieſt might not rend his clothes: But, that he might, and did do ſo, upon extraordinary occaſions, will appear from the following particulars. The author of the firſt book of Maccabees ſays; Then Jonathan rent his clothes, and caſt earth upon his head, 1 Macc. xi. 71. Jonathan was then high-prieſt; the occaſion of this action was his mens running away from their enemies. Doctor Lightfoot, in his Hebrew and Thalmudical exercitations upon this text of Matthew, quotes theſe words from Maimonides: When witneſſes ſpeak out the blaſphemy which they heard, then all hearing the blaſphemy are bound to rend their clothes. As the high-prieſt among the Jews was one of their judges, and was preſent at trials, he muſt be comprehended in this rule. I ſubjoin to theſe a paſſage of Joſephus. Perhaps, it will not be thought to come up to our point, becauſe he does not ſpeak of the high-prieſt in the ſingular number. But I do not ſee, why the perſon, who was actually in the high-prieſthood, muſt be excluded; and in one reſpect it exceeds the fact, now before us. For Caiaphas undoubtedly had on, at this time, his ordinary clothes; whereas, Joſephus ſpeaks of the prieſts rending the garments which they wore in their miniſtrations at the temple.

The caſe was this: Florus, governor of Judea, had plundered the Sacred Treaſury at Jeruſalem, Joſ. de bello Jud. lib. ii. c. 14. and committed many other abuſes. Hereupon, the Jews, being highly provoked, were ready to break out into war with the Romans. And a great number of them, being got together into an open place in the city, gave out many reflections upon Florus. Joſephus ſays, that upon this, "The chief men and the high-prieſts, being filled with concern, rent their garments, and falling down upon their knees, ibid. c. xv. beſeeched the people to be peaceable, and to bear patiently what had paſt already, rather than provoke Florus to do ſtill worſe."

When this tumult was appeaſed, Florus intending (as Joſephus ſuppoſes) to exact conditions the people would not comply with, and thereby to bring on an open war, "called the chief men to him, and told them, that he would eſteem this a teſtimony of their fidelity, and of their intention to be quiet for the future, if the people would go out of the city, and ſalute his ſoldiers, which were then coming from Ceſarea." The chief men of the Jews then called the people to the temple, and deſired them to ſubmit to theſe demands; but were not able to prevail upon them. Then "every prieſt and miniſter of God, when they had brought forth the Holy Veſſels, being clothed in the veſtments which they wear in their Sacred Functions, entreated them not to exaſperate the Romans to come and take away from them thoſe things which were conſecrated to God. Then might be ſeen the high-prieſts themſelves with aſhes on their heads, and their breaſts naked, their garments being rent." ib.

In this hiſtory we have frequent mention of chief prieſts, in the plural number. Now the chief prieſts and elders and all the council ſought falſe witneſs againſt him, Matt. xxiv. 59. And they led Jeſus away to the high-prieſt: and with him were aſſembled the chief prieſts and the elders and the ſcribes, Mark. xiv. 53. I know not, but this may be thought by ſome an impropriety, in the Evangeliſts expreſſion; becauſe ſtrictly there was but one high-prieſt among the Jews at a time. This is certainly very true, and the Evangeliſts appear to have known it very well. But then, all thoſe who had ever bore the office of high-prieſt, were called ſo likewiſe; and, I believe, lieve, ſome others beſides : I need not now enquire who. But ſo far is this ſtile from affording any juſt objection againſt the Sacred Hiſtorians, that it may very well be reckoned one proof of their being well acquainted with the things, of which they have written ; ſince it is the uſual ſtile of Joſephus. I need not produce any particular paſſages for the proof of it. The expreſſion occurs more than once in thoſe I have juſt now tranſcribed.

We are informed, that from the high-prieſt's, our Saviour was led away, and delivered to Pontius Pilate, Matt. xxvii. 2. All the Evangeliſts aſſure us of this, Mark xv. 1. Luke xxiii. 1. John xviii. 28, 29. It is plain from the New Teſtament and other ancient writings, that the Roman governor of Judea uſually reſided at Ceſarea, Tacit. hiſt. lib. ii. cap. 79. vid. & Joſeph. de B. J. lib. ii. c. 9. Antiq. 18. c. 4. l. xx. c. 4. there being only an inferior officer left at Jeruſalem with a band or legion of ſoldiers to keep all things there in order: But yet it is certain, that at the time of their great feaſts, and eſpecially at the paſſover, the governor himſelf was wont to be at Jeruſalem, to prevent, or ſuppreſs diſturbances. There is frequent mention in Joſephus's hiſtory of the preſence of the procurators of Judea, or of the preſidents of Syria, at Jeruſalem at theſe times. I have juſt now ſhewn that Vitellius, preſident of Syria, was at Jeruſalem, at the paſſover, A. D. 37. He had been there alſo at the paſſover of the year before; as is very plain in Joſephus, Ant. l. 13. c. 5. In the reign of Claudius, Cumanus, procurator of Judea, was at Jeruſalem at one of the paſſovers, ib. l. xx. c. 4. de bell. l. ii. c. 12. And afterward, in the reign of the ſame Emperor, Quadratus, preſident of Syria, having ſent away Cumanus, juſt now mentioned, to give an account of his adminiſtration to Ceſar, went up himſelf to Jeruſalem. Joſephus's words are theſe : "Having finiſhed theſe affairs, he went up from Lydda to Jeruſalem ; and finding the people celebrating the feaſt of unleavened bread very quietly, he returned to Antioch," ib. c. 12. the ſeat of the preſidents of Syria. In another place he ſpeaks of a great number of Jews, who preſented complaints at the paſſover to Ceſtius Gallus, preſident of Syria, againſt Florus, their own governor, then likewiſe at Jeruſalem, ib. c. 14.

Moreover, very probably Pilate was often at Jeruſalem, at the feaſts, for the adminiſtration of juſtice. Jeruſalem was the chief city of Judea, and had a council in it. And it was very uſual for the Roman governors to go, at times, to the chief towns of their provinces, on this account ; as is evident from many paſſages of the Roman authors, Cic. ad Attic. l. v. ep. 20, &c. And it may be fairly concluded from the Evangeliſts, that Pilate was at Jeruſalem now for this very end : As it is alſo very plain, that he had uſed to keep court there, at this feaſt. Ye have a cuſtom, ſays he, that I ſhould releaſe unto you one at the paſſover, John xviii. 39.

In the account, the Evangeliſts have given us of Pilate's conduct, there are ſeveral things very remarkable ; which ought therefore to be conſidered, and accounted for. The high-prieſts, and elders of the Jews were very earneſt for our Saviour's condemnation ; but Pilate appears very backward to pronounce any ſentence upon him. He knew that for envy they had delivered him, Matt. xxvii. 18. When they charged him with ſtirring up the people, and ſaying that he was a king, Pilate ſaid unto him, Art thou the king of the Jews ? Luke xxiii. 2. Jeſus anſwered, My kingdom is not of this world, John xviii. 33.—36. Pilate therefore ſaid unto him, Art thou a king then ? Jeſus anſwered, Thou ſayeſt that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould bear witneſs to the truth. —— Pilate ſaith unto him, What is truth ? And when he had ſaid this, he went out again unto the Jews, and ſaith unto them, I find in him no fault at all, — 37, 38.

There being no proof of any diſturbances cauſed by our Saviour among the people, Pilate enquires into this charge, of his taking upon him the title of a king ; and perceiving, that he intended not by it any worldly government, but only that his deſign had been to teach men ſome certain principles, he aſks him, What is truth ? or what was that truth, which he profeſſed to teach ? But not being ſolicitous to know particularly what theſe principles were, and being ſatisfied from what he had already heard from our Saviour, that there was nothing ſeditious in them, he did not ſtay for an anſwer to this queſtion ; but immediately goes out to the Jews, and tells them : I find in him no fault at all.

Grotius, in Jo. xviii. 38. ſuppoſes that Pilate, by the kingdom our Saviour ſpoke of, underſtood ſuch a kingdom as the Stoicks aſcribed to their wiſe men, a kingdom no more prejudicial to the Roman government than theirs. He certainly conceived of our Saviour as a leader only of ſome innocent ſect, and apprehended, that it was nothing but envy and ſecret malice, that moved the Phariſees to demand judgment againſt him.

But notwithſtanding what Pilate ſaid of the innocence of Jeſus, the Jews were ſtill preſſing for a ſentence againſt him. However, Pilate could not yet be prevailed on to anſwer their demands ; but ordered him to be ſcourged ; and the ſoldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it upon his head, and they put on him a purple robe, John xix. 1, 2. abuſed and mocked him. Pilate, hoping they might be ſatisfied with this, went forth again ; and ſaith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him, — ver. 4. When the chief prieſts therefore and the officers ſaw him, they cried out, ſaying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate ſaith unto them : Take ye him and crucify him : for I find no fault in him. The Jews anſwered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God. When Pilate therefore heard that ſaying, he was the more afraid, — ver. 6, 7, 8.

Many learned and judicious expoſitors underſtand by theſe laſt words, that Pilate became yet more afraid than before, to paſs ſentence of condemnation upon Jeſus ; leſt, after all, he ſhould prove to be ſome extraordinary perſon. They think, that having, probably, received ſome accounts of our Saviour's miracles, and hearing this charge, that he had made himſelf the Son of God, he was brought into ſome doubts whether he might not be ſome uncommon perſon, like thoſe heroes, or demi-gods, which were ſo much ſpoken of among the Greeks and Romans ; and therefore he was ſeized with a freſh fear of, being concerned in his death ; ſee Grotius and Hammond, &c. in loc.

The words will bear another ſenſe, and I confeſs, that ever ſince I have read Joſephus, in whom there are divers inſtances of the Jewiſh zeal about this time, and of tumults and ſeditions which they run into, upon the leaſt affront offered to their religious inſtitutions, ſome of which Pilate had been witneſs to, I have underſtood theſe words in a different ſenſe, and have thought that Pilate finding they intereſted their religion in this cauſe, and that they were reſolute in it, became afraid, he muſt at laſt ſubmit to them. And I am glad to find, at length, that I am not ſingular in this interpretation. Beza ſays upon this place : He was not without reaſon afraid, that an open ſedition might happen, if he did not comply with the multitude. And Calvin allows of this ſenſe alſo.

But this ſenſe being liable to an objection from an expreſſion John uſes, after this, it will be needful to conſider what follows. Pilate having heard this, went again into the judgment-hall, and ſaith unto Jeſus, Whence art thou ? but Jeſus gave him no anſwer. Then ſaith Pilate unto him, Speakeſt thou not unto me ? Knoweſt thou not, that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to releaſe thee ? Jeſus anſwered, Thou couldſt have no power at all againſt me, except it were given thee from above ; therefore he that delivered me unto thee, hath the greater ſin. And from thenceforth Pilate ſought to releaſe him, John xix. 9, 12.

Theſe laſt words may be reckoned an objection againſt the ſenſe, in which I underſtand the words above-mentioned. But certainly John does not hereby intend, that Pilate then began to ſeek to releaſe Jeſus. He has, before this, related divers attempts which Pilate had made to bring the Jews to temper. What he means hereby is, that he ſtill ſought to releaſe him ; that upon hearing what Jeſus ſaid in this laſt examination, he made another trial of the Jews, to ſee, if they could not be contented. Our Lord had maintained his innocence, told Pilate that he could have no power againſt him, if it had not been allowed by the providence of God, for particular ends and reaſons ; and that they who had delivered him to him, had been guilty of an heinous and aggravated crime. Pilate therefore, being ſtill ſatisfied of his innocence, made one and another attempt after this, to bring the Jews to conſent to his being releaſed. But at length, the voices of them and of the chief prieſts prevailed, Luke xxiii. 23. when Pilate ſaw that he could prevail nothing, but rather a tumult was made, Matt. xxvii. 24. then delivered he him unto them to be crucified, John xix. 16.

So that, whether the fear which ſeized Pilate, upon the Jews telling him, that Jeſus had made himſelf the Son of God, was a fear ariſing from an apprehenſion, that he might be ſome extraordinary perſon, and more than a man; or whether it was an apprehenſion of diſturbances and tumults, if he did not hearken to the Jews; yet it is evident from the paſſages laſt quoted, and from many others in the Goſpels, that the Evangeliſts have repreſented Pilate's condemnation of our Lord, as extorted from him.

He told them once and again, that he found no fault in him: he had him ſcourged, and brought him out to them, in a mock royal dreſs; hoping they might be ſatisfied with this puniſhment and diſgrace. It being his cuſtom at the paſſover to releaſe to them ſome priſoner of their nation, and the people being gathered together in great numbers, and now demanding this favour of him; he propoſed to them, that Jeſus might be the perſon: But they being moved by the high-prieſts, deſired that Barabbas might be releaſed; a criminal ſo infamous, that no one not void of all ſhame would have ſpoke for him; a man that had been taken up in an inſurrection againſt the Roman government, and that had committed robbery and murder. Not being able, by all theſe methods, to move the compaſſion or equity of the Jews; nor obſerving that there was any party among the common people, that favoured Jeſus; and being willing to content the people, he delivered Jeſus unto them to be crucified, Mark xv. 15. The Evangeliſts are unanimous in the account, that this ſentence was pronounced only to content the Jews, that is, either to ſecure the peace of the province, or to maintain his intereſt with the people, when he ſaw that nothing could ſatisfy or appeaſe their rage, but the death of Jeſus. When Pilate ſaw that he could prevail nothing; but rather a tumult was made, he took water, and waſhed his hands before the multitude, ſaying, I am innocent from the blood of this juſt perſon: ſee ye to it. Then anſwered all the people and ſaid, his blood be on us and on our children, Matt. xxvii. 24, 25. Luke xxiii. 24, 25. John xix. 14—16.

It will ſeem ſtrange to ſome, that a Roman governor ſhould have any inducements to comply with the demands of people, contrary to his own judgment and inclination. But he that conſiders the account we have of the principles and behaviour of the Jewiſh nation at this time, will be ſatisfied, the Evangeliſts have here given a juſt and true repreſentation of this tranſaction; and will be convinced, that a Roman governor, with all his authority, could not paſs by any thing, which they apprehended to be a breach on their religious conſtitution, without hazarding the peace of his province. All this will not juſtify an unrighteous ſentence, but that this was the caſe is plain.

We have ſeen that the high-prieſts pretended, that Jeſus had been guilty of blaſphemy, in making himſelf the Son of God, and that by their law he ought to die, John xix. 7. And Pilate had had experience of their prodigious firmneſs and zeal for all the parts of their religion; for, there are two particular proofs, they gave him of this, related by Joſephus; the one on occaſion of his placing the Roman enſigns in Jeruſalem; the other upon his attempting to bring water into the city with money taken out of the Sacred Treaſury. The former is related by Joſephus thus: "Pilate the prefect of Judea ſending his army from Ceſarea, and putting them into winter quarters at Jeruſalem, brought the carved images of Ceſar which are on the enſigns into the city, in violation of the Jewiſh laws; ſince our law forbids the making of any images. For which reaſon the former governors were wont to come into the city with enſigns deſtitute of thoſe ornaments. Pilate was the firſt, who ſet up images in Jeruſalem; and he did it privately, the army making their entry in the night-time. But aſſoon as the people knew it, they went in a vaſt body to Ceſarea, making earneſt ſupplication for many days, that the images might be removed. He not granting their petition, thinking it would be diſhonourable to the Emperor to do ſo, and they ſtill perſiſting in their requeſt to him, on the ſixth day, having privately ordered his ſoldiers to their arms, he ſeated himſelf on his tribunal, in the Circus, near which he had placed his men, that they might be in readineſs: And when the Jews came to him thither with their petition, his ſoldiers having, upon a ſignal given, ſurrounded them, he threatned them with immediate death, if they did not give over their clamours and return home. They then threw themſelves on the ground, and offered their necks to the ſword, and ſaid: They could die much more eaſily, than they could dare to do any thing contrary to the wiſdom of their laws. Pilate ſurprized at their firmneſs in the obſervation of their laws, immediately gave orders for bringing back the images from Jeruſalem to Ceſarea," Antiq. l. 18. c. 4.

There immediately follows after this, an account of the diſturbance raiſed at Jeruſalem by Pilate's attempting to bring water into the city, at the expence of money taken out of the Sacred Treaſury. Joſephus ſays, That "many thouſands got together, crying out, that he ought to deſiſt from this undertaking; that many vented moſt reproachful ſpeeches againſt him. ——— Some were killed and others wounded in this tumult, but at length the ſedition was ſuppreſſed."

Both theſe attempts of Pilate were made at the beginning of his government. Some learned men, who ſuppoſe, that Pilate came into Judea, A. D. 25, place them in that year, Cleric. hiſt. eccl. And others, who ſuppoſe, that Pilate was not procurator of Judea till the year 27, place them there, Baſnage, Ann. Polit. Eccl. I am of opinion, the firſt attempt was made by him at the beginning of the firſt winter after his arrival in the province, and the other the ſummer following. Undoubtedly, he had ſeen the Jews firmneſs upon both theſe occaſions, and poſſibly upon ſome others, before the time of the event, which we are conſidering.

We have another attempt of Pilate's, of the ſame nature, mentioned in the letter, which Agrippa the elder ſent to Caligula; as this letter is given us by Philo. In ſome particulars, it has a great reſemblance with the ſtory, Joſephus has told, of Pilate's bringing the enſigns into Jeruſalem; and in others it is very different from it; which has given occaſion to ſome learned men to ſuppoſe, that Philo has been miſtaken. For my own part, as I make no doubt, but Joſephus's account of the enſigns is true; ſo, I think, that Philo may alſo be relied on for the truth of a fact, he has mentioned as happening in his own time in Judea: And, conſequently, I judge them to be two different facts.

Agrippa reckoning up to Caligula the ſeveral favours conferred on the Jews by the imperial family, ſays; "Pilate was procurator of Judea. He not ſo much out of reſpect to Tiberius, as a malicious intention to vex the people, dedicates gilt ſhields, and places them in Herod's palace within the Holy City. There was no human figure upon them, nor any thing elſe, which is forbidden, except an inſcription, which expreſſed theſe two things, the name of the perſon who dedicated them, and of him, to whom they were dedicated. When the people perceived what had been done, —— they deſired this innovation of the ſhields might be rectified, that their ancient cuſtoms, which had been preſerved through ſo many ages, and had been hitherto untouched by kings and emperors, might not now be violated. He refuſed their demands with roughneſs; ſuch was his temper, fierce and untractable. They then cried out, Do not you raiſe a ſedition yourſelf; Do not you diſturb the peace by your own illegal practices. ——— It is not Tiberius's pleaſure, that any of our laws ſhould be broken in upon. If you have received any edict, or letter from the emperor to this purpoſe, produce it, that we may leave ſoliciting you, and depute an embaſſy to him, and entreat him to revoke his orders. This put him out of all temper; for he was afraid, that if they ſhould ſend an embaſſy, they might diſcover the many male-adminiſtrations of his government, his extortions, his unjuſt decrees, his inhuman cruelties. This reduced him to the utmoſt perplexity. On the one hand, he was afraid to remove things, that had been once dedicated, and was alſo unwilling to do a favour to men that were his ſubjects: And on the other hand, he knew very well the inflexible ſeverity of Tiberius. The chief men of the nation, obſerving this, and perceiving, that he repented of what he had done, though he endeavoured to conceal it, write a moſt humble and ſubmiſſive letter to Tiberius. It is needleſs to ſay, how he was provoked, when he had read the account of Pilate's ſpeeches and threatnings; the event ſhewing it ſufficiently. For he ſoon ſent a letter to Pilate reprimanding him for ſo audacious a proceeding, requiring alſo, that the ſhields ſhould be removed. And accordingly they were carried from the metropolis to Ceſarea by the ſea-ſide, called Sebaſte from your great grandfather, that they might be placed in the temple there conſecrated to him; and there they were repoſited," Philo de leg. ad Cai. p. 1033.

The reader doubtleſs obſerves the ſeveral different circumſtances of this ſtory from that of the enſigns, which Joſephus has told; and particularly, that this dedication of the ſhields was made ſometime after Pilate had been in the province; becauſe now he had been guilty of many male-practices in his government; whereas, the fact which Joſephus has related, happened very ſoon after his arrival in the province. This circumſtance may be an argument, that Philo did not take the enſigns for ſhields; it being very unlikely, he ſhould miſtake the time of ſuch an affair.

I cannot however be poſitive, that this fact happened before our Saviour's crucifixion. But yet, methinks, it may help us to form an idea, how Pilate underſtood that threatning ſpeech of the Jews: If thou let this man go, thou art not Ceſar's friend, John xix. 12. For, ſuppoſing this affair of the ſhields not to have happened till after our Saviour's crucifixion, (which however is not certain) yet undoubtedly Pilate had, before this time, committed many abuſes. And though he might be very well ſatiſfied, the acquitting Jeſus and ſetting him at liberty would not be deemed any crime, if the caſe was fairly ſtated; yet he might be unwilling to provoke the principal men of the Jewiſh nation to ſend Tiberius an account of his behaviour on other occaſions. This we may the more eaſily credit, not only becauſe at all times the remonſtrances of a province were very much dreaded by the prefects, but becauſe they were more eſpecially ſo under Tiberius; who was very ſolicitous for the peace of his provinces, and had endeavoured to ſecure them from the exactions of his officers. And it was for this reaſon, as he himſelf ſaid, that he ſuffered the preſidents to remain in the provinces for ſo long a time, becauſe they all endeavoured to enrich themſelves, and the ſhorter time they ſtaid in them, the more eager they were to improve it to that end, ſee Joſ. Antiq. lib. 18. c. 7.

Thus we ſee how Pilate, a man chiefly ſwayed by a regard to his private intereſt, might be in ſubjection to a clamorous and tumultuous people, in an affair, in which they pretended their religion was concerned.

I have partly ſhewn before, and ſhall do it more at large hereafter, what power the Jewiſh magiſtracy and the Roman governor were poſſeſſed of at this time in Judea. But the juſtneſs of the Evangeliſts account upon this head (in which likewiſe they are perfectly harmonious) appears to me ſo very material, that I know not how to forbear making here two or three remarks upon occaſion of Pilate's pronouncing the ſentence of condemnation on Jeſus; which is a proof of his ſupreme authority in that country, in capital cauſes.

1. According to the Evangeliſts then, the Jews had not now the power of life and death. But,

Pilate had the power of life and death. So he has alſo in Philo and Joſephus. This is a place, in which later writers would have been in great danger of tripping. The accuracy of the Evangeliſts is remarkable on two accounts. 1. Judea, though ſometimes called a province, was properly a branch of the province of Syria: But yet had a Roman governor reſiding in it with ſupreme authority, which was a very uncommon thing: "Ituræique & Judæi, defunctis regibus Sohemo atque Agrippa, Provinciæ Syriæ additi." Tacit. Ann. 12. c. 23. What Tacitus here ſays, was done upon the death of Agrippa, had been the caſe before his reign; and was ſo, particularly, in the time of Pilate; as is evident, in that he was diſplaced by Vitellius, preſident of Syria. Vid. & Joſeph. de Bell. lib. 2. cap. 8. §. 1. Antiq. l. 17. cap. ult. §. 5. & alibi. 2. Pilate's proper title was that of procurator. Tacitus alſo calls Pilate procurator, Ann. 15. c. 44. Now this was ordinarily the title of the officer that took care of the emperor's revenue in a province, and is equivalent to that of quæſtor under the republic, or in a province ſubject to the ſenate; which officer had not the power of life and death. But Pilate tho' he had the title of procurator, had the power of a preſident. The Evangeliſts uſually give Pilate, Felix, and Feſtus, the title of governor, a general word, and very proper according to the uſage of the beſt writers, and of Joſephus in particular, in many places.

2. According to the Evangeliſts, the Jewiſh council, having, as they pretended, convicted Jeſus of blaſphemy, and judged him guilty of death, they go with him to Pilate: And they ſeem to have expected, that Pilate ſhould confirm their ſentence, and ſign an order, that he might be puniſhed accordingly. And they afterward, openly and confidently inſiſt upon it, that he ſhould not acquit a perſon, who, they ſaid, had been guilty of a crime, which, according to their law, was capital. The Jews anſwered him, We have a law, and by our law he ought to die, becauſe he made himſelf the Son of God, John xix. 7. This appears to me very obſervable: But yet, nothing is more likely, than that they ſhould talk in this way; ſince they were governed by the Romans according to their own laws, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in the Acts of the Apoſtles.

But I would alſo take this opportunity of adding a text, not yet inſiſted on, which, if I underſtand it aright, is a freſh indication, that according to the Sacred Writers, the Jews had not now ſupreme power within themſelves. When the Jewiſh elders had brought Jeſus before Pilate, he ſaid to them, What accuſation bring you againſt this man? They anſwered and ſaid unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee, John xviii. 29, 30. The original word, and our Engliſh word malefactor, I think, uſually denote a criminal, guilty of one of the worſt of crimes; ſuch as are ordinarily puniſhed with death, perpetual impriſonment, the mines, gallies, or ſome ſuch very heavy puniſhment. Theſe words then, in their mouths, import thus much; 1. "If the crime, he is charged with, were not capital, we ſhould have puniſhed him ourſelves, and not have come to you. 2. If he were not really guilty, we would not have accuſed him." But to return to the courſe we were in.

Pilate having at length paſſed ſentence on Jeſus, and delivered him to be crucified, it will be proper next to conſider, what is ſaid of an inſcription put upon the croſs. And Pilate wrote a title and put it on the croſs; And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS, John xix. 19, 20. This was the uſual cuſtom of the Romans, when any were condemned to death, to affix to the inſtrument of their puniſhment, or to order to be carried before them a writing, expreſſing the crime for which they ſuffered; ſee Suet. in Calig. c. 34. in Domit. c. 10. Dio. lib. 54. And this writing was called in Latin, title, which word John has made uſe of. And ſays, that this title was written in Hebrew, Greek and Latin. For it was, at this time, uſual at Jeruſalem, to ſet up advertiſements that were deſigned to be read by all ſorts of people, in ſeveral languages. Thus Titus, in a meſſage he ſent to the Jews by Joſephus, when the city was almoſt in his hands, and by which he endeavoured to perſuade them to ſurrender, ſays; "Did you not erect pillars with inſcriptions on them in the Greek and in our language; Let no one paſs beyond theſe bounds," Joſ. de bell. jud. l. vi. c. ii.

Again, every one muſt needs obſerve the ſcoffs and deriſions our Saviour met with. There are three or four inſtances recorded in the Evangeliſts. One was, whilſt he was in the high-prieſt's houſe. Then did they ſpit in his face, and buffeted him, and others ſmote him with the palms of their hands; ſaying, Propheſy unto us thou Chriſt, who is he that ſmote thee? Matt. xxvi. 67, 68. Mark xiv. 65. Pilate hearing our Lord was of Galilee ſent him to Herod; and before he was diſmiſſed by him, Herod with his men of war ſet him at nought; and mocked him and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, Luke xxiii. 11. He was inſulted and mocked by the ſoldiers, when Pilate ordered him to be ſcourged the firſt time, that by that leſſer puniſhment he might ſatisfy the Jews, and ſave his life; as is related by John, ch. xix. 1, 2. After Pilate had condemned him to be crucified, the like indignities were repeated by the ſoldiers, as we are aſſured by two Evangeliſts, Matt. xxvii. 27—31. Mark xv. 16—20. And they ſtripped him and put on him a ſcarlet robe, and when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it on his head, and a reed in his right hand: And they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, ſaying, Hail king of the Jews. And they ſpit upon him, and took the reed, and ſmote him on the head.

Theſe are tokens of contempt and ridicule, which were in uſe at that time. Dio, among the other indignities offered to Sejanus, the favourite of Tiberius (in whoſe reign our Saviour was crucified) as they were carrying him from the ſenate-houſe to priſon, particularly mentions this; That they ſtruck him on the head, Dio. lib. 58. But there is one inſtance of ridicule, which happened ſo ſoon after this time, and has ſo great a reſemblance with what our Saviour met with, that it ought to be ſet down here at length. Caligula, the ſucceſſor of Tiberius, had in the very beginning of his reign given Agrippa the tetrarchy of his uncle Philip, being about the fourth part of his grandfather Herod's dominions, with the right of wearing a diadem or crown. When he was ſetting out from Rome to make a viſit to his people, the emperor adviſed him to go by Alexandria, as the beſt way. When he came thither, he kept himſelf very private; but the Alexandrians having got intelligence of his arrival there, and of the deſign of his journey, were filled with envy, as Philo ſays, at the thoughts of a Jew's having the title of king; many ways they ſhewed their indignation; One was this:

"There was one Carabas, a ſort of diſtracted fellow, that in all ſeaſons of the year went naked about the ſtreets. He was ſomewhat between a mad-man and a fool, the common jeſt of boys, and other idle people. This wretch they brought into the theatre, and placed him on a lofty ſeat, that he might be conſpicuous to all: Then they put a thing made of paper on his head for a crown, the reſt of his body they covered with a matt inſtead of a robe, and for a ſceptre, one put into his hand a little piece of a reed, which he had juſt taken up from the ground. Having thus given him a mimic royal dreſs, ſeveral young fellows with poles on their ſhoulders came and ſtood on each ſide of him as his guards. Then there came people toward him, ſome to pay their homage to him, others to aſk juſtice of him, and ſome to know his will and pleaſure concerning affairs of ſtate; and in the croud were loud and confuſed acclamations of Maris, Maris; that being, as they ſay, the Syriac word for Lord, thereby intimating whom they intended to ridicule by all this mock-ſhow, Flacc. Agrippa being a Syrian, and king of a large country in Syria; where note, that Judea is here reckoned by Philo, a part of Syria, as it is alſo by many other authors.

Before our Saviour was had away to be crucified, he was ſcourged. Then releaſed he Barabbas unto them; and when he had ſcourged Jeſus, he delivered him to be crucified, Matt. xxvii. 26. Mark xv. 15. That it was the uſual cuſtom of the Romans, before execution, to ſcourge perſons condemned to capital puniſhment, is evident from many examples recorded in ancient hiſtorians, Liv. l. 2. c. 5. l. 26. c. 15. Joſ. p. 1080, &c. And the accounts of executions of perſons generally run in this form: They were ſtripped, whipped, and beheaded or crucified, according as the ſentence was.

Another particular mentioned here, is, that our Saviour bore his croſs. And they took Jeſus and led him away; and he bearing his Croſs went forth. John xix. 16, 17. But he having been fatigued by a long examination, and a double ſcourging (as it ſeems,) they were obliged after he had gone a ſhort way, to put it upon another. And they laid hold on one Simon a Cyrenian: And on him they laid the croſs, that he might bear it after Jeſus, Luke xxiii. 26. Mark xv. 21.

This was the conſtant practiſe among the Romans, for criminals to carry their own croſs. Inſomuch that Plutarch (554.) makes uſe of it as an illuſtration of the miſery of vice; that every kind of wickedneſs produces its own particular torment, juſt as every malefactor, when he is brought forth to execution, carries his own croſs.

It appears from the Evangeliſts that our Lord was crucified without the city. And He bearing his croſs went forth to a place called the place of a ſkull, which is called in the Hebrew, Golgotha. John xix. 17. For the place where Jeſus was crucified was nigh to the city, ver. 20. And the Apoſtle to the Hebrews has likewiſe mentioned this circumſtance; wherefore Jeſus alſo—ſuffered without the gate, Heb. xiii. 12.

This is conformable to the Jewiſh law, and to examples mentioned in the Old Teſtament. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, The man ſhall ſurely be put to death; all the congregation ſhall ſtone him with ſtones without the camp, Num. xv. 35. Then they carried him (Naboth) forth out of the city, and ſtoned him with ſtones, that he died, 1 Kings xxi. 13. This was done at Jeſreel, in the territories of the King of Iſrael, not far from Samaria. And if this cuſtom was practiſed there, we may be certain, the Jews did not chooſe that criminals ſhould be executed within Jeruſalem, the ſanctity of which they had ſo high an opinion of, and which they were very zealous to preſerve free from all ceremonial impurity, though they defiled it with the practiſe of the moſt horrid immoralities. It is poſſible indeed, they might, in their ſudden and ungoverned rage, a thing they were mighty ſubject to at this time, upon any affront offered to their laws or cuſtoms, put perſons, who thus provoked them, to death, upon the ſpot, in the city, or the temple, or wherever they found them: But whenever they were calm enough to admit the form of a legal proceſs, I dare ſay, they did not approve of an execution within the city.

And among the Romans this cuſtom was very common, (ſee Plaut. in Mil. glorioſo Act. ii. ſc. 4.) at leaſt in the provinces. The robbers at Epheſus, which Petronius Arbiter mentions, ſatyr. c. 71. were crucified by order of the governor of the province without the city. This was the cuſtom likewiſe in Sicily; as appears from Cicero, in Verr.

All the four Evangeliſts have particularly mentioned our Saviour's burial; that Joſeph of Arithmathea went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jeſus; then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. Matt. xxvii. 58,—60. And when Joſeph had taken the body, he laid it in his own new tomb. Mark xv. 45, 46. Luke xxiii. 50.—53. John xix. 38. 40. And it may be fairly concluded, the rulers of the Jews did not diſapprove of it: Since they were ſolicitous, that the bodies might be taken down, and not hang on the croſs, the next day. The Jews therefore, ſays St. John, becauſe it was the preparation, that the bodies ſhould not remain on the croſs on the Sabbath-day, (for that Sabbath-day was an high day) beſought Pilate, that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away, John xix. 30.

Burial was not always allowed by the Romans, in theſe caſes. For, we find, that ſometimes a ſoldier was appointed to guard the bodies of malefactors, that they might not be taken away and buried (Petron. Arb. Satyr. cap. 71.) However, it ſeems, that it was not often refuſed, unleſs the criminals were very mean and infamous. Cicero reckons it one of the horrid crimes of Verres's adminiſtration in Sicily, that he would take money of parents for the burial of their children, whom he had put to death, (in Verr. l. 1. cap. 3.) Both Suetonius (Vita Tiberii,) and Tacitus, (Ann. 6. cap. 29) repreſent it, as one of the uncommon cruelties of Tiberius in the latter part of his reign, that he generally denied burial to thoſe who were put to death by his orders at Rome. Ulpian, in his treatiſe of the duty of a pro-conſul, ſays; 'The bodies of thoſe who are condemned to death, are not to be denied to their relations: And Auguſtus writes in the tenth book of his own life, that he had been wont to obſerve this cuſtom,' (de Auguſt. l. x.) That is, to grant the bodies to relations. Paulus ſays, 'that the bodies of thoſe who have been puniſhed [with death] are to be given to any that deſire them in order to burial,' (l. 3. eod.)

It is evident therefore from theſe two lawyers, that the governors of provinces had a right to grant burial to the bodies of thoſe who had been executed by their order: Nay, they ſeem to intimate, that they ought not uſually to deny it, when requeſted by any.

We may then depend upon it, that burial was ordinarily allowed to perſons put to death in Judea. The law of Moſes is expreſs, that malefactors ſhould be buried. And if a man have committed a ſin worthy of death, and he be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree, his body ſhall not remain all night on the tree, but thou ſhalt in any wiſe bury him that day —— that thy land be not defiled, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. And the later Jews retained a reverence for this law. A body of the Idumeans having been let into Jeruſalem by the zealots, in order to ſtrengthen their party; after the mention of very great barbarities they had committed in the city, and in the temple, Joſephus gives their neglect to bury thoſe whom they had murdered, as one of the ſtrongeſt proofs of their wickedneſs. 'They came, ſays he, to ſuch impiety, as to throw out men unburied, though the Jews had ſo great concern for burial, as to take down and bury before ſun-ſet thoſe who were crucified by a legal ſentence,' (de Bello Jud. l. 4. c. 5.) Since burial was ſo ſtrictly required by the Moſaical law, and was ſo agreeable to the ſentiments and inclinations of the Jewiſh people, we have all the reaſon in the world to ſuppoſe, it was ſeldom denied by the Roman governors in that country.

Thus we have concluded our hiſtorical remarks upon thoſe paſſages of Scripture, which record our Bleſſed Saviour's Paſſion; and ſhall therefore proceed to conſider ſome doctrinal points, and poſitive inſtitutions contained in the ſaid Scriptures, but could not be reduced within the compaſs of a few ſhort Notes. As

A Diſſertation on the method of Man's Redemption by Jeſus Chriſt.

God, who in the beginning writ his Law in the hearts of all men; Rom. ii. 14, 15. made, beſides this, many expreſs Revelations alſo from the beginning by the Prophets; Jude xiv. to the Church of thoſe ages, for the better eſtabliſhing and preſervation of his ſervice and worſhip: Therefore we find much of the ceremonial law practiſed before Moſes was ſent from God, to be a ſpecial meſſenger of his Divine Will, and promulgator of his revealed law to the Jewiſh nation; Gen. xiv. 20. xxxv. 2. viii. 21. Exod. xxiv. 5. Gen. xv. 10. compared with Levit. 1. 17. Gen. ix. 4, &c.

At length Moſes's law was added, till Chriſt ſhould come; Gal. iii. 29. becauſe of the overflowing of tranſgreſſions againſt the law natural. The effects of which Moſaical law among the Jews, were in ſome degree wrought for about the ſpace of two thouſand years among the Gentiles by their rules of philoſophy, which was only the law of nature revived by the wiſeſt of other nations. But the Church of God being grown very numerous, God vouchſafed to publiſh his laws again to the world with great ſolemnity by Moſes, in two tables of ſtone, with the addition of many explications to thoſe at leaſt, which had formerly been practiſed by, or enjoined to Adam; Gen. iv. 3, 4. or Noah; Gen. ix. 1, &c. But Foraſmuch as theſe new laws were neither obeyed ſo far as underſtood, nor underſtood ſo far as they obliged, after a long toleration of the unbelief and imperfection of the veiled Jew; 2 Cor. iii. 13, &c. winking at the ignorance and idolatry of the Gentiles, ſuffering them to go on in their own ways; Acts xvii. 30, &c. for about 2000 years more, in the full and due time; Ep. i. 10. 1 Tim. ii. 6. Heb. xi. 40. when the world was arrived at a mature age, Gal. iv. 3. he ſent his beloved and only ſon, Jeſus Chriſt, the greateſt and laſt Prophet, and the Holy One of God, yet more perfectly and fully to reveal and declare to mankind his laſt and all his will, and to fulfill the law and the Prophets; Matt. xv. 24. John iii. 34. v. 38.

This Jeſus, our Saviour, was ſent by the Divine Wiſdom and Providence, not into a remote or obſcure part of the earth; but as it were into the very middle and navil of the world diſcovered at that time: And he was fixed in Galilee, rather than in the great city of Jeruſalem; becauſe, as Galilee was half among the Gentiles, to ſhew that, though he was to preach to the Jews in the firſt place; ſee John iv. 40. the Church of God was now by his preaching to be enlarged, and that ſalvation was to be preached to all nations as well as to the Jews.

It was from this place and time that the miracles and doctrine of the Bleſſed Jeſus deſcended conveniently to all other places and times, by the teſtimony of many witneſſes choſen before of God; Acts x. 41. which evangelical teſtimonies are confirmed, and proved to be moſt true from

1. The converſion of ſo many thouſands to the faith of Chriſt, at the very time theſe ſaid Scriptural teſtimonies were written; who alſo lived in the ſame places where theſe things were deſcribed to be acted; ſo that if there had been any contrivance, colluſion, or falſity in Jeſus, his Apoſtles or Evangeliſts, they might have been eaſily diſcovered, eſpecially in theſe publick and famous particulars, ſuch as the murder of the infants by Herod; the cœleſtial darkneſs at the execution of Jeſus; the preaching of John the Baptiſt; beſides the many miracles which our Bleſſed Saviour and his holy Apoſtles wrought in the face of the ſun for the confirmation of the truth, and conviction of the obſtinate and unbelieving; ſee 1 Cor. xv. 6.

2. From the certain and full completion of all the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, concerning the Meſſiah, in the perſon of Jeſus of Nazareth. For amongſt other punctualities of his Life and Death, the prophecy of the time of his coming, which according to Haggai ii. 7,—9. was to be under the ſecond temple, which was deſtroyed by Titus; and when the ſceptre was departed firſt from the Jewiſh nation, which firſt happened in the reign of Herod, the firſt ſtranger-king, was moſt exactly fulfilled by the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, who was born before the deſtruction of the temple by Titus, and in the days of this ſtrange king Herod; ſee my notes on Matt. i. and ii. and Luke ii.

3. From the plain prophecies contained in the Goſpels concerning the perſecution of the diſciples of Chriſt; the future deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the temple, and the diſperſion of the Jews; ſee Matt. xxiv, &c. As likewiſe,

4. From thoſe heavy curſes which the world hath ſeen to fall upon all the enemies and perſecutors of Chriſt and his Church. Thus the diſperſion and deſolation of the Jews bear witneſs, to this day, to the truth of the Goſpel, in all countries. And what leſs can be collected from the tragical hiſtories of Herod the Great; of his ſon Archelaus; of Herod the tetrarch, who beheaded John the Baptiſt; and of Herod Agrippa, who ſtained his ſoul with the blood of James the leſs; Acts xii. 23. it being obſerved by the Jewiſh hiſtorian Joſephus, that the whole numerous race of Herod was totally extinguiſhed in a moſt miſerable manner, within the ſpace of ſeventy years: Nor can it be neceſſary to relate the particulars, for it is well known that moſt of the Roman emperors, who perſecuted the primitive Chriſtians, came to unhappy ends. And,

5. Finally, from the ceſſation of the diabolical oracles, (ſee Plutarch on this ſubject) and the miraculous propagation of the Chriſtian doctrine, tho' ſo ſevere and oppoſite to fleſh and blood, by ſuch mean and unarmed inſtruments, as the Apoſtles and other diſciples were, who preached boldly and eſtabliſhed the word of truth, in the midſt of cruel perſecutions, and ſealed it with their own blood. Which ſhews it to be a work of no leſs than a Divine Power. So that

Tho' our Saviour came but in one appointed time, yet all ſucceeding ages are thoroughly convinced by theſe teſtimonies of the truth of his hiſtory, it being as well atteſted as any hiſtory can poſſibly be or require: And he that requires more would baniſh faith out of the world; and would pretend to preſcribe to his Creator the manner by which he ſhould reveal himſelf to his creatures, when God has declared in his wiſdom, that, as well for the trial of our inclinations to heavenly things, as in our greater glorification in our ſervice of him, and advancement of our future glory, he has given us ſufficient grounds of belief; yet not ſuch as are coactive and uncontradictable. He therefore makes us here walk by faith, and not by ſight; that our adherence might be ſo much the more eſteemed, by how much we have the leſs human evidence, tho' no one is left without evidence enough; ſee John xx. 29. 1 Pet. i. 8. Thus,

Jeſus Chriſt being ſent at this time, was he in whom were hid from all eternity, all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge; Col. ii. 3. And being come into the world was anointed, as Prophets anciently were; 1 Kings xix. 16. and ſealed by the father with the Holy Ghoſt and with power, who deſcended upon him viſibly at his Baptiſm; ſee John i. 33. vi. 27. Luke iv. 18,—22, &c. So that he was, ſays the Evangeliſts, filled with the Holy Ghoſt; ſee John iii. 34. Matt. iii. 16. Luke iii. 5. for it pleaſeth the Father that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell; Col. i. 19.

Being thus furniſhed for the many offices to which he was predeſtinated by the Father, He was ſent, firſt, as a new legiſlator, being faithful as Moſes; Heb. iii. 2. but more to be obſerved, being maſter of the houſe wherein Moſes was only a ſervant; ver. 6.

In this office Chriſt expounded the law in ſome things more fully, and in ſome things alſo contrary to what had been ſaid of old. Not that hereby he deſtroyed, but only rectified the underſtanding of the law then falſified or mutilated by the inventions of a wicked and perverſe people; ſee Matt. v, vi, vii. and John i. 17, 18. iii. 2. iv. 25. And to exact a more true, and inward, and full obedience of all his diſciples, than ever had been performed before, by the ſtricteſt ſects of all the Phariſees, &c. in ſuch a manner as not to let a tittle of it paſs away, till the whole law explained by him was fulfilled; ſee Matt. v. 17, 18, 19, 20. 1 Cor. vii. 19. Gal. ii. 17. James ii. 12. under more open and manifeſt promiſes of the kingdom of Heaven to the obſervers, and upon the threats of heavier judgments of the wrath of God from Heaven, as the pains of hell never talked of before, upon the breakers of the law ſo expounded by him; Rom. i. 18. charging men every where to repent; Acts xvii. 30. becauſe a day is appointed, wherein he will judge the world, ver. 31. Tit. ii. 11, 12, 13. in which day none ſhall have any way to eſcape that now turneth away from him.

He was ſent not only as the moſt perfect and exact interpreter of the letter, but alſo as the miniſter of the ſpirit, ſee 2 Cor. iii. 6. John i. 16, 17. that by the power of this ſpirit, the law might be fulfilled by them that believed; ſee Rom. viii. 3, 4. for when the law of God is written by the ſpirit in the heart we are enabled to bring forth fruit and obedience unto juſtification; Jer. xxxii. 40. Therefore,

By this miniſtration of the ſpirit through Chriſt we now ſo eaſily underſtand, and do the things commanded by the law: Inſomuch that the letter of the law is ſaid to become as it were void and uſeleſs to us by the coming of the promiſed ſeed; and the ſchool-maſterſhip thereof to be outdated by Chriſt, not becauſe we are now without a law; 1 Cor. ix. 21. but becauſe we have it ſuperabundantly written in our hearts, by the ſpirit; and the works thereof continually brought forth by love, through the efficacy of the Law-giver, Jeſus Chriſt; 1 Tim. i. 5—9. Rom. viii. 15, &c. Thus, as to the law moral, Chriſt came not to abſolve us from any more obſervance thereof, but to enable us to keep it in that manner he has explained it to us. But

He was ſent poſitively to annul and cancel the ceremonial law; and to appoint new ceremonies at pleaſure inſtead thereof. For, he being the ſubſtance and body, of which the Moſaick law of ceremonies was only a type and ſhadow, when that which is perfect was come, the imperfect was to be done away; ſee Col. ii. 17. Therefore he was ſent to reform or perfect the worſhip of God, from thoſe many exterior rites ſo ſtrict and burthenſome to that of the ſpirit and of truth; as alſo to reform many liberties and indulgencies under the law; Matt. v. 31—34. xix. 8. And therefore we read that the Apoſtle expreſly called theſe times of Chriſt's preaching, the times of reformation; Heb. ix. 10.

Chriſt being thus anointed with the Holy Ghoſt and with Power; Acts x. 38. John iii. 34. he was in the next place ſent from God as an Apoſtle of the Chriſtian Profeſſion; Heb. iii. 1. of whoſe coming John was ſent before to give notice; of whom alſo God teſtified his intentions by a voice from Heaven, This is my beloved Son, hear ye him, and by the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt in the bodily ſhape of a dove, and to whom God committed firſt, and ſo did Jeſus to others, the word of reconciliation; 2 Cor. v. 19. Wherefore he is called, the Great Shepherd, Paſtor and Biſhop of our Souls; ſee Heb. xiii. 20. and 1 Pet. ii. 25. John xiii. 13. and Rom. xv. 8.

In which miniſtry he was to bring life and immortality to light; 2 Tim. i. 10. to reveal the great myſtery of Salvation, which God had decreed from all eternity, and ſhadowed under types to all former ages, and ſo kept ſecret from the beginning of the world; Rom. xvi. 25. and hid from former generations, Col. i. 26. 'till the Son, who only knew the Father, was ſent out of his Boſom to declare him, John i. 18. by preaching the Goſpel to the poor, deliverance to the captives, the acceptable year of the Lord; Luke iv. 18, 19. the time of his good will and peace towards all men; Acts x. 36. ſalvation and remiſſion of ſin by the baptiſmal covenant.

In this miniſtry alſo he received power to remit and abſolve from ſin; Matt. ix. 2, 6, 11. that he might juſtify the ungodly and make them the Sons of God; ſee Rom. iv. 5. Acts v. 31. and John i. 12. whom he admitted into the Church and Kingdom of Heaven by the new ceremony of baptiſm upon good aſſurance of a ſincere repentance, firm purpoſes of amendment of life; Matt. iii. 8. provided they alſo believed that he was the Son of God; John iii. 18. Acts viii. 37. xix. 4. that his word was truth, that he was the laſt teacher ſent from God to ſeal his converts unto Glory by giving them the Holy Ghoſt; John xx. 22. Acts ii. 33, 38, &c. and reject not the counſel of God ſent to them by him: See Luke vii. 30. John v. 24. viii. 31. xii. 48. Yet,

In all this at firſt he became an Apoſtle or miniſter of the circumciſion of the Jews only, Rom. xv. 8. Acts x. 36. beginning in Galilee amongſt the inferior ſort of people, and remote from the great city of the nation, that he might not incur the envy of thoſe in power till the appointed time of his paſſion, preaching moſtly in parables; for ſo it pleaſed God, that till his ſufferings were accompliſhed, the peoples ignorance ſhould not be quite diſpelled, and that this light of the Goſpel ſhould not riſe all at once, but by degrees upon the world; Matt. xiii. 11. 1 Cor. ii. 8. But when the time of his ſuffering was fully come, and the hour of his offering up drew nigh, he preached more frequently in the city, Jeruſalem, and in the very temple at the greateſt and moſt public feaſts of the nation, John vii. 8. profeſſing more clearly and openly who he was, and confirming his doctrine by his wonderful works; John xi. which both exceedingly multiplied the number of his diſciples and followers; John xii. 19. And ſo extremely heightened the rage and malice of his enemies, that they ſought to take away his life, which being fore-ordained of God, after three years preaching; Luke xiii. 7. and the days of his miniſtry were accompliſhed, Chriſt in the laſt place reſigned himſelf into their power, and ſo voluntarily laid down his life, and died a martyr for the truth he had taught; 1 Tim. vi. 13. Rev. i. 5. iii. 14. Hence,

Being raiſed from the dead by the Divine Power, never more to ſee corruption, in juſtification of his doctrine, and being to return to God from whence he came, found it neceſſary to ordain here upon earth ſome miniſters of his word and ſacraments, who ſhould teach and baptize all nations, and preach to them one after another in their appointed times, the work of that redemption, which he had now finiſhed. And

To theſe, as to his vicegerents he derived the doctrine, the authority, the ſpirit, the anointing which he in perſon had received from the Father; (ſee John xv. 15. Eph. iii. 9. 1 Cor. ii. 10, 13. Eph. iv. 7. Acts ii. 33. Phil. iv. 13. 2 Cor. i. 21.) And therefore he ſays of them, even as the Father had ſaid of him, He that heareth you, heareth me, Matt. x. 40. xvii. 5. Luke x. 16. And as the Father ſent me, ſo I you, John xvii. 18. xx. 21.

To theſe he gave power to baptize, or to admit into the Church thoſe they ſaw fit; ſee Acts x. 47, 48. Matt. xxviii. 19, &c.

To theſe he gave power to preach and to declare all the counſel of God to the world, in the ſame manner as he had miniſtred the word of truth to them; and to be ambaſſadors to men about their reconciliation to God for Chriſt, and in his ſtead, 2 Cor. v. 18, 19, 20. Acts xx. 27. 2 Cor. x. 8. Gal. iv. 14. Therefore they are repreſented as ſpeaking in Chriſt, 2 Cor. ii. 17. to be received as Angels of God, and as Chriſt Jeſus, Gal. iv. 14. and in their miniſtry to be a ſweet ſavour of Chriſt unto God, 2 Cor. ii. 15.

To theſe he committed the keys of the kingdom of Heaven, of which ſee the following Diſſertation; and to continue the diſpenſation of his Sacred Body and Blood unto the end of the world; 1 Cor. xi. 26.

To theſe he gave the illumination of the Spirit in an extraordinary manner, that they might be able not only to know, but alſo to preach the truth; ſee John xvi. 13, 25. compared with John xv. 16, 20, 26, 27. and 1 John ii. 20, 27. and therefore being aſſembled in council they write, it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us; Acts xv. 28. which extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, then or at any other time manifeſting itſelf by the laying on of the Apoſtles hands, were not only for the ſanctification of the perſon, but alſo for the publick benefit and further edification of the Church, Rom. xii. 6, 7. 1 Cor. xii. 7. and to enable them to convince men's conſciences; convert their minds; caſt down vain imaginations, and every thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and to bring every thought into captivity to the obedience of Chriſt; ſee 2 Cor. xiii. 3, &c. giving them power over all the power of the enemy; Luke x. 18, 19, 20. enabling them to do the ſame things, as he had done, in confirmation of his doctrine, and, becauſe their commiſſion was enlarged to all nations, furniſhing them with the miraculous gift of tongues. And Here let it be obſerved, that theſe firſt miſſioners or miniſters of the word and ſacraments, could no wiſe confer their power to others in any other manner, than as that power reſided in themſelves; and as Chriſt wrought effectually in thoſe his miniſters by the ſpirit; ſo alſo he co-operateth and worketh with them in others, whom they have ſent, by the ſame Spirit; working by them, 2 Cor. v. 20. and yet alſo working together with them, 2 Cor. vi. 1. by whoſe power only their miniſtry becometh efficacious over the world, 1 Cor. iii. 7, 9. Mark xvi. 20. 1 Tim. i. 12. for though they plant and water, God only giveth the increaſe, and opens the heart, which his Spirit has before awakened from the ſleep of ſin; ſee 1 Cor. iii. 9. and Acts ii. 37.

Neither did this miſſion expire with the Apoſtles, but they being to go away, transferred their commiſſion again to others, in the ſame manner, as they themſelves had received it, 2 Tim. i. 6. gave them alſo the name of Apoſtles, 2 Cor. viii. 23. and Phil. ii. 25. Acts xiv. 4, 14. and tranſmitted to them the charge of keeping the form of doctrine they had learnt of them, their predeceſſors, and of preſerving the commandment that was committed unto them without ſpot; ſee 1 Tim. vi. 14, 20. 2 Tim. i. 13, 14. and Rev. iii. 3. and laſtly, the charge of ordaining others, and giving them in charge the ſame doctrines, till the coming of the Lord Jeſus; ſee Tit. i. 5. 1 Tim. v. 22. i. 3. vi. 14. But as this leads me to a conſideration of the kingdom of Chriſt, I ſhall now proceed to explain it in its proper place.

CHAP. xviii. VER. 36. —— My kingdom is not of this world.] And therefore hath nothing to do with, neither is it oppoſite to the Roman government. It is not of human or mundane original, it is from Heaven; neither does it meddle with the affairs of this world. It hath none of the pomp or ſplendor of this world, nor any ſervants or ſubjects to fight for its propagation and eſtabliſhment with any carnal weapons; ſee Luke ix. 56. It aſſumes no power over man's body, it only claims a right to rule the ſoul; as may be readily collected from the phraſe, not to be of this world; John viii. 23. xv. 19. and xvii. 14. eſpecially when it is oppoſed to being from the Father; 1 John ii. 16. and from God, 1 John iv. 4. This is the kingdom of the Meſſiah, the kingdom of God, and dominion of Chriſt, ſo often ſpoken of by the Prophets of old, and founded upon the death of our Redeemer, the end of whoſe rule on earth is the ſalvation of ſouls. It is therefore the Church of Chriſt, i. e. That number of men whether ſmall or great, whether diſperſed or united, who truly and ſincerely are ſubjects to Jeſus Chriſt alone, as their law-giver and judge, in matters relating to the favour of God, and their eternal ſalvation.

This is the unanimous expoſition of theſe words by the beſt commentators, and exactly correſponding to the context, and other parts of Scripture. And therefore, it has, and is to me a matter of great ſurprize, to hear men of learning and good morals, often perverting this text, and to ſerve a favourite opinion, perſuading men that the kingdom of Chriſt is changed into the kingdom of men, by ſetting up themſelves to be judges over the conſciences of men, and vicegerents and law-givers, in the place of Chriſt. This is the blindneſs of the Popiſh hierarchy, and ſhould it ſpread into an univerſal tenet, the kingdom of Chriſt would be metamorphized into the kingdom of paſſionate arbitrary men. Wherefore, a learned and pious Biſhop of the Church of England, has taken a great deal of pains, and God hath bleſſed him with ſucceſs, to arm his Church againſt ſuch falſe gloſſes, and uſurpations. And that I may not be ſaid to miſrepreſent his dictates, I ſhall beg leave to inſert his own argument at large, as follows:

"As, ſays he, the Church of Chriſt is the kingdom of Chriſt, he himſelf is king; and in this it is implied, that he is himſelf the ſole law-giver to his ſubjects, and himſelf the ſole judge of their behaviour, in the affairs of conſcience and eternal ſalvation. And in this ſenſe therefore, his kingdom is not of this world; that he hath, in thoſe points, left behind him, no viſible human authority; no vicegerents, who can be ſaid properly to ſupply his place; no interpreters, upon whom his ſubjects are abſolutely to depend; no judges over the conſciences or religion of his people. For if this were ſo, that any ſuch abſolute vicegerent authority, either for the making new laws, or interpreting old ones, or judging his ſubjects, in religious matters, were lodged in any men upon earth; the conſequence would be, that what ſtill retains the name of the Church of Chriſt, would not be the kingdom of Chriſt, but the kingdom of thoſe men, veſted with ſuch authority. For, whoever hath ſuch an authority of making laws, is ſo far a king: And whoever can add new laws to thoſe of Chriſt, equally obligatory, is as truly a king, as Chriſt himſelf is: Nay, whoever hath an abſolute authority to interpret any written, or ſpoken laws; it is he, who is truly the law-giver, to all intents and purpoſes; and not the perſon who firſt wrote, or ſpoke them.

In human ſociety, the interpretation of laws may, of neceſſity, be lodged, in ſome caſes, in the hands of thoſe who were not originally the legiſlators. But this is not abſolute; nor of bad conſequence to ſociety: Becauſe the legiſlators can reſume the interpretation into their own hands, as they are witneſſes to what paſſes in the world; and as they can, and will, ſenſibly interpoſe in all thoſe caſes, in which their interpoſition becomes neceſſary. And therefore, they are ſtill properly the legiſlators. But, it is otherwiſe in religion, or the kingdom of Chriſt. He himſelf never interpoſeth, ſince his firſt promulgation of his law, either to convey infallibility to ſuch as pretend to handle it over again; or to aſſert the true interpretation of it, amidſt the various and contradictory opinions of men about it. If he did certainly thus interpoſe, he himſelf would ſtill be the legiſlator. But, as he doth not; if ſuch an abſolute authority be once lodged with men, under the notion of interpreters, they then become the legiſlators, and not Chriſt; and they rule in their own kingdom, and not in his.

It is the ſame thing, as to rewards and puniſhments, to carry forward the great end of his kingdom. If any men upon earth have a right to add to the ſanctions of his laws; that is, to increaſe the number, or alter the nature, of the rewards and puniſhments of his ſubjects, in matters of conſcience, or ſalvation: They are ſo far kings in his ſtead; and reign in their own kingdom, and not in his. So it is, whenever they erect tribunals, and exerciſe a judgment over the conſciences of men; and aſſume to themſelves the determination of ſuch points, as cannot be determined, but by one who knows the hearts; or, when they make any of their own declarations, or deciſions, to concern and affect the ſtate of Chriſt's ſubjects, with regard to the favour of God; this is ſo far, the taking Chriſt's kingdom out of his hands, and placing it in their own.

Nor is this matter at all made better by their declaring themſelves to be vicegerents, or law-makers, or judges, under Chriſt, in order to carry on the ends of his kingdom. For, it comes to this at laſt, ſince it doth not ſeem fit to Chriſt himſelf to interpoſe, ſo as to prevent or remedy all their miſtakes and contradictions, that, if they have this power of interpreting, or adding, laws, and judging men, in ſuch a ſenſe, that Chriſtians ſhall be indiſpenſably and abſolutely obliged to obey thoſe laws, and to ſubmit to thoſe deciſions; I ſay, if they have this power lodged with them, then the kingdom, in which they rule, is not the kingdom of Chriſt, but of themſelves; he doth not rule in it, but they: And, whether they happen to agree with him, or to differ from him, as long as they are the law-givers, and judges, without any interpoſition from Chriſt, either to guide or correct their deciſions, they are kings of this kingdom, and not Chriſt Jeſus.

If therefore the Church of Chriſt, be the kingdom of Chriſt, it is eſſential to it, that Chriſt himſelf be the ſole Law-giver, and ſole Judge of his ſubjects, in all points relating to the favour or diſpleaſure of Almighty God; and that all his ſubjects, in what ſtation ſoever they may be, are equally ſubjects to him; and that no one of them, any more than another, hath authority, either to make new laws for Chriſt's ſubjects, or to impoſe a ſenſe upon the old ones, which is the ſame thing; or to judge, cenſure, or puniſh the ſervant of another maſter, in matters relating purely to conſcience or ſalvation. If any perſon hath any other notion, either thro' a long uſe of words with inconſiſtent meanings, or thro' a negligence of thought; let him but aſk himſelf, whether the Church of Chriſt be the kingdom of Chriſt, or not: And, if it be, whether this notion of it doth not abſolutely exclude all other legiſlators and judges, in matters relating to conſcience, or the favour of God; or, whether it can be his kingdom, if any mortal men have ſuch a power of legiſlation and judgment in it." Again, "If the Church be the kingdom of Chriſt, and this kingdom be not of this world; this muſt appear from the nature and end of the laws of Chriſt; and of thoſe rewards and puniſhments, which are the ſanctions of his laws. Now his laws are declarations relating to the favour of God in another ſtate after this. They are declarations of thoſe conditions to be performed in this world, on our part, without which God will not make us happy in that to come. And they are almoſt all general appeals to the will of that God; to his nature, known by the common reaſon of mankind, and to the imitation of that nature, which muſt be our perfection. The keeping his commandments is declared the way to life; and the doing his will, the entrance into the kingdom of Heaven. The being ſubjects to Chriſt, is to this very end, that we may the better and more effectually perform the will of God. The laws of this kingdom, therefore, as Chriſt left them, have nothing of this world in their view; no tendency, either to the exaltation of ſome, in worldly pomp and dignity, or to their abſolute dominion over the faith and religious conduct of others of his ſubjects; or to the erecting of any ſort of temporal kingdom, under the covert and name of a ſpiritual one. The ſanctions of Chriſt's law are rewards and puniſhments. But of what ſort? Not the rewards of this world; not the offices or glories of this ſtate; not the pains of priſons, baniſhments, fines, or any leſſer and more moderate penalties; nay, not the much leſſer negative diſcouragements that belong to human ſociety. He was far from thinking that theſe could be the inſtruments of ſuch a perſuaſion, as he thought acceptable to God. But, as the great end of his kingdom, was to guide men to happineſs, after the ſhort images of it were over here below; ſo he took his motives from that place, where his kingdom firſt began, and where it was at laſt to end; from thoſe rewards and puniſhments in a future ſtate, which had no relation to this world: And, to ſhew that his kingdom was not of this world, all the ſanctions which he thought fit to give to his laws, were not of this world at all.

Paul underſtood this ſo well, that he gives an account of his own conduct, and that of others in the ſame ſtation, in theſe words, 'Knowing the terrors of the Lord, we perſwade men:' whereas, in too many Chriſtian countries, ſince his days, if ſome, who profeſs to ſucceed him, were to give an account of their own conduct, it muſt be in a quite contrary ſtrain; 'Knowing the terrors of this world, and having them in our power, we do, not perſwade men, but force their outward profeſſion againſt their inward perſwaſion.

Now, wherever this is practis'd, whether in a great degree, or a ſmall, in that place there is ſo far a change, from a kingdom which is not of this world, to a kingdom which is of this world. As ſoon as ever you hear of any of the engines of this world, whether of the greater, or the leſſer ſort, you muſt immediately think that then, and ſo far, the kingdom of this world takes place. For, if the very eſſence of God's worſhip be ſpirit and truth; if religion be virtue and charity, under the belief of a ſupreme governor and judge; if true real faith cannot be the effect of force; and, if there can be no reward where there is no willing choice: then, in all, or any of theſe caſes, to apply force or flattery, worldly pleaſure or pain; is to act contrary to the intereſts of true religion, as it is plainly oppoſite to the maxims upon which Chriſt founded his kingdom; who choſe the motives which are not of this world, to ſupport a kingdom which is not of this world. And indeed, it is too viſible to be hid, that wherever the rewards and puniſhments are changed, from future to preſent, from the world to come, to the world now in poſſeſſion; there, the kingdom founded by our Saviour is, in the nature of it, ſo far changed, that it is become, in ſuch a degree, what he profeſſed, his kingdom was not of this world; that is, of the ſame ſort with other common earthly kingdoms, in which the rewards are, worldly honours, poſts, offices, pomp, attendance, dominion; and the puniſhments are, priſons, fines, baniſhments, gallies and racks; or ſomething leſs, of the ſame ſort.

If theſe can be the true ſupports of a kingdom which is not of this world; then ſincerity, and hypocriſy; religion, and no religion; force, and perſwaſion; a willing choice, and a terrified heart; are become the ſame things: truth and falſhood ſtand in need of the ſame methods, to propagate and ſupport them; and our Saviour himſelf was little acquainted with the right way of increaſing the number of ſuch ſubjects, as he wiſhed for. If he had but at firſt enlighten'd the powers of this world, as he did Paul; and employed the ſword which they bore, and the favours they had in their hands, to bring ſubjects into his kingdom; this had been an expeditious and an effectual way, according to the conduct of ſome of his profeſſed followers, to have had a glorious and extenſive kingdom or Church. But this was not his deſign; unleſs it could be compaſſed in a quite different away.

And therefore, when you ſee our Lord, in his methods, ſo far removed from thoſe of many of his diſciples; when you read nothing, in his doctrine about his own kingdom, of taking in the concerns of this world, and mixing them with thoſe of eternity; no commands that the frowns and diſcouragements of this preſent ſtate ſhould in any caſe attend upon conſcience and religion; no rules againſt the enquiry of all his ſubjects into his original meſſage from Heaven; no orders for the kind and charitable force of penalties, or capital puniſhments, to make men think and chuſe aright; no calling upon the ſecular arm, whenever the magiſtrate ſhould become Chriſtian, to inforce his doctrines, or to back his ſpiritual authority; but, on the contrary, as plain a declaration as a few words can make, that his kingdom is not of this world: I ſay, when you ſee this, from the whole tenor of the Goſpel, ſo vaſtly oppoſite to many who take his name into their mouths, the queſtion with you ought to be, whether he did not know the nature of his own kingdom, or Church, better than any ſince his time? whether you can ſuppoſe, he left any ſuch matters to be decided againſt himſelf, and his own expreſs profeſſions; and whether if an Angel from Heaven ſhould give you any account of his kingdom, contrary to what he himſelf hath done, it can be of any weight, or authority, with Chriſtians.

From what hath been ſaid it is very plain, in general, that the groſſeſt miſtakes in judgment, about the nature of Chriſt's kingdom, or Church, have ariſen from hence, that men have argued from other viſible ſocieties, and other viſible kingdoms of this world, to what ought to be viſible, and ſenſible, in his kingdom: conſtantly leaving out of their notion, the moſt eſſential part of it, that Chriſt is king in his own kingdom; forgetting this king himſelf, becauſe he is not now ſeen by mortal eyes; and ſubſtituting others in his place, as law-givers and judges, in the ſame points, in which he muſt either alone, or not at all, be law-giver and judge; not contented with ſuch a kingdom as he eſtabliſhed, and deſires to reign in; but urging and contending, that his kingdom muſt be like other kingdoms. Whereas he hath poſitively warn'd them againſt any ſuch arguings, by aſſuring them that this kingdom is his kingdom, and that it is not of this world; and therefore that no one of his ſubjects is law-giver and judge over others of them, in matters relating to ſalvation, but he alone; and that we muſt not frame our ideas from the kingdoms of this world, of what ought to be, in a viſible and ſenſible manner, in his kingdom. See the Biſhop of Bangor's ſermon before the King, March, 31, 1717.

This is a rational and true account of the kingdom of Chriſt, neither excluding Chriſt from being the king of his own kingdom, as ſome men do, nor rejecting that form of Church-government, which Chriſt has eſtabliſhed in his kingdom, limiting the exorbitant uſurpations of carnal men over the ſouls of their fellow-creatures, and acknowledging that the Holy Ghoſt hath eſtabliſhed overſeers in the kingdom of Chriſt, to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own blood. Therefore, The ſum of the Biſhop's reaſoning appears to be this: Chriſt is the king of his kingdom, he is the chief ſhepherd of our ſouls, and neither can, nor will be wanting to our ſouls. But without his warrant no man hath any power over, none hath any thing to do with his ſubjects or the ſheep of his paſture. And yet this does not deny, but takes it for granted, that there is great need of inferior ſhepherds, or officers in his kingdom, to act in ſubordination to him, by his commiſſion and under his direction, to preſerve his ſubjects from the danger of the enemy, and bring them up in the fear and nurture of the Lord. Hence

I collect, that it is not the leaſt reflection on Chriſt the chief Shepherd, to ſay, that under-ſhepherds are needful in their place. For what they do, he does by them; and what he does by them, he could have done without them, had he thought good. And yet he having thought fit to act by them, and with them, we muſt ſay they are of great uſe, conſidering his perſonal diſtance, in the upper-world, where his Preſence is neceſſary, to ſecure the great and bleſſed ends of his mediation. He has indeed promiſed to be with his flock to the end of the world; Matt. xxviii. 20. but that is by being with thoſe that have the overſight of them, in their miniſtrations, if they are favoured with ſuch; or by ſupplying them with the immediate influences of his ſpirit, without their help, if it cannot be had. And had he ordinarily none to take care of them in his abſence, they would in a manner have been left deſtitute: They would have wretchedly wandered among rocks and precipices, and have been in danger of being ſtarved with hunger, and devoured by wolves. He acts the part of a good and kind ſhepherd to them, in providing them with ſuitable under-ſhepherds to feed and overſee them. So that theſe overſeers of the flock, are ſo far from being oppoſed to the Chief Shepherd, and the ſuppoſing them needful, is ſo far from charging him with negligence, that his giving them ſuch, to act under himſelf in conducting them, is a great inſtance, and mark, and fruit of his care of them.

Nor is it a breaking in upon Chriſtian liberty, to ſuppoſe miniſters to be ordinarily neceſſary in the Chriſtian Church. They may diſcharge the whole of their duty in taking heed to the flock, and yet the ſeveral members of it may enjoy all that liberty that our Lord has left them, and the uſe of which could reaſonably be ſuppoſed to be either for his honour, or their benefit. And to deſire any more, would be irregular, and unjuſtifiable.

We are not, its true, under tutors now, as they were under the law. Paul diſclaims it; Gal. iv. 2, 3. We are not now treated like minors, in a rough or authoritative way; no rigour is to be uſed towards us: And yet our being under the care of overſeers, who take heed to all the flock, under the ſuperiour direction of the Great Shepherd, is very conſiſtent with our advanced age, and much every way for our advantage.

Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt would not have provided ſuch overſeers, if he had not thought them needful and advantageous. He would not have given to his Church paſtors, and teachers, as well as Apoſtles, Prophets and Evangeliſts, had they not been requiſite, for the perfecting of the ſaints, and the edifying his body, and the growth of his ſervants, and the keeping them from being toſſed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, as the Apoſtle in ſo many words declares; Eph. iv. 11, &c. And indeed hardly any thing is more evident, than the need the flock of God ſtands in of ſome to overſee it, and take the charge of it. They need it in order to their being fed, and guarded, and kept in order and regularity. The flock of Chriſt muſt be fed with knowledge and underſtanding; not with tares, but good wheat; not with ſhadows and ceremonies, but ſubſtantial truths. It muſt be guarded from grievous wolves, which often enter in, not ſparing the flock; Acts xx. 29. The ſeveral inſtitutions alſo which our Lord has fixed for the benefit of his Church, muſt be adminiſtred amongſt them as he has ordered. And if this work is to be done, there muſt be ſome to do it, ſome whoſe proper work it muſt be to take care of it, or elſe there will be no ſmall danger of its being left undone; inaſmuch as we commonly ſee, that what is every one's buſineſs is minded by no one; becauſe no man thinks himſelf obliged to take care of it. There is a need of miniſters, as the Apoſtle intimates, to feed the Church of God; Acts xx. 28. and to have the inſpection of particular worſhipping ſocieties; to preſerve them from ignorance and error, and from being ſeduced, by ſuch as often ariſe among themſelves, ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away the diſciples after them; and from an almoſt infinite number of diſorders that would be apt to creep in. They are needful to adminiſter divine offices in an orderly manner, according to the rule of the word; and to tranſmit the Goſpel doctrine and inſtitutions ſafe, to ſucceeding ages and generations. They that reckon the miniſterial office needleſs, not only deſpiſe our Lord's kindneſs in fixing it, but diſcover a great inſenſibleneſs of the wants of the Church, and an unconcernedneſs whether or no there be any ſuitable proviſion made for them: And they that deſpiſe the overſeers which Chriſt has provided for his flock, whatever they may imagine, will at laſt be found to deſpiſe Chriſt himſelf; and be treated accordingly. But, then

It is the duty of all thoſe whom the Holy Ghoſt has made overſeers of the flock of Chriſt, to take heed to themſelves. There is need of this, leaſt as Paul expreſſes it, when they had preach'd to others, they themſelves ſhould prove caſt-aways. 1 Cor. ix. 27. And if ſuch an one as he was, ever had any fear of that kind ſtirring in him, much more may they who are now the miniſters of Chriſt. Miniſters ſhould take heed to themſelves, becauſe they have many eyes upon them, ſome to take example from them, and others to pick quarrels with them. 'Tis not at all likely that the people ſhould obey the admonitions of thoſe overſeers, whoſe carriage ſhews that they themſelves make light of them. That miniſter who in his life has no ſuitable regard to the doctrine he teaches, neglects an eſſential part of his office, and while he builds with one hand, pulls down with t'other; and tempts men to ſuſpect that he does not really believe what he teaches in the Name of God. If the overſeers of the flock don't take heed to themſelves, they'll do very little good in their ſtations, they'll have little reaſon to expect that the Holy Ghoſt (from whom muſt be all the increaſe, if even a Paul planted, or an Apollos watered iii. 6.) ſhould give a bleſſing to their Labours, and they'll have a ſad account to give to God another day. They ought to ſearch and prove, that they may know themſelves. He that knoweth not himſelf, is apt to be proud and confident, and boldly to venture upon any thing that offers, to which he is inclin'd, and ſo to run the hazard of his own ruin: Whereas he that knows, and is feelingly ſenſible of his unworthineſs, and his Liableneſs to the Divine Diſpleaſure, on the account of his manifold ſins and diſorders, together with his ſpiritual impotence, and the perverſeneſs of his deſires and luſts, in which he is but like other men, will be apt to be cautious and circumſpect, jealous of himſelf, and afraid of being drawn away of his own luſt, and enticed. Jam. i. 14. As he that walks in the darkneſs of the night, by ſearching out paths for his feet, keeps himſelf from wandring; ſo he that attends to the ways of the Lord, to walk in them, takes heed to himſelf. Of this Goſpel, miniſters ſhould be careful, both upon their own account, and alſo upon the account of the flock of God, of which they have the overſight: For that without it, they are neither likely to ſave themſelves nor others.

They to whom the overſight of the flock is committed in the kingdom of Chriſt, ſhould take heed to themſelves, that they may not only have that meaſure of knowledge that is neceſſary to their giving ſuitable inſtructions to thoſe that are under their care, but alſo that they may be furniſh'd for convincing gainſayers; Tit. i. 9. And that they may be arm'd with all the fortitude that is neceſſary to the ſaving thoſe committed to their care, out of the hands of ravenous wolves. They ought to take heed to themſelves, that their judgments be ſound, their hearts holy, and their lives exemplary; that they may be fit for what they undertake, and acquit themſelves rightly in it, and at laſt be able to give up their account with joy, having neither executed nor uſurped a power not committed to their charge. 'Tis ſad in any, but above all in overſeers of the flock of God, to ſee motes in the eyes of others, while they take no notice of beams that are in their own. For my part, tho' I am well ſatisfy'd in my work and ſtation as a miniſter, yet I ſhan't ſtick to declare that were I in the capacity of a private Chriſtian to fix my ſelf under ſome one perſon as a Paſtor, whoſe overſight I could beſt approve of, though I could not allow myſelf to break in upon any part of Chriſt's real ſettlement with reſpect to his Church, I yet ſhould be apt to lay a good deal more ſtreſs upon this one qualification, than on any thing relating to the regularity of his Miſſion; and ſhould think I might without much difficulty, juſtify myſelf in ſo doing.

It is alſo the unqueſtionable duty of thoſe whom the Holy Ghoſt has made overſeers of the flock of Chriſt, to take heed to all that belong to it without any exception. And unleſs this be minded, they are unfaithful to the Holy Ghoſt in the office he has committed to them. They are not to imagine they have diſcharg'd their conſcience, or done their duty, in living innocently, honeſtly and regularly; but they are to look after thoſe that are under their inſpection, that they may not only ſave themſelves, but thoſe alſo that hear them; 1 Tim. iv. 16.

This neceſſarily brings me to give ſome account of the Authority and Divine Commiſſion of the miniſters of Chriſt's word and ſacrament; but I muſt refer that to a particular note on Heb. vii. 17.

CHAP. XX.

1 Mary cometh to the ſepulchre. 3 So do Peter and John, ignorant of the reſurrection. 11 Jeſus appeareth to Mary Magdalene, 19 And to his diſciples. 24 The incredulity and confeſſion of Thomas. 30 The Scripture is ſufficient to ſalvation.

THE firſt day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early when it was yet dark, unto the ſepulchre, and ſeeth the ſtone taken away from the ſepulchre.

2 Then ſhe runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other diſciple whom Jeſus loved, and ſaith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the ſepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

3 Peter therefore went forth, and that other diſciple, and came to the ſepulchre.

4 So they ran both together: and the other diſciple did out-run Peter, and came firſt to the ſepulchre.

5 And he ſtooping down, and looking in, ſaw the linen clothes lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the ſepulchre, and ſeeth the linen clothes lie;

7 And the napkin that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by it ſelf.

8 Then went in alſo that other diſciple which came firſt to the ſepulchre, and he ſaw, and believed.

9 For as yet they knew not the ſcripture, that he muſt riſe again from the dead.

10 Then the diſciples went away again unto their own home.

11 ¶ But Mary ſtood without at the ſepulchre, weeping: and as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped down, and looked into the ſepulchre,

12 And ſeeth two angels in white, ſitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jeſus had lain:

13 And they ſaid unto her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? She ſaith unto them, Becauſe they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14 And when ſhe had thus ſaid, ſhe turned her ſelf back, and ſaw Jeſus ſtanding, and knew not that it was Jeſus.

15 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? whom ſeekeſt thou? ſhe ſuppoſing him to be the gardener, ſaith unto him, Sir, if thou have born him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid him, and I will take him away.

16 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Mary. She turned her ſelf, and ſaid unto him, Rabboni, which is to ſay, Maſter.

17 Jeſus ſaith unto her, Touch me not: for I am not yet aſcended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God.

18 Mary Magdalene came and told the diſciples, that ſhe had ſeen the Lord, and that he had ſpoken theſe things unto her.

19 ¶ Then the ſame day at evening, being the firſt day of the week, when the doors were ſhut, where the diſciples were aſſembled for fear of the Jews, came Jeſus and ſtood in the midſt, and ſaith unto them, Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had ſo ſaid, he ſhewed unto them his hands and his ſide. Then were the diſciples glad when they ſaw the Lord.

21 Then ſaid Jeſus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath ſent me, even ſo ſend I you.

22 And when he had ſaid this, he breathed on them, and ſaith unto them, Receive ye the holy Ghoſt.

23 Whoſe ſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained.

24 ¶ But Thomas one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jeſus came.

25 The other diſciples therefore ſaid unto him, We have ſeen the Lord. But he ſaid unto them, Except I ſhall ſee in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thruſt my hand into his ſide, I will not believe.

26 ¶ And after eight days, again his diſciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jeſus, the doors being ſhut, and ſtood in the midſt, and ſaid, Peace be unto you.

27 Then ſaith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thruſt it into my ſide: and be not faithleſs, but believing.

28 And Thomas anſwered and ſaid unto him, My Lord, and my God.

29 Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, thou haſt believed: bleſſed are they that have not ſeen, and yet have believed.

30 ¶ And many other ſigns truly did Jeſus in the preſence of his diſciples, which are not written in this book.

31 But theſe are written, that ye might believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt the Son of God, and that believing, ye might have life through his name.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Chriſt appearing again to his diſciples, was known of them by the great draught of fiſhes. 12 He dineth with them: 15 earneſtly commandeth Peter to feed his lambs and ſheep: 18 Foretelleth him of his death: 22 Rebuketh his curioſity touching John: 25 The concluſion.

AFTER theſe things, Jeſus ſhewed himſelf again to the diſciples at the ſea of Tiberias, and on this wiſe ſhewed he himſelf:

2 There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the ſons of Zebedee, and two of his other diſciples.

3 Simon Peter ſaith unto them, I go a fiſhing. They ſay unto him, We alſo go with thee. They went forth, and entred into a ſhip immediately; and that night they caught nothing.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jeſus ſtood on the ſhore: But the diſciples knew not that it was Jeſus.

5 Then Jeſus ſaith unto them, Children, have ye any meat? They anſwered him, No.

6 And he ſaid unto them, Caſt the net on the right ſide of the ſhip, and ye ſhall find. They caſt therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fiſhes.

7 Therefore that diſciple whom Jeſus loved, ſaith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fiſhers coat unto him (for he was naked) and did caſt himſelf into the ſea.

8 And the other diſciples came in a little ſhip (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits) dragging the net with fiſhes.

9 Aſſoon then as they were come to land, they ſaw a fire of coals there, and fiſh laid thereon, and bread.

10 Jeſus ſaith unto them, Bring of the fiſh, which ye have now caught.

11 Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fiſhes, an hundred and fifty and three: and for all there were ſo many, yet was not the net broken.

12 Jeſus ſaith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the diſciples durſt ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord.

13 Jeſus then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fiſh likewiſe.

14 This is now the third time that Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to his diſciples, after that he was riſen from the dead.

15 ¶ So when they had dined, Jeſus ſaith to Simon Peter, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me more than theſe? He ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knoweſt that I love thee. He ſaith unto him, Feed my lambs.

16 He ſaith to him again the ſecond time, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? He ſaith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knoweſt that I love thee. He ſaith unto him, Feed my ſheep.

17 He ſaith unto him the third time, Simon ſon of Jonas, loveſt thou me? Peter was grieved, becauſe he ſaid unto him the third time, Loveſt thou me? And he ſaid unto him, Lord, thou knoweſt all things; thou knoweſt that I love thee. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Feed my ſheep.

18 Verily verily I ſay unto thee, When thou waſt young, thou girdeſt thy ſelf, and walkedſt whither thou wouldſt: but when thou ſhalt be old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldſt not.

19 This ſpake he ſignifying by what death he ſhould glorify God. And when he had ſpoken this, he ſaith unto him, Follow me.

20 Then Peter turning about, ſeeth the diſciple whom Jeſus loved, following; which alſo leaned on his breaſt at ſupper, and ſaid, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?

21 Peter ſeeing him, ſaith to Jeſus, Lord, and what ſhall this man do?

22 Jeſus ſaith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me.

23 Then went this ſaying abroad among the brethren, that that diſciple ſhould not die: yet Jeſus ſaid not unto him, He ſhall not die: but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?

24 This is the diſciple which teſtifieth of theſe things, and wrote theſe things: and we know that his teſtimony is true.

25 And there are alſo many other things which Jeſus did, the which, if they ſhould be written every one, I ſuppoſe that even the world it ſelf could not contain the books that ſhould be written. Amen.

CHAP. xx. and xxi. The notes on theſe two laſt chapters have been already given on Matt. xxvii. and xxviii. and Mark xvi. and Luke xxiv. except ſome few particulars referred to the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, which ſhall be given in their proper places.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE ACTS

APOSTLES.

The INTRODUCTION.

This Book is called the Acts of the Apoſtles, not as comprehending, and particularly deſcribing all the deeds, journies, and ſufferings, &c. of all the Apoſtles, for they are almoſt confined to the hiſtory of theſe two, Peter and Paul, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter; but becauſe it gives us a ſufficient light into the manner of the Apoſtles, ordering themſelves, and the Churches of the faithful, which were converted to the faith of Chriſt by their preaching. All which, depending very much upon a true knowledge of the behaviour of the Jews and Gentiles, towards theſe firſt planters of Chriſtianity; I deſire it may be obſerved, That

Altho' there is no one that has read the New Teſtament, but muſt have obſerved the implacable malice of the Jews, not only againſt our Saviour, but alſo againſt the Apoſtles; and the heat and rage with which they oppoſed them, not only in Judea, but likewiſe in all other countries where they met with them, becauſe they did not practiſe, and recommend all their particular rites and traditions. Yet the Roman officers and governors were far from being equally offended with the neglect they ſhewed of their religion, and uſually protected them from the injuries the Jews would have done them.

"At Theſſalonica, the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, and gathered a company, and ſet all the city on an uprore, and aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon, and ſought to bring them [Paul and Silas] out to the people. And when they found them not, they drew Jaſon and certain of the brethren, unto the rulers of the city, crying, Theſe that have turned the world upſide down, are come hither alſo: Whom Jaſon has received, and theſe all do contrary to the decrees of Ceſar, ſaying, That there is another king, one Jeſus. And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they heard theſe things. And when they had taken ſecurity of Jaſon, and the other [brethren] they let them go," Acts xvii. 5---9. This was a piece of great goodneſs. The magiſtrates did not impriſon Jaſon and thoſe with him, but took their ſecurity, that Paul and Silas ſhould appear, if called for; which, it is likely, they never were.

Paul preached a year and ſix months at Corinth, and the Jews commenced a warm proſecution againſt him. But it was impoſſible to move Gallio, elder brother of Seneca the Stoic philoſopher, and then deputy of Achaia, to give any judgment upon the caſe. He protected Paul from their rage, ſtopped the proſecution, and did not ſo much as give Paul the trouble of replying for himſelf. " And he continued there (at Corinth) a year and ſix months, teaching the word of God among them. And when Gallio was deputy of Achaia, the Jews made inſurrection with one accord againſt Paul, and brought him to the judgment-ſeat, ſaying, This fellow perſwadeth men to worſhip God contrary to the law. And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio ſaid unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdneſs, O ye Jews, reaſon would that I ſhould bear with you. But if it be a queſtion of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it, for I will be no judge of ſuch matters. And he drave them from the judgment-ſeat," Acts xviii. 11--15.

" At Epheſus, Demetrius, a Silver-ſmith, which made ſilver ſhrines for Diana, with the workmen of like occupation," made a ſpeech to the people, in behalf of themſelves and their goddeſs, inſomuch that " the whole city was filled with confuſion, and having caught Gaius and Ariſtarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they ruſhed with one accord into the theatre. And when Paul would have entred in unto the people, the diſciples ſuffered him not. And certain of the chief of Aſia, which were his friends, ſent unto him; deſiring him that he would not adventure himſelf into the theatre," Acts xix. 24--31.

By the chief men of Aſia, or Aſiarchs, as it is in the Greek, we are to underſtand the rulers of the games of Aſia, ſays Grotius and Whitby. It is generally ſuppoſed, they were prieſts. But if they were not always prieſts, it is certain, that the rulers of games were magiſtrates of conſiderable wealth and reputation. And it was a piece of civility in them to ſend Paul a meſſage from the theatre to adviſe him of the temper of the people, and to diſſwade him from coming thither.

The town-clerk went yet farther, for he reprimanded the people, who had been drawn into a riot by Demetrius and the other artificers, and their workmen; aſſuring them, they might depend upon having juſtice done them according to the law, but that for this aſſembly they had deſerved to be puniſhed. " And when the town-clerk had appeaſed the people, he ſaid, Ye men of Epheſus, what man is there that knoweth not, how that the city of the Epheſians is a worſhipper of the great goddeſs Diana? ---- ſeeing then, that theſe things cannot be ſpoken againſt, ye ought to be quiet and to do nothing raſhly. For ye have brought hither theſe men, which are neither robbers of Churches, nor yet blaſphemers of your goddeſs. Wherefore, if Demetrius, and the craftſmen--- have a matter againſt any man, the law is open; and there are deputies, let them implead one another. But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters, it ſhall be determined in a lawful aſſembly. For we are in danger to be called in queſtion, for this day's uprore, there being no cauſe, whereby we may give an account of this concourſe," Acts xix. 35--40. He blames this tumultuous aſſembly, and aſſerts the innocence of Paul and his companions, foraſmuch as they had not been guilty of ſacrilege, or of reviling their goddeſs, that is, had done nothing againſt religion that was puniſhable by the laws.

When the Jews had ſeized Paul at Jeruſalem, with intent to kill him; neither Lyſias the chief captain there, Acts xxii. nor Felix the governor, to whom Lyſias ſent him, -- xxiv. nor Feſtus his ſucceſſor would condemn him, though earneſtly importuned by the Jews -- xxv.

Paul had made but a ſhort progreſs in his voyage from Ceſarea to Rome, before he received a particular civility from Julius, a centurion of Auguſtus's band, to whom he, and the other priſoners, were committed. " And entring into a ſhip of Adramytium we launched, meaning to ſail by the coaſts of Aſia.--- And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteouſly entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refreſh himſelf," Acts xxvii. 2, 3.

When the Apoſtle and his company were ſhipwrecked in their voyage to Rome, the ſoldiers formed a deſign "to kill the priſoners, leſt they ſhould make their eſcape. But the (forementioned) centurion, who had the charge of them, kept them from their purpoſe, being willing to ſave Paul;" Acts xxvii. 42, 43.

And when he came to Rome, he was well uſed there. "The centurion delivered the priſoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was ſuffered to dwell by himſelf with a ſoldier that kept him;" xxviii. 16. --- "There he dwelt two whole years in his own hired houſe, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching thoſe things which concern the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with all confidence, no man forbidding him."--30, 31. And there is no doubt, but that he was quite freed from theſe bonds, and travelled again into Aſia; Phil. i. 25. ii. 19.

We have here not one only, but many inſtances of lenity, or juſtice at leaſt, in the Roman officers and governors, towards Paul and other the firſt followers of Jeſus; ſome in one place, and ſome in another; at Theſſalonica, Corinth, Epheſus, in Judea, at Rome. Theſe officers withſtood the tumults, remonſtrances, ſolicitations of the Jews of all characters, and of the common people of their own religion.

Theſe facts did not all happen in one and the ſame reign. Pilate made ſome efforts to ſet Jeſus at liberty in the reign of Tiberius: Gallio was deputy of Achaia under Claudius: Felix was ſent into Judea by Claudius; but the juſtice, which he and Feſtus did Paul, was in the time of Nero. And it was from the captain of the guard, or chief favourite of this ſame emperor, that he received ſo good treatment at Rome.

If Gallio only, who was a man of ſo much wit and good ſenſe, and of a ſweet and gentle diſpoſition; and if we may credit his brother, of much generoſity and virtue; had protected the firſt followers of Jeſus from the injuries which were offered them, we might have aſcribed ſuch conduct to his eminent qualifications: But Felix was infamous for his exactions and other crimes, not in Judea only, but at Rome. And yet he could not be brought to condemn Paul.

Not that I think, that Felix did Paul the juſtice he ought to have done; far from it. After the firſt hearing of Paul and the chief prieſts and elders at Ceſarea, he ought to have releaſed him; and his detaining an innocent man in priſon, ſo long as he did Paul, and leaving him in chains, when he went out of the province, were very unrighteous actions.

Luke ſays, "But after two years Portius Feſtus came into Felix's room: and Felix willing to ſhew the Jews a pleaſure, left Paul bound;" Acts xxiv. 27. I believe that Felix at this time ſhewed the Jews a double pleaſure, releaſed robbers and other criminals, and left Paul bound. The former pleaſure Luke has omitted, according to his great candour and moderation obſervable upon divers occaſions in other parts of this hiſtory. But I make very little doubt, but it was now done. Joſephus has particularly taken notice that Albinus, ſucceſſor of Portius Feſtus did ſo, when he left the province; and that he aimed at pleaſing the Jews in it. Joſephus ſays, that thereby the priſons were emptied, but the country was filled with robbers; Felix and Albinus were both of them diſagreeable in their adminiſtration. It is likely, they both took the ſame method of pacifying the Jews at the concluſion. Perhaps Felix's conduct was the pattern Albinus followed; nor was it, I ſuppoſe, an uncommon thing for governors to releaſe ſome priſoners at their leaving a province.

Portius Feſtus was alſo manifeſtly unjuſt to Paul, in that he did not ſet him at liberty, but conſtrained him to appeal to Cæſar.

But though they did not do Paul all the juſtice they ought to have done, yet they did not condemn him to death, as the Jews deſired. It is plain, they withſtood very preſſing ſolicitations, and poſſibly conſiderable offers of money. Felix gave him a great deal of liberty after the firſt hearing at Ceſarea; Acts xxiv. 23. which we may ſuppoſe, was alſo allowed by Feſtus: Though they had neither of them reſolution enough to releaſe Paul againſt the inclinations of the people of their province, they both give plain indications, they thought him an innocent man. And it cannot be queſtioned, but that Feſtus tranſmitted a favourble account of him to Rome.

In order to find out the true reaſon and foundation of this conduct, I mean of the favour ſhewed to the diſciples of Jeſus by the Roman officers; it is needful to conſider the grounds they go upon, and the reaſons they themſelves aſſign for it, as repreſented by Luke.

The reader will recollect the ſpeeches of Gallio, and the town-clerk of Epheſus; ſo that I need not repeat any part of them here. The ſubſtance of them all is, in ſhort, in the letter which Lyſias ſent with Paul to Felix at Ceſarea. "And when I would have known the cauſe, wherefore they accuſed him, I brought him forth into their council, whom I perceived to be accuſed of queſtions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death, or of bonds;" Acts xxiii. 28, 29.

And with this agrees alſo the account, which Feſtus gave of Paul's affair at length to king Agrippa. As you may read it at large in Acts xxv. 13,--27. a ſtrange account! by which it appears likely, that Felix, left behind him ſome memorial concerning this priſoner, and Feſtus had given Paul and his accuſers a ſolemn hearing at Ceſarea: The high-prieſt and elders and all the multitude of the Jews had dealt with him about Paul once and again, at Jeruſalem, and at Ceſarea: Feſtus ſeems to have ſpared no pains to go to the bottom of the matter: And yet, after all, he brought him before Agrippa that he might have ſomewhat to write to Auguſtus. According to this account, the Roman Empire muſt have had no laws, at this time, againſt new ſects in religion, or the leaders of them, provided they injured no man's civil property, and gave no diſturbance to other people in their worſhip.

Let us however, ſee the progreſs of this examination before Agrippa, and Bernice, and thoſe who were with them. Paul acquaints them with the manner of his life from the firſt, informs them of his converſion, freely declares his principles and conduct, and tells them, that he had "ſeen a light from heaven, and heard a voice;" that he had been ſent unto the Gentiles, &c. Acts xxii. 13,---23.

Paul here acknowledgeth two things moſt contrary to the general opinion of the Jews at that time; firſt, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer; and ſecondly, he mentions particularly his commiſſion to go to the Gentiles; which thing when he related in ſpeech to the people at Jeruſalem, "they lift up their voices, and ſaid, away with ſuch a fellow from the earth; for it is not fit that he ſhould live," Acts xxii. 22, 23. And he now declares, that he had propagated theſe principles every where with all his might.

Well, what is the reſult? Why truly, Paul's diſcourſe appears to Feſtus ſo extravagant, that he tells him he was beſide himſelf; only he ſoftens the charge a little, by ſubjoining, that it was much learning that made him mad. But ſtill there was no crime diſcerned. Nay, after all this, Paul had the preſence of mind to deliver a ſolemn wiſh, that not only Agrippa, but alſo all "that heard him that day, were not only almoſt but altogether ſuch he was except his bonds. And when he had thus ſpoken, the king roſe up, and Bernice, and they that ſat with them. And when they were gone aſide, they talked between themſelves, ſaying, This man doth nothing worthy of death or of bonds. Then ſaid Agrippa (a Jew, but well acquainted with the Roman Conſtitution) This man might have been ſet at liberty if he had not appealed unto Ceſar," Acts xxvi. 30. 32.

The ſum, I think, is this; that ſince Paul had affirmed in his defence before Felix, that "they had not found him in the temple diſputing with any man, neither raiſing up the people, neither in the ſynagogues nor in the city;" Acts xxiv. 12. and before Feſtus, that "neither againſt the law, neither againſt the temple, nor yet againſt Ceſar, had he offended any thing at all," ---xxv. 8. And, ſince the Jews had brought no proofs of any ſuch offences; but only there were ſome differences between Paul and the Jews, concerning "certain queſtions of their own ſuperſtition," [religion] Paul was an innocent man, and might have been very juſtly ſet at liberty, and left to himſelf to go and propagate his principles in the way he had done hitherto.

This then was the reaſon of this conduct, they were not uſed to interpoſe their authority in differences purely religious: There was no act of ſedition, injuſtice, or violence proved againſt Paul, or any of his companions: And theſe were the only things, which theſe officers had a right to puniſh.

Here are therefore two things, which we are to look for ſome foreign proof of; namely, the fierce oppoſition made by the Jews againſt the followers of Jeſus Chriſt; and then, in the next place, that the Roman officers had no right, according to the conſtitution of the Roman government at that time, to puniſh men for innocent principles, but only for wicked practices.

To the firſt point, the proceedings of the Jews, little needs to be ſaid. Their character for violence is ſo allowed, that no one can well ſuſpect the Evangeliſts have miſrepreſented them: Not to ſay, that it was by no means their intereſt to ſay theſe things of them, if not true. I ſhall however alledge a paſſage or two to this purpoſe. Juſtin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho, writ about the 140th year of the Chriſtian Æra, ſays, that in his time "the Jews curſed in their ſynagogues all that believed in Chriſt. This, ſays he, is all you can do. You have not now the power of killing us yourſelves, becauſe others have the government of things. But this you have done, whenever you have been able. Nor have any other people ſhewed ſo much enmity againſt us and Chriſt, as you, who have been likewiſe the authors of all thoſe prejudices, which others have conceived againſt that righteous perſon, and us his followers. For after that you had crucified that one unblameable and righteous man (by whoſe ſtripes they are healed who go to the Father through him) when you knew, that he was riſen from the dead, and aſcended up into Heaven, according as the prophecies had foretold he ſhould; you were ſo far from repenting of your evil deeds, that you ſent out from Jeruſalem choſen men into all the world, giving out that the ſect of the Chriſtians is atheiſtical, and ſaying all thoſe evil things of us, which they, who know us not, do ſtill ſay of us." And Tertulliam affirms the ſame thing; that the Jews were the principal authors of the evil reports, which were ſpread abroad concerning the Chriſtians.

Moderation and equity toward men of a different religion are more uncommon things. And therefore, it will be needful to be more particular on this head, and to account for the protection, which the Heathen officers gave Paul and others, when the multitude would have mobbed them, or when the Jewiſh magiſtrates demanded a judicial ſentence againſt them.

I ſhall therefore ſhew, that the Roman people did at this time protect all men in the practiſe of their ſeveral peculiar religious rites and inſtitutions.

Livy informs us, that the Anagnini, a people in Italy, having diſobliged the Romans, the ſenate took away from them ſeveral privileges, which they had let them enjoy to that time. "Their ſenates were diſſolved, and their magiſtrates were deprived of all power and authority, except what was neceſſary for the adminiſtration of their religious rites," Liv. lib. 9. c. 43. This was done in the year of the city 449, before Chriſt 305; and is a proof, that they eſteemed all mens religion inviolable.

The people of Syracuſe, in Sicily, had an ancient cuſtom of chooſing an annual prieſt to Jupiter. It is one of the heavy charges, which Cicero brings againſt Verres, that whilſt he was prætor of that province, he had obſtructed the people there, in the uſual method of the choice, in order to get into the prieſthood a creature of his own; in verr. lib. ii. c. 51.

Of all Heathen rites within the bounds of the Roman empire, the Egyptian ſeem to have been the moſt different from thoſe of the Romans. They were contemned and ridiculed by the emperors, by Auguſtus in particular, ſays Dio, lib. li. and by the Roman authors, as Cicero, de Nat. Deor. & Juvenal, ſatyr. xv. init. And, if we may credit Philo, no ſtrangers came into Egypt, but they were tempted to laugh at them, and banter them, till they became accuſtomed to thoſe abſurdities: And all travellers of good ſenſe, were wont to be filled with the utmoſt aſtoniſhment, joined with pity. See Philo, de decalogo.

But yet they were practiſed without any moleſtation from the Romans, (except in ſome places, where they were ſuppreſſed, becauſe they had been made a cloke of debauchery) and continued to be ſo, long after the time, I am at preſent concerned with; Tertul. Apol. c. 24.

That I may not enter into needleſs particulars, I ſhall take notice here of but one thing more. Philo ſays, that when the Jews waited on Petronius, prefect of Syria, to entreat him, not to proceed as yet, to erect the ſtatue of Caligula at Jeruſalem; they deſired that he would give them leave to ſend an embaſſy to the emperor: "Poſſibly, ſay they, we may obtain thus much; not to be treated worſe than the meaneſt of all people, whoſe religion is preſerved inviolable;" Philo de leg. ad Cai.

As for the Jews, they received very conſiderable favours and privileges from Alexander; and enjoyed the ſame under his ſucceſſors in Syria and Egypt, though with ſome interruptions, eſpecially in Syria. But I intend not to go ſo high as this. I take notice of this, only becauſe the Jews enjoyed under the Romans the moſt extenſive privileges out of Judea, which had been granted by Alexander and his immediate ſucceſſors; and becauſe the privileges they received firſt from them, ſeem to have been, in a great meaſure, the models of thoſe immunities which were granted by the Romans.

For Joſephus ſays, that "Seleucus Nicator gave them [the Jews] the privileges of citizens in all the cities which he built in Aſia, and in lower Syria, and even in Antioch the metropolis of his kingdom, and made them equal to the Macedonians and Grecians; which rights they ſtill enjoy;" Antiq. l. xii. c. 3.

When Flaccus, the prætor of Aſia was accuſed (about the year 60. ante Chriſt.) at Rome, of ſeveral male-adminiſtrations in that province, one of the charges brought againſt him was, that he by an edict, had forbid the Jews of Aſia to ſend any money out of that province to Jeruſalem. Cicero endeavours to defend Flaccus's conduct in this, as well as other matters; but Cicero owns, that the Jews did then ſend money to Jeruſalem annually from Italy, and from all the provinces ſubject to the commonwealth. The bringing a charge againſt Flaccus upon this head, is a proof, that his edict was a novelty. Nor does Cicero produce an inſtance of a like reſtraint laid upon the Jews, before this, by the preſident of any province; which he certainly would have done, if there had been any.

There were, after this, ſeveral decrees paſſed by Julius Ceſar, and the ſenate of Rome, in favour of the Jews who lived in Alexandria, Syria, and Aſia, which were lodged in the capitol at Rome, and copies of them directed to the cities, in which the Jews dwelt; requiring the magiſtrates of thoſe cities to put them in their publick acts, engraved upon two tables of braſs, one in the Roman, another in the Greek language, Joſeph. Antiq. l. xxv. c. x. We have likewiſe in Joſephus copies of the decrees of Delos, Laodicea, Pergamos, Sardis, and other cities, in their proper forms; which were paſſed and regiſtered there in purſuance of the Roman ſenate: Declaring, "that out of their piety to God, and the concern they have always had for the ſupport of religion, and in imitation to the Roman people, who are benefactors to all mankind, who had wrote to them, that the Jews ſhould be permitted to perform the ſacred rites of their religion, obſerve their uſual feaſts and hold their aſſemblies; they ordain that the Jews who think fit ſo to do, both men and women, do keep the ſabbaths, and perform ſacred rites, according to the Jewiſh laws.—— And if any man, whether magiſtrate or private perſon, do give them any let or hindrance herein, he ſhall be fined, and be reckoned debtor to the city." This is the ſubſtance of the decree of the city of Halicarnaſſus, which the reſt reſemble. And Philo aſſures us, that Auguſtus maintained, throughout his reign, the indulgence given to the Jews.

In the reign of Tiberius, they were generally well uſed. They were indeed baniſhed out of Italy by an edict: but it was for a miſdemeanour committed by ſome villains of their nation at Rome, Joſeph. Antiq. 18, 19. c. 4. The only hardſhip of it was, that a great many innocent perſons ſuffered, beſide the guilty. On other occaſions Tiberius ſhewed them all the favour they could deſire, eſpecially after the death of Sejanus; and is much applauded for it by Philo.

During the reign of Caligula, they met with great hardſhips, eſpecially at Alexandria. But the orders which Caligula had given for the erecting a ſtatue to himſelf, as a god, in the temple at Jeruſalem, and for puniſhing the Jews, if they oppoſed it, did not take effect. By the kind and prudent management of Petronius, preſident of Syria, and the interceſſions of Agrippa the Great, delays were obtained, and Caligula died before the attempt was made.

Claudius, the next ſucceeding emperor renewed to them all their privileges. He directed in particular, by a decree, that the Jews at Alexandria ſhould be reſtored to all their rights which had been injuriouſly taken away from them, in the reign of Caligula, ibid.

There was, in the beginning of this reign, a remarkable piece of juſtice done the Jews at Doris in Syria, by Petronius, preſident of that province. The fact is this: Some raſh young fellows of the place got in and ſet up a ſtatue of the emperor in the Jews ſynagogue. Agrippa the Great made complaints to Petronius concerning this injury: Whereupon Petronius iſſued a very ſharp precept to the magiſtrates of Doris. "He terms this action an offence, not againſt the Jews only, but alſo againſt the emperor; ſays, it is agreeable to the law of nature, that every man ſhould be maſter of his own places according to the decree of the emperor. I have, ſays he, given directions that they, who have dared to do theſe things contrary to the edict of Auguſtus, be delivered to the centurion, Vitellius Proculus, that they may be brought to me, and anſwer for their behaviour. And I require the chief men in the magiſtracy to diſcover the guilty to the centurion, unleſs they are willing to have it thought, that this injuſtice has been done with their conſent; and that they ſee to it, that no ſedition or tumult happen upon this occaſion; which, I perceive, is what ſome are aiming at. ---- I do alſo require, that for the future, you ſeek no pretence for ſedition or diſturbance, but that all men worſhip [God] according to their own cuſtoms," which account gives us ſome light into that paſſage of Acts xvi.

Paul was at Philippi in Macedonia (it was now the 11th year of Claudius): He there cured "a certain damſel, poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination, which brought her maſters much gain by ſoothſaying, Acts xvi. 16--18. And when her maſters ſaw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place, unto the rulers --- and the multitude roſe up together againſt them, and the magiſtrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them. And when they had laid many ſtripes upon them they caſt them into priſon, charging the jaylor to keep them ſafely, --- 19, 23. And when it was day, the magiſtrates ſent the ſerjeants, ſaying, let thoſe men go. And the keeper of the priſon told this ſaying to Paul. ---- But Paul ſaid, --- they have beaten us openly uncondemned being Romans, and have caſt us into priſon, and now do they thruſt us out privily? but let them come themſelves and fetch us out. --- And when they heard that they were Romans --- they came, and beſought them and brought them out, and deſired them to depart out of the city," --- 35, 39.

Here we have an inſtance of a tumult raiſed by ſome ſelf-intereſted and deſigning men, the common people incenſed by their arguments, the magiſtrates drawn into an act of injuſtice. Petronius ſeems to have ſuſpected, that the diſorder at Doris had been committed with the connivance of the rulers there. It is not at all unlikely, that the magiſtrates of cities and towns, who, poſſibly, were but a few degrees above the common people, might ſometimes approve of theſe outrages, and act a part in them; but the preſidents and proconſuls, men of a larger genius, who had been educated at Rome, and ſerved offices there, who were better acquainted with the Roman conſtitution, had a greater charge, and were more immediately accountable to the emperor and the ſenate for the obſervation of their edicts and the peace of the provinces, never, or very rarely, entred into theſe meaſures, but puniſhed ſuch diſorderly practices when they happened, and by freſh precepts endeavoured to prevent them for the future.

However, this act of the magiſtrates at Philippi was a ſudden thing (they have beaten us openly uncondemned). The order was given without a hearing; and, aſſoon as it was light the next morning, they ſent their officers with directions, that the priſoners ſhould be releaſed. They ſoon repented of what they had done, and notwithſtanding the ſpecious pretences, and obnoxious charges, of the maſters of this damſel, that Paul and Silas had taught cuſtoms which were not lawful for them to obſerve; they were ſenſible they had gone beyond their commiſſion, and were apprehenſive of being called led to an account by an higher authority, to which they were ſubject. This order of releaſe was ſent, before they had heard that theſe men were Romans, and whilſt they knew no better than that they were mere Jews, and defended by no other privileges than thoſe that belonged to all of that nation. And the hiſtory, Joſephus has given us of the fact at Doris, and the conduct of the preſident of Syria, upon occaſion of it, may very well render every part of this relation here highly probable. When theſe magiſtrates knew that Paul and Silas were Romans, their concern was ſtill encreaſed; and their own intereſt obliged them to all the farther condeſcenſions, which Paul demanded. But

This argument will be imperfect if I do not ſhew ſome inſtance of this equity to the Jews, in the reign of Nero. The only fact I ſhall mention here, is this. It happened in the time that Feſtus was governor of Judea, (an. 60.) who was the perſon who ſent Paul to Rome. Agrippa the younger raiſed the buildings of the houſe, in which he reſided, when he was at Jeruſalem; and which had been the palace of the Aſmonean family: By which he had not only a fine proſpect of the city, but likewiſe overlook'd the inner court of the temple. "When the people of Jeruſalem ſaw what he had done, they were greatly incenſed: For neither do our cuſtoms nor our laws permit, that any beſide the prieſts ſhould ſee what is done in the temple. They therefore raiſed a high wall at the extremity of the weſt-ſide of the inner court of the temple, whereby they obſtructed not only the king's view (ſc. Agrippa's) out of his dining-room, but alſo the view from the weſtern portico without the court, where the Romans uſed to keep guard on the feſtival days. Agrippa was exceedingly provoked at it, and Feſtus the governor yet more; and commanded them to pull the wall down again. But they deſired he would permit them to ſend ambaſſadors to Nero. Feſtus giving them leave, they deputed to Nero ten of their chief men, and Iſhmael the high-prieſt, and Helchias the keeper of the Sacred Treaſury. Nero having given them an audience, not only forgave what they had done, but allowed that the building ſhould remain."

This muſt be acknowledged to be a remarkable inſtance of goodneſs. It ſhews a great backwardneſs in Nero, or thoſe who then governed him, to break in upon their religion, or any thing they eſteemed Sacred.

I have now brought down my account of the treatment, which the Roman commonwealth and empire gave to the ſeveral religions, which obtained in the countries under their dominion, and particularly to the Jewiſh religion, during the period I am concerned with. There are, in this ſhort view, ſeveral acts of goodneſs and juſtice done to the Jews by préſidents of provinces, beſide the edicts and declarations of the ſenate, or the emperors. And did the ſubject require, I could add many more teſtimonies: But that is needleſs.

It will be needful however, in order fully to clear up this matter, to ſubjoin two or three remarks.

1. It muſt be owned, that according to the Roman laws, no man might introduce any new gods, or worſhip publickly or privately any ſtrange or foreign gods, not allowed of by publick authority, Cic. de leg. l. ii. c. 8.
2. But yet the diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt were under the protection of the Roman laws, ſince the god whom they worſhipped, and whoſe worſhip they recommended, was the god of the heavens and the earth, the ſame god whom the Jews worſhipped, and the worſhip of whom was allowed of all over the Roman empire, and eſtabliſhed by ſpecial edicts and decrees in moſt, perhaps in all the places, in which we meet with Paul in his travels.

It is evident, that Paul makes his defence before Felix in Judea upon this footing. "They neither found me in the temple diſputing with any man----But this I confeſs to thee, that after the way which they call hereſy, ſo worſhip I the God of my Fathers," Acts xxiv. 14. They call this way a ſect, a new ſect; grant it to be ſo: But in this way I worſhip the god of my fathers, the ſame god which they do, and believe all things which are written in the law and the prophets, as firmly as any Jew whatever: Nor do I ſay any thing inconſiſtent with them, or which I cannot ſupport by them: And therefore I am entitled to protection equally with them, ſince I have not attempted nor adviſed any diſturbance or inſurrection. This therefore was a very juſt and proper defence before Felix, a Heathen magiſtrate; and it was compleatly valid.

And the Roman magiſtrates out of Judea, and the Heathen people every where conſidered Paul and his companions as Jews. It was ſo evidently in Achaia. The Jews brought Paul before the judgment-ſeat, ſaying, "This fellow perſwadeth men to worſhip God contrary to the law," Acts xviii. 1. But Gallio ſuppoſed that Paul had as good a right to protection as themſelves, and that the differences between Paul and them were no other than ſuch as might happen between men of one and the ſame religion: and that the only reaſon, why Paul was brought before him was the envy, malice, and bigotty of ſome of the leading men among the Jews of his province. "If it be a queſtion of words and names, ſays he, and of your law, look ye to it, for I will be no judge of ſuch matters,---ver. 15.

From whence, I think, it appears, that Gallio was not ſo ignorant of the caſe brought before him, as ſome may be ready to imagine. If, ſays he, the matter in diſpute be a word, ſome particular opinion and doctrine, which, you ſay, Paul preaches; or of names, whether Jeſus may be called the Chriſt; (or perhaps he means, of matters, about which the difference is ſo ſmall, that it is rather a controverſy about names than things) or of your law , whether it obliges all men to be circumciſed, who go over to the worſhip of your God, I will be no judge between you concerning ſuch matters.

If the ſenſe, I here give of theſe words, and particularly of your law, be right, it is an evidence, that Gallio knew very well, that Paul had converted Heathens to his ſentiments; and yet he took no offence at it: Only he was reſolved not to paſs any judicial ſentence upon theſe matters. Aud indeed, I think it plain from Luke's account, that Gallio had heard the Jews tell their ſtory out. But, when they had done, he had more honour and good ſenſe, than to oblige Paul to make any apology for his principles in court, under the character of a criminal or accuſed perſon.

Nor is this at all ſtrange, that Gallio did not reſent Paul's converting men from Heatheniſm to the worſhip of the true God; ſince the Jews had done the ſame thing in many parts of the Roman empire without offence, though not with ſo good ſucceſs, as Paul.

But to proceed. It is apparent, that the Heathen people alſo conſidered the Apoſtle and thoſe with him, as Jews.

It is with this ſpeech, that the maſters of the damſel at Philippi come before the magiſtrates, when they brought along with them Paul and Silas: Theſe men being Jews do exceedingly trouble our city, Acts xvi. 20. And though the magiſtrates were ſo far heated and miſled by theſe men, as to order Paul and Silas to be beaten and impriſoned; yet they had no ſooner reflected upon what they had done, but they were ſenſible, that they themſelves had broken the laws, in puniſhing men that were Jews for ſpreading their principles, and that they were liable to be reprimanded for it.

The uproar at Epheſus affords a remarkable proof of the ſame thing. The ſilverſmiths that made ſhrines for Diana began a popular ſpeech there; ſee Acts xix. 26----34.

Alexander was put forward by the Jews, and undoubtedly intended to have declaimed againſt Paul; but ſo ſoon as the people knew that he was a Jew, inſtead of hearkning to him, they were thrown into a freſh ferment.

I think, I need not add that Feſtus ſo underſtood the matter likewiſe, his words having been already more than once produced, in which he tells Agrippa, that when Paul's accuſers ſtood up, they had only certain queſtions againſt him of their own ſuperſtition, ch. xxv. 18, 19.

3. It ought to be obſerved, that the firſt followers of Jeſus did every where obſerve an admirable decorum in all their words and actions. It may, perhaps, be inconceivable by ſome, how they ſhould be able thus to behave every where, animated, as they were, with a warm, as well as juſt zeal for the truths of the Chriſtian doctrine, and a thorough deteſtation of all the abominations and abſurdities of the Heathen worſhip. But yet it is certain they did ſo. We have unconteſted evidence of it.

Luke aſſures us, that when Paul was at Athens, his ſpirit was ſtirred in him, when he ſaw the city was wholly given to idolatry, Acts xvii. 16. But when he comes to make his ſpeech in the Areopagus, his temper and addreſs are equal to his argument, which certainly can never be exceeded. According to our tranſlation indeed, there is harſhneſs in the very introduction: Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too ſuperſtitious. But all muſt allow, that the original is peculiarly ſoft, if any cenſure was intended: But I confeſs I apprehend that Paul tells them, He perceived they were a people much diſpoſed to religion: Which, I think, is a laudable property. It was certainly thought ſo to be at Athens: Which is ſufficient to vindicate the Apoſtle from the charge of rudeneſs.

It is true, Luke ſays, that at the concluſion, when they heard of the reſurrection of the dead, ſome mocked: and others ſaid, We will hear thee again of this matter, ver. 32. It is very poſſible ſome might be ſurpriſed at the novelty of Paul's principles, and be inclined to make themſelves merry with them. But I do not perceive by Luke, that there were, I think, there could not be any exceptions made to the propriety, or decence of any of his expreſſions.

Luke has not recorded any of the diſcourſes made by Paul, or thoſe who were with him, at Epheſus. But however, we have authentic evidence of the innocence of their words and actions there alſo. Ye have brought hither, ſays the town-clerk to the people of Epheſus, theſe men, which are neither robbers of Churches, nor yet blaſphemers of your goddeſs, Acts xix. 37. He ſays this, of Gaius and Ariſtarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travels. So that this temper and prudence were not peculiar to Paul, but common to him with his companions. What the town-clerk ſays here may be relied on: He is ſpeaking to the enraged multitude: If there had been any blaſphephemies uttered by theſe men, he had made them his own.

The conduct, or expreſs declarations of Felix, Feſtus, Agrippa, are teſtimonies to the like unblameable and inoffenſive behaviour of Paul at Jeruſalem.

Had there been any affront offered by Paul to the Jewiſh religion, either Felix or Feſtus would have diſcovered and puniſhed it. When ſuch things were done by Romans they could not eſcape. Undoubtedly therefore, Paul had been as innocent in Judea, as he had been out of it.

Upon the whole then, from the ſeveral particulars here alledged, it muſt appear highly probable, that the chief officers of ſuch a government, as the Roman was at the riſe of the Chriſtian Religion, ſhould teach the firſt preachers of it, as they are repreſented by Luke to have done.

They had no authority, by virtue of any edicts or decrees then paſſed, to enter into the controverſies then on foot between ſeveral cities in Egypt, who worſhipped ſome one animal, and ſome another, but none of them the gods of the Romans. Theſe governors had not been wont to interpoſe between any of the ſects of the Jews, of which there had been ſeveral for a long time, when no tumult or ſedition aroſe among them. The Jews, it is likely, would have thought it the higheſt injuſtice, and would have made the loudeſt complaints, if they had. The firſt Chriſtians did not differ more from the Phariſees or Eſſenes, I do not ſay from the Sadducees, than theſe three ſects differed one from another. How can it be thought then that theſe governors ſhould undertake to ſuppreſs the firſt Chriſtians, when they were obliged to protect all the reſt, not this or that ſect, but all the Jews in general?

The Roman government protected the many rites of all their provinces. They protected Jews and Heathens in one and the ſame city. The Jews had been now for ſome while, from time to time, making proſelytes of Greeks and Syrians, converted them to the worſhip of the true God, the God whom the Chriſtians preached, and brought them, ſome indeed to part only, others, to the obſervation of all the peculiar rites of their religion. This they had done, and the preſidents gave them no interruption or moleſtation. Muſt not then theſe officers have eſteemed it, as Luke repreſents them to have done, a new ſpecies of envy and malice in the Jews to bring before them, and deſire juſtice againſt Paul and his companions, barely becauſe they did not ſubmit to them in every particular? And muſt not theſe officers have been prepared likewiſe to controul their own people, when they would have abuſed Paul for what the Jews had been permitted to do, that is, for converting men to his peculiar ſentiments, when his principles were not at all more diſagreeable to them, than thoſe of the Jews; and his behaviour was far more peaceable and inoffenſive than theirs had been?

There is however one difficulty, which, I am aware, may be ſtarted by ſome perſons. If the Roman government, to which all the world was then ſubject, was ſo mild and gentle, and protected all men in the profeſſion of their ſeveral religious tenets, and the practiſe of all their peculiar rites; whence comes it to paſs that there are in the epiſtles ſo many exhortations to the Chriſtians to patience and conſtancy; and ſo many arguments of conſolation ſuggeſted to them as a ſuffering body of men? Does not the Apoſtle Paul tell the Philippians, that to them it was given in the behalf of Chriſt, not only to believe on him, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake? Phil. i. 29. And the Theſſalonians, that they had ſuffered like things of their own countrymen; even as they (the Churches of Judea) have of the Jews? 1 Theſſ. ii. 14. Is not Timothy directed to endure hardneſs as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt? 2 Tim. ii. 3. Are not the Hebrews reminded that they had endured a great fight of affliction? Heb. x. 32. Does not St. Peter intimate, that they, whom he wrote to, had been in heavineſs through manifold temptations? 1 Pet. i. 6.

To this I anſwer,

1. That the account Luke has given, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, of the behaviour of the Roman officers out of Judea, and in it, is confirmed not only by the account I have given of the genius and nature of the Roman government, but alſo by the teſtimonies of the moſt ancient Chriſtian writers. The Romans did afterwards depart from theſe moderate maxims; but it is certain, that they were governed by them as long as the hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtle reaches. Tertullian and divers others do affirm, that Nero was the firſt emperor that perſecuted the Chriſtians; nor did he begin to diſturb them till after Paul had left Rome the firſt time he was there (when he was ſent thither by Feſtus) and therefore not till he was become an enemy to all mankind. And I think, that according to the account which Tacitus has given of Nero's inhumane treatment of the Chriſtians at Rome in the tenth year of his reign, what he did then was not owing to their having different principles in religion from the Romans, but proceeded from a deſire he had to throw off from himſelf the odium of a vile action, namely, ſetting fire to the city, which he was generally charged with. Tacit. Ann. lib. xv. c. 4. And Sulpicius Severus, a Chriſtian hiſtorian of the fourth century, ſays the ſame thing.

2dly, I anſwer, that if the reader will be at the pains of comparing the Epiſtles of the New Teſtament with the hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles, he will find a perfect harmony in all thoſe particulars which are mentioned in both.

Thus Paul writes to the Theſſalonians: Ye became followers of the Churches which in Judea are in Chriſt Jeſus: for ye alſo have ſuffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews, 1 Theſſ. ii. 14. And Luke informs us, that at Theſſalonica, the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, and gathered a company, and ſet all the city on an uproar, and aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon.---Acts xvii. 5.

As according to Luke, they were the Jews, who uſually began, or aggravated the diſturbances againſt Paul; ſo Paul himſelf aſcribes his own ſufferings, and thoſe of others likewiſe, to the Jews; ſee 1 Theſſ. ii. 15, 16. Gal. iv. 11.

From which it is plain, that all the Apoſtle's ſufferings came from the bigotted Jews; and that, if it had not been for them, he might have preached the Goſpel quietly enough.

3. Though the Romans were maſters of the world, and were governed by theſe moderate maxims as I have ſhewn; yet the firſt Chriſtians might be expoſed to many hardſhips and ſufferings, as they certainly were. The ſources of them are very evident. There was a heavy perſecution in Judea, which commenced not long after our Saviour's aſcenſion, and laſted, probably, ſeveral years. The Jews had a right to call men before the council, could excommunicate men out of their ſynagogues, ſcourge, and beat them; they could bring men before the governor and proſecute for capital crimes. Doubtleſs they exerted all the power they had againſt the believers, and did other things they had no right to do, partly through connivance, it is likely, of the governor, and partly, perhaps, becauſe he could not hinder them. Then Herod Agrippa was king of Judea three years and more, and he, out of his own averſion to Chriſtianity, and to pleaſe the Jews, was an inveterate enemy of the followers of Jeſus. And after this, when Judea was again put under Roman procurators, beſide the leſſer puniſhments the Jews could inflict themſelves, they could proſecute before the procurators, as they did Paul. And we find, that though Felix and Feſtus were both convinced of his innocence; yet they did, neither of them, dare to releaſe him againſt the inclinations of the people of their province. And ſuch was the Jewiſh influence in this cauſe, that, by their means, Paul was kept two years in priſon in Judea, and as many afterwards, at Rome.

As for the ſufferings which the Chriſtians were liable to out of Judea; every one muſt be ſenſible, that wherever Paul, or any other made any conſiderable number of converts among the Heathen, many of the common people were provoked, and would be apt to inſult them; and, in ſome places, the inferior magiſtrates might be ſo weak as to concur with them, Acts xvi. 22. Beſides, the Jews were numerous every where, throughout the Roman empire; as may be proved from the following paſſages, ch. xiv. 19. xvii. 5--13. xviii. 14. xix. 33. xxi. 1--3.

Nor ought it to be ſuppoſed, that the Jews were inconſiderable enemies. The malicious, however unfurniſhed, will always find ſome weapons; and rage makes men, for a time at leaſt, ſtrong and terrible. We ſee a great deal of enmity againſt the firſt followers of Jeſus in the Jewiſh ſpeeches and proceedings in Judea, and other parts. But perhaps it is not eaſy to form a compleat idea of it. What vexation muſt it not have given to the generality of this people, who were now in full expectation of ſubduing the whole world to themſelves, to ſee a number of men of their own nation travelling over the Roman empire, aſſerting that Jeſus, who had been crucified, was the Meſſiah, the Great King and Deliverer that had been promiſed to the Jews; inviting Gentiles alſo to the participation of all the privileges of the people of God, without inſiſting on circumciſion or other rites of their law!

The peculiar principles, temper, and diſpoſition of the Jewiſh people deſerve to be ſomewhat farther conſidered in this place. Theſe were ſuch, that though the Roman governors had taken the firſt Chriſtians into their ſpecial protection, they could not have ſecured them from all injuries. The Jews then not only ſcorned ſubjection and obedience to others, and affected liberty and independence, but they expected dominion over all mankind. This we may perceive from divers characters and admonitions in the New Teſtament, 2 Pet. ii. 10. Jude viii. 1 Pet. ii. 13. iv. 15. and from the writings of Joſephus. The Jews diſdain of other men, and their thirſt of dominion ran ſo high at laſt, that they put the people of the ſeveral countries in which they lived, and the whole Roman empire into a fright. They had been hated before, but now they were feared. Joſephus ſays expreſly, that the expectations they had of ſome one from their country, who would obtain the empire of the world, was the great thing that induced them to the war with the Romans. If the Romans were not able to preſerve the Heathen people from all injuries from the Jews (as it is certain they were not) much leſs could they ſecure the Chriſtians, who were above all others the object of their envy. And if the Jews thought themſelves able to contend with, and overturn the Roman empire; it cannot be ſuppoſed unlikely, that they ſhould attempt to deſtroy a Chriſtian, without asking the Romans leave, when they would not do it for them.

Theſe diſcouragements and ſufferings then the firſt Chriſtians met with and underwent, whippings in ſynagogues, excommunications from the ordinary places of God's worſhip, beatings in publick market-places; tumults, ſome that endangered, Acts xiv. 19. others that coſt them their lives;--vii. 54--60. during the reign of Herod Agrippa, impriſonment and death; in the reſt of this period, from the beginning to the end of it troubleſome proſecutions before Heathen governors in Judea, and out of it; the ſevereſt reproaches, and dangerous conſpiracies and lyings in wait of the Jews in all parts; among the Heathen, the ſcorn and ridicule of the great and the witty, inſults of the common people, and abuſes of inferior magiſtrates; laſtly, perils from falſe brethren, who might find it no hard matter to augment the prejudices, both of Jews and Gentiles againſt a ſingular ſet of men. Thus,

If we duly conſider the vaſt ſenſibility of human nature to pain and diſgrace, I believe, it will be allowed, that the ſubſiſtence and growth of Chriſtianity under the diſcouragements it met with in its very infancy, at a time when there had been but few examples of patience and conſtancy under ſufferings in any caſe, that bears any near reſemblance with this, are a ſtrong argument in favour of its Divine Original; and a proof, that they, who then embraced it, and were ſteady in the profeſſion of it, were, upon the beſt evidences, fully perſwaded of the truth of the facts on which it depends; and were animated by the hopes of that great reward, which is one diſtinguiſhed article of the Chriſtian doctrine.

This account will, as a key to the Acts of the Apoſtles, lead us into the reaſon of many things, which otherwiſe could not be accounted for. And I now proceed to give you a ſhort account of the author of this Sacred Hiſtory.

What has been ſaid before, in the introduction to the Goſpel according to Luke, may ſuffice to acquaint you, what character that Evangeliſt bore, how he was converted by Paul, and accompanied him in his travels, it was alſo hinted, that he was the author of the Acts of the Apoſtles. But I referred you to this place for a fuller account of that particular: Therefore,

Let it be noted, That as the Evangeliſts tranſmitted to the Church of Chriſt, the hiſtory of the life, acts, or deeds, ſayings or doctrines, ſufferings, paſſion and death of our Lord, during his thirty-three years abode upon earth: So the bleſſed Spirit of God, whom we ſtile the Holy Ghoſt, inſpired the Sacred Pen-man, the Evangeliſt Luke, by the aſſiſtance of the Apoſtle Paul, to continue in writing the effects of his glorification, ſetting forth, how Chriſt being aſcended into Heaven, and ſeated at the right hand of his Father, ſent his Holy Spirit upon the Apoſtles, as he had promiſed, to enable them to eſtabliſh his everlaſting ſpiritual kingdom, by gathering together his Church out of all nations indifferently; by which the world, being reduced under a new form of conduct and government, might, as it were, receive a new ſhape, being riſen again from death and darkneſs, in the light of grace, ſalvation, truth and life, ſpread abroad over the whole world. Now,

The Holy Ghoſt, not acting after the manner of men, not with a view of profit or applauſe, not aiming at the feeding of men's curioſities by many, prolix and rhetorical narrations, lays down in the moſt natural way, eaſy to be underſtood by all men in this work of the Evangeliſt Luke, the grounds and general model of this great fabrick of the Chriſtian Church, in ſuch a manner as that all paſtors in ſucceeding ages, may apply the labours of the two great Apoſtles Peter and Paul, for a rule and pattern in their own care for their reſpective Churches.

His method is firſt, to ſhew how the breach, made in the company of the Apoſtles by the fall and death of the traytor Judas, being reſtored by the chuſing of Matthias into the number of them, the Lord, according to his promiſe, while he yet abode with his diſciples upon earth, did miraculouſly ſend down from Heaven upon them all the abundance of the gifts of his Spirit. And how the Apoſtles, as principal and ſpecial members of the Church, which is the Body of Chriſt, and firſt miniſters and workmen in this Divine Work, having been by him inſpired and enlightned in a univerſal, moſt certain and compleat knowledge of the whole doctrine of ſalvation, accompanied with an infallible and perpetual Divine Conduct, in the propounding and teaching thereof; and with the miraculous gift of tongues, and of working miracles; and with heroical ſtrength and power, and all neceſſary qualities, and parts to enable them the better to exerciſe their charge. The ſame Divine Spirit did not confine its benefits to theſe firſt preachers of Chriſtianity, it ſpread itſelf alſo in faith and converſion and miraculous gifts upon many other perſons by the external means of their preaching. But, Here let it be remembred, That whereas the power by which the Apoſtles wrought miracles, and which was afterwards communicated to many of the new converts to the faith, is frequently in this Book called, the Holy Ghoſt, Yet we are not to underſtand it always meant of the third Perſon of the Bleſſed Trinity. But it is in theſe caſes uſed to expreſs the wonderful effuſion of thoſe gifts, the diſpenſation of which is derived from the Holy Spirit (the effects and operations of the Spirit, having often the name of the Spirit, who is the cauſe of thoſe operations). Thus, ch. viii. 15, 16, 17. it is written, that the converts of Samaria had received the Holy Ghoſt; or, the gift of tongues and other miraculous powers of the Divine Spirit. And here alſo

I ſhall remark one objection which alledgeth: If the Holy Ghoſt was now conferred on the Apoſtles, why doth the Evangeliſt John inform us, that Chriſt before his aſcenſion breathed on them, and ſaid, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt? John xx. 22. It is anſwered, That this ſymbol or ceremony of breathing on the diſciples in John, hath been thought to mean a confirming them in their dependance on Chriſt's ſending to them his Holy Spirit, and ſo in ſome degree a conferring the ſame upon them, which we read in the Acts, to be after Chriſt's aſcenſion more plentifully ſent down. But if we conſider the whole paſſage, John xx. 21, 22, 23. As my Father hath ſent me even ſo I ſend you: And when he had ſaid this, he breathed on them, and ſaith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt: Whoſe ſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſe ſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained. It ſeems that John gives an account of Chriſt's conferring or more fully eſtabliſhing the Apoſtolical and miniſterial authority and commiſſion of publiſhing the Goſpel of ſalvation, reconciling ſinners to God, and of governing and inſtructing the Church; ſee Cyprian's Epiſt. 69. at Oxford, and Auſtin contr. Parmen. l. ii. c. 11. Chryſoſt. in loc. And our Biſhop Taylor in his life of Chriſt (part 3. ſect. 16.) ſays, "It is true, indeed, that before this time we find that Chriſt had ordained his Apoſtles to preach the Goſpel, and had given them power to work miracles in confirmation of it; Mark iii. 13, 14. and Matt. x. 1. but by this laſt, and more ſolemn ordination, they were fully eſtabliſhed in their office;" becauſe Chriſt now ſends them as his Father had ſent him, (by anointing and conſecrating him with the Holy Ghoſt; Luke iii. 22. Acts x, 38.) But in the Acts we have an account of the beſtowing on them the means to enable them for the performance and executing of that commiſſion: So that in John xx. 21, &c. Chriſt gave to his Apoſtles the commiſſion, altho' they could not fully execute the ſame, till he had ſent the promiſe of the Father upon them, which ſhould endue them with power from on high; Luke xxiv. 49. which is the real meaning of that text, where John ſaith, The Holy Ghoſt was not yet given, becauſe that Jeſus was not then glorified; John vii. 29. Of the conferring of which enabling power, in an open, viſible manner, we have here the hiſtory in the Acts.

If we conſider the ſufferings which the Apoſtles underwent, being ſubject to hunger and cold, want and neceſſity, ſtripes and impriſonments, we may conclude that they could not exerciſe this power of doing miracles at all times, or at their own pleaſure; for, if they could, moſt likely they would have cleared the way for their great work of publiſhing the Goſpel, by putting off thoſe ſufferings; nor would Paul have left Trophimus ſick at Miletum; 2 Tim. iv. 20. or have ſuffered that infirmity, whatever it was, the thorn of the fleſh; 2 Cor. xii. 7. to have continued on himſelf. But they could and did work miracles, when God ſaw it neceſſary to evidence their commiſſion from him, and to manifeſt the truth of their doctrine.

The Holy Apoſtles thus qualified ſet about their great work of publiſhing the Goſpel of ſalvation, and planting the Church. They began at Jeruſalem, and at their firſt preaching converted above three thouſand; ch. ii. 14. Therefore the Church of Jeruſalem is the Mother-church to Chriſtians; the members whereof firſt maintained their Chriſtian ſociety by their unanimity, in adhering ſtedfaſtly to the Apoſtles and their doctrine, and by their joint devotion, and mutual love and charity: For, whereas ſome of the believers were poor, and the believers being now encreaſed to the number of five thouſand; ch. iii. 1, &c. and iv. 4---22. divers of the richer ſort ſold their landed poſſeſſion, and brought the money to the Apoſtles to be diſtributed in common, as occaſion required.

Thus I could lead you through the whole hiſtory of the Acts of the Apoſtles: But I think it will be more beneficial to the reader, to reſerve thoſe remarks, which I then ſhould be obliged to repeat, to their proper places in the courſe of my Notes on this Book.

I ſhall therefore conclude this Introduction, That this Book of the Acts of the Apoſtles, written by Luke the Evangeliſt, was from the beginning received into the canon of the Scriptures; and ought to be received by us Chriſtians, as the directory of our Eccleſiaſtical Oeconomy, or Church-government.

CHAP. I.

Chriſt preparing his apoſtles to the beholding of his aſcenſion, gathereth them together into the mount Olivet, commandeth them to expect in Jeruſalem the ſending down of the holy Ghoſt, promiſeth after few days to ſend it: by virtue whereof they ſhould be witneſſes unto him, even unto the utmoſt parts of the earth: 9 After his aſcenſion they are warned by two angels to depart, and to ſet their minds upon his ſecond coming: 12 They accordingly return, and giving themſelves to prayer, chooſe Matthias apoſtle in the place of Judas.

THE former treatiſe have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jeſus began both to do and teach,

2 Until the day in which he was taken up, after that he through the holy Ghoſt had given commandments unto the apoſtles whom he had choſen.

3 To whom alſo he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion, by many infallible proofs, being ſeen of them forty days, and ſpeaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God:

4 And being aſſembled together with them, commanded them that they ſhould not depart from Jeruſalem, but wait for the promiſe of the Father, which, ſaith he, ye have heard of me.

5 For John truly baptized with water; but ye ſhall be baptized with the holy Ghoſt, not many days hence.

6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, ſaying, Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael?

7 And he ſaid unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

8 But ye ſhall receive power after that the holy Ghoſt is come upon you: and ye ſhall be witneſſes unto me, both in Jeruſalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermoſt part of the earth.

9 And when he had ſpoken theſe things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their ſight.

10 And while they looked ſtedfaſtly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men ſtood by them in white apparel;

11 Which alſo ſaid, Ye men of Galilee, why ſtand ye gazing up into heaven? this ſame Jeſus which is taken up from you into heaven, ſhall ſo come in like manner as ye have ſeen him go into heaven.

12 Then returned they unto Jeruſalem, from the mount called Olivet, which is from Jeruſalem a ſabbath-days journey.

13 And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James.

14 Theſe all continued with one accord in prayer and ſupplication with the women, and Mary the mother of Jeſus, and with his brethren.

15 ¶ And in thoſe days Peter ſtood up in the midſt of the diſciples, and ſaid, (the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty)

16 Men and brethren, this ſcripture muſt needs have been fulfilled, which the holy Ghoſt by the mouth of David ſpake before concerning Judas, which was guide to them that took Jeſus.

17 For he was numbred with us, and had obtained part of this miniſtry.

18 Now this man purchaſed a field with the reward of iniquity; and falling headlong, he burſt aſunder in the midſt, and all his bowels guſhed out.

19 And it was known unto all the dwellers at Jeruſalem; inſomuch as that field is called in their proper tongue, Aceldama, that is to ſay, The field of blood.

20 For it is written in the book of pſalms, Let his habitation be deſolate, and let no man dwell therein: and, His biſhoprick let another take.

21 Wherefore of theſe men which have companied with us, all the time that the Lord Jeſus went in and out among us,

22 Beginning from the baptiſm of John, unto that ſame day that he was taken up from us, muſt one be ordained to be a witneſs with us of his reſurrection.

23 And they appointed two, Joſeph called Barſabas, who was ſurnamed Juſtus, and Matthias.

24 And they prayed, and ſaid, Thou Lord, which knoweſt the hearts of all men, ſhew whether of theſe two thou haſt choſen,

25 That he may take part of this miniſtry and apoſtleſhip, from which Judas by tranſgreſſion fell, that he might go to his own place.

26 And they gave forth their lots; and the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was numbred with the eleven apoſtles.

Ver. 1. The former treatiſe, &c.] This was the Goſpel which bears the name of Luke.

——— Theophilus] This, I am of opinion, is a fictitious name compounded of Theos, God, and Philos, a friend, applicable to any perſon who ſincerely reads the Scriptures, to gain the knowledge of the will and true worſhip of God.

——— Of all that Jeſus began both to do and teach.] i. e. Of all, or as much as was neceſſary to the ſaving of our ſouls; for, we know, that the Evangeliſts have omitted many things, which our Bleſſed Saviour both ſpake and did, as appears from John xx. 30. and xxi. 25.

Ver. 2. Until the day in which he was taken up.] Commonly called aſcenſion-day, inſtituted by the Church to commemorate Chriſt's aſcenſion into Heaven, after he had ſpent forty days on earth with his diſciples, from the time of his riſing from the dead.

——— Through the holy Ghoſt.] Namely, through his power and Divine Authority, or through the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, whereof his human nature was full. See the introduction towards the end.

——— Had given commandments.] To preach the Goſpel to all nations; ſee Matt. xxviii. 19.

Ver. 3. To whom.] viz. The Apoſtles.

——— Infallible proofs.] Said to be infallible, becauſe ſubject to the ſenſes. For, they ſaw him with their eyes; touch him with their hands; eat with him and converſed with him frequently for forty days together.

——— The kingdom of God.] i. e. The Church to be eſtabliſhed upon the doctrine of the Goſpel he had preached, and to be propagated by his diſciples.

Ver. 4. And being aſſembled together with them.] This may more properly be rendred, and eating together with them, his Apoſtles.

——— The promiſe of the Father.] viz. The Holy Ghoſt; ſee Luke xxiv. 49. xiv. 16, 26, 27. and xv. 26. and xvi. 7.

Ver. 5. —— Baptized with the holy Ghoſt.] Or, purified from thoſe your worldly thoughts and expectations, that I am come to erect a temporal kingdom, and inſpire you with the true ſenſe of the Scriptures.

Ver. 6. —— Lord, wilt thou, at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael?] i. e. Such a temporal kingdom as the Iſraelites had enjoyed in the days of their obedience to God; before that God had permitted the nations to bring them into ſubjection for their ſins and ſpiritual rebellion.

Ver. 7. —— It is not for you to know the times or the ſeaſons, &c.] Jeſus Chriſt being ready to aſcend into Heaven, from whence he had promiſed to ſend his Holy Spirit to inſtruct them in all things neceſſary to be underſtood for the propagation of his kingdom, gave no direct anſwer to the foregoing queſtion; only telling them in general, that they had no buſineſs to enquire after the time when he ſhould reign in a more ſolemn and ſenſible manner, which, ſays Mr. Le Clerc, was to be in the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and at the laſt judgment, when he will reign in juſtice and equity, to puniſh the wicked and reward the righteous.

——— Which the Father hath put in his own power.] See Matt. xxiv. 36.

Ver. 8. But ye ſhall receive power after that the holy Ghoſt is come upon you.] Or, ye ſhall receive the power of the Holy Ghoſt coming upon you, as the original inclines me rather to tranſlate this Scripture.

——— Witneſſes unto me.] i. e. Ye ſhall, by the power of the Holy Ghoſt coming upon you, teſtify the truth of that faith and doctrine I ſend you to teach, and, if need requires, ye ſhall ſeal it with your blood.

——— Uttermoſt part of the earth.] Not only to the Jews and Samaritans, but to all nations in the world.

Ver. 10. —— In white apparel.] In token of his Divine Glory, and to diſtinguiſh them from other men.

Ver. 11. —— Ye men of Galilee.] The Apoſtles whom Jeſus had called to be his diſciples firſt in Galilee.

——— In like manner.] i. e. In a bodily ſhape deſcending from the clouds.

Ver. 12. —— A ſabbath-day's journey.] Or, a mile, which was not ſo appointed by God, but ſettled by the Sanhedrim of the Jewiſh nation, for the better obſervance of the ſabbath-day. Becauſe, when children or ſervants are limited to ſo ſhort an excurſion as a mile from home, they have not them opportunities of rioting and prophaning the ſabbath, as thoſe who, I ſpeak it to the ſhame of Chriſtians, are tolerated to travel from morning till night to all places, where evil company ſhall entice their tender years, to commit ſuch things as are a ſhame to be named otherwiſe than for reproof. While inferiors are near home, their own ſhamefacedneſs protects them from ſuch wickedneſſes, leaſt they ſhould be detected; but when ſuffered to run their own length, and to abſent from publick devotions, they have no longer any neighbourly dread, and give a looſe to their paſſions, whoſe end is ſorrow.

Ver. 13. —— Judas the brother of James.] So characterized to diſtinguiſh him from that Judas the trayter, which was guide to them that took Jeſus; ſee ver. 16.

Ver. 17. —— He was numbred with us.] See Luke vi. 16. and xii. 25. xx. 24. xxi. 19.

Ver. 18. —— Purchaſed a field, &c.] i. e. He was the inſtrument or cauſe why the field was purchaſed by the chief prieſts; ſee Matt. xxvii. 5, 7, 8.

Ver. 20. —— In the book of Pſalms.] Pſ. lxix. 25. cix. 8.

Ver. 21. —— Of theſe men.] i. e. The ſeventy-two diſciples.

——— Went in and out.] Or was converſant here on earth with us.

Ver. 22. —— To be a witneſs.] As Chriſt had appointed his Apoſtles to be witneſſes; ſee above, the note on ver. 8.

Ver. 25. —— To his own place.] Or, eternal damnation reſerved for thoſe who die as Judas did.

Ver. 26. They gave forth their lots.] They, as we now term ſuch an election, balloted.

——— And the lot fell, &c.] And the ballot concluded for Matthias.

CHAP. II.

1 The Apoſtles filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpeaking divers languages, are admired by ſome, and derided by others. 14 Whom Peter diſproving and ſhewing that the Apoſtles ſpake by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, that Jeſus was riſen from the dead, aſcended into Heaven, had poured down the ſame Holy Ghoſt, and was the Meſſias, a man known to them to be approved of God by his miracles, wonders and ſigns, and not crucified without his determinate counſel, and foreknowledge. 37 He baptizeth a great number that were converted. 41 Who afterwards devoutly, and charitably converſe together: the Apoſtles working many miracles, and God daily increaſing his Church.

AND when the day of Pentecoſt was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place.

2 And ſuddenly there came a ſound from heaven, as of a ruſhing mighty wind, and it filled all the houſe where they were ſitting.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it ſat upon each of them:

4 And they were all filled with the holy Ghoſt, and began to ſpeak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

5 And there were dwelling at Jeruſalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

6 Now when this was noiſed abroad, the multitude came together, and were confounded, founded, becauſe that every man heard them ſpeak in his own language.

7 And they were all amazed, and marvelled, ſaying one to another, Behold, are not all theſe which ſpeak, Galileans?

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

9 Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Meſopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus, and Aſia,

10 Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and ſtrangers of Rome, Jews and proſelytes, 11 Cretes and Arabians, we do hear them ſpeak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12 And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, ſaying one to another, What meaneth this?

13 Others mocking ſaid, Theſe men are full of new wine.

14 ¶ But Peter ſtanding up with the eleven, lift up his voice, and ſaid unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jeruſalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

15 For theſe are not drunken, as ye ſuppoſe, ſeeing it is but the third hour of the day.

16 But this is that which was ſpoken by the prophet Joel,

17 And it ſhall come to paſs in the laſt days (ſaith God) I will pour out of my Spirit upon all fleſh: and your ſons and your daughters ſhall propheſy, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dream dreams:

18 And on my ſervants, and on my hand-maidens I will pour out in thoſe days of my Spirit, and they ſhall propheſy:

19 And I will ſhew wonders in heaven above, and ſigns in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapour of ſmoke.

20 The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come.

21 And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved.

22 Ye men of Iſrael, hear theſe words; Jeſus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, by miracles and wonders, and ſigns, which God did by him in the midſt of you, as ye your ſelves alſo know:

23 Him, being delivered by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and ſlain:

24 Whom God hath raiſed up, having looſed the pains of death: becauſe it was not poſſible that he ſhould be holden of it.

25 For David ſpeaketh concerning him, I foreſaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I ſhould not be moved.

26 Therefore did my heart rejoyce, and my tongue was glad: moreover alſo, my fleſh ſhall reſt in hope.

27 Becauſe thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, neither wilt thou ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruption.

28 Thou haſt made known to me the ways of life; thou ſhalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

29 Men and brethren, let me freely ſpeak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his ſepulchre is with us unto this day:

30 Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had ſworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loyns, according to the fleſh, he would raiſe up Chriſt to ſit on his throne:

31 He ſeeing this before, ſpake of the reſurrection of Chriſt, that his ſoul was not left in hell, neither his fleſh did ſee corruption.

32 This Jeſus hath God raiſed up, whereof we are all witneſſes.

33 Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promiſe of the holy Ghoſt, he hath ſhed forth this, which ye now ſee and hear.

34 For David is not aſcended into the heavens: but he ſaith himſelf, The LORD ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 35 Until I make thy foes thy footſtool.

36 Therefore let all the houſe of Iſrael know aſſuredly, that God hath made that ſame Jeſus whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Chriſt.

37 ¶ Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their heart, and ſaid unto Peter, and to the reſt of the apoſtles, Men and brethren, what ſhall we do?

38 Then Peter ſaid unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and ye ſhall receive the gift of the holy Ghoſt.

39 For the promiſe is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God ſhall call.

40 And with many other words did he teſtify and exhort, ſaying, Save your ſelves from this untoward generation.

41 ¶ Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized: and the ſame day there were added unto them about three thouſand ſouls.

42 And they continued ſtedfaſtly in the apoſtles doctrine and fellowſhip, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.

43 And fear came upon every ſoul: and many wonders and ſigns were done by the apoſtles.

44 And all that believed were together, and had all things common,

45 And ſold their poſſeſſions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

46 And they continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from houſe to houſe, did eat their meat with gladneſs and ſingleneſs of heart, 47 Praiſing God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily ſuch as ſhould be ſaved.

Ver. 1.——Pentecoſt.] This is a Greek word, and means the fiftieth day from the paſſover. See the reaſon of its inſtitution among the Jews in Levit. xiii. 15. Deut. xvi. 9. And the context here gives the reaſon why we continue that feſtival, of which the former was only a type.

Ver. 47.–Such as ſhould be ſaved.] Theſe words have been wreſted by ſome to countenance that dreadful opinion, That there is a determinate number of perſons appointed to ſalvation, and that the reſidue are appointed to eternal damnation by a peremptory decree of God; whereas the natural import of this Scripture only ſhews, That thoſe, who had embraced the doctrine preached by the Apoſtles upon the conditions therein propoſed, of eternal ſalvation through Chriſt, were added to the Church, being by baptiſm admitted into it. So that the words may be rendered thus, The Lord added to the Church daily the ſaved, or ſuch who had repented at the preaching of the Apoſtles, and came daily to be baptized.

CHAP. III.

1 Peter preaching to the people that came to ſee a lame man reſtored to his feet, 12 profeſſeth the cure not to have been wrought by his or Johns own power, or holineſs, but by God, and his Son Jeſus, and through faith in his name: 13 withal reprehending them for crucifying Jeſus: 17 Which becauſe they did it through ignorance, and that thereby were fulfilled Gods determinate counſel, and the ſcriptures, 19 he exhorteth them by repentance and faith to ſeek remiſſion of their ſins, and ſalvation in the ſame Jeſus.

NOW Peter and John went up together into the temple, at the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.

2 And a certain man lame from his mothers womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entred into the temple.

3 Who ſeeing Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked an alms.

4 And Peter faſtening his eyes upon him, with John, ſaid, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive ſomething of them.

6 Then Peter ſaid, Silver and gold have I none; but ſuch as I have give I thee: in the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, riſe up and walk.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lift him up; and immediately his feet and ancle-bones received ſtrength.

8 And he leaping up, ſtood, and walked, and entred with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praiſing God.

9 And all the people ſaw him walking and praiſing God.

10 And they knew that it was he which ſat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And as the lame man which was healed, held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch that is called Solomons, greatly wondring.

12 ¶ And when Peter ſaw it, he anſwered unto the people, Ye men of Iſrael, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye ſo earneſtly on us, as though by our own power or holineſs we had made this man to walk?

13 The God of Abraham, and of Iſaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers hath glorified his Son Jeſus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the preſence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go.

14 But ye denied the holy One, and the juſt, and deſired a murderer to be granted unto you,

15 And killed the prince of life, whom God hath raiſed from the dead; whereof we are witneſſes.

16 And his name through faith in his name hath made this man ſtrong, whom ye ſee and know: yea, the faith which is by him, hath given him this perfect ſoundneſs in the preſence of you all.

17 And now brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did alſo your rulers.

18 But thoſe things which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, he hath ſo fulfilled.

19 ¶ Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out, when the times of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord.

20 And he ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt, which before was preached unto you:

21 Whom the heaven muſt receive, until the times of reſtitution of all things, which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, ſince the world began.

22 For Moſes truly ſaid unto the fathers, A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him ſhall ye hear in all things whatſoever he ſhall ſay unto you.

23 And it ſhall come to paſs, that every ſoul which will not hear that prophet, ſhall be deſtroyed from among the people.

24 Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel, and thoſe that follow after, as many as have ſpoken, have likewiſe foretold of theſe days.

25 Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, ſaying unto Abraham, And in thy ſeed ſhall all the kindreds of the earth be bleſſed.

26 Unto you firſt, God having raiſed up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

CHAP. IV.

1 The rulers of the Jews offended with Peter's ſermon, 4 (though thouſands of the people were converted that heard the word) impriſon him, and John. 5 After, upon examination Peter boldly avouching the lame man to be healed by the name of Jeſus, and that by the ſame Jeſus only we muſt be eternally ſaved. 13 They command him and John to preach no more in that name, adding alſo threatning, 23 Whereupon the Church fleeth to prayer. 31 And God by moving the place where they were aſſembled, teſtified that he heard their prayer: confirming the Church with the gift of the holy Ghoſt, and with mutual love and charity.

AND as they ſpake unto the people, the prieſts and the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees came upon them,

2 Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead.

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now even-tide.

4 Howbeit, many of them which heard the word, believed; and the number of the men was about five thouſand.

5 ¶ And it came to paſs on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and ſcribes,

6 And Annas the high-prieſt, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high-prieſt, were gathered together at Jeruſalem.

7 And when they had ſet them in the midſt, they asked, by what power, or by what name have ye done this?

8 Then Peter filled with the holy Ghoſt, ſaid unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Iſrael,

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Iſrael, that by the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raiſed from the dead, even by him doth this man ſtand here before you whole.

11 This is the ſtone which was ſet at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

12 Neither is there ſalvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.

13 ¶ Now when they ſaw the boldneſs of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled, and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jeſus.

14 And beholding the man which was healed ſtanding with them, they could ſay nothing againſt it.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aſide out of the council, they conferred among themſelves,

16 Saying, What ſhall we do to theſe men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifeſt to all them that dwell in Jeruſalem, and we cannot deny it.

17 But that it ſpread no further among the people, let us ſtraitly threaten them, that they ſpeak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and commanded them not to ſpeak at all, nor teach in the name of Jeſus.

19 But Peter and John anſwered and ſaid unto them, Whether it be right in the ſight of the God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

20 For we cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard.

21 So when they had further threatned them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might puniſh them, becauſe of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22 For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was ſhewed.

23 ¶ And being let go, they went to their own company, and reported all that the chief prieſts and elders had ſaid unto them.

24 And when they heard that, they lift up their voice to God with one accord, and ſaid, Lord, thou art God, which haſt made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all that in them is:

25 Who by the mouth of thy ſervant David haſt ſaid, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth ſtood up, and the rulers were gathered together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt.

27 For of a truth againſt thy holy child Jeſus, whom thou haſt anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Iſrael were gathered together,

28 For to do whatſoever thy hand and thy council determined before to be done.

29 And now, Lord, behold their threatnings: and grant unto thy ſervants, that with all boldneſs they may ſpeak thy word,

30 By ſtretching forth thine hand to heal: and that ſigns and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jeſus.

31 ¶ And when they had prayed, the place was ſhaken where they were aſſembled together; and they were all filled with the holy Ghoſt, and they ſpake the word of God with boldneſs,

32 And the multitude of them that believed, were of one heart, and of one ſoul: neither ſaid any of them, that ought of the things which he poſſeſſed, was his own, but they had all things common.

33 And with great power gave the apoſtles witneſs of the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus: and great grace was upon them all.

34 Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were poſſeſſors of lands, or houſes, ſold them, and brought the prices of the things that were ſold,

35 And laid them down at the apoſtles feet: and diſtribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

36 And Joſes, who by the apoſtles was ſurnamed Barnabas (which is, being interpreted, The ſon of conſolation) a Levite, and of the country of Cyprus,

37 Having land, ſold it, and brought the money, and laid it at the apoſtles feet.

Ver. 1.—The captain.] Or, ruler of the temple.

Ver. 2. Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead.] They that were grieved or diſturbed were, as we learn from the preceding verſe, the prieſts, the captain or ruler of the temple, and the Sadducees. As for the prieſts, they not conſidering, or rather, not believing in the extraordinary miſſion of the Apoſtolic Preachers, were offended at their aſſuming to themſelves the office of publick teaching and inſtructing the people, which they were jealous of, as of a thing peculiar to the ſacerdotal function. The captain, or ruler of the temple, whoſe buſineſs it was to defend the temple and keep the city in quiet, was diſturbed at the hearing and ſeeing ſo great a tumult and uproar made by the vaſt concourſe of people who reſorted to the temple to ſee the man recovered by the Apoſtles miraculous cure of his lameneſs. And the Sadducees were diſpleaſed becauſe they preached the reſurrection from the dead, a doctrine they denied; and eſpecially becauſe they preached through Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead; that is, through the power and efficacy of Jeſus, aſſerting Chriſt to be both the efficient and alſo the exemplary cauſe of the reſurrection, and arguing from the certainty of Chriſt's reſurrection, that all his followers ſhould ariſe with him and like unto him.

Ver. 5, 6. And it came to paſs on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, &c.] Where obſerve, that although theſe were all of different intereſts, they held together as one to extinguiſh and put out the light of the Goſpel, aſſoon as ever it began to ſhine forth. As Herod ſought to ſtrangle Chriſt in his cradle, ſo now the high-prieſts endeavour to ſtifle Chriſtianity in its infancy.

Ver. 11. This is the ſtone which was ſet at nought of you builders, &c.] As it had been propheſied in Pſal. cxviii 22. Which was a propheſy of the rejection of the Meſſiah, though the Jews would not ſo underſtand it, having their knowledge darkned with vicious affections, which engroced their expectations of a powerful and rich Redeemer.

Ver. 12. Neither is there ſalvation in any other, for, &c.] i. e. There is no other perſon appointed or deſigned by God to be the author of redemption to, and procurer of ſalvation for a loſt and miſerable world, but Chriſt alone.

Ver. 19.——Whether it be right in the ſight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.] The Apoſtles are ſpeaking now to the high-prieſts, rulers, ſcribes, &c. ver. 5, 6. to whom were committed the oracles of God, and they ſat in Moſes's chair: Yet they could not obey their commands not to preach, becauſe they had received a peremptory command from God to teach all nations; Matt. xxviii. 19. which ought to teach us, That when the commands of thoſe who derive a commiſſion from God, run counter to the commands of God himſelf, God is to be obeyed, and the commands of man muſt be rejected.

Ver. 30.—That ſigns and wonders may be done by the name, &c.] Where note, That although Chriſt had promiſed to ſeal their preaching with the power of working miracles, the Apoſtles did not ceaſe to pray for a continuance of his Holy Promiſe; teaching us that God will have the performance of his promiſes to be the anſwer of our prayers.

Ver. 33. And with great power gave the Apoſtles witneſs of the reſurrection of the Lord Jeſus, and great grace was upon them all.] The reſurrection of Chriſt was at that time the greateſt point controverted, therefore the Holy Spirit enabled them to work ſo many and great miracles for the confirmation of that point of faith. So that as Chriſt was declared to the Apoſtles to be the Son of God with power, by the reſurrection from the dead; in like manner the Apoſtles by miracles and wonderful gifts did bear witneſs to the certainty of our Saviour's reſurrection, and their doctrine found acceptance with the people.

CHAP. V.

1 After that Ananias and Sapphira his wife for their hypocriſy at Peter's rebuke had fallen down dead, 12 and that the reſt of the apoſtles had wrought many miracles, 14 to the increaſe of the faith: 17 the apoſtles are again impriſoned, 19 but delivered by an angel, bidding them to preach openly to all: 21 When after their teaching accordingly in the temple, 29 and before the council, 33 they are in danger to be killed; through the advice of Gamaliel, a great counſellor among the Jews, they be kept alive, 40 and are but beaten: for which they glorify God, and ceaſe no day from preaching.

BUT a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, ſold a poſeſſion,

2 And kept back part of the price, his wife alſo being privy to it, and brought a certain part, and laid it at the apoſtles feet.

3 But Peter ſaid, Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the holy Ghoſt, and to keep back part of the price of the land?

4 Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was ſold, was it not in thine own power? why haſt thou conceived this thing in thine heart? thou haſt not lied unto men, but unto God.

5 And Ananias hearing theſe words, fell down and gave up the ghoſt: and great fear came on all them that heard theſe things.

6 And the young men aroſe, wound him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7 And it was about the ſpace of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8 And Peter anſwered unto her, Tell me whether ye ſold the land for ſo much. And ſhe ſaid, Yea, for ſo much.

9 Then Peter ſaid unto her, How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy huſband are at the door, and ſhall carry thee out.

10 Then fell ſhe down ſtraightway at his feet, and yielded up the ghoſt: and the young men came in and found her dead, and carrying her forth, buried her by her huſband.

11 And great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard theſe things.

12 ¶ And by the hands of the apoſtles were many ſigns and wonders wrought among the people; (and they were all with one accord in Solomons porch.

13 And of the reſt durſt no man joyn himſelf to them: but the people magnified them.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women)

15 Inſomuch that they brought forth the ſick into the ſtreets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the leaſt, the ſhadow of Peter paſſing by, might overſhadow ſome of them.

16 There came alſo a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jeruſalem, bringing ſick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean ſpirits: and they were healed every one.

17 ¶ Then the high-prieſt roſe up, and all they that were with him (which is the ſect of the Sadducees) and were filled with indignation,

18 And laid their hands on the apoſtles, and put them in the common priſon.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the priſon-doors, and brought them forth, and ſaid,

20 Go, ſtand and ſpeak in the temple to the people, all the words of this life.

21 And when they heard that, they entred into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But the high-prieſt came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the ſenate of the children of Iſrael, and ſent to the priſon to have them brought.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the priſon, they returned, and told,

23 Saying, The priſon truly found we ſhut with all ſafety, and the keepers ſtanding without before the doors: but when we had opened, we found no man within.

24 Now when the high-prieſt, and the captain of the temple, and the chief prieſts heard theſe things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

25 Then came one and told them, ſaying, Behold, the men whom ye put in priſon, are ſtanding in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence: (for they feared the people, leſt they ſhould have been ſtoned)

27 And when they had brought them, they ſet them before the council: and the high-prieſt asked them,

28 Saying, Did not we ſtraitly command you, that you ſhould not teach in this name? and behold, ye have filled Jeruſalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this mans blood upon us.

29 ¶ Then Peter and the other apoſtles anſwered and ſaid, We ought to obey God rather than men.

30 The God of our fathers raiſed up Jeſus, whom ye ſlew and hanged on a tree.

31 Him hath God exalted with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſins.

32 And we are his witneſſes of theſe things; and ſo is alſo the holy Ghoſt, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33 ¶ When they heard that, they were cut to the heart, and took counſel to ſlay them.

34 Then ſtood there up one in the council, a Phariſee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apoſtles forth a little ſpace,

35 And ſaid unto them, Ye men of Iſrael, take heed to your ſelves, what ye intend to do as touching theſe men.

36 For before theſe days roſe up Theudas, boaſting himſelf to be ſome body, to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joyned themſelves; who was ſlain, and all as many as obeyed him, were ſcattered and brought to nought.

37 After this man roſe up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he alſo periſhed, and all, even as many as obeyed him, were diſperſed,

38 And now I ſay unto you, Refrain from theſe men, and let them alone: for if this council, or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

39 But if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; leſt haply ye be found even to fight again God.

40 And to him they agreed : and when they had called the apoſtles, and beaten them, they commanded that they ſhould not ſpeak in the name of Jeſus, and let them go.

41 ¶ And they departed from the preſence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name.

42 And daily in the temple, and in every houſe, they ceaſed not to teach and preach Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 2. ——— To lye to the Holy Ghoſt.] Or, to play the hypocrite with the Holy Ghoſt, by pretending to do that charity which thou haſt not done, neither intendeſt to do. Thou wouldſt perſwade men, that this thy deed proceeds from an unfeigned heart filled with the Holy Ghoſt, whereas thou art the inſtrument of Satan to deceive us, as if we could not by the ſame ſpirit diſcover the fraud and mockery of the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe gift of charity you endeavour ſo artfully to abuſe.

Ver. 4. Whiles it remained, &c.] By this we learn how dangerous it is for any one to defraud the poor of their legacies ; that it is ſacrilege to rob the poor of any thing that is given to them. For the Apoſtolic argument is clear : Peter ſays to Ananias, this poſſeſſion before it was ſold, was thine ; and after it was ſold, the price thereof was alſo thine ; if thou hadſt not conſecrated it to the ſupport of thy poor fellow Chriſtians, ch. iv. 34. none could have taken it from thee. But after the conſecration thou haſt no more right at all to it ; then it became the poſſeſſion of God, and the inheritance of the poor, and therefore thou art guilty of ſacrilege. A good memorandum to Churchwardens, Overſeers of the poor, and truſtees for charitable uſes, leaſt they fall into the like condemnation, either by an unjuſt diſtribution of their charity ; neglect of their duty ; or, purloining by any means the ſupport of the poor under their charge. For if Ananias deſerved to be puniſhed with death from the Lord, who only kept back part of his vow, for the ſupport of the poor ; certainly their crime, and conſequently their puniſhment, muſt be far greater, who defraud the poor of that ſubſtance which has been left by others, and of which they are only ſtewards or diſpenſers.

——— But unto God.] The Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 6. ——— The young men.] Which were preſent.

Ver. 9. ——— To tempt the ſpirit of the Lord.] i. e. To make a prophane trial, whether he knew your fraud or no, and whether he would puniſh your known wickedneſs.

Ver. 13. ——— Of the reſt, &c.] This verſe ſhould be read in this order. The people magnified the Apoſtles, but none of the doctors of the law, &c. who heard them preach in the temple, would join themſelves unto their company.

Ver. 15. ——— The ſhadow.] Not that there was any virtue inherent to the Apoſtles bodies, nor, much leſs, to their ſhadows and garments ; but to ſhew in them, who ſought to be healed, a moſt fervent faith, though very ſimple and ignorant, to which God, according to his pleaſure, granted his grace and power, though there ought no conſequence to be drawn from thence ; ſee Matt. ix. 21. and xiv. 36. Acts xix. 17. Beſides, we may obſerve, that the gift of miracles to the Church, was for the enlargement of the Goſpel ; and when it was enlarged the effect ceaſed naturally with its cauſe, there was no more need of miracles.

Ver. 20. ——— Of this life.] The doctrine which raiſeth ſinners from death unto life.

Ver. 28. ——— This man's blood.] i. e. The blood of Jeſus, whom they here confeſs was killed by them.

Ver. 29. ——— We ought to obey God, &c.] See annot. on ch. iv. 19.

Ver. 38. For if this counſel, or this work be of men, it will come to nought.] As it is written in the book of Proverbs xxi. 30. and by the Prophet Iſaiah viii. 10.

Ver. 40. ——— Beaten them.] With rods or whips, which was a kind of puniſhment, the Romans permitted the Jews to exerciſe or inflict in their ſynagogues, but not openly ; ſee the introduction, and Matt. x. 17. and iii. 34. Acts xxii. 15. 2 Cor. xi. 24.

CHAP. VI.

1 The apoſtles deſirous to have the poor regarded for their bodily ſuſtenance, as alſo careful themſelves to diſpenſe the word of God, the food of the ſoul, 3 appoint the office of deaconſhip to ſeven choſen men : 5 of whom, Stephen, a man full of faith, and of the holy Ghoſt, is one : 12 who is taken of thoſe whom he confounded in diſputing, 13 and after falſly accuſed of blaſphemy againſt the law and the temple.

AND in thoſe days, when the number of the diſciples was multiplied, there aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians againſt the Hebrews, becauſe their widows were neglected in the daily miniſtration.

2 Then the twelve called the multitude of the diſciples unto them, and ſaid, It is not reaſon that we ſhould leave the word of God, and ſerve tables.

3 Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you ſeven men of honeſt report, full of the holy Ghoſt and wiſdom, whom we may appoint over this buſineſs.

4 But we will give our ſelves continually to prayer, and to the miniſtry of the word.

5 ¶ And the ſaying pleaſed the whole multitude : and they choſe Stephen, a man full of faith, and of the holy Ghoſt, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas, a proſelyte of Antioch.

6 Whom they ſet before the apoſtles : and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.

7 And the word of God increaſed ; and the number of the diſciples multiplied in Jeruſalem greatly ; and a great company of the prieſts were obedient to the faith.

8 And Stephen full of faith and power did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 ¶ Then there aroſe certain of the ſynagogue, which is called the ſynagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and of them of Cilicia, and of Aſia, diſputing with Stephen.

10 And they were not able to reſiſt the wiſdom and the ſpirit by which he ſpake.

11 Then they ſuborned men, which ſaid, We have heard him ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt Moſes, and againſt God.

12 And they ſtirred up the people, and the elders, and the ſcribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

13 And ſet up falſe witneſſes, which ſaid, This man ceaſeth not to ſpeak blaſphemous words againſt this holy place, and the law.

14 For we have heard him ſay, that this Jeſus of Nazareth ſhall deſtroy this place, and ſhall change the cuſtoms which Moſes delivered us.

15 And all that ſat in the council, looking ſtedfaſtly on him, ſaw his face as it had been the face of an angel.

Ver. 1.——The Grecians.] Such Jews who were not of Jeruſalem, but of ſome Grecian city, and perhaps ſome ways tainted with Grecian blood.

——In the daily miniſtration.] Or, diſtribution, as it is more properly expreſs'd in ch. iv. 35. which is a clear interpretation of this text.

Ver. 2.——Serve tables.] At which the diſtribution to the poor was made.

Ver. 9. Then there aroſe certain of the ſynagogue, which is called, &c.] This ſynagogue of the Libertines was at Jeruſalem. But it has ſome relation to the ſtate of the Jews out of their own country.

Some have made a queſtion, whether there be any more than one ſynagogue here ſpoken of; I think the moſt natural meaning of the words import as many ſynagogues as there are nations, or ſorts of men ſpoken of. The copulative particle and is a proof of it. If Luke had intended but one ſynagogue, he would have ſaid, of the ſynagogue of the Libertines, Cyrenians, Alexandrians, &c. not as he does, of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians.

The Jewiſh writers ſay there were four hundred and eighty ſynagogues in Jeruſalem. It is generally ſuppoſed by learned men, that beſide the ſynagogues which belong to the ſtated inhabitants of the city, the Jews of other countries, in which there was any conſiderable number of them, had a ſynagogue at Jeruſalem, built at their own coſt, together with a ſchool or academy adjoining, to which they might reſort for Divine Worſhip, when they came to Jeruſalem; and where their children might be educated and inſtructed in the perfect knowledge of their law. The Jewiſh authors do expreſly mention a ſynagogue, which the Alexandrian Jews, had at Jeruſalem. It is highly probable the Jews of ſeveral other nations had one there likewiſe.

But the Libertines here mentioned ſeem not to be ſo called from any particular country. Libertinus or a Libertine, is one who has been a ſlave, but has now obtained his freedom; or one who is the ſon of a perſon that had been a ſlave, and was afterward made free. And it is ſuppoſed by ſeveral learned men that the Libertines here ſpoken of are Jews, or Proſelytes of the Jewiſh religion, who had been ſlaves to Roman maſters, and had been made free; or the children of ſuch.

That theſe are the perſons here ſpoken of, will appear from the following particulars.

There was a great number of Jews at Rome. Joſephus ſays, (in Antiq. l. 17. c. 13.) the embaſſy, which came thither from Judea to petition Auguſtus, that Archelaus might not be their king after Herod, was joined by above eight thouſand Jews at Rome. Philo informs us, that the Jews who lived at Rome, and who occupied a large quarter of the city, were chiefly ſuch as had been taken captive at ſeveral times, and had been carried into Italy, and were made free by their Roman maſters.

That theſe Jews were called libertines, will appear plainly from paſſages of Tacitus, and Joſephus, and Suetonius, in which they ſpeak of the baniſhment of the Jews from Rome in the reign of Tiberius. “ It was then reſolved alſo, ſays Tacitus, to expel the Egyptian and Jewiſh rites. And a decree of the ſenate was paſſed, that four thouſand of the libertine race infected with that ſuperſtition, and who were of a fit age, ſhould be tranſported into the iſland of Sardinia, ——— and that the reſt ſhould depart Italy within a time limited, unleſs they renounced their profane rites,” Ann. lib. 2. c. 85.

Joſephus ſays of the ſame affair; Antiq. xviii. 4. Tiberius “ ordered, that all the Jews ſhould be expelled from Rome. And the conſuls choſe out four thouſand of them, whom they ſent into the iſland Sardinia.”

Suetonius ſays, in vit. Tib. c. 6. “ That Tiberius ſent the Jewiſh youth into ſome of the moſt unhealthful provinces, and ordered the reſt of that nation, and all others of their religion to leave the city, upon pain of perpetual ſervitude.”

Joſephus and Suetonius expreſly call thoſe, Jews, whom Tacitus calls men of the libertine race. As there were ſo great numbers of theſe men at Rome, it is not at all unlikely, that they had a ſynagogue at Jeruſalem.

I have ſaid nothing new under this article. I have only followed Grotius and Vitringa, eſpecially the latter, who, I think, has given a juſt account of this matter.

CHAP. VII.

1 Stephen permitted to anſwer to the accuſation of blaſphemy, 2 ſheweth that Abraham worſhipped God rightly, and how God choſe the fathers, 20 before Moſes was born, and before the tabernacle and temple were built: 37 that Moſes himſelf witneſſed of Chriſt: 44 and that all outward ceremonies were ordained according to the heavenly pattern to laſt but for a time: 51 reprehending their rebellion, and murdering of Chriſt, the juſt one, whom the prophets foretold ſhould come into the world: 54 whereupon they ſtone him to death; who commendeth his ſoul to Jeſus, and humbly prayeth for them.

THEN ſaid the high-prieſt, Are theſe things ſo?

2 And he ſaid, Men, brethren, and fathers hearken, The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Meſopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran.

3 And ſaid unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I ſhall ſhew thee.

4 Then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land wherein ye now dwell.

5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no not ſo much as to ſet his foot on: yet he promiſed that he would give it to him for a poſſeſſion, and to his ſeed after him, when as yet he had no child.

6 And God ſpake on this wiſe, that his ſeed ſhould ſojourn in a ſtrange land, and that they ſhould bring them into bondage, and intreat them evil four hundred years.

7 And the nation to whom they ſhall be in bondage, will I judge, ſaid God: and after that ſhall they come forth, and ſerve me in this place.

8 And he gave him the covenant of circumciſion : and ſo Abraham begat Iſaac, and circumciſed him the eighth day : and Iſaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

9 And the patriarchs moved with envy, ſold Joſeph into Egypt : but God was with him,

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wiſdom in the ſight of Pharaoh king of Egypt ; and he made him governor over Egypt, and all his houſe.

11 Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Canaan, and great affliction ; and our fathers found no ſuſtenance.

12 But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he ſent out our fathers firſt.

13 And at the ſecond time Joſeph was made known to his brethren ; and Joſephs kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then ſent Joſeph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threeſcore and fifteen ſouls.

15 So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he and our fathers,

16 And were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the ſepulchre that Abraham bought for a ſum of money of the ſons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

17 But when the time of the promiſe drew nigh, which God had ſworn to Abraham, the people grew and multiplied in Egypt,

18 Till another king aroſe, which knew not Joſeph.

19 The ſame dealt ſubtilly with our kindred, and evil intreated our fathers, ſo that they caſt out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20 In which time Moſes was born, and was exceeding fair, and nouriſhed up in his fathers houſe three months :

21 And when he was caſt out, Pharaohs daughter took him up, and nouriſhed him for her own ſon.

22 And Moſes was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds.

23 And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to viſit his brethren the children of Iſrael.

24 And ſeeing one of them ſuffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppreſſed, and ſmote the Egyptian ;

25 For he ſuppoſed his brethren would have underſtood, how that God by his hand would deliver them ; but they underſtood not.

26 And the next day he ſhewed himſelf unto them as they ſtrove, and would have ſet them at one again, ſaying, Sirs, ye are brethren ; why do ye wrong one to another ?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong, thruſt him away, ſaying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us ?

28 Wilt thou kill me as thou didſt the Egyptian yeſterday ?

29 Then fled Moſes at this ſaying, and was a ſtranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two ſons.

30 And when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderneſs of mount Sina, an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a buſh.

31 When Moſes ſaw it, he wondred at the ſight : and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moſes trembled, and durſt not behold.

33 Then ſaid the Lord to him, Put off thy ſhoes from thy feet : for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground.

34 I have ſeen, I have ſeen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will ſend thee into Egypt.

35 This Moſes, whom they refuſed, ſaying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge ? the ſame did God ſend to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hands of the angel which appeared to him in the buſh.

36 He brought them out, after that he had ſhewed wonders and ſigns in the land of Egypt, and in the Red ſea, and in the wilderneſs forty years.

37 ¶ This is that Moſes which ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, A prophet ſhall the Lord your God raiſe up unto you of your brethren, like unto me ; him ſhall ye hear.

38 This is he that was in the church in the wilderneſs, with the angel which ſpake to him in the mount Sina, and with our fathers : who received the lively oracles to give unto us.

39 To whom our fathers would not obey, but thruſt him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt.

40 Saying unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moſes, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

41 And they made a calf in thoſe days, and offered ſacrifice unto the idol, and rejoyced in the works of their own hands.

42 Then God turned, and gave them up to worſhip the hoſt of heaven; as it is written in the book of the prophets, O ye houſe of Iſrael, have ye offered to me ſlain beaſts, and ſacrifices, by the ſpace of forty years in the wilderneſs?

43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the ſtar of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worſhip them; and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witneſs in the wilderneſs, as he had appointed, ſpeaking unto Moſes, that he ſhould make it according to the faſhion that he had ſeen.

45 Which alſo our fathers that came after, brought in with Jeſus into the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles, whom God drave out before the face of our fathers, unto the days of David.

46 Who found favour before God, and deſired to find a tabernacle for the God of Jacob.

47 But Solomon built him an houſe.

48 Howbeit the moſt High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as ſaith the prophet,

49 Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footſtool: what houſe will ye build me? ſaith the Lord: or what is the place of my reſt?

50 Hath not my hand made all theſe things?

51 ¶ Ye ſtiff-necked, and uncircumciſed in heart and ears, ye do always reſiſt the holy Ghoſt: as your fathers did, ſo do ye.

52 Which of the prophets have not your fathers perſecuted? and they have ſlain them which ſhewed before of the coming of the juſt one, of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers:

53 Who have received the law by the diſpoſition of angels, and have not kept it.

54 ¶ When they heard theſe things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnaſhed on him with their teeth.

55 But he being full of the Holy Ghoſt, looked up ſtedfaſtly into heaven, and ſaw the glory of God, and Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God,

56 And ſaid, Behold, I ſee the heavens opened, and the Son of man ſtanding on the right hand of God.

57 Then they cried out with a loud voice, and ſtopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord,

58 And caſt him out of the city, and ſtoned him: and the witneſſes laid down their clothes at a young mans feet, whoſe name was Saul.

59 And they ſtoned Stephen, calling upon God, and ſaying, Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit.

60 And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this ſin to their charge. And when he had ſaid this, he fell aſleep.

Ver. 2. ——— Unto our father Abraham, &c.] This chapter contains Stephen's apology or defence of his own innocence in the point of blaſphemy, whereof the Jews had accuſed him in ch. vi. 13. His method was to ſhew the weakneſs of the Jewiſh accuſation, by an hiſtorical deduction, proving, that God had been originally worſhipped in truth, before either temple or tabernacle was built, and before any of the Moſaick rites had been ordained or inſtituted; and conſequently, that the true worſhip of God was not neceſſarily and inſeparably annexed to any of thoſe things, which they were ſo tenacious of, and for ſpeaking againſt which, they accuſed him wrongfully of blaſphemy. He begins his proof from Abraham's practice; for, altho', that Patriarch lived in the midſt of idolaters at Ur of the Chaldees, he found mercy of God, tho' he had lived ſeventy years an idolater; and, from his firſt call then, for twenty years longer, had ſerved God faithfully all that time, without either circumciſion or ceremony; without tabernacle or temple: Thence inferring, or appealing to his accuſers, whether they muſt not be convicted in themſelves, that thoſe things were not neceſſary, without which, God could not be truly worſhipped; and that the true worſhip of God, might be now performed as acceptably after theſe ceremonies were aboliſhed, as it had been performed before they were inſtituted. See this whole account of Abraham in the book of Geneſis.

Ver. 9. ——— Sold Joſeph into Egypt, &c.] Stephen in the next place ſhews how Joſeph, as Abraham had done before, worſhipped God acceptably without either temple or tabernacle, and without ſuch cuſtoms as Moſes delivered; and conſequently, that the worſhip of God is not confined to an outward temple, an houſe made with hands, or to a Moſaick miniſtration; and that, therefore, it was not blaſphemy in him to ſay, that God might be ſo worſhipped.

Ver. 20. At which time.] Of perſecution; ſee ver. 18, 19, 1.

——— Moſes was born, &c.] This account of Moſes is, in purſuit of Stephen's argument, to ſhew, that altho' Moſes had ſpent the firſt forty years of his life at Pharaoh's court in Egypt; the next forty years in Midian, with the Heathen Jethro his father-in-law; and the laſt forty years of his life in the wilderneſs; yet he was all this time, a worſhipper of the true God in an acceptable manner, tho' moſt of the time he worſhipped God without either tabernacle or temple: From whence Stephen draws his argument to prove, that as God was acceptably worſhipped by holy men, before either tabernacle or temple were erected, in like manner may he be ſo again, after both tabernacle and temple are deſtroyed. And conſequently, that they unjuſtly accuſed him of blaſphemy, or of ſpeaking blaſphemous words againſt Moſes, and againſt God.

Ver. 30. ——— In a buſh.] This buſh was an emblem of the Church. Where note, that this buſh burning pointed out the afflicted ſtate of the Church in Egypt. But the burning buſh, not conſumed, ſignified the Churches preſervation.

Ver. 41. —— Offered ſacrifice unto the idol.] Of a calf. This Scripture ſhews, why man's heart is prone to idolatry, becauſe an idol is the work of their own hands. The Jews were very prone to this ſin, and were more culpable than the Gentiles in the practice of it; becauſe the Gentiles had not the Sacred Oracles, they were blinded and knew not God; but the Jews owned him, and gloried in him. Yet, though they knew God, they worſhipped him not as God.

Ver. 44. —— The tabernacle of witneſs, &c.] The Iſraelites being come out of Egypt by the conduct of Moſes, and having entered the wilderneſs by God's appointment and particular direction, the tabernacle for his publick worſhip and ſervice is erected. This is the firſt tabernacle for that purpoſe, and was called, the tabernacle of witneſs, becauſe it was the place where God was accuſtomed thenceforward to witneſs and manifeſt his Glorious Preſence, and becauſe the ark of the covenant, the law, and the teſtimonies were laid up in it, which were witneſſes and declarations of God's will, how he would be ſerved. And this tabernacle was always carried from place to place by the Iſraelites, as they journeyed till they came into the land of Canaan, ver. 45. which is meant by the poſſeſſion of the Gentiles, where it continued fixed all the days of David, till the reign of Solomon, who built a temple to the Lord in a moſt magnificent manner.

Ver. 45. ——Jeſus.] Who was Joſhua the ſon of Nun, that ſucceeded Moſes.

Ver. 48. Howbeit the moſt High dwelleth not in temples made with hands.] As if he were included therein, and confined thereto. Hereby intimating to the Jewiſh audience, that after the temple was built, the worſhip of God was not ſo tied to that particular place, as that he could not be worſhipped acceptably any where elſe; ſee Iſa. lvi. 1, 2. And,

Thus Stephen by a large induction of particulars made good his defence, that he was not guilty of blaſphemy for affirming, That Chriſt would deſtroy the temple, and change the cuſtoms which Moſes delivered, cloſing the whole with this concluſive argument, that which was not blaſphemy to affirm of the tabernacle erected by Moſes in conſequence of God's ſpecial appointment, is not blaſphemy to affirm of the temple; but it was, and is granted to be no blaſphemy to affirm the uſe of the temple to have been temporary, and conſequently alterable: Therefore, to affirm the ſame of the temple is not blaſphemy, eſpecially ſince the Lord hath ſaid, that he dwelleth not in temples made with hands.

Ver. 51. Ye ſtiff-necked, &c.] This is a metaphor taken from a bullock not uſed to the yoke, who therefore will not ſubmit his neck to it.

——— Ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt.] i. e. Both the outward teſtimony of the Holy Ghoſt, ſpeaking to them in the miniſtry of the Prophets and Apoſtles, and alſo the inward operations of the Holy Spirit, in that work of illumination and conviction, which they had been under.

Ver. 54. ——— They gnaſhed on him with their teeth.] The action of damned fiends.

Ver. 57. ——— Stopped their ears.] That they might neither hear his reaſons or complaints.

Ver. 58. ——— Whoſe name was Saul.] This is Saul the perſecutor, and afterwards Paul the Apoſtle.

Ver. 59. ——— Calling upon God.] i. e. The Lord Jeſus, whom he prays to in this place expreſly, ſaying, Lord Jeſus receive my ſoul.

——— Fell aſleep.] The Scripture-phraſe for, he died, when it is ſpoken of any good man.

CHAP. VIII.

By occaſion of the perſecution in Jeruſalem, the Church being planted in Samaria, 5 By Philip the deacon, who preached, did miracles, and baptized many, among the reſt Simon the ſorcerer a great ſeducer of the people: 14 Peter and John come to confirm, and enlarge the Church: where by prayer, and impoſition of hands, giving the Holy Ghoſt, 18 When Simon would have bought the like power of them, 20 Peter ſharply reproving his hypocriſy, and covetouſneſs, and exhorting him to repentance, together with John preaching the word of the Lord, return to Jeruſalem, 26 But the Angel ſendeth Philip to teach, and baptize the Ethiopian eunuch.

AND Saul was conſenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great perſecution againſt the church which was at Jeruſalem; and they were all ſcattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apoſtles.

2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

3 As for Saul, he made havock of the church, entring into every houſe, and haling men and women, committed them to priſon.

4 Therefore they that were ſcattered abroad, went every where preaching the word.

5 Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Chriſt unto them.

6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto thoſe things which Philip ſpake, hearing and ſeeing the miracles which he did.

7 For unclean ſpirits crying with loud voice, came out of many that were poſſeſſed with them: and many taken with palſies, and that were lame, were healed.

8 And there was great joy in that city.

9 But there was a certain man called Simon, which before time in the ſame city uſed ſorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himſelf was ſome great one.

10 To whom they all gave heed, from the leaſt to the greateſt, ſaying, This man is the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, becauſe that of long time he had bewitched them with ſorceries.

12 But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jeſus Chriſt, they were baptized, both men and women.

13 Then Simon himſelf believed alſo: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondred, beholding the miracles and ſigns which were done.

14 Now when the apoſtles which were at Jeruſalem, heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they ſent unto them Peter and John.

15 Who when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghoſt.

16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus)

17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the holy Ghoſt.

18 And when Simon ſaw that through laying on of the apoſtles hands the holy Ghoſt was given, he offered them money,

19 Saying, Give me alſo this power, that on whomſoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghoſt.

20 But Peter ſaid unto him, Thy money periſh with thee, becauſe thou haſt thought that the gift of God may be purchaſed with money.

21 Thou haſt neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the ſight of God.

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedneſs, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.

23 For I perceive that thou art in the the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity.

24 Then anſwered Simon, and ſaid, Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none of theſe things which ye have ſpoken come upon me.

25 And they, when they had teſtified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jeruſalem, and preached the goſpel in many villages of the Samaritans.

26 And the angel of the Lord ſpake unto Philip, ſaying, Ariſe, and go toward the ſouth, unto the way that goeth down from Jeruſalem unto Gaza, which is deſert.

27 And he aroſe and went: and behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treaſure, and had come to Jeruſalem to worſhip, 28 Was returning, and ſitting in his chariot, read Eſaias the prophet.

29 Then the Spirit ſaid unto Philip, Go near, and join thy ſelf to this chariot.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Eſaias, and ſaid, Underſtandeſt thou what thou readeſt?

31 And he ſaid, How can I, except ſome man ſhould guide me? and he deſired Philip that he would come up, and ſit with him.

32 The place of the ſcripture which he read, was this, He was lead as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, and like a lamb dumb before his ſhearer, ſo opened he not his mouth:

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who ſhall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch anſwered Philip, and ſaid, I pray thee, of whom ſpeaketh the prophet this? of himſelf, or of ſome other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the ſame ſcripture, and preached unto him Jeſus.

36 And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch ſaid, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?

37 And Philip ſaid, If thou believeſt with all thine heart, thou mayeſt. And he anſwered, and ſaid, I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God.

38 And he commanded the chariot to ſtand ſtill: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch ſaw him no more: and he went on his way rejoycing.

40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and paſſing through, he preached in all the cities, till he came to Ceſarea.

Ver. 5.——Philip.] One of the deacons mentioned in ch. vi. 5.

Ver. 9.——Bewitched the people.] Or, deceived the people of Samaria with his legerdemain and cunning tricks, ſo that he put them out of their ſenſes; ſee ver. 11. pretending that his power was from God; and therefore the people ſaid, This man is the great power of God.

Ver. 10.——The great power of God.] i. e. The greateſt inſtrument of God's power that can be remembred. And this is the way by which Satan artfully deceives thoſe whom he dare not attack with violent temptations to flagrant wickedneſſes, hiding what is moſt wicked under the name of God's work.

Ver. 12.——Kingdom of God.] See ch. i. 3.

—Were baptized.] By the deacon Philip, That thereby they might openly renounce all manner of impiety and ſuperſtition, eſpecially the deviliſh arts of Simon Magus, and be admitted through baptiſmal regeneration into the body of Chriſt Church.

Ver. 13. Then Simon himſelf believed alſo.] Not with that ſincere belief accompanied with repentance and holy reſolutions, which are neceſſary to place us in a ſtate of ſalvation. But he believed, or he was convicted in his own conſcience, that the works done by Philip, were indeed the great power of God, yet he being given up to a reprobate ſenſe, his belief was no better than that of a devil, who believes and trembles. And we find by his practice afterwards, that he only made an outward profeſſion of belief, or gave ſome aſcent to the doctrine, but hypocritically, and without giving way to the inward operation of the Holy Ghoſt, to a true converſion and lively regeneration.

Ver. 14——They ſent unto them Peter, &c.] Therefore Peter was not ſuperior or greater than the reſt of the Apoſtles, who ſent him, and he obeyed their order.

Ver. 15.——That they might receive the Holy Ghoſt.] See the note on ch. ii. 38.

Ver. 17. Then laid they their hands on them.] The laying on of hands is a moſt ancient cuſtom or ceremony of conſecration to God, and a ſign that ſuch perſons were taken to be appropriated to him; ſee Exod. xix. 10. CHAP. IX.

1 Saul going towards Damaſcus, 4 is ſtriken down to the earth, 10 is called to the Apoſtleſhip, 18 and is baptized by Ananias. 20 He preacheth Chriſt boldly. 23 The Jews lay wait to kill him: 29 ſo do the Grecians, but he eſcapeth both. 31 The Church having reſt, Peter healeth Eneas of the palſy, 36 and reſtoreth Tabitha to life.

AND Saul yet breathing out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of the Lord went unto the high-prieſt,

2 And deſired of him letters to Damaſcus to the ſynagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jeruſalem.

3 And as he journeyed, he came near Damaſcus: and ſuddenly there ſhined round about him a light from heaven.

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice ſaying unto him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?

5 And he ſaid, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord ſaid, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt: It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks.

6 And he trembling and aſtoniſhed, ſaid, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord ſaid unto him, Ariſe, and go into the city, and it ſhall be told thee what thou muſt do.

7 And the men which journeyed with him, ſtood ſpeechleſs, hearing a voice, but ſeeing no man.

8 And Saul aroſe from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he ſaw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damaſcus.

9 And he was three days without ſight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10 ¶ And there was a certain diſciple at Damaſcus, named Ananias, and to him ſaid the Lord in a viſion, Ananias. And he ſaid, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord ſaid unto him, Ariſe, and go into the ſtreet which is called Straight, and enquire in the houſe of Judas, for one called Saul of Tarſus: for behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath ſeen in a viſion a man named Ananias, coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his ſight.

13 Then Ananias anſwered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy ſaints at Jeruſalem:

14 And here he hath authority from the chief prieſts, to bind all that call on thy name.

15 But the Lord ſaid unto him, Go thy way: for he is a choſen veſſel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Iſrael.

16 For I will ſhew him how great things he muſt ſuffer for my names ſake.

17 And Ananias went his way, and entred into the houſe; and putting his hands on him, ſaid, Brother Saul, the Lord, (even Jeſus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou cameſt) hath ſent me, that thou mighteſt receive thy ſight, and be filled with the Holy Ghoſt.

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been ſcales; and he received ſight forthwith, and aroſe and was baptized.

19 And when he had received meat, he was ſtrengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the diſciples which were at Damaſcus.

20 And ſtraightway he preached Chriſt in the ſynagogues, that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him were amazed, and ſaid, Is not this he that deſtroyed them which called on this name in Jeruſalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief prieſts?

22 But Saul increaſed the more in ſtrength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damaſcus, proving that this is very Chriſt.

23 ¶ And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counſel to kill him:

24 But their laying await was known of Saul: and they watched the gates day and night to kill him.

25 Then the diſciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

26 And when Saul was come to Jeruſalem, he aſſayed to joyn himſelf to the diſciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a diſciple.

27 But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apoſtles, and declared unto them, how he had ſeen the Lord in the way, and that he had ſpoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damaſcus in the name of Jeſus.

28 And he was with them coming in, and going out at Jeruſalem,

29 And he ſpake boldly in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and diſputed againſt the Grecians: but they went about to ſlay him,

30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Ceſarea, and ſent him forth to Tarſus.

31 Then had the churches reſt throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghoſt, were multiplied.

32 ¶ And it came to paſs, as Peter paſſed throughout all quarters, he came down alſo to the ſaints which dwelt at Lydda.

33 And there he found a certain man named Eneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was ſick of the palſy.

34 And Peter ſaid unto him, Eneas, Jeſus Chriſt maketh thee whole: ariſe, and make thy bed. And he aroſe immediately.

35 And all that dwelt at Lydda, and Saron, ſaw him, and turned to the Lord.

36 ¶ Now there was at Joppa a certain diſciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: this woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which ſhe did.

37 And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that ſhe was ſick and died: whom when they had waſhed, they laid her in an upper chamber.

38 And foraſmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the diſciples had heard that Peter was there, they ſent unto him two men, deſiring him that he would not delay to come to them.

39 Then Peter aroſe, and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows ſtood by him weeping, and ſhewing the coats and garments which Dorcas made while ſhe was with them.

40 But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down and prayed, and turning him to the body, ſaid, Tabitha, ariſe. And ſhe opened her eyes: and when ſhe ſaw Peter, ſhe ſat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lift her up; and when he had called the ſaints and widows, preſented her alive.

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and many believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to paſs, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

Ver. 2. —— Of this way.] i. e. Worſhipping God after the manner preached by Stephen, and the Apoſtles.

—— He might bring them bound unto Jeruſalem.] Here it muſt be remarked, that the Romans, who had now the land of Judea in their power, permitted the Jews to live according to their law and religion. So that the high-prieſt, as head of the Great Council, might yet impriſon and judge of the quality of ſuch crimes, as were laid againſt the people of their nation, when they offended againſt their law; but the Romans reſerved to themſelves the only power of pronouncing the judicial ſentence, and to order the publick capital execution. See the introduction to this book, and the Diſſertation at the end of the Acts upon the ſtate of the Jews in Judea, during the miniſtry of the Apoſtles.

Ver. 5. —— Whom thou perſecuteſt] By perſecuting thoſe that believed in the name of Chriſt; for, as our bleſſed Saviour had ſaid, while he abode upon earth, what is done to one of theſe little ones is done unto himſelf. So they that perſecute the leaſt of Chriſt's ſervants, perſecute the Lord Chriſt.

—— It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks.] This is a metaphorical expreſſion taken from reſty cattle, which, the more obſtinate they are, the worſe they cauſe themſelves to be uſed, and yet at the laſt are forced to obey. Here therefore, it is applicable to Paul, that notwithſtanding his fierce proceedings he could not reſiſt God's effectual motion and call; and that therefore, he ought willingly to yield to conviction, leaſt he ſhould draw the heavy wrath of God's juſt diſpleaſure upon him; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 16.

Ver. 7. ——— Hearing a voice.] Not the voice of Chriſt, but of Paul, who ſpake to the Lord inviſible, they therefore hearing Paul ſpeak wondered, becauſe they ſaw no man for him to ſpeak to in thoſe terms of ſpeech, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? ver. 6. See Dan. x. 7. and Acts xxii. 9. xxvi. 13.

Ver. 8. ——— And when his eyes were opened, he ſaw no man.] The Syriac, a great many ancient manuſcripts, and the Vulgate, read it ouden, nothing, inſtead of oudena, no man. And I not only approve of that reading, but think the whole verſe would be more properly rendred thus: And when he aſſayed to open or look up with his eyes, he could ſee nothing; becauſe they were dazzled with that Heavenly Light, which by miracle, or by expreſſion, and condenſation of the true natural humour of the eyes, produced thoſe ſcales, which hindred his ſight; ſee ver. 18. as an emblem of Paul's ſpiritual blindneſs, and hardneſs of heart, to teach him that he muſt renounce all preſumption of wiſdom, and become a child, and a fool before God, before he could be made wiſe by him; ſee 1 Cor. iii. 18.

CHAP. X.

1 Cornelius, a devout man, 5 being commanded by an Angel, ſendeth for Peter: 11 who by a viſion, 15, 20 is taught not to deſpiſe the Gentiles. 34 As he preacheth Chriſt to Cornelius and his company, 44 The Holy Ghoſt falleth on them, 48 and they are baptized.

THERE was a certain man in Ceſarea, called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band,

2 A devout man, and one that feared God with all his houſe, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway.

3 He ſaw in a viſion evidently, about the ninth hour of the day, an angel of God coming in to him, and ſaying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and ſaid, What is it, Lord? And he ſaid unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.

5 And now ſend men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whoſe Sirname is Peter:

6 He lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whoſe houſe is by the ſea-ſide: he ſhall tell thee what thou oughteſt to do.

7 And when the angel which ſpake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his houſhold-ſervants, and a devout ſoldier of them that waited on him continually:

8 And when he had declared all theſe things unto them, he ſent them to Joppa.

9 ¶ On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the houſe-top to pray, about the ſixth hour.

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance,

11 And ſaw heaven opened, and a certain veſſel deſcending unto him, as it had been a great ſheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Riſe, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter ſaid, Not ſo Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.

15 And the voice ſpake unto him again the ſecond time, What God hath cleanſed, that call not thou common.

16 This was done thrice: and the veſſel was received up again unto heaven.

17 Now while Peter doubted in himſelf what this viſion, which he had ſeen, ſhould mean; behold, the men which were ſent from Cornelius, had made enquiry for Simons houſe, and ſtood before the gate,

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was ſirnamed Peter, were lodged there.

19 ¶ While Peter thought on the viſion, the ſpirit ſaid unto him, Behold, three men ſeek thee.

20 Ariſe therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have ſent them.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were ſent unto him from Cornelius; and ſaid, Behold, I am he whom ye ſeek: what is the cauſe wherefore ye are come?

22 And they ſaid, Cornelius the centurion, a juſt man, and that feareth God, and of good report among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by an holy angel to ſend for thee into his houſe, and to hear words of thee.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

24 And the morrow after they entred into Ceſarea: and Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinſmen, and near friends.

25 And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worſhipped him.

26 But Peter took him up, ſaying, Stand up; I my ſelf alſo am a man.

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.

28 And he ſaid unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew, to keep company, or come unto one of another nation: but God hath ſhewed me, that I ſhould not call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gain-ſaying, as ſoon as I was ſent for: I aſk therefore for what intent ye have ſent for me?

30 And Cornelius ſaid, Four days ago I was faſting until this hour, and at the ninth hour I prayed in my houſe, and behold, a man ſtood before me in bright clothing.

31 And ſaid, Cornelius, thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the ſight of God.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whoſe ſirname is Peter; he is lodged in the houſe of one Simon a tanner, by the ſea-ſide; who when he cometh, ſhall ſpeak unto thee.

33 Immediately therefore I ſent to thee; and thou haſt well done that thou art come. Now therefore are we all here preſent before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

34 ¶ Then Peter opened his mouth, and ſaid, Of a truth I perceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons:

35 But in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him.

36 The word which God ſent unto the children of Iſrael, preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt (he is Lord of all)

37 That word (I ſay) you know, which was publiſhed throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptiſm which John preached;

38 How God anointed Jeſus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power; who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppreſſed of the devil; for God was with him.

39 And we are witneſſes of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jeruſalem; whom they ſlew and hanged on a tree:

40 Him God raiſed up the third day, and ſhewed him openly,

41 Not to all the people, but unto witneſſes choſen before of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he roſe from the dead.

42 And he commanded us to preach unto the people, and to teſtify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead.

43 To him give all the prophets witneſs, that through his name whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins.

44 ¶ While Peter yet ſpake theſe words, the Holy Ghoſt fell on all them which heard the word.

45 And they of the circumciſion which believed were aſtoniſhed, as many as came with Peter, becauſe that on the Gentiles alſo was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

46 For they heard them ſpeak with tongues, and magnify God. Then anſwered Peter, 47 Can any man forbid water, that theſe ſhould not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghoſt, as well as we?

48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

And here we learn, that his good example, had made this ſoldier devout alſo, for the Evangeliſt Luke ſeems to give it as a reaſon, that he was devout, becauſe he waited continually upon his maſter, who was devout. Where I muſt not paſs over that neceſſary obſervation, that ſhould magiſtrates, officers, men of learning and diſtinction for their wealth or integrity, maſters of families, &c. prove themſelves devout men by their conſtant attendance, at leaſt when the laws of God and man command it, on the publick worſhip of Almighty God, there would be found many more devout inferiors, and ſervants, who generally take the practice of their ſuperiors and maſters, to be the meaſure of their devotions; and this would be the moſt effectual manner, to reform a vitiated people, and effectually ſuppreſs growing vices.

A Diſſertation on the reaſons, why Chriſt did not ſhew himſelf to all the people of the Jews, after his reſurrection.]

Peter ſpeaking of Chriſt's reſurrection above, ſaith, him God raiſed up the third day and ſhewed him openly, not to all the people, but unto witneſſes choſen before of God; even to us who did eat and drink with him, after he roſe from the dead, ver. 40, 41. After his reſurrection he was ſhewn openly, but not to all the people. He was ſeen in a plain and open manner, yet not ſo publickly as to make all the people witneſſes of his reſurrection. The will and good pleaſure of God, is a ſufficient reaſon to us of all the actions, eſpecially in acts of mercy; for it would be a ſtrange return made even to a man for any favour received, to be captious and quarrelſome, about the manner of his beſtowing, inſtead of being grateful to him for it. But beſides his general reaſon, which ought to be of force with us in all caſes, there are reaſons particular to the preſent caſe, whereby we may be able to give an account of it, even according to our own apprehenſion of things. So,

I. There are reaſons particular to his diſpenſation of Chriſt's reſurrection, why Chriſt ſhould not ſhew himſelf to all the people, after he was riſen from the dead.

II. It had not been ſuitable to the other diſpenſation of God towards mankind, for him to do it.

III. Great number of the Jews were given over to hardneſs of heart, and would not have believed, tho' they had ſeen Chriſt after his reſurrection.

IV. If they had believed, their converſion had not been a greater proof of his reſurrection, than their unbelief has been.

V. The power of his reſurrection manifeſted in the miraculous gifts beſtowed upon the Apoſtles, was as great a proof of his reſurrection, as the perſonal appearance of our Saviour himſelf would have been. Thus,

I. There are reaſons particular to this diſpenſation of his reſurrection, why Chriſt ſhould not ſhew himſelf to all the people after he was riſen from the dead. For, Chriſt after his reſurrection, was to act according to the power of the Divine Nature, and not according to the infirmities and condeſcenſion of the human. The time of his converſing with men, was at an end at his death, and then another method and manner of diſpenſation was to begin; he was then to converſe only with his particular friends and favourites, to ſatisfy them of his reſurrection, and to inſtruct and enable them both by their doctrines and miracles to ſatisfy others. It could not be ſuitable to the dignity of the majeſty which he had aſſumed after his reſurrection, to ſubmit himſelf to the cenſures of his enemies, he had ſuffered enough from them already in the ſtate of his humiliation; and muſt he ever be above the ſuſpicion and ſcurrility of their malice? Shall not his reſurrection free him from it? When they ſaw him upon the croſs, they cried out, upbraiding, and inſolent ſcorn, that they would believe in him, if he would come down from thence. But neither did they deſerve ſuch a miracle to be wrought at their pleaſure, who thus called for it, nor was it ſuitable to the Divine Diſpenſation, that it ſhould be wrought. It was neither fitting, that he ſhould ſave himſelf from death, nor that he ſhould appear to them after he was riſen from the dead. He was to die for our redemption, and as we had wanted the argument from his reſurrection for the truth of our religion, if he had come down from the croſs; ſo, if he had appeared to all the Jews, we had wanted other evidence; which, as I ſhall ſhew, at leaſt amounts to all the proof which that could have given.

In the ſtate of his humiliation, our Saviour was pleas'd to ſuffer himſelf to be expoſed to the contradiction of ſinners, and to all their affronts and injuries; but when this their hour and the power of darkneſs was once paſt, they were to ſee him no more, but with confuſion of face, and terror of mind; yet his mercy was ſtill the ſame towards them. One of the greateſt perſecutors was converted by a voice from Heaven, the Son of man ſpeaking to him from thence, that he might be the happy inſtrument in the converſion of others, and a pattern to them of the long-ſuffering of Chriſt, 1 Tim. i. 16. But his manifeſtation of himſelf to St. Paul at his converſion, was with dreadful awe and majeſty, not in that mild and gracious glory, in which he was ſeen by Stephen; and it is reſerved for thoſe, who perſecuted and pierced him, to look upon him with conſternation and anguiſh at the laſt day, Rev. i. 7.

II. It had not been ſuitable to the other diſpenſations of God towards mankind, for Chriſt to be ſhewn openly to all the people. God might work ſuch aſtoniſhing miracles, and ſtrike ſuch terrors into the minds of men, as to make it impoſſible for any one to doubt of his exiſtence, or of the truth of his word; but he doth not all which he can do, but what he, in his wiſdom, ſees fit to be done: He doth not uſe all the means, which ſome men may conceit he might uſe, but leaves men without excuſe, and then requires their faith and obedience at their peril. To imagine, that Chriſt ſhould have appeared promiſcuouſly unto all, is as unreaſonable, as to ſuppoſe that God ſhould communicate himſelf to all alike, or that he ſhould have ſpoken from Heaven to men without the meſſage and miniſtry of his prophets. For, when Chriſt was riſen from the dead, he was no longer to act like a mortal man, but as in his glorified ſtate, as our Lord and King, and as God in our human nature, now no longer ſubject to any of its imperfections; and therefore, he was no more to come himſelf to the people, as he had done in the ſtate of his humiliation, but to ſend his apoſtles and diſciples among them, as he had before his incarnation ſent to them the Prophets.

III. Great numbers of the Jews were given up to hardneſs of heart, and would not have believed, tho' they had ſeen Chriſt after his reſurrection. Thoſe, who when they had ſeen our Saviour's miracles, had villified them, and blaſphemed the Holy Ghoſt, by whom they were wrought, had their hearts hardened, that ſeeing they might ſee, and not perceive, and be converted. And of this number the chief prieſts and elders muſt be ſuppoſed to be, who hired the ſoldiers to contradict and ſtifle the belief of his reſurrection, with a falſe ſtory of their own invention. The chief prieſts before had conſulted to put Lazarus to death, when he was undeniably known to have been raiſed from the grave, John xii. 10. So far were they from being brought to a belief in Chriſt by the ſight of Lazarus, that they fully verified that ſaying, that there are ſome, who will not believe, though one roſe from the dead. Lazarus was ſhewn openly to all the people, and lived among them for many years after he had been reſtored to life again, when he had been dead four days; and they would not believe, though they ſaw and converſed with him, but were the more enraged at it; Chriſt himſelf therefore, after his reſurrection, did not vouchſafe them his preſence, but uſed other means which were more proper; one whereof was this, that the graves were opened, and many bodies of ſaints which ſlept aroſe, and came out of the graves after his reſurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many, Matt. xxvii. 33.

IV. If the Jews had believed in Chriſt, their converſion had not been a greater proof of the truth of his reſurrection, than their unbelief has been. Their ſtubbornneſs and hardneſs of heart were foretold by the Prophets, with their diſperſion, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and the propagation of the Goſpel (according to the prediction likewiſe of the Prophets) in ſo miraculous a manner, not only at a diſtance, but in Judea, and in Jeruſalem itſelf, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition which the Jews could make, gave as great a teſtimony to it, as their favour and protection could have done. And therefore it was juſt with God rather to leave them to the hardneſs of their own hearts, than to uſe ſuch farther methods with them, as were unſuitable to the Divine Diſpenſation in the myſtery of our redemption, and would either have only harden'd them to a great degree, or at leaſt would not have prov'd more effectual towards the manifeſtation of the truth of the Goſpel.

V. The power of Chriſt's reſurrection manifeſted in the miraculous gifts beſtow'd upon the Apoſtles, was a great proof of his reſurrection, as the perſonal appearance of our Saviour himſelf could have been. Our Saviour ſhew'd himſelf to witneſſes choſen before of God, to be witneſſes of all things which he did, both in the land of the Jews, and in Jeruſalem, Acts x. 39—41. Theſe men knew his life and doctrine, they had been inſtructed by him, and had forſaken all for him, and according to his promiſe were endued with power from on high, to enable them to teſtify to the whole world, that they had not only ſeen him, but had often convers'd with him after he roſe from the dead. And one of their chief qualifications was, that they were but a few poor and ignorant men, without force or policy, without any art or contrivance; they could tell a plain truth, but could neither feign nor diſſemble; if they had been more in number, the converſion of the world had been ſo much the leſs miraculous; and they were not choſen out of the ſcribes and elders, who had been uſed to artifices and falſhood, but had them all along their enemies, and oppoſed to their craft and power an honeſt ſimplicity of mind, that neither knew what belong'd to deceit, nor fear'd any in ſo good a cauſe; nor were they in the leaſt diſcourag'd to ſee their own and all other nations againſt them. God had choſen the fooliſh things of the world to confound the wiſe; and God had choſen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, 1 Cor. i. 27.

Theſe men, under all neceſſities, and perſecutions, and dangers, and torments, both living and dying, witneſs'd that they had ſeen Chriſt alive after he had been crucify'd. And though they were but very few in compariſon of their enemies, yet conſider'd as witneſſes, there were many, for he was ſeen by above five hundred at once, which is a vaſt number in any matter of evidence: And if ſo many men be not a ſufficient teſtimony, no number of men could have been. That which is demonſtrated but in one way, is as certain as if it were demonſtrable in never ſo many methods; and he who ſees a thing plainly with his two eyes, may be as ſure of it, as if he had never ſo many eyes to ſee withal. It is written in the law of Moſes, that the teſtimony of two men is true, or credible, and to be relied upon for truth, John viii. 17. And it is the law and practice of all nations to content themſelves with a ſmall number of ſufficient witneſſes in proof of the moſt important affairs. And if theſe witneſſes choſen before of God, ſpoke and acted, and ſuffer'd, as no men would or could have done, if they had not been well aſſur'd of what they teſtify'd, and aſſiſted from above in preaching the Goſpel; the truth of the reſurrection of Chriſt is as infallibly deliver'd to us by their teſtimony, as it could have been by the teſtimony of never ſo many more: For all that never ſo many others could have done, would have been but the ſame thing over again, which theſe men certify'd by many infallible proofs: And what is once infallibly prov'd, is as certain, as if all the world ſhould agree in declaring it. It is not the number of witneſſes, but the character and qualifications of the perſons, and the evidence itſelf, in its full force and circumſtances, which are chiefly to be regarded in matters of this nature. If but a few men can make it ſufficiently appear, as the Apoſtles did, by undeniable miracles, that what they ſay is true, and that God himſelf confirms the truth of it, they then appeal to every man's own ſenſes, before whom they work their miracles, and make every one that ſees them a witneſs to the truth of their doctrine, God himſelf bears witneſs to it, and the Jews might have ſaid in this, as they did in a very different caſe, What need we any farther witneſſes? for we our ſelves have heard of their own mouths, in the miraculous gift of tongues, or ſeen it with our own eyes, in the many wonderful works which were continually wrought in the moſt publick manner, in teſtimony of the reſurrection of Chriſt.

Our Bleſſed Saviour therefore gave as full proof of his reſurrection, as if he had appeared in the temple, or in the midſt of Jeruſalem, to the whole people of the Jews. For this had not been more effectual to the converſion of moſt of them, nor more ſufficient to evidence the truth of the Goſpel, than his appearance to his diſciples was; and if the Jews had unanimouſly believed, it could not have contributed more to convince men of the truth of the reſurrection, than their unbelief has done. He ſent his Apoſtles with a miraculous power, as convincing as his own appearance could have been; and all things conſidered, the Jews afford us as full evidence in behalf of the Goſpel, by oppoſing it, as they could have done by their compliance with it. And ſince we have ſufficient teſtimony to reſolve our faith into the Divine Veracity, the certainty is the ſame, whether the witneſſes be more or fewer, becauſe it depends upon the veracity of God, which is always the ſame, whatever the means be, by which our faith is reſolved into it.

CHAP. XI.

1 Peter, being accuſed for going in to the Gentiles, 5 maketh his defence, 18 which is accepted. 19 The Goſpel being ſpread into Phenice and Cyprus, and Antioch, Barnabas is ſent to confirm them. 26 The diſciples that are firſt called Chriſtians. 27 They ſend relief to the brethren in Judea in time of famine.

AND the apoſtles and brethren that were in Judea, heard that the Gentiles had alſo received the word of God.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jeruſalem, they that were of the circumciſion contended with him,

3 Saying, Thou wenteſt in to men uncircumciſed, and didſt eat with them.

4 But Peter rehearſed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, ſaying,

5 I was in the city of Joppa, praying; and in a trance I ſaw a viſion, A certain veſſel deſcend, as it had been a great ſheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me.

6 Upon the which when I had faſtned mine eyes, I conſidered, and ſaw four-footed beaſts of the earth, and wild beaſts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice ſaying unto me, Ariſe, Peter; ſlay and eat.

8 But I ſaid, Not ſo, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entred into my mouth.

9 But the voice anſwered me again from heaven, What God hath cleanſed, that call not thou common.

10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the houſe where I was, ſent from Ceſarea unto me.

12 And the Spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover, theſe ſix brethren accompanied me, and we entred into the mans houſe:

13 And he ſhewed us how he had ſeen an angel in his houſe, which ſtood, and ſaid unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whoſe ſurname is Peter:

14 Who ſhall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy houſe ſhall be ſaved.

15 And as I began to ſpeak, the Holy Ghoſt fell on them, as on us at the beginning.

16 Then remembred I the word of the Lord, how that he ſaid, John indeed baptized with water; but ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt.

17 Foraſmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, what was I that I could withſtand God?

18 When they heard theſe things, they held their peace, and glorified God, ſaying, Then hath God alſo to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

19 ¶ Now they which were ſcattered abroad upon the perſecution that aroſe about Stephen, travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

20 And ſome of them were men of Cyprus, and Cyrene, which when they were come to Antioch, ſpake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jeſus.

21 And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22 ¶ Then tidings of theſe things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jeruſalem: and they ſent forth Barnabas, that he ſhould go as far as Antioch.

23 Who when he came, and had ſeen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpoſe of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghoſt, and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

25 Then departed Barnabas to Tarſus, for to ſeek Saul.

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to paſs, that a whole year they aſſembled themſelves with the church, and taught much people; and the diſciples were called Chriſtians firſt in Antioch.

27 ¶ And in theſe days came prophets from Jeruſalem unto Antioch.

28 And there ſtood up one of them named Agabus, and ſignified by the ſpirit, that there ſhould be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to paſs in the days of Claudius Ceſar.

29 Then the diſciples, every man according to his ability, determined to ſend relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea.

30 Which alſo they did, and ſent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

NOW about that time Herod the king ſtretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church.

2 And he killed James the brother of John with the ſword.

3 And becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the Jews, he proceeded further, to take Peter alſo. (Then were the days of unleavened bread)

4 And when he had apprehended him, he put him in priſon, and delivered him to four quaternions of ſoldiers to keep him, intending after Eaſter to bring him forth to the people.

5 Peter therefore was kept in priſon; but prayer was made without ceaſing of the church unto God for him.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the ſame night Peter was ſleeping between two ſoldiers, bound with two chains; and the keepers before the door kept the priſon.

7 And behold, the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light ſhined in the priſon: and he ſmote Peter on the ſide, and raiſed him up, ſaying, Ariſe up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel ſaid unto him, Gird thyſelf, and bind on thy ſandals: And ſo he did. And he ſaith unto him, Caſt thy garment about thee, and follow me.

9 And he went out and followed him, and wiſt not that it was true which was done by the angel: but thought he ſaw a viſion.

10 When they were paſt the firſt and the ſecond ward, they came unto the iron gate that leadeth unto the city, which opened to them of his own accord: and they went out, and paſſed on through one ſtreet, and forthwith the angel departed from him.

11 And when Peter was come to himſelf, he ſaid, Now I know of a ſurety, that the Lord hath ſent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had conſidered the thing, he came to the houſe of Mary the mother of John, whoſe ſurname was Mark, where many were gathered together, praying.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damſel came to hearken, named Rhoda.

14 And when ſhe knew Peters voice, ſhe opened not the gate for gladneſs, but ran in, and told how Peter ſtood before the gate.

15 And they ſaid unto her, Thou art mad. But ſhe conſtantly affirmed that it was even ſo. Then ſaid they, It is his angel.

16 But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and ſaw him, they were aſtoniſhed.

17 But he beckening unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the priſon. And he ſaid, Go ſhew theſe things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

18 Now aſſoon as it was day, there was no ſmall ſtir among the ſoldiers, what was become of Peter.

19 And when Herod had ſought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they ſhould be put to death. And he went down from Judea to Ceſarea, and there abode.

20 ¶ And Herod was highly diſpleaſed with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and having made Blaſtus the kings chamberlain their friend, deſired peace; becauſe their country was nouriſhed by the kings country.

21 And upon a ſet day, Herod arayed in royal apparel, ſat upon his throne, and made an oration unto them.

22 And the people gave a ſhout, ſaying, It is the voice of a god, and not of a man.

23 And immediately the angel of the Lord ſmote him, becauſe he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghoſt.

24 ¶ But the word of God grew and multiplied.

25 And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jeruſalem, when they had fulfilled their miniſtry, and took with them John whoſe ſurname was Mark.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Paul and Barnabas are choſen to go to the Gentiles. 7 Of Sergius Paulus and Elymas the ſorcerer. 14 Paul preacheth at Antioch, that Jeſus is Chriſt. 42 The Gentiles believe: 45 but the Jews gainſay and blaſpheme: 46 whereupon they turn to the Gentiles. 48 As many as were ordained to life, believed.

NOW there were in the church that was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrach, and Saul.

2 As they miniſtred to the Lord, and faſted, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them.

3 And when they had faſted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they ſent them away.

4 ¶ So they being ſent forth by the Holy Ghoſt, departed unto Seleucia: and from thence they ſailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the ſynagogues of the Jews: and they had alſo John to their miniſter.

6 And when they had gone through the iſle unto Paphos, they found a certain ſorcerer, a falſe prophet, a Jew, whoſe name was Barjeſus:

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man, who called for Barnabas and Saul, and deſired to hear the word of God.

8 But Elymas the ſorcerer (for ſo is his name by interpretation) withſtood them, ſeeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9 Then Saul (who alſo is called Paul) filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ſet his eyes on him,

10 And ſaid, O full of all ſubtilty and all miſchief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteouſneſs, wilt thou not ceaſe to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11 And now behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou ſhalt be blind, not ſeeing the ſun for a ſeaſon. And immediately there fell on him a miſt and a darkneſs; and he went about ſeeking ſome to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy when he ſaw what was done, believed, being aſtoniſhed at the doctrine of the Lord.

13 Now when Paul and his company looſed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and John departing from them, returned to Jeruſalem.

14 ¶ But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Piſidia, and went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day, and ſat down.

15 And after the reading of the law and the prophets, the rulers of the ſynagogue ſent unto them, ſaying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, ſay on.

16 Then Paul ſtood up, and beckning with his hand, ſaid, Men of Iſrael, and ye that fear God, give audience.

17 The God of this people of Iſrael choſe our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt as ſtrangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it.

18 And about the time of forty years ſuffered he their manners in the wilderneſs.

19 And when he had deſtroyed ſeven nations in the land of Chanaan, he divided their land to them by lot.

20 And after that, he gave unto them judges about the ſpace of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

21 And afterward they deſired a king: and God gave unto them Saul the ſon of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the ſpace of forty years.

22 And when he had removed him, he raiſed up unto them David to be their king; to whom alſo he gave teſtimony, and ſaid, I have found David the ſon of Jeſſe, a man after mine own heart, which ſhall fulfill all my will.

23 Of this man ſeed hath God according to his promiſe raiſed unto Iſrael a Saviour Jeſus:

24 When John had firſt preached before his coming, the baptiſm of repentance to all the people of Iſrael.

25 And as John fulfilled his courſe, he ſaid, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But behold, there cometh one after me, whoſe ſhoes of his feet I am not worthy to looſe.

26 Men and brethren, children of the ſtock of Abraham, and whoſoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this ſalvation ſent.

27 For they that dwell at Jeruſalem, and their rulers, becauſe they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every ſabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

28 And though they found no cauſe of death in him, yet deſired they Pilate that he ſhould be ſlain.

29 And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a ſepulchre.

30 But God raiſed him from the dead:

31 And he was ſeen many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jeruſalem, who are his witneſſes unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promiſe which was made unto the fathers.

33 God hath fulfilled the ſame unto us their children, in that he hath raiſed up Jeſus again; as it is alſo written in the ſecond pſalm, Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee.

34 And as concerning that he raiſed him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he ſaid on this wiſe, I will give you the ſure mercies of David.

35 Wherefore he ſaith alſo in another pſalm, Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thine holy One to ſee corruption.

36 For David after he had ſerved his own generation by the will of God, fell on ſleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and ſaw corruption:

37 But he whom God raiſed again, ſaw no corruption.

38 ¶ Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins:

39 And by him all that believe are juſtified from all things, from which ye could not be juſtified by the law of Moſes.

40 Beware therefore, leſt that come upon you which is ſpoken of in the prophets.

41 Behold, ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and periſh: for I work a work in your days, a work which you ſhall in no wiſe believe, though a man declare it unto you.

42 And when the Jews were gone out of the ſynagogue, the Gentiles beſought that theſe words might be preached to them the next ſabbath.

43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews, and religious proſelytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who ſpeaking to them, perſwaded them to continue in the grace of God.

44 ¶ And the next ſabbath-day came almoſt the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews ſaw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and ſpake againſt thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul, contradicting and blaſpheming.

46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and ſaid, It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you: but ſeeing ye put it from you, and judge your ſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles.

47 For ſo hath the Lord commanded us, ſaying, I have ſet thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou ſhouldſt be for ſalvation unto the ends of the earth.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed.

49 And the word of the Lord was publiſhed throughout all the region.

50 But the Jews ſtirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and raiſed perſecution againſt Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coaſts.

51 But they ſhook off the duſt of their feet againſt them, and came unto Iconium.

52 And the diſciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghoſt.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Paul and Barnabas are perſecuted from Iconium. 7 At Lyſtra Paul healeth a cripple, whereupon they are reputed as gods. 19 Paul is ſtoned. 21 They paſs through divers Churches, confirming the diſciples in faith and patience. 26 Returning to Antioch, they report what God had done with them.

AND it came to paſs in Iconium, that they went both together into the ſynagogue of the Jews, and ſo ſpake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and alſo of the Greeks, believed.

2 But the unbelieving Jews ſtirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil-affected againſt the brethren.

3 Long time therefore abode they ſpeaking boldly in the Lord, which gave teſtimony unto the word of his grace, and granted ſigns and wonders to be done by their hands.

4 But the multitude of the city was divided: and part held with the Jews, and part with the apoſtles.

5 And when there was an aſſault made both of the Gentiles and alſo of the Jews, with their rulers, to uſe them deſpitefully, and to ſtone them,

6 They were ware of it, and fled unto Lyſtra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:

7 And there they preached the goſpel.

8 ¶ And there ſat a certain man at Lyſtra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mothers womb, who never had walked.

9 The ſame heard Paul ſpeak: who ſtedfaſtly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed,

10 Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.

11 And when the people ſaw what Paul had done, they lift up their voices, ſaying in the ſpeech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeneſs of men.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, becauſe he was the chief ſpeaker.

13 Then the prieſt of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done ſacrifice with the people.

14 Which when the apoſtles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

15 And ſaying, Sirs, why do ye theſe things? we alſo are men of like paſſions with you, and preach unto you, that ye ſhould turn from theſe vanities unto the living God, which made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and all things that are therein:

16 Who in times paſt ſuffered all nations to walk in their own ways.

17 Nevertheleſs he left not himſelf without witneſs, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling our hearts with food and gladneſs.

18 And with theſe ſayings ſcarce reſtrained they the people, that they had not done ſacrifice unto them.

19 ¶ And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who perſwaded the people, and having ſtoned Paul, drew drew him out of the city, ſuppoſing he had been dead.

20 Howbeit, as the diſciples ſtood round about him, he roſe up and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21 And when they had preached the goſpel to that city, and had taught many, they returned again to Lyſtra, and to Iconium, and Antioch,

22 Confirming the ſouls of the diſciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we muſt through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with faſting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

24 And after they had paſſed throughout Piſidia; they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

26 And thence ſailed to Antioch, from whence they had been recommended to the grace of God, for the work which they fulfilled.

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearſed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the diſciples.

Ver. 12. Jupiter.] The God whom the Heathens believed had the command of all gods and all the creation.

——Mercurius.] Or Mercury, whom the Heathens named the meſſenger of the gods, or particularly of Jupiter.

C H A P. XV.

Great diſſention ariſeth touching circumciſion. 6 The Apoſtles conſult about it, 22 and ſend their determination by letters to the Churches, 36 Paul and Barnabas thinking to viſit the brethren together, fall at ſtrife, and depart aſunder.

AND certain men which came down from Judea, taught the brethren, and ſaid, Except ye be circumciſed after the manner of Moſes, ye cannot be ſaved.

2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no ſmall diſſenſion and diſputation with them, they determined that Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, ſhould go up to Jeruſalem unto the apoſtles and elders about this queſtion.

3 And being brought on their way by the church, they paſſed through Phenice, and Samaria, declaring the converſion of the Gentiles: and they cauſed great joy unto all the brethren.

4 And when they were come to Jeruſalem, they were received of the church, and of the apoſtles and elders, and they declared all things that God had done with them.

5 But there roſe up certain of the ſect of the Phariſees which believed, ſaying, That it was needful to circumciſe them, and to command them to keep the law of Moſes.

6 ¶ And the apoſtles and elders came together for to conſider of this matter.

7 And when there had been much diſputing, Peter roſe up, and ſaid unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago, God made choice among us that the Gentiles by my mouth ſhould hear the word of the Goſpel, and believe.

8 And God which knoweth the hearts, bare them witneſs, giving them the Holy Ghoſt, even as he did unto us;

9 And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith.

10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the diſciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

11 But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we ſhall be ſaved, even as they.

12 ¶ Then all the multitude kept ſilence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them.

13 ¶ And after they had held their peace, James anſwered, ſaying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me.

14 Simeon hath declared how God at the firſt did viſit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written,

16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will ſet it up:

17 That the reſidue of men might ſeek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, ſaith the Lord, who doth all theſe things.

18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19 Wherefore my ſentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God:

20 But that we write unto them, that they abſtain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things ſtrangled, and from blood.

21 For Moſes of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the ſynagogues every ſabbath-day.

22 Then pleaſed it the apoſtles and elders, with the whole church, to ſend choſen men of their own company to Antioch, with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas ſirnamed Barſabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

23 And wrote letters by them after this manner, The apoſtles, and elders, and brethren ſend greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia.

24 Foraſmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, ſubverting your ſouls, ſaying, Ye muſt be circumciſed, and keep the law; to whom we gave no ſuch commandment.

25 It ſeemed good unto us, being aſſembled with one accord, to ſend choſen men unto you, with our beloved Barnabas and Paul;

26 Men that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

27 We have ſent therefore Judas and Silas, who ſhall alſo tell you the ſame things by mouth.

28 For it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than theſe neceſſary things;

29 That ye abſtain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things ſtrangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep your ſelves, ye ſhall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were diſmiſſed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epiſtle.

31 Which when they had read, they rejoyced for the conſolation.

32 And Judas and Silas being prophets alſo themſelves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.

33 And after they had tarried there a ſpace, they were let go in peace from the brethren unto the apoſtles.

34 Notwithſtanding it pleaſed Silas to abide there ſtill.

35 Paul alſo and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord with many others alſo.

36 ¶ And ſome days after, Paul ſaid unto Barnabas, Let us go again, and viſit our brethren, in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and ſee how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whoſe ſirname was Mark.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And the contention was ſo ſharp between them, that they departed aſunder one from the other: and ſo Barnabas took Mark, and ſailed unto Cyprus;

40 And Paul choſe Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

CHAP. XVI.

1 Paul having circumciſed Timothy, 7 and being called by the ſpirit from one country to another, 14 converteth Lydia, 16 caſteth out a ſpirit of divination. 19 For which cauſe he and Silas are whipped and impriſoned. 26 The priſon doors are opened. 31 The jaylor is converted, and they are delivered.

THEN came he to Derbe and Lyſtra: and behold, a certain diſciple was there, named Timotheus, the ſon of a certain woman which was a Jeweſs, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

2 Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lyſtra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumciſed him, becauſe of the Jews which were in thoſe quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apoſtles and elders which were at Jeruſalem.

5 And ſo were the churches eſtabliſhed in the faith, and increaſed in number daily.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia, and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the holy Ghoſt to preach the word in Aſia,

7 After they were come to Myſia, they aſſayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit ſuffered them not.

8 And they paſſing by Myſia, came down to Troas.

9 And a viſion appeared to Paul in the night: There ſtood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, ſaying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had ſeen the viſion, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia, aſſuredly gathering, that the Lord had called us for to preach the goſpel unto them.

11 Therefore looſing from Troas, we came with a ſtraight courſe to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12 And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the ſabbath went out of the city by a river-ſide, where prayer was wont to be made; and we ſat down and ſpake unto the women which reſorted thither.

14 ¶ And a certain woman named Lydia, a ſeller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worſhipped God, heard us: whoſe heart the Lord opened, that ſhe attended unto the things which were ſpoken of Paul.

15 And when ſhe was baptized, and her houſhold, ſhe beſought us, ſaying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my houſe, and abide there. And ſhe conſtrained us.

16 ¶ And it came to paſs, as we went to prayer, a certain damſel, poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of divination met us, which brought her maſters much gain by ſoothſaying:

17 The ſame followed Paul, and us, and cried, ſaying, Theſe men are the ſervants of the moſt high God, which ſhew unto us the way of ſalvation.

18 And this did ſhe many days. But Paul being grieved, turned and ſaid to the ſpirit, I command thee in the name of Jeſus Chriſt to come out of her. And he came out the ſame hour.

19 ¶ And when her maſters ſaw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place, unto the rulers,

20 And brought them to the magiſtrates, ſaying, Theſe men being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city.

21 And teach cuſtoms which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to obſerve, being Romans.

22 And the multitude roſe up together againſt them: and the magiſtrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23 And when they had laid many ſtripes upon them, they caſt them into priſon, charging the jayler to keep them ſafely.

24 Who having received ſuch a charge, thruſt them into the inner priſon, and made their feet faſt in the ſtocks.

25 ¶ And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and ſang praiſes unto God: and the priſoners heard them.

26 And ſuddenly there was a great earthquake, ſo that the foundations of the priſon were ſhaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every ones bands were looſed.

27 And the keeper of the priſon awaking out of his ſleep, and ſeeing the priſon-doors open, he drew out his ſword, and would have killed himſelf, ſuppoſing that the priſoners had been fled.

28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Do thy ſelf no harm; for we are all here.

29 Then he called for a light, and ſprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas;

30 And brought them out, and ſaid, Sirs, what muſt I do to be ſaved?

31 And they ſaid, Believe on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved, and thy houſe.

32 And they ſpake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his houſe.

33 And he took them the ſame hour of the night, and waſhed their ſtripes; and was baptized, he, and all his, ſtraightway.

34 And when he had brought them into his houſe, he ſet meat before them, and re-rejoyced, believing in God with all his houſe.

35 And when it was day the magiſtrates ſent the ſergeants, ſaying, Let thoſe men go.

36 And the keeper of the priſon told this ſaying to Paul, the magiſtrates have ſent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul ſaid unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have caſt us into priſon; and now do they thruſt us out privily? nay verily; but let them come themſelves, and fetch us out.

38 And the ſergeants told theſe words unto the magiſtrates: and they feared when they heard that they were Romans.

39 And they came and beſought them, and brought them out, and deſired them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the priſon, and entred into the houſe of Lydia: and when they had ſeen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

Ver. 1. Diſciple.] i. e. Chriſtian.

Ver. 3.—Circumciſed him.] Not as neceſſary for the admiſſion of ſuch a perſon into the covenant of grace, but purely to gain the affections of the Jews, who held all the uncircumciſed in abomination, until they were better informed by the effectual operation of the Holy Spirit through the Goſpel of Chriſt, preached by his Apoſtles.

Ver. 4.—The decrees.] Not of men, but of God; ſee Acts xv. 20.

Ver. 13. And on the ſabbath [day] we went out of the city by a river ſide, where prayer was wont to be made, &c.] Tho' there is frequent mention made, in the Acts of the Apoſtles, of the Jewiſh Synagogues in the Heathen countries, and of the worſhip they performed in them: but there is ſomewhat particular in the deſcription of this place of worſhip, which the Jews had at Philippi. Yet

There is ſome difference among learned men, whether the original word in this place, which we rendered prayer, ſhould be here underſtood of the act, or the place of prayer. Doctor Whitby's paraphraſe of this text is thus: Where there was by law, or cuſtom an oratory. In his notes he is ſomewhat more particular; and ſays, " Where an houſe of prayer for the Jews and Proſelytes, was allowed to be by the law, or was accuſtomed to be. I am inclined to think with the Doctor, Grotius, and others, that it is a place of worſhip, which is here ſpoken of. But what I chiefly obſerve here, is, that it may be inferred from this text, that it is not unuſual for the Jews, at leaſt in ſtrange countries, to worſhip, or to erect places of worſhip near a river.

There is an inſtance of this kind recorded by Joſephus, who has given us the decree of rhe city of Halicarnaſſus, permitting the Jews to build oratories; a part of this decree runs thus: " We ordain that the Jews, who are willing, men and women, do obſerve the ſabbaths, and perform ſacred rites according to the Jewiſh laws, and build oratories by the ſea ſide, according to the cuſtom of their country; and if any man, whether magiſtrate or private perſon, give them any let or diſturbance, he ſhall pay a fine to the city; Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 14. c. x.

And Tertullian, among other Jewiſh rites and cuſtoms, ſuch as feaſts, ſabbaths, faſts, and unleavened bread, mentions ſhore-prayers, that is, prayers by the ſea-ſide, or river-ſide; Tertul. ad Nat. lib. 1. c. 13.

Theſe two paſſages are ſufficient to perſuade us, that it was common for the Jews to worſhip in theſe places. But it may be a queſtion, whether this practice was owing to their choice, or to ſome neceſſity laid upon them by the Heathen magiſtrates, to perform their worſhip without the gates of their cities.

I ſhall lay together a few paſſages and remarks relating to this ſubject.

It ſeems to me that Turtullian ſuppoſed the ſhore-prayers to be properly a Jewiſh cuſtom, ſince he reckons them with others that were ſo. The terms of the decree of the people of Halicarnaſſus imply the ſame thing. And the ſea-ſide does not appear to be mentioned as a reſtraint or limitation, but as a grant of a privilege, eſtabliſhing the oratory in the place moſt agreeable to the Jews. Philo ſays, that when Flaccus the prefect of Egypt had been taken into cuſtody at Alexandria by order of Caligula, the Jews offered up thankſgivings to God, ſpent the whole night in hymns and ſongs; " and early in the morning flocking out of the gates of the city, they go to the ſhores, for the (Proſeuchae) oratories were deſtroyed; and ſtanding in a moſt pure place, they lift up their voices with one accord; Philo in Flacc. p. 982.

It is true, their oratories at Alexandria were then all down. But yet methinks here are ſome ſigns, that the ſea-ſide was a place agreeable to them. Why elſe did they go out of the city ſo univerſally toward the neighbouring ſhores, rather than any other way? Beſides, Philo expreſſes much ſatisfaction in this ſituation, when he calls it a moſt pure place.

There is a paſſage very appoſite to this text in the account Philo gives of the annual rejoicings, the Jews were wont to make for the Septuagint tranſlation. " Wherefore, ſays he, even to this day, there is kept every year a feaſt and ſolemnity in the iſle of Pharos, whither not only the Jews, but many others alſo croſs over, to pay reſpect to the place where this verſion was firſt ſeen.—And after prayers and thankſgivings, ſome raiſe tents on the ſhore, others lay themſelves down upon the ſea-ſand, in the open air, and there feaſt with their friends and relations, " eſteeming the ſhore more ſumptuous than the furniture of the richeſt palaces; De vita Moſis l. 11.

Theſe paſſages have ſometimes inclined me to think, that the true rendring of this text is thus: Where it had been thought fit that the oratory ſhould be; implying the Jews choice of that ſituation. But if any think, that the more natural meaning of the words is, Where a houſe of prayer was allowed, or appointed, to be by the law; yet I believe it ought to be ſuppoſed, that this appointment was perfectly agreeable to the Jews, if not owing to their own choice. Joſephus having mentioned the privileges beſtowed upon the Jews at Alexandria, by Alexander the Great, ſays, " They continued to enjoy the ſame honour under his ſucceſſors, who ſet apart for them a diſtinct place, that they might live in greater purity, than they could well do, if they were mixed promiſcuouſly with ſtrangers; and allowed them alſo to be called Macedonians," De bell. l. 2. c. 13. This ſeparating the Jews from other people was no hardſhip, therefore, but a privilege.

Luke tells us, that Paul and his company, in their way to Jeruſalem from Miletus, ſailed into Syria and landed at Tyre. And finding diſciples, we tarried there ſeven days.—— And when we had accompliſhed thoſe days, we departed and went our way, and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children till we were out of the city: And we kneeled down on the ſhore and prayed, Acts xxi. 3, 5. I ſhould have concluded from this very text, that it was then uſual for the Jews, or ſome other people to pray by the ſea-ſide. It appears from paſſages alledged above, that it was a very common practiſe among the Jews.

Ver. 16. —— With a ſpirit of divination.] Or of Python; that is to ſay, with an evil ſpirit. See my diſſertation upon miracles in the Goſpel according to Matthew, where you will find how an evil ſpirit may be ſuppoſed to prophecy.

Ver. 23.—— Laid many ſtripes on them.] See the introduction to this Book, which gives you a full account of the behaviour of the Jews and Gentiles towards the Apoſtles and other Chriſtians.

Ver. 37.—— Nay verily; but let them come, &c.] See the reaſon of this behaviour in the notes on chap. xxii. 25.

Ver. 38.—— And they feared when they heard that they were Romans.] Becauſe it was the birth-right of a Roman citizen to be exempted from all bodily puniſhments, to be inflicted by the governors of provinces. And therefore when at another time Paul was in danger of puniſhment from the governor Feſtus, or by his connivance to be murdered by the Jews under a pretence of Juſtice, he appealed to his birth-right, to be carried to Cæſar's judgment-ſeat.

CHAP. XVII.

1 Paul preacheth at Theſſalonica, 4 where ſome believe, and others perſecute him. 10 He is ſent to Berea, and preacheth there: 13 Being perſecuted at Theſſalonica, 15 he cometh to Athens, and diſputeth, and preacheth the living God to them unknown, 34 whereby many are converted unto Chriſt.

NOW when they had paſſed through Amphipolis, and Apollonia, they came to Theſſalonica, where was a ſynagogue of the Jews.

2 And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three ſabbath-days reaſoned with them out of the ſcriptures,

3 Opening and alledging that Chriſt muſt needs have ſuffered, and riſen again from the dead: and that this Jeſus whom I preach unto you, is Chriſt.

4 And ſome of them believed, and conſorted with Paul and Silas: and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 ¶ But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, and gathered a company, and ſet all the city on an uprore, and aſſaulted the houſe of Jaſon, and ſought to bring them out to the people.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jaſon, and certain brethren, unto the rulers of the city, crying, Theſe that have turned the world upſide down, are come hither alſo;

7 Whom Jaſon hath received: and theſe all do contrary to the decrees of Ceſar, ſaying, That there is another king, one Jeſus.

8 And they troubled the people, and the rulers of the city, when they heard theſe things.

9 And when they had taken ſecurity of Jaſon, and of the other, they let them go.

10 ¶ And the brethren immediately ſent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: who coming thither, went into the ſynagogue of the Jews.

11 Theſe were more noble than thoſe in Theſſalonica, in that they received the word with all readineſs of mind, and ſearched the ſcriptures daily, whether thoſe things were ſo.

12 Therefore many of them believed: alſo of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men not a few.

13 But when the Jews of Theſſalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither alſo, and ſtirred up the people.

14 And then immediately the brethren ſent away Paul, to go as it were to the ſea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there ſtill.

15 And they that conducted Paul, brought him unto Athens: and receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus, for to come to him with all ſpeed, they departed.

16 ¶ Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his ſpirit was ſtirred in him, when he ſaw the city wholly given to idolatry.

17 Therefore diſputed he in the ſynagogue with the Jews, and with the devout perſons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

18 Then certain philoſophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks encountred him: and ſome ſaid, What will this babler ſay? other ſome, He ſeemeth to be a ſetter forth of ſtrange gods: becauſe he preached unto them Jeſus, and the reſurrection.

19 And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, ſaying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou ſpeakeſt, is?

20 For thou bringeſt certain ſtrange things to our ears: we would know therefore what theſe things mean.

21 (For all the Athenians and ſtrangers which were there, ſpent their time in nothing elſe, but either to tell, or to hear ſome new thing.)

22 ¶ Then Paul ſtood in the mids of Mars-hill, and ſaid, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too ſuperſtitious.

23 For as I paſſed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inſcription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD.

Whom therefore ye ignorantly worſhip, him declare I unto you.

24 God that made the world, and all things therein, ſeeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands:

25 Neither is worſhipped with mens hands, as though he needed any thing, ſeeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things;

26 And hath made of one blood, all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation:

27 That they ſhould ſeek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us:

28 For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain alſo of your own poets have ſaid, For we are alſo his offſpring.

29 For as much then as we are the offſpring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or ſilver, or ſtone graven by art and mans device.

30 And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent:

31 Becauſe he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given aſſurance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead.

32 ¶ And when they heard of the reſurrection of the dead, ſome mocked: and others ſaid, We will hear thee again of this matter.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

34 Howbeit, certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionyſius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

Ver. 2. And Paul as his manner was went in unto them, and three ſabbath days reaſoned with them out of the Scriptures.] Where it will be proper to obſerve, that beſides the great reſort at Jeruſalem by the Jews at the feaſts, and their worſhip at the temple at other ſeaſons, and the regard expreſſed for the temple itſelf and the law, we have frequent mention of the ſynagogue-worſhip in the New Teſtament, (ſee Luke iv. 17, 20.) Which was attended not only with the readings of the law and the Prophets, but with diſcourſes upon ſome point of faith or doctrine, as may be proved not only from the text before us, but alſo out of Matthew xiii. 54. Mark i. 21. and above, in Acts xiv. 1. Which is confirmed by the collateral and unexceptionable evidence of Joſephus, who, in his ſecond Book againſt Apion, ſpeaking of Moſes, ſays: And that men might not plead ignorance for their tranſgreſſion (in points he before mentioned) he gave us a law, the moſt excellent of all Inſtitutions. Nor did he appoint, that it ſhould be heard once only, or twice, or often, but that laying aſide all other works, we ſhould meet together every week to hear it read, and gain a perfect underſtanding of it.

Joſephus relates a difference which happened between the Greeks and Jews at Ceſarea in the 12th year of Nero's reign. The Jews preſented a petition to Florus their Procurator. He made them fair promiſes, but immediately went from Ceſarea to Sebaſte, without taking care about the matter.—— "The next day being the ſeventh day, as the Jews were coming to the ſynagogue, a turbulent fellow of Ceſarea, brought an earthen veſſel, and having placed it with the bottom uppermoſt ſacrificed birds, as the Jews were coming in. This provoked the Jews extremely to ſee their laws thus inſulted, and the place defiled."—It was impoſſible to compoſe them, they and the Ceſareans had a battle. Jucundus, a Roman, officer who was there, came into the aſſiſtance of the Jews, but he had but a few men with him. "He being overpowered by the violence of the Ceſareans, the Jews taking the laws, withdrew to Narbata, a place ſixty ſtadia diſtant from Ceſarea, de bell. l. ii. chap. 14.

That they had diſcourſes made in their ſynagogues, I ſhall prove in the words of Philo.—"And from that time (the days of Moſes) to this, the Jews are wont to inculcate the principles of their religion on the ſeventh days, ſetting apart that time to the ſtudy and contemplation of the things of nature: for the oratories, which are in every city, what are they but ſchools of wiſdom, of fortitude, ſobriety, juſtice, and piety, and of every virtue?" l. iii. de vit. Moſ.

I believe, that very few of our modern Jewiſh antiquaries are of Philo's and Joſephus's opinion, that the ſynagogue worſhip is an inſtitution of Moſes; but, I think, none will conteſt their authority, that the Jews frequented the ſynagogues on the ſabbath day, at the time they wrote.

Ver. 30.—God winked at.] So as not to deſtroy them for the ſins of corrupt nature, which led them into idolatry.

—To repent.] Thus you ſee the Apoſtle condemns any argument founded upon the ſallacious baſis of antiquity. It is not a good argument for any man to ſay, that he will worſhip God after the way of his anceſtors, when that way is diſproved of its Divine Inſtitution, and proved to be the device of ſinful men.

— By that man.] Jeſus Chriſt.

— Given aſſurance.] So much faith and revelation as amounts to a ſufficient teſtimony to convince the whole world.

Ver. 34.—Areopagite.] This was the title of the judge, and of all the judges and ſenators, who ſat in the court of Areopagus.

CHAP. XVIII.

3 Paul laboureth with his hands, and preacheth at Corinth to the Gentiles. 9 The Lord encourageth him in a viſion. 12 He is accuſed before Gallio the deputy, but is diſmiſſed. 18 Afterwards paſſing from city to city, he ſtrengtheneth the diſciples. 24 Apollos, being more perfectly inſtructed by Aquila and Priſcilla, 28 preacheth Chriſt with great efficacy.

AFter theſe things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

2 And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priſcilla (becauſe that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome) and came unto them.

3 And becauſe he was of the ſame craft, he abode with them, and wrought (for by their occupation they were tentmakers)

4 And he reaſoned in the ſynagogue every ſabbath, and perſwaded the Jews, and the Greeks.

5 And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was preſſed in ſpirit, and teſtified to the Jews, that Jeſus was Chriſt.

6 And when they oppoſed themſelves, and blaſphemed, he took his raiment, and ſaid unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

7 ¶ And he departed thence, and entred into a certain mans houſe, named Juſtus, one that worſhipped God, whoſe houſe joyned hard to the ſynagogue.

8 And Criſpus, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue, believed on the Lord with all his houſe: and many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed, and were baptized.

9 Then ſpake the Lord to Paul in the night by a viſion, Be not afraid, but ſpeak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For I am with thee, and no man ſhall ſet on thee, to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city.

11 And he continued there a year and ſix months, teaching the word of God among them.

12 ¶ And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made inſurrection with one accord againſt Paul, and brought him to the judgment-ſeat, 13 Saying, This fellow perſwadeth men to worſhip God contrary to the law.

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio ſaid unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong, or wicked lewdneſs, O ye Jews, reaſon would that I ſhould bear with you:

15 But if it be a queſtion of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of ſuch matters.

16 And he drave them from the judgment-ſeat.

17 Then all the Greeks took Soſthenes, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue, and beat him before the judgment-ſeat: and Gallio cared for none of thoſe things.

18 ¶ And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and ſailed thence into Syria, and with him Priſcilla and Aquila: having ſhorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow.

19 And he came to Epheſus, and left them there: but he himſelf entred into the ſynagogue, and reaſoned with the Jews.

20 When they deſired him to tarry longer time with them he conſented not:

21 But bade them farewel, ſaying, I muſt by all means keep this feaſt that cometh, in Jeruſalem: but I will return again unto you, if God will. And he ſailed from Epheſus.

22 And when he had landed at Ceſarea, and gone up and ſaluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had ſpent ſome time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, ſtrengthning all the diſciples.

24 ¶ And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the ſcriptures, came to Epheſus.

25 This man was inſtructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent in the ſpirit, he ſpake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptiſm of John.

26 And he began to ſpeak boldly in the ſynagogue. Whom when Aquila and Priſcilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

27 And when he was diſpoſed to paſs into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the diſciples to receive him: who, when he was come, helped them much which had believed through grace.

28 For he mightily convinced the Jews, and that publickly, ſhewing by the ſcriptures, that Jeſus was Chriſt.

Ver. 1.——Corinth.] This was the chief and moſt famous city of Achaia.

Ver. 2.——Jew named Aquila.] Some commentators preſume without any warrant to ſay, that this Aquila was already before this intercourſe with Paul, converted to the Chriſtian faith, which pre-converſion does not appear: And therefore it is ſafer to ſuppoſe, that according to the letter, Aquila was a Jew baniſhed from Rome for being a Jew, and meeting with Paul at Corinth, was converted by him to the faith of Chriſt.

——Pontus.] A province of Aſia.

——Claudius.] The Roman emperor at that time, Anno 54.

Ver. 3.——Tent-makers.] Which in thoſe days were made of dreſſed ſkins.

Ver. 6.——They oppoſed themſelves.] i. e. The Jews and Greeks who were proſelytes to Jewdaiſm.

————Gentiles.] They who were profeſſed idolaters.

Ver. 7.——Worſhipped God.] According to the Jewiſh form of worſhipping the living God.

Ver. 9.——Be not afraid.] Let not the perſecutions which attend the preachers of the Goſpel, hinder thee from ſpeaking the word of truth, which ſhall be dictated to thee by the Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 13.——Contrary to the law.] Which the Jews had received from God by Moſes.

Ver. 15. But if it be a queſtion of words and names, &c.] By this, Gallio ſeems to anſwer the Jews from an imbibed principle which the Romans entertained concerning the Jews; ſuppoſing that, becauſe the Jews kept the name of God in ſo much reverence, that they thought it a grievous crime to utter it, they worſhipped a mere name: And that the diſpute between them and the Chriſtians was only about a name; as if he had ſaid, I perceive ye Jews worſhip God by one name, and ye Chriſtians worſhip him by another. But this betrayed his ignorance.

Ver. 18.——Having ſhorn his head in Cenchrea.] Here obſerve, that when Paul had been acquitted by Gallio at Corinth, it is ſaid: After this he tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and ſailed thence into Syria, and with him Priſcilla and Aquila: having ſhorn his head in Cenchrea: for he had a vow. And he came to Epheſus,—and from thence he ſailed to Ceſarea, and went up to Jeruſalem. We have again mention made of this very ſame cuſtom, or one very near a-kin to it, when Paul went up to Jeruſalem ſeveral years after this; and James and all the elders that were there gave him ſome advice for the taking off the aſperſions, that had been caſt upon him by the Jews. Do therefore this that we ſay unto thee: We have four men which have a vow on them; them take and purify thy ſelf with them, that they may ſhave their heads, Acts xxi. 23, 24. Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himſelf with them, entred into the temple, to ſignify the accompliſhment of the days of purification, until that an offering ſhould be offered for every one of them, ver. 26.

The reader may do well to conſult here the law of the Nazarite as delivered by Moſes, Numb. vi. 13—18.

That this cuſtom was in uſe among the Jews at the time of the evangelical hiſtory, is evident from what Joſephus has ſaid of Bernice. "She was then, An. D. 66. at Jeruſalem, performing a vow to God: For it is cuſtomary for thoſe who have been afflicted with ſome diſtemper, or have laboured under any other difficulties, to make a vow, thirty days before they offer ſacrifices, to abſtain from wine, and ſhave the hair of their head," de bell. lib. ii. c. 15.

Capellus, Specil. in Act. Apoſt. xxi. 23. indeed, does make a doubt, whether the vow of the four men in the Acts, or of Bernice in Joſephus, be the vow of the Nazarite. But I ſee no good reaſon for this doubt. However, he allows theirs and Bernices's vow to have been of one and the ſame nature.

Joſephus ſays, it was the cuſtom to make a vow of thirty days. There is no particular time preſcribed for the vow of the Nazarite in the law of Moſes. And it is my opinion, that the only reaſon of Joſephus's mentioning this particular number here, was, becauſe this happened to be the term of Bernice's vow, of which he had occaſion to ſpeak.

There may be a difficulty raiſed with reference to Paul's vow at Cenchrea: Becauſe the Jewiſh writers ſay, that a Nazarite ought not to be out of the land of Iſrael; Nazir iii. 6. Reland. and in the law of Moſes it is ſaid: "The Nazarite ſhall ſhave the head of his ſeparation, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation," Numb. vi. 18. This is ſome difficulty: But I am very much inclined to think, that, notwithſtanding all their zeal, they did at this time diſpenſe with the exactneſs of many things required in the law of Moſes. It ſeems to be the neceſſary conſequence of their living, as there now did great numbers of them, at a vaſt diſtance from Jeruſalem. Was there any law more expreſs than this; "Three times in a year ſhall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place that he ſhall chooſe?" Deut. xvi. 16. Exod. xxiii. 17. But this they could not do who lived in Italy or Perſia.

Moreover, it ſeems there is a rule in the Jewiſh books, "that they who make the vow of the Nazarite out of the land of Iſrael ſhall go into it to compleat the vow," Eduioth iv. 11. ap Reland. This will go a great way towards ſolving the difficulty, if it will but be allowed, that this was the reaſon of Paul's great concern to keep the next feaſt at Jeruſalem. Thus Luke's account ſtands. After Paul was come to Corinth. —— "Then ſpake the Lord to Paul in the night by a viſion, be not afraid, but ſpeak and hold not thy peace. For I am with thee; and no man ſhall ſet on thee, to hurt thee. —— And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made inſurrection with one accord againſt Paul; and brought him to the judgment-ſeat." Paul was now in a great danger, and was delivered, as appears from the context, ver. 9.

In which relation there is nothing that contradicts the ſuppoſition, that Paul's vow was the occaſion of his going to Jeruſalem at this time; or in other words, that he went thither to compleat his vow, and offer the appointed ſacrifices; but there is a great deal to countenance it. The Lord had appeared to Paul, and promiſed to ſtand by him. Paul had actually been in a great danger, and received a very ſignal deliverance. It is likely, that at this ſeaſon, or ſoon after, he made a vow; and perhaps had made the engagement to take the vow, when the Lord appeared to him.

The account of his ſetting out from Corinth, and going to Syria, begins with the mention of the vow; and Paul makes all poſſible expedition to get to Jeruſalem. When he comes thither he makes no long ſtay: And the ſaluting the Church could not be the principal end of this journey, for that imports no more than a compliment of civility. Luke, it is true, does not mention expreſly any thing, which Paul did at Jeruſalem, beſide ſaluting the Church: But there was no neceſſity he ſhould. The occaſion of his going thither appears in the beginning of the account. And it is likely, that this was then ſo well underſtood, that he could not be more particular without an unneceſſary repetition. Throw away this deſign, and Luke has been guilty of a very great omiſſion; and, tho' Paul was in great haſte to get to Jeruſalem, there is no hint at all, what was aimed at in the journey. Take in this deſign, and then we have here a compleat ſtory.

It is true, Paul ſays: "I muſt by all means keep this feaſt that cometh, in Jeruſalem." But the feaſt-time was not the only reaſon, becauſe Paul did not keep every feaſt there. There was ſome particular inducement to this feaſt; which ſeems to me to be this: Paul was obliged, on the account of his vow, to go to Jeruſalem about this time. And, a feaſt then approaching, it was certainly moſt eligible to be there at that ſeaſon.

I have taken no notice of Grotius's opinion, who thought it was Aquila, and not Paul, who had this vow at Cenchrea: Becauſe, though there may be ſome ambiguity in the words themſelves; yet the whole thread of Luke's narration render it much more probable, if not certain, that Paul is the perſon ſpoken of. And learned men ſeem to be generally convinced of it.

The vow at Cenchrea, whether Paul's or Aquila's, and the four men at Jeruſalem who had a vow, are an argument that this piece of devotion was not uncommon among the Jews at this time. Joſephus has aſſured us expreſly it was not. But there is ſomething very particular in the advice given to Paul, namely, that he ſhould take theſe men, men, and be at charges with them, that they may ſhave their heads, Acts xxi. 24. This may incline us to ſuppoſe, that it was an uſual thing now, for zealous men, who had it in their power, to bear the whole, or at leaſt a part of the charges, which a Nazarite was to be at, when his vow was expired. It ſeems to have been a pretty heavy offering which was required of them. Perhaps this might give riſe to this cuſtom: But whatever was the reaſon of it, it appears to have been a common practiſe.

The emperor Claudius, in the beginning of his reign, made Herod Agrippa king of all Judea. "And he (Joſephus ſays) as it was very likely for one to do, who had had ſo conſiderable an advancement, made all the expedition he could into his kingdom; and coming to Jeruſalem, he offered up ſacrifices of thankſgiving, and omitted nothing that was preſcribed by the law. For which reaſon, he alſo order'd a good number of Nazarites to be ſhaved." Joſ. Ant. xix. c. vi.

And here we have a remarkable agreement between the ſtile of Luke and Joſephus. Luke does not ſay.——Be at charges with them, that they may perform ſacrifices, or make their offerings, but that they may ſhave their heads. And we learn from Joſephus, that this was the common phraſe among the Jews, at that time.

We ſee likewiſe, how very proper this advice given by the brethren was to anſwer the purpoſe, for which it was intended. It ſeems to have been a popular action: For, it was one of thoſe things by which Agrippa obliged the Jews to his intereſt, when he came to take poſſeſſion of the kingdom.

CHAP. XIX.

6 The Holy Ghoſt is given by Paul's hands. 9 The Jews blaſpheme his doctrine, which is confirmed by miracles. 13 The Jewiſh exorciſts, 16 are beaten by the devil. 19 Conjuring books are burnt. 24 Demetrius, for love of gain, raiſeth an uprore againſt Paul, 25 which is appeaſed by the town-clerk.

AND it came to paſs, that while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having paſſed through the upper coaſts, came to Epheſus: and finding certain diſciples,

2 He ſaid unto them, Have ye received the holy Ghoſt ſince ye believed? And they ſaid unto him, We have not ſo much as heard whether there be any holy Ghoſt.

3 And he ſaid unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they ſaid, Unto Johns baptiſm.

4 Then ſaid Paul, John verily baptized with the baptiſm of repentance, ſaying unto the people, That they ſhould believe on him which ſhould come after him, that is, on Chriſt Jeſus.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus.

6 And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the holy Ghoſt came on them; and they ſpake with tongues, and propheſied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

8 And he went into the ſynagogue, and ſpake boldly for the ſpace of three months, diſputing and perſwading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

9 But when divers were hardned, and believed not, but ſpake evil of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and ſeparated the diſciples, diſputing daily in the ſchool of one Tyrannus.

10 And this continued by the ſpace of two years; ſo that all they which dwelt in Aſia, heard the word of the Lord Jeſus, both Jews and Greeks.

11 And God wrought ſpecial miracles by the hands of Paul:

12 So that from his body were brought unto the ſick, handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diſeaſes departed from them, and the evil ſpirits went out of them.

13 ¶ Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorciſts, took upon them to call over them which had evil ſpirits, the name of the Lord Jeſus, ſaying, We adjure you by Jeſus whom Paul preacheth.

14 And there were ſeven ſons of one Sceva a Jew, and chief of the prieſts, which did ſo.

15 And the evil ſpirit anſwered and ſaid, Jeſus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

16 And the man in whom the evil ſpirit was, leapt on them, and overcame them, and prevailed againſt them, ſo that they fled out of that houſe naked and wounded.

17 And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks alſo dwelling at Epheſus; and fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jeſus was magnified.

18 And many that believed came, and confeſſed, and ſhewed their deeds.

19 Many alſo of them which uſed curious arts, brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thouſand pieces of ſilver.

20 So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.

21 ¶ After theſe things were ended, Paul purpoſed in the ſpirit, when he had paſſed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jeruſalem, ſaying, After I have been there, I muſt alſo ſee Rome.

22 So he ſent into Macedonia two of them that miniſtred unto him, Timotheus and Eraſtus; but he himſelf ſtayed in Aſia for a ſeaſon.

23 And the ſame time there aroſe no ſmall ſtir about that way.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a ſilver-ſmith, which made ſilver ſhrines for Diana, brought no ſmall gain unto the craftſmen.

25 Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and ſaid, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth:

26 Moreover, ye ſee and hear, that not alone at Epheſus, but almoſt throughout all Aſia, this Paul hath perſwaded and turned away much people, ſaying, that they be no gods which are made with hands:

27 So that not only this our craft is in danger to be ſet at nought; but alſo that the temple of the great goddeſs Diana ſhould be deſpiſed, and her magnificence ſhould be deſtroyed, whom all Aſia, and the world worſhippeth.

28 And when they heard theſe ſayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, ſaying, Great is Diana of the Epheſians.

29 And the whole city was filled with confuſion: and having caught Gaius and Ariſtarchus, men of Macedonia, Pauls companions in travel, they ruſhed with one accord into the theatre.

30 And when Paul would have entred in unto the people, the diſciples ſuffered him not.

31 And certain of the chief of Aſia, which were his friends, ſent unto him, deſiring him that he would not adventure himſelf into the theatre.

32 Some therefore cried one thing, and ſome another: for the aſſembly was confuſed, and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander beckned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the ſpace of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Epheſians.

35 And when the town-clerk had appeaſed the people, he ſaid, Ye men of Epheſus, what man is there, that knoweth not how that the city of the Epheſians is a worſhipper of the great goddeſs Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that theſe things cannot be ſpoken againſt, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing raſhly.

37 For ye have brought hither theſe men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blaſphemers of your goddeſs.

38 Wherefore, if Demetrius and the craftſmen which are with him, have a matter againſt any man, the law is open, and there are deputies; let them implead one another.

39 But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters, it ſhall be determined in a lawful aſſembly.

40 For we are in danger to be called in queſtion for this days uprore, there being no cauſe whereby we may give an account of this concourſe.

41 And when he had thus ſpoken, he diſmiſſed the aſſembly.

Ver. 1. —— The upper coaſts.] Of Aſia, which geographers divided into two parts, the northern or upper coaſts; and the ſouthern or lower coaſts. See 1 Macc. iii. 37. and vi. 1.

Ver. 2.——Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt?] i. e. The gift of prophecy: For this is the Jewiſh import of the Holy Ghoſt, being not given, nor to be given 'till Jeſus was glorified, John vii. 39. when therefore they ſay, we have not ſo much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghoſt, their meaning is, we have not as yet heard that the gift of propheſy, which for the ſpace of four hundred years, had been reſtrained from the Jewiſh Church, was yet reſtored: Now, that which rendered them thus unacquainted with this effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt was this; that as Apollos had left Jeruſalem, and gone to Alexandria, before the miraculous effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles, at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, ſo had they alſo done, and had been travelling into other parts of the world, where the Goſpel had not yet been planted.

Ver. 4.—John verily baptized, &c.] See Matt. iii. 11.

Ver. 5. ——They were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus.] From the context it is plain, that theſe perſons had been baptized unto repentance; but that was not, we ſee, ſufficient to ſave their ſouls: For beſides repentance, there is need of faith in the Lord Jeſus; and though John was a Prophet; yet, becauſe he was not commiſſioned to baptize mankind into the Goſpel-covenant, his baptiſm was not ſufficient to ſalvation. So that from this Scripture we learn, that though any perſon may, by pious exhortations and inſtruction, endeavour to bring men to repentance, yet none but a commiſſioned miniſter can be warranted to baptize thoſe that repent, into the covenant of grace and faith in Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore I ſhall in this place, by way of diſſertation, enquire who are impowered to baptize in the Chriſtian Church.

2. Into whoſe name all perſons are to be baptized, for the attainment of everlaſting ſalvation.

1. Our bleſſed Saviour having juſt finiſhed the great work of our redemption, and about to aſcend up again to his Father, that he might ſend down the Holy Ghoſt upon men, who ſhould enter into his covenant, delivered a full commiſſion to his diſciples, the Apoſtles impowering them thereby to extend the benefits of his paſſion by baptiſm, as far as to the outmoſt parts of the earth; though his laws and manner of worſhip 'till thoſe days, had been confined by the Lord to the people of Iſrael alone, his tabernacle was at Salem, and his dwelling at Sion. But,

When the Bleſſed Jeſus, the word of God, by whom all men were created, deſcended for the redemption of all mankind, he cauſed the waters of Babylon to extend themſelves as far as thoſe of the univerſal deluge: And as all men had once periſhed by water, ſo they were all once to be ſaved by the ſame element. So

In obedience to this command of Chriſt, his diſciples left their own country and their father's houſe, and travelled over the whole world, at that time diſcovered: They followed the good example of their great maſter in going about doing good, and laying down their lives for the ſalvation of men: For the nations to which they went were ſo barbarous and inhuman, as to give them no other reward than martyrdom, in return for their inſtruction in the way to heaven, and of happineſs. But this blood of theſe holy martyrs proved the ſeed of the Church, which quickly ſpread itſelf over the face of the earth. The Goſpel, like unto the ſun, its emblem, was no ſooner riſen, but it gave light to thoſe which ſat in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death; it paſt into countries far remote, and inacceſſible to the Roman Eagles; and its conqueſts over the ſouls of men were more extenſive than thoſe of that empire over nations and countries.

The commiſſion, which Chriſt gave to his Apoſtles for the execution of this great work, is particularly ſet down and recited by Matthew: Go, teach all nations; baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, Matt. xxviii. 19.

In which words we are to obſerve, that they ſhould be thus tranſlated, go, and diſciple all nations; and not go, and teach, as we commonly read it in Engliſh. As if our Saviour, alluding to a known cuſtom of the Jews (See Lightfoot's Hor. Hæb. ad loc.) had ſaid, go and admit into my Church, and make diſciples of all nations, and that by the ceremony of baptiſm.

Thus we are to underſtand the letter of the commiſſion: And if we look back to the 16th verſe, we ſhall there be informed, that the Apoſtles were eſpecially authorized for that work, who are there called the eleven diſciples—to whom Jeſus ſpake, ſaying; All power is given to me in heaven and earth; go ye therefore, and teach, or diſciple all nations, baptizing them, &c. as if he had ſaid, "My Father hath left the government of the world to me, becauſe I have redeemed it with my blood. I have power to make what covenants and conditions I pleaſe with mankind: I have told you upon what conditions I will confer heaven and happineſs upon men; go ye therefore, and let them all know it, and I give ye power, and none but ye, to admit them into this my new covenant, by baptiſm." It is therefore here plain, let men ſay what they pleaſe to countenance the oppoſition, that the holy Apoſtles of our Lord had power to tranſact the covenant betwixt God and man upon the terms our Bleſſed Lord had preſcribed; and that none other had that power. But ſince our merciful God was pleaſed to extend the benefits of this covenant beyond that age of the world, or that generation of men, we may well ſuppoſe his providence contrived means for the effectual continuance of this power of making ſuch covenants to the end of the world; and this was done by authorizing the Apoſtles to delegate and depute their power to others, in that plain and full commiſſion, as my Father hath ſent me even ſo ſend I you, John xx. 21. i. e. "I give you the ſame authority, which I have received; and as I had power of my father to ſend you forth to preach the Goſpel and baptize every creature, ſo I give you the ſame power to ſend others forth with the ſame commiſſion to ordain ſuch miniſters as ye ſhall judge expedient for the edifying and welfare of my Church." And accordingly we find them delegating ſome of that power to ſeven perſons, in the 6th chapter of the Acts, who afterwards made uſe of it particularly in preaching the Goſpel and baptizing new converts. See Acts vi. 5. And again, in the 13th chapter we find them ſolemnly conſecrating Paul and Barnabas, ſending them forth to convert the Gentiles, though Paul had been before conſecrated to this office, at his miraculous converſion, by the Bleſſed Jeſus himſelf, and now choſen, together with Barnabas, by the Holy Ghoſt; yet they were ordered for our inſtruction, to receive their miſſion from the governours of the Church by the ordinary way of impoſition of hands: It is therefore by this power of delegation, that Sacred Perſons are ſtill continued in the Church, inveſted with authority to tranſact theſe covenants betwixt God and man. Therefore,

Let thoſe who imagine that they have a ſufficient authority to do all theſe things enquire into the validity of their commiſſion. To derive it immediately from heaven, unleſs they can confirm what they ſay by miracles is enthuſiaſtick or deceitful, and what every one elſe may pretend to as well as themſelves, which muſt needs be an occaſion of great diſorder and confuſion in the Church. If they derive it from men, it muſt be from thoſe who had ſuch power of giving it, derived to them from the Apoſtles. For,

Let it be carefully remembred, that the Apoſtles were tenacious of their power and prerogative; and though they indulged the lay-diſciples to look out for, and ſet men of honeſt report before them; yet they did not give up the ſole power of ordaining thoſe honeſt men, ſaying, Look ye out among you ſeven men of honeſt report, &c. whom we may appoint over this buſineſs. And

Finally, let us beſeech God, who has built his Church upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief Corner-ſtone; and into the place of a traitor did chuſe another to be among the number of the twelve Apoſtles; that he would be pleaſed to defend his Church from falſe apoſtles; that we being ordered and guided by faithful and true paſtors, who ſhall diligently teach and baptize the people, they may all at length receive the crown of everlaſting glory, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

The next thing to be enquired after, is the diſtinction between the baptiſm of John to repentance; and the baptiſm through Chriſt unto ſalvation: Or, an examination into whoſe name all nations are to be diſcipled by baptiſm. —You have read the words of the commiſſion, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; but I deſire you to obſerve, that the prepoſition in the original is not in the name, but into the name. To which we are byaſſed by the whole Goſpel-hiſtory, e. g. to baptize in the name of the Holy Trinity, is only to baptize by that authority: But to baptize into the name of it, is of greater ſignification. By the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, is meant, thoſe three glorious, and eternal perſons themſelves, according to the uſual ſtile of Scripture: As to call upon the name of God, is to call upon God, to believe in, to fear, to honour the name of the Lord, is to honour him; ſo when we pray with our Lord, hallowed be thy name, it is the ſame as this; let God be praiſed, or, let all the world praiſe thee, O Father, which art in Heaven. To be baptized therefore into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, is to be baptized into thoſe three glorious Perſons, of which there may be theſe three ſeveral ſignifications.

1. It ſignifies the being baptized in, or into the belief of the Holy Trinity; and this diſtinguiſhes the Chriſtian baptiſm from all others; for the glorious myſtery of the individual and ever-bleſſed Trinity, was not well known before the coming of our Saviour: The Jewiſh proſelytes were baptized into the belief of One God only, without this diſtinction of perſons; the baptiſm of John was into the belief of Chriſt, or the Meſſiah which was to come, (for ſo we read in the 3d of Matthew; John the Baptiſt came preaching in the wilderneſs of Judea, ſaying, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," Matt. iii. 2. i. e. the kingdom of the Meſſiah, which ye have ſo long looked for; and into the belief of this Meſſiah they were then baptized). But thoſe who are initiated with the Chriſtian baptiſm, are diſcipled into the belief of Chriſt, as already come, and of all thoſe great things he did for our ſalvation, and particularly his ſending down the Holy Ghoſt; by which the whole myſtery of Godhead is in ſome meaſure unveiled, but encompaſſed with a glory too bright and dazling for mortal eyes to behold. The belief of theſe myſteries, every perſon to be baptized, is obliged to make profeſſion of before his baptiſm, either by himſelf, or by his proxy: So the Eunuch in the 8th chapter of the Acts made profeſſion of his faith before Philip would baptize him, Acts viii. 37. Philip inſiſted indeed mainly on the moſt difficult article, That the man Chriſt Jeſus, who lived and died upon earth, was likewiſe the Son of God; and on which article the great benefit of baptiſm depends, i. e. the remiſſion of ſins. But there is no doubt to be made that Philip baptized him into the belief of the Trinity, according to the late command of the Bleſſed Jeſus.

The Creeds of the ancient Church were very ſhort, and according was the belief of the perſons ſo to be baptized. So under the earlieſt date of the Apoſtolic conſtitutions, they are ſaid to be baptized into the name of the Father who ſent, the Son who came, and the Holy Ghoſt who witneſſed, Conſt. Apoſt. lib. iii. cap. 17. Some while after in Tertullian's time, this rule of faith was a little more explicit, viz. to believe in one God Almighty, Maker of the world, and in his Son Jeſus Chriſt born of the Virgin Mary, crucified under Pontius Pilate, raiſed from the dead the third day, received in Heaven, who ſits at the right hand of the Father, and ſhall come to judge the living and the dead by the reſurrection of the fleſh, Tertul. de præſcr. adv. hereticos.

Our Creeds into which we are baptized, are ſtill the ſame in ſubſtance, tho' they differ in form; but that which is called the Apoſtles Creed, is very ancient, and has ſuffered little alteration ſince it was firſt compil'd. In their ſhort Creeds was contained as much as in our larger ones, tho' it was not expreſs'd; and the Eunuch's belief in Chriſt, juſt now mentioned, was virtually the belief of the Whole Trinity, according to that excellent explication of Irenæus: In the name of Chriſt is underſtood, the perſon who was anointed, and the unction it ſelf, Irenæus l. iii. c. 20. i. e. Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt.

2. A ſecond ſignification of being baptized in, or into the Name of the Holy Trinity, is, the being dedicated and devoted to the ſervice of thoſe three Glorious Perſons; to own them only for our Lord and Maſter, and to promiſe them the whole ſervice of our lives, with the command of the faculties of our ſouls and bodies: And here our Saviour's maxim, That no man can ſerve two maſters, Matt. vi. 24. has no place; nor need we fear any diſtraction in our ſervice, becauſe we are dedicated to the three perſons of the Incomprehenſible Godhead, for theſe three are one. He, who devotes himſelf to the ſervice of the Bleſſed Jeſus, need not fear any jealouſy or diſpleaſure in the other two Glorious Perſons, ſince there is an intire, an incomprehenſible union betwixt them, far ſtricter than is that of ſoul and body; ſuch as is as far above our comprehenſion, as the nature of the Godhead exceeds that of its creatures.

3. The 3d and laſt ſignification of being baptized in, or into the name of the Holy Trinity, is, our being baptized into their guidance and direction. So the children of Iſrael are ſaid to be baptized unto Moſes, or into Moſes, 1 Cor. x. 12. All our fathers, ſaith the Apoſtle, were baptized unto Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea, i. e. They were by the miracles of the cloud which overſhadowed them, and the dividing of the waters in the Red-ſea, aſſured that Moſes was that miniſter of God, to whoſe guidance and direction they were committed: And this was a kind of baptizing them into the doctrine he taught. So 'tis ſaid of them, that after they had ſeen thoſe great miracles, they believed the Lord, and his ſervant Moſes, Exod. xiv. 13. They committed themſelves with confidence to his governance, as to the ſervant of God. So that, we who are baptized into the Holy Trinity, are to ſubmit to their doctrine, as well as their dominion. We are to own no truths, but what proceeds from the Father, are delivered by the Son, and explained or confirmed by the Holy Ghoſt. They are the only authors of our religion; and we profeſs our ſelves as Chriſtians to be guided by the dictates of God, and not of men: Thus Paul declares, 1 Cor. i. 15. "That he baptized no man in, or into his own name," i. e. he baptized no man into the belief of his doctrine, as diſtinct from that of Chriſt; and if an Angel from Heaven ſhould come and preach any other doctrine, than that we have already been baptized into, we ought to refuſe it.

This is the Catholick Faith, eaſy, agreeable to Scripture, and promoting holineſs of life, which we ought all eagerly to contend for, by a firm adherence to its profeſſion; avoiding the dubious diſputations of weak or perverſe minds, who would make it a bone of contention in the Chriſtian Church, and thereby overthrow the faith of ſome. —— As to the validity of Lay-baptiſm, and the neceſſity of Infant-baptiſm, I intend to treat of them hereafter.

Ver. 8. —— Concerning the kingdom of God.] i. e. The Goſpel of Chriſt, by which we are taught how to obtain the kingdom of God in Heaven.

Ver. 9. —— Of that way.] Of Chriſtianity, that is, the way to eternal life. This was in the year 57.

Ver. 13. —— Exorciſts] Or, conjurers of Devils, whereof ſome among the Jews made a trade, without any manner of proof that they did it by God's order, or any Divine calling, but only for gain, as that word going about ſignifieth. This cuſtom is yet kept up by the Church of Rome, who have an order called the order of Exorciſt.

Ver. 18. —— Confeſſed.] Acknowledged their own wicked practices.

Ver. 24. —— Silver ſhrines.] Or, medals of ſilver, bearing the image of Diana, the Heathen goddeſs. This cuſtom is in practice among the Romaniſts, who make ſhrines or medals of their Saints, to propagate their honour and worſhip, and thereby their private gain.

Ver. 35. —— The image that fell down from Jupiter.] This was a fable invented to aggrandize the fame of their goddeſs, and the better to ſeduce the people, whom they thereby endeavoured to perſwade, that the image they worſhipped, was made in Heaven.

Ver. 40. —— We are in danger, &c.] See the Introduction.

CHAP. XX.

1 Paul goeth to Macedonia. 7 He celebrateth the Lord's Supper, and preacheth. Eutychus, having fallen down dead, 10 is raiſed to life. 17 At Miletus he calleth the elders together, telleth them what ſhall befal to himſelf, 28 committeth God's flock to them, 29 warneth them of falſe teachers, 32 commendeth them to God, 36 prayeth with them, and goeth his way.

AND after the uprore was ceaſed, Paul called unto him the diſciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia.

2 And when he had gone over thoſe parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece.

3 And there abode three months: and when the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to ſail into Syria, he purpoſed to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Aſia, Sopater of Berea; and of the Theſſalonians, Ariſtarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Aſia, Tychicus and Trophimus.

5 Theſe going before, tarried for us at Troas.

6 And we ſailed away from Philippi, after the Days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five Days, where we abode ſeven days.

7 And upon the firſt day of the week, when the diſciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow, and continued his ſpeech until midnight.

8 And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together.

9 And there ſat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep ſleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he ſunk down with ſleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

10 And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him, ſaid, Trouble not your ſelves; for his life is in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, ſo he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

13 ¶ And we went before to ſhip, and ſailed unto Aſſos, there intending to take in Paul: for ſo had he appointed, minding himſelf to go afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Aſſos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we ſailed thence, and came the next day over againſt Chios; and the next day we arived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to ſail by Epheſus, becauſe he would not ſpend the time in Aſia: for he haſted, if it were poſſible for him, to be at Jeruſalem the day of Pentecoſt.

17 ¶ And from Miletus he ſent to Epheſus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he ſaid unto them, Ye know, from the firſt day that I came into Aſia, after what manner I have been with you at all ſeaſons,

19 Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations which befel me by the lying in wait of the Jews:

20 And how I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have ſhewed you, and have taught you publickly, and from houſe to houſe,

21 Teſtifying both to the Jews, and alſo to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

22 And now behold, I go bound in the ſpirit unto Jeruſalem, not knowing the things that ſhall befal me there.

23 Save that the Holy Ghoſt witneſſeth in every city, ſaying, That bonds and afflictions abide me.

24 But none of theſe things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myſelf, ſo that I might finiſh my courſe with joy, and the miniſtry which I have received of the Lord Jeſus, to teſtify the goſpel of the grace of God.

25 And now behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, ſhall ſee my face no more.

26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men.

27 For I have not ſhunned to declare unto you all the counſel of God.

28 ¶ Take heed therefore unto your ſelves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own blood.

29 For I know this, that after my departing, ſhall grievous wolves enter in among you, not ſparing the flock.

30 Alſo of your own ſelves ſhall men ariſe, ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away diſciples after them.

31 Therefore watch, and remember that by the ſpace of three years I ceaſed not to warn every one night and day with tears.

32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are ſanctified.

33 I have coveted no mans ſilver, or gold, or apparel.

34 Yea, you your ſelves know, that theſe hands have miniſtred unto my neceſſities, and to them that were with me.

35 I have ſhewed you all things, how that ſo labouring ye ought to ſupport the weak; and to remember the words of the Lord Jeſus, how he ſaid, It is more bleſſed to give than to receive.

36 ¶ And when he had thus ſpoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all.

37 And they all wept ſore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kiſſed him,

38 Sorrowing moſt of all for the words which he ſpake, that they ſhould ſee his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ſhip.

Ver. 2. And when he was gone over thoſe parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece.] This was about the year of our Lord 60.

Ver. 7.——Upon the firſt day of the week.] Which we ſtile Sunday. See 1 Cor. xvi. 2. and Revel. i. 10.

Ver. 7.——The diſciples came together.] The Chriſtians held their publick aſſembly, as the Jews were wont on the Saturday, or ſeventh day, to perform their worſhip with one conſent unto the Lord, eſpecially to receive the communion of the body and blood of Chriſt; and therefore it is added in this place, to break bread, &c.

——To break bread.] i. e. To celebrate the ſacrament of the Lord's Supper, together with the meal of charity. See Acts xi. 42. Now, ſays Diodati, under this principal part, which terminates all the reſt, we are to underſtand all thoſe parts that went before, as prayers, praiſes, expounding of the word of God, &c.

Ver. 8.——Many lights.] This particular ſeems to be added by way of confutation of that Pagan ſlander, which reported maliciouſly, that the Chriſtians on theſe occaſions met to perpetrate certain abominations, which they were aſhamed the world ſhould ſee or know. So that when they met together to break bread, and to hear the word of God, they lighted up many lights, if it happened to be dark, that they might take off the edge of ſo baſe an imputation, by expoſing themſelves to the view of the curious.

Ver. 23.——Witneſſeth.] By certain Prophets. See xxi. 4, — 10.

Ver. 26.——I am pure from the blood of all men.] Or, I have done what laid in me for your ſalvation; ſo that if any of you periſh, the crime lies at his own door; ſee Ezek. iii. 18, 20. Acts xviii. 6.

Ver. 28.——Over which the Holy Ghoſt hath made you overſeers, to feed the Church of God, &c.] The overſeers mentioned here, were ſuch as had the overſight of all the flock of Chriſt at Epheſus, and were made overſeers thereof by the Holy Ghoſt. They were ſuch elders as were ordained by the Apoſtles in every Church, Acts xiv. 23. ſuch as Paul ordered Titus to ordain in every city, to have the overſeeing of ſuch a flock only, as they might be able to feed, take care of, and account for. Thus

None have a real right to be overſeers of the flock of Chriſt, but thoſe that are made ſuch by the Holy Ghoſt. Others may pretend to a right, without ever being able to make it good; but where the Holy Ghoſt makes overſeers, the right is real, and the duty plain. And this is certainly the meaning of that collect in our Prayer-Book, appointed to be ſaid for thoſe that are to be admitted into holy orders.——At this time ſo guide and govern the minds of thy ſervants the Biſhops and Paſtors of thy flock, that they may lay hands ſuddenly on no man, &c. But, as it may be queried, how the Holy Ghoſt makes men overſeers of the Church of God, let us proceed, and ſhew how the Holy Ghoſt made overſeers of the flock at the firſt ſpreading of Chriſtianity. The publiſhing the everlaſting Goſpel, and taking the charge of a number of profeſſing Chriſtians, and keeping up all ordinances among them, was then reckoned one of the greateſt works a man could engage in. The Holy Ghoſt at that time openly concerned himſelf in this matter. Men did not go forth to preach of their own heads, or merely at the perſuaſion of well-meaning perſons that had a good opinion of them, but as ſent of the Holy Ghoſt. Thus we read, that when "certain Prophets and teachers that were in the Church at Antioch, miniſtred to the Lord, and faſted, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid, ſeparate unto me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them;" Acts xiii. 1, 2. and they did ſo: And then it is added, That they were ſent forth by the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 4. And as to thoſe elders of Epheſus, who are ſpoken to in my text, the Holy Ghoſt made them overſeers of the flock, by his own ſpecial direction, and the extraordinary gifts with which he furniſhed them. For we read, that at Paul's firſt coming to Epheſus, he having laid his hands upon twelve men, the Holy Ghoſt fell on them, and they ſpake with tongues, and propheſied, Acts xix. 6, 7. By thus diſtinguiſhing them, the Holy Ghoſt, as it were, ſet them apart for overſeers of others. He this way ſet his mark upon them, as perſons whom he deſigned for the Sacred Miniſtry. And therefore, among other gifts, which were common in the Primitive Church, ſeveral of which are reckoned up at once by Paul, one that he mentions is the diſcerning of ſpirits, 1 Cor. xii. 8, &c. by which I apprehend is meant, not only a capacity of ſatisfactorily diſcerning, whether men pretending to the ſpirit ſpake from God or no? But alſo a judgment to diſcern the ſpirits of men, ſo as to ſee their qualifications for the Sacred Miniſtry; upon which they were choſen, and fixed on for that work and office. This was very common, at the firſt riſe of Chriſtianity. We have ſeveral hints that look that way in the writings of the New Teſtament. Thus Timothy that was made a ſpecial miniſter, and was exceeding ſerviceable in ſpreading of the Goſpel, had Prophecies that went before, concerning him; and is ſaid to have had a gift given him by Prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery; ſee 1 Tim. i. 18. iv. 4. From which two hints, it ſeems plain that Timothy was ordained, by the expreſs appointment of ſome ſervants of God who could diſcern ſpirits, and were able to foretel, how eminently uſeful he would be in that capacity; and 'tis not unlikely, but that had it not been for ſomething of this nature, Paul, and his brethren, might have been afraid of calling Timothy to ſo high an office as that of an Evangeliſt, while he was ſo very young; ſee alſo the Rubrick before the ordering of Deacons.

And if we'll take the pains to conſult the writers who firſt ſucceeded in the Chriſtian Church, after the New Teſtament was finiſhed, we may meet with ſeveral paſſages to the ſame purpoſe. Thus Clement, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, (which the canonical Scriptures alone being excepted, is the moſt ancient piece of Chriſtianity we have remaining.) tells us, That the Apoſtles preaching about in countries and cities, conſtituted their firſt-fruits for Biſhops and Deacons over thoſe who ſhould believe, when they had try'd them by the Spirit. And Clement of Alexandria, ſays, that "John ordained thoſe to be of the Clergy, that were ſignified to him by the Spirit." And indeed, which way could the Holy Ghoſt better ſignify his mind, that ſuch and ſuch perſons as he pitched upon ſhould be overſeers of the flock, than by enabling ſome to diſcern their fitneſs, and conferring on them ſuch extraordinary gifts, as were ſuitable to the extraordinary circumſtances they were then in. However, nothing can be plainer, than that the agency of the Holy Ghoſt was then very viſible and conſpicuous. But,

Let us now ſee what hand the Holy Ghoſt has had in making men overſeers of the flock, in the ages that have ſince run out; and how he does it ſtill. This extraordinary agency of his, I have been mentioning, did not laſt long. It ceaſed by degrees, as the Church came to be ſettled: And yet we have no reaſon to imagine, that the Bleſſed Spirit hereupon withdrew either his preſence or influence, or ceaſed to have a concern for the Church and a miniſtry in it. But he has from time to time, inclined ſome to the office of the Sacred Miniſtry, he has qualified them for it, and called them forth to it, and given them an opportunity for the exerciſe of it, which was as much as could be expected from him, in order to the making perſons overſeers of the flock. And thus much he does to this very day.

1. He has from time to time inclined ſome to the office of the miniſtry, to make choice of it for the buſineſs of their lives. And when he inclined perſons to make choice of this ſervice, at a time when they might eaſily foreſee they muſt this way neceſſarily come to ſtand in the front of the battle againſt Pagan perſecutors, and be the chief butts of their rage and malice, and run the hazard of life, and liberty, and all that could be dear to them, it was a good ſign their inclination was owing to his agency and influence; ſince no men can naturally love to be expoſed to extremities. Afterwards it muſt be owned, when the empire came to ſmile upon the Church, and the miniſtry was the way to wealth, and honour, and power, it is not, it cannot be ſurprizing, it ſhould be courted by many out of ſecular ends, and a number ſhould be for it, to whoſe hearts the Holy Ghoſt had little or no acceſs: But where any have been, or are inclined to that Sacred Office out of love to the work of it, (and that not as men have modelled it, but as God has regulated it in his word ;) and out of concern for the flock to be overſeen, and an apprehenſion of being likely to bring more glory to God in this way, than by acting in any other capacity ; I cannot ſee how an inclination of this ſort can be from any but the Holy Ghoſt. At leaſt, this is the avowed ſenſe of the Church of England by law eſtabliſhed, in which, at the receiving the firſt of the three orders, he that officiates, puts this queſtion to every candidate ; Do you truſt that you are inwardly moved by the Holy Ghoſt, to take upon you this office and miniſtration, to ſerve God for the promoting of his glory, and the edifying of his people? The ordain and anſwers, I truſt ſo. Then the ordainer ſays, receive the Holy Ghoſt.

2. As the Holy Ghoſt has from time to time inclined ſome to the miniſtry, ſo has he ſuitably qualified them for it : And without this, a bare inclination would ſignify nothing. Where an inclination this way has been of his producing, he has fitted them for what he has inclined them to ; giving them that knowledge in Divine Things, by a bleſſing upon their endeavours after it, and that furniture in all reſpects, that was requiſite to fit them for the work of this office, in taking the overſight of the flock of Chriſt. And if the ſkill of Bezaleel and Aholiab of old, when they were furniſhed with wiſdom and underſtanding, and knowledge in all manner of workmanſhip, that was requiſite for the framing and adorning the material tabernacle that was reared up for the Divine Service in the wilderneſs, was aſcribed to the Spirit of God, Exod. xxxi. 3—6. how much more fit is it, that any endowments of mind that help to qualify perſons to act as Goſpel-miniſters, and in that capacity to rear up living temples to the ever-living God, ſhould be aſcribed to the ſame ſpirit, who we may be aſſured has a much greater concern in this latter caſe, than he had in the former. And I ſee not why we ſhould ſcruple ſaying, he makes perſons Overſeers of the flock, when he qualifies them with ſuch gifts as render them fit for the work of the office, which is a plain ſignification of his mind, that laying other cares apart, he'd have them Overſeers of the flock, which he hath inclined them to, and fitted them for.

3. As the Holy Ghoſt has from one time to another inclined ſome perſons to the office of the miniſtry, and qualified them for it, ſo has he alſo called them forth to it. This he has done by giving them opportunity for a ſolemn inveſtiture in ordination, when their commiſſion has been delivered to them, upon their declared readineſs to accept ſuch an office, and the truſt which it implies and carries in it, upon the terms laid down in the Word of God. This ordination is what in ſeveral ages, according to different ſchemes, there has been a diverſity of ſentiments about. Some have reckoned it to be much like an inſerting the names of ſuch and ſuch particular perſons in the liſt or regiſter of publick officers : Others look on it to be a ſolemn inveſtiture in the office, upon proof given of a concurrence of all the qualifications that are neceſſary to fit men for it : While others have apprehended it to amount to no more than a publick declaration made by the ordainers of their ſatisfaction, in the qualifications, and as to the fitneſs of the parties concerned for what they undertake ; and ſo they have imagined it might be done at a diſtance, as well as nigh at hand, and by letter, as well as by word of mouth, or by the uſe of impoſition of hands, or any other outward and viſible ſign. This, joined with ſerious and hearty prayers for a bleſſing from Heaven, is all that they can allow to ordination. Without giving my ſelf leave to enter at all upon the reaſons that are alledged on one ſide or the other in this debate, I think the Holy Ghoſt may without any impropriety, be ſaid to make perſons Overſeers or Miniſters of the flock of Chriſt, when he directs and influences the minds of others that have been and are faithful in the ſame office, to ſuch an approbation of thoſe that offer as candidates, as that they readily admit them into the ſame office with themſelves, and though they pretend not to give power, (which muſt come from him to whom all power is given, in Heaven and in earth, Matt. xxviii. 28.) yet declare them miniſters, and do all that in them lies to procure their labours acceptance, which is one thing that is unqueſtionably neceſſary to their ſucceſs. But then it ſhould be noted, that this holds only upon ſuppoſition, that they really have the qualifications that are neceſſary to their fitneſs. For the ableſt miniſters that are, can no more make perſons miniſters, by declaring or proclaiming them ſuch, if they are really unqualified, than they could do it, if they were altogether uninclined.

CHAP. XXI.

Paul will not by any means be diſſwaded from going to Jeruſalem. 9 Philips daughters Propheteſſes. 17 Paul cometh to Jeruſalem : 27 where he is apprehended, and in great danger, 31 but by the chief captain is reſcued, and permitted to ſpeak to the people.

AND it came to paſs, that after we were gotten from them, and had lanched, we came with a ſtraight courſe unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara.

2 And finding a ſhip ſailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and ſet forth.

3 Now when we had diſcovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and ſailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre : for there the ſhip was to unlade her burden.

4 And finding diſciples, we tarried there ſeven days : who ſaid to Paul through the Spirit, that he ſhould not go up to Jeruſalem.

5 And when we had accompliſhed thoſe days we departed, and went our way, and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city : and we kneeled down on the ſhore, and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ſhip ; and they returned home again.

7 And when we had finiſhed our courſe from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and ſaluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day we that were of Pauls company departed, and came unto Ceſarea ; and we entred into the houſe of Philip the evangeliſt, (which was one of the ſeven) and abode with him.

9 And the ſame man had four daughters, virgins, which did propheſy.

10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet named Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Pauls girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the Holy Ghoſt, So ſhall the Jews at Jeruſalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and ſhall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard theſe things, both we and they of that place, beſought him not to go up to Jeruſalem.

13 Then Paul anſwered, What mean ye to weep, and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but alſo to die at Jeruſalem for the name of the Lord Jeſus.

14 And when he would not be perſwaded, we ceaſed, ſaying, The will of the Lord be done.

15 And after thoſe days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jeruſalem.

16 There went with us alſo certain of the diſciples of Ceſarea, and brought with them one Mnaſon of Cyprus, an old diſciple, with whom we ſhould lodge.

17 And when we were come to Jeruſalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders were preſent.

19 And when he had ſaluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his miniſtry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and ſaid unto him, Thou ſeeſt, brother, how many thouſands of Jews there are which believe, and they are all zealous of the law.

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teacheſt all the Jews which are among the Gentiles, to forſake Moſes, ſaying, That they ought not to circumciſe their children, neither to walk after the cuſtoms.

22 What is it therefore? the multitude muſt needs come together: for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do therefore this that we ſay to thee, we have four men which have a vow on them;

24 Them take, and purify thy ſelf with them, and be at charges with them, that they may ſhave their heads: and all may know, that thoſe things whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing, but that thou thy ſelf alſo walkeſt orderly, and keepeſt the law.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, we have written and concluded, that they obſerve no ſuch thing, ſave only that they keep themſelves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from ſtrangled, and from fornication.

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himſelf with them, entred into the temple, to ſignify the accompliſhment of the days of purification, until that an offering ſhould be offered for every one of them.

27 And when the ſeven days were almoſt ended, the Jews which were of Aſia, when they ſaw him in the temple, ſtirred up all the people, and laid hands on him,

28 Cyring out, Men of Iſrael, help: this is the man that teacheth all men every where againſt the people, and the law, and this place: and farther, brought Greeks alſo into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

29 (For they had ſeen before with him in the city, Trophimus an Epheſian, whom they ſuppoſed that Paul had brought into the temple)

30 And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were ſhut.

31 And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jeruſalem was in an uprore.

32 Who immediately took ſoldiers, and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they ſaw the chief captain and the ſoldiers, they left beating of Paul.

33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done.

34 And ſome cried one thing, ſome another among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the caſtle.

35 And when he came upon the ſtairs, ſo it was, that he was born of the ſoldiers for the violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away with him.

37 And as Paul was to be led into the caſtle, he ſaid unto the chief captain, May I ſpeak unto thee? Who ſaid, Canſt thou ſpeak Greek?

38 Art not thou that Egyptian which before theſe days madeſt an uprore, and leddeſt out into the wilderneſs four thouſand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul ſaid, I am a man which am a Jew of Tarſus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and I beſeech thee, ſuffer me to ſpeak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him licence, Paul ſtood on the ſtairs, and beckned with the hand unto the people: and when there was made a great ſilence, he ſpake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, ſaying,

Ver. 18.——Unto James.] The Biſhop, or ſuperintendent of the Church at Jeruſalem.

——All the elders.] Other governors under James.

Ver. 20. ——— Which believe.] That Chriſt is the Meſſiah.

——Zealous of the law.] But cannot reliſh the doctrine which diſanulleth the ceremonies of the law. They are not yet ſufficiently enlightened to perceive, that the law of ceremonies is aboliſhed by the law of grace, through Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 21. And they are informed of thee, that thou teacheſt all the Jews, which are among the Gentiles, to forſake Moſes, &c.] It is to be noted, that James, nor the elders, do not lay this to Paul's charge; they only acquaint him, that ſuch a report was gone out among the people, who were tenacious of the ceremonial law of Moſes; and that report was ill-grounded and falſe. For Paul only taught thoſe, to whom he preached, to make uſe of the liberty, which Chriſt had gained, and to paſs from the ſhadows and figures of the law, to the truth and ſubſtance of the Goſpel; ſee Gal. v. 1. and to put their full truſt and confidence in the ſatisfaction, which Chriſt perfected by his death for all mankind; ſhewing, that holineſs is no where to be found, but in the law of the ſpirit of life, and in new obedience to the moſt perfect law of grace: And as for the reſt, he left all men at liberty to obſerve, or freely to leave the ceremonial laws, as things indifferent, and no ways binding to thoſe that were ſubjects to the perfect law of liberty; ſee Acts xvi. 3. xviii. 18. Gal. ii. 3.

Ver. 22. What is it therefore?] Or, therefore mind what it is we adviſe thee to do. For, the Church of Jeruſalem foreſtalled by theſe ſiniſter relations, will ſurely gather together into a body, knowing of thy arrival, to lay their complaint before us, and to require, that we ſhall apply ſome remedy to prevent ſuch a doctrine, as they pretend thou ſcandalouſly preacheſt. Therefore we direct, that thou appeaſe this their firſt motion by ſome public act agreeable to the law, to root out their opinion; ſee ver. 24.

Ver. 23.——We have four men, which have a vow on them.] i. e. There are four members of our Church, Chriſtians of the Jewiſh nation, who do yet obſerve the ancient ceremonies of the law.

Ver. 24. Them take, &c.] That is to ſay, as thou haſt made the ſame vow at Cenchrea, Acts xviii. 18. now being arrived at Jeruſalem, ſeem to perform it in the temple, by offering of ſacrifices in the manner, or after the cuſtom of the Jews, preparing thy ſelf by external purifications, ſuch as, abſtinence from wine, ſhaving the head; ſee Numb. vi. 13, 14.

——At charges with them.] See Acts xviii. 18.

——All may know.] That all thoſe, who now complain againſt thee, may hear, and be ſatisfied, that thou art not that enemy to the Jewiſh ceremonies, as thou haſt been repreſented.

Ver. 25. — We have written and concluded.] See chap. xv. 20,—29.

Ver. 26. —— Purifying himſelf, &c.] By ceremonial waſhings, faſtings, abſtinences, &c. for the ſpace of ſeven days.

Ver. 31. And as they went about to kill him, &c.] This, of the many, is one inſtance of the Jews private zeal, for their law and their temple. The Jews ſeem by this, and ſuch like examples of a ſtrange kind of zeal, to have made no manner of ſcruple of putting men to death without any the leaſt form of a legal proceſs, when they apprehended any thing ſaid or done, which they judged a diminution of their religion. There were ſeveral attempts of this kind made upon the life of our Bleſſed Saviour; ſee Luke iv. 28, 29. John viii. 59. We have many inſtances of the like attempts againſt Paul the Apoſtle, as we read in Acts xx. 3. which relates a conſpiracy againſt his life firſt concerted by the Jews in Greece, continue, as the text before us relates it, at Jeruſalem, and reſolved upon finally, when they found that the Roman Governor was more vigilant and honourable, than to ſuffer them to execute ſuch an outragious cruelty; ſee Acts chap. xxiii. 10,—15. compared with this text, where we find forty men entred into a conſpiracy to murder Paul in a clandeſtine manner; and they make no ſcruple to declare it to the Jewiſh council, relying on their approbation, which they had. They, as I obſerved, were fruſtrated of this firſt attempt upon Lyſias; but Feſtus was no ſooner come into the province, but they renew the ſame deſign, hoping to ſurpriſe their new governor into a compliance with their fallacious-requeſt.

All which practices, I believe, may be accounted for from the following authorities of Philo, who ſpeaking of a Jew, that had forſook the worſhip of the true God, lays down this principle: "It is highly proper, ſays he, that all, who have a zeal for virtue, ſhould have a right to puniſh with their own hands, without delay, thoſe who are guilty of this crime; not carrying them before a court of judicature, or the council, or any magiſtrate whatſoever; but to indulge the abhorrence of evil, the love of God their minds are filled with, in the immediate puniſhment of theſe impious wretches; reckoning, that they are for that time all things, ſenators, judges, prætors, ſergeants, accuſers, witneſſes, the laws, the people; that nothing hindering, they may without fear eſpouſe the cauſe of piety." Philo de Monarch. lib. 1.

Philo here recommends this conduct toward thoſe that forſake the true God, and he after this illuſtrates his principle from the example of Phineas, Numb. xxv. 7.

Let us next ſee, how Joſephus ſpeaks concerning this point. When he has given the abridgment of the laws of Moſes, he ſays, that Moſes having delivered them, "called together the people, with their wives and their children, their ſlaves being preſent likewiſe: And adjured them to obſerve his laws.—And that if any one of their kindred, or if any city ſhould attempt to alter, or diſſolve the form of government they were under, they ſhould both jointly and ſingly [or publickly and privately] take vengeance of them. And if they were not able to take puniſhment of them, they ſhould however, make it appear, that ſuch things had not been done with their conſent. And the multitude ſwore ſo to do. Joſeph. Hudſ. Antiq. 4. c. 8.

One would think, from what Joſephus here ſays, that they underſtood this obligation, to extend not only to the caſe of idolatry, but to every breach of their laws. If they did ſo, it muſt have occaſioned many extravagant attempts at this time; when, by means of the Roman power, they were unable, in the way of legal proceſſes, to gratify their zeal; which, it is certain, ran very high at this time.

What Joſephus ſays is the more to be regarded, in that, theſe books of his Jewiſh Antiquites, were profeſſedly written by him for the information of the Greeks and Romans. And therefore it cannot be ſuppoſed, he would give a more offenſive view of this tranſaction, than was abſolutely neceſſary to ſatisfy the Jews of thoſe times, who might happen to ſee his performance.

Beſide the diſcovery theſe two writers have made of the principle itſelf, there is, in Joſephus, a ſtory of a conſpiracy againſt Herod, which may not be omitted.

"Now Herod deviated more and more from our ancient cuſtoms, and by foreign inventions corrupted our conſtitution which is inviolable.——He inſtituted quinquennial games in honour of Ceſar, and built a theatre at Jeruſalem.—The magnificence of theſe works was admired by foreigners; but to the Jews theſe things appeared to be a breach upon thoſe laws, which they highly reſpected.——But nothing diſguſted them ſo much as the trophies. Suppoſing there were images under the arms, they were enraged at the ſight of them, it being contrary to our law to worſhip any images."

" Herod knew very well how much they were provoked. But did not think it a proper opportunity to uſe violence. Wherefore he endeavoured to appeaſe them by fair words; but in vain. For with one conſent they cried out, that they would ſuffer any extremity rather than have images of men in their city.—Whereupon, Herod took ſome of the chief men into the theatre; and having ordered the ornaments to be taken off, when nothing appeared underneath but a naked piece of wood, the company ſmiled at the miſtake."

" The people ſeemed upon this to be brought into better temper.—But yet ſome there were, who ſtill retained the offenſe they had taken at theſe practices; and eſteeming the alteration of their laws to be the beginning of all manner of evils,—thought it their duty to run any hazard, rather than ſeem to connive at Herod, who was forcibly introducing things contrary to their cuſtoms, and who whilſt he had the name of king, was in fact the enemy of the whole nation. Ten men therefore of the city, binding themſelves by an oath, to run all hazards together, armed themſelves with ſhort daggers, which they hid under their clothes. And there was a blind man, who, being exceedingly moved at the reports he had heard, offered himſelf, and took the ſame oath with them. Not that he could give them any aſſiſtance, but he was reſolved to ſuffer with them, if any accident befel them. And the zeal of this man added not a little to their reſolution."

Joſephus goes on to relate, that they entred into the theatre, expecting Herod's arrival, reſolved, if poſſible, to kill Herod himſelf; or, if they failed of that, a good number of his attendants. But one of Herod's ſpies, getting intelligence of the deſign, prevented his going to the theatre. Being ſeized, they remitted nothing of their firmneſs; they did not ſo much as attempt to " deny their intention; but produced the ſwords they had under their clothes, and profeſſed, that the conſpiracy they had entred into was laudable and pious; that they had not entred into it for private profit, or any other particular intereſt, but for what was much more valuable, the ancient cuſtoms of their nation, which it was fit that all ſhould ſee obſerved, or die in the defence of them." Antiq. xv. 8.

This conſpiracy againſt Herod himſelf, with all the circumſtances here mentioned, muſt needs ſatisfy all men, there is nothing improbable in the facts of this kind related by Luke. According to all accounts, this mad and furious zeal was not altogether ſo much in vogue, or at ſo great a height, in Herod's time, as it was afterward.

CHAP. XXII.

1 Paul declareth at large, how he was converted to the faith, 17 and called to his Apoſtleſhip. 22 At the very mentioning of the Gentiles, the people exclaim on him. 24 He ſhould have been ſcourged, 25 but claiming the privilege of a Roman, he eſcapeth.

MEN, brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence, which I make now unto you.

2 (And when they heard that he ſpake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more ſilence: and he ſaith)

3 I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarſus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city, at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous towards God, as ye all are this day.

4 And I perſecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into priſons both men and women.

5 As alſo the high-prieſt doth bear me witneſs, and all the eſtate of the elders: from whom alſo I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damaſcus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jeruſalem, for to be puniſhed.

6 And it came to paſs, that as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damaſcus about noon, ſuddenly there ſhone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice ſaying unto me, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me?

8 And I anſwered, Who art thou, Lord? and he ſaid unto me, I am Jeſus of Nazareth whom thou perſecuteſt.

9 And they that were with me, ſaw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that ſpake to me.

10 And I ſaid, What ſhall I do, Lord? And the Lord ſaid unto me, Ariſe, and go into Damaſcus, and there it ſhall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11 And when I could not ſee for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damaſcus.

12 And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there,

13 Came unto me, and ſtood, and ſaid unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy ſight. And the ſame hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he ſaid, The God of our fathers hath choſen thee, that thou ſhouldſt know his will, and ſee that Juſt one, and ſhouldſt hear the voice of his mouth.

15 For thou ſhalt be his witneſs unto all men, of what thou haſt ſeen and heard.

16 And now why tarrieſt thou? ariſe and be baptized, and waſh away thy ſins, calling on the name of the Lord.

17 And it came to paſs, that when I was come again to Jeruſalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance;

18 And ſaw him, ſaying unto me, Make haſte, and get thee quickly out of Jeruſalem: for they will not receive thy teſtimony concerning me.

19 And I ſaid, Lord, they know that I am impriſoned, and beat in every ſynagogue them that believed on thee.

20 And when the blood of the martyr Stephen was ſhed, I alſo was ſtanding by, and conſenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that ſlew him.

21 And he ſaid unto me, Depart: for I will ſend thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lift up their voices, and ſaid, Away with ſuch a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that he ſhould live.

23 And as they cried out, and caſt off their clothes, and threw duſt into the air,

24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the caſtle, and bade that he ſhould be examined by ſcourging: that he might know wherefore they cried ſo againſt him.

25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul ſaid unto the centurion that ſtood by, Is it lawful for you to ſcourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, ſaying, take heed what thou doſt; for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, and ſaid unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He ſaid, Yea.

28 And the chief captain anſwered, With a great ſum obtained I this freedom. And Paul ſaid, But I was free-born.

29 Then ſtraightway they departed from him, which ſhould have examined him: and the chief captain alſo was afraid after he knew that he was a Roman, and becauſe he had bound him.

30 On the morrow, becauſe he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accuſed of the Jews, he looſed him from his bands, and commanded the chief prieſts and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and ſet him before them.

Ver. 24. The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the caſtle and bade, that he ſhould be examined by ſcourging, that he might know wherefore they cried ſo againſt him. ——Ver. 25. And as they bound him with thongs, Paul ſaid unto the centurion that ſtood by, is it lawful for you to ſcourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?] In the hiſtory of Paul there are many Roman cuſtoms expreſly mentioned or alluded to, and I pitch upon this, as the propereſt opportunity to take notice of all thoſe, we meet with from the time, we have juſt mentioned, of his being apprehended at Jeruſalem to his confinement at Rome, excepting only thoſe which have been already obſerved in the account of the ſtate of the Jews in Judea, at the end of John.

Three or four things are implied in the Scripture before us; that it was cuſtomary for the Romans to uſe the queſtion or torture for the diſcovery of crimes, that this was ſometimes done by beating or whipping, that it was unlawful to ſcourge a Roman, eſpecially uncondemned.

I. It was cuſtomary for the Romans to make uſe of the queſtion for the diſcovery of crimes. There are many inſtances of it about this time in the hiſtory of the Roman emperors, Sueton. in vit. Auguſt. 19. & Tacit. Ann. 15. 56. Nor had the Jews any particular reaſon to complain of the Romans putting this in practice in their country, provided it was not done when there were no grounds of ſuſpicion; ſince Herod the Great had openly practiſed it there before, Joſ. Ant. 16. c. 10.

II. This was ſometimes done by whipping or beating. There were ſeveral ways of examining perſons, ſome were uſed to citizens or free-men, others were reckoned ſervile, Suet. Aug. c. 27. But that ſcourging was practiſed in this caſe, is evident from an example I give of it from Tacitus it the reign of Nero, Ann. 15. 57. Epicharis (a woman) among other tortures was ſo examined. And it is obſervable, that ſhe was not then a ſlave. There are other inſtances in Grotius, on Matt. xxvii. 19. Tho' it is likely, that a ſtick was made uſe of in examining a citizen; rods for others.

III. Thirdly, it is intimated, that it was unlawful to ſcourge a Roman; which thing is alſo taken notice of in the account of the treatment of Paul and Silas at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22-37. Cicero ſays, it was a crime to bind or whip a Roman citizen, in Verr. l. v. It is one of his charges againſt Verres, that he had openly whipped a Roman at Meſſina, who had claimed the privilege of the city, and when they were going to inflict this puniſhment upon him cried out to the officers (much after the ſame manner, that Paul is ſaid to have done) I am a Roman citizen, ib. l. 1.

IV. But it was more eſpecially unlawful to puniſh a man uncondemned or before he had been convicted. This the magiſtrates at Philippi did, but they ſoon repented of it. It is ſaid to have been one of the laws of the twelve tables, that no man ſhould be put to death before he had been tried. According to Dionyſius, this was a law among the Romans long before the twelve tables were compoſed. Indeed, I think, it muſt be a law with all people, who have any ſenſe of juſtice or equity. Cicero lays it down as an undoubted maxim, that no ſentence of condemnation ought to be pronounced before a cauſe had been heard, ibid.

V. From Lyſias's order to examine Paul, and from other things done by him at Jeruſalem, it may be inferred, that he had there ſome ſort of juriſdiction. It appears from many paſſages, that it was uſual for preſidents of provinces to delegate part of their power and authority to under-officers. For this reaſon Cicero, ad Quint. frat. adviſes his brother, then preſident of Aſia, not only to obſerve himſelf the rules of juſtice, but to have a ſtrict eye upon all the miniſters of his government, and to be very circumſpect in the choice of perſons, to whom he committed any power. And it appears from a paſſage of Joſephus, de Bell. l. vii. c. 8. that there were at Ceſarea, officers under Felix, who had the power of whipping offenders.

VI. After Paul had been beaten at Philippi, he complained of the injuſtice done him, becauſe he was a Roman. As they were binding him at Jeruſalem, he claimed the privilege of a Roman citizen, and it was granted him; for it follows, in ver. 26—29. When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, ſaying, Take heed what thou doſt, for this man is a Roman.

Paul therefore does expreſly affirm, that he was a Roman. Nor ought it to be thought ſtrange, that a Jew ſhould be a citizen of Rome. There were many ſuch inſtances about this time. Julius Ceſar beſtowed the freedom of the city upon Antipater, Joſ. de Bell. l. i. the father of Herod the Great, in conſideration of ſervices he had done him. Philo, de legat. ſays, that there was a great number of Jews in Auguſtus's time at Rome, who had been taken captives, and carried thither, and who had obtained their freedom from their maſters. Joſephus complains loudly, as well as very juſtly, of Florus the laſt procurator of Judea, That he had been guilty of an unheard of cruelty, and what had never been done before, when he whipped before his tribunal, and crucified men of the Equeſtrian rank. For, ſays he, though their extraction was Jewiſh, their quality was Roman, Joſ. de Bel. l. ii. And our hiſtorian Joſephus, who was a Jewiſh prieſt, received the freedom of the city from Veſpaſian, after the war was finiſhed, as he has aſſured us himſelf, de vita.

But though there is no improbability, but that Paul might be a Roman citizen; yet it has been a queſtion how he came by this privilege. Some learned men, as Baronius, Hammond, Tillemont, and Witſius, are of opinion, that Tarſus was a Roman Colony, and that Paul was therefore a citizen of Rome, by virtue of his nativity at Tarſus. But if Tarſus had been a town of Roman citizens, Paul having before told the chief captain that he was of Tarſus, the queſtion now put would not have been, Art thou a Roman? but, Art thou really of Tarſus?

The ſequel of the diſcourſe affords more proof. The chief captain anſwered, With a great ſum obtained I this freedom. Lyſias having purchaſed this privilege with a great ſum, and obſerving nothing conſiderable in Paul's perſon or mien, and ſuppoſing therefore, that he had no money to ſpare, he ſtill makes a doubt of the truth of his claim. This anſwer of Lyſias had been altogether impertinent, if Tarſus had been a town of Roman citizens. And Paul ſaid, But I was free born: A plain indication, that it was a privilege derived to him from his parents. And on this account, the oppoſition between the chief captain's purchaſe, and Paul's free-birth, is ſtrong and beautiful. If Paul's freedom had been owing to his nativity in any place, the place would certainly have been mentioned in this conference between him and Lyſias.

And it is obſervable, that Luke has often mentioned Tarſus, but never calls it a colony or municipium; as he would have done, in all probability, if it had been ſo. Upon the whole, I think it very plain, that Luke does not ſuppoſe Paul to have been a Roman by virtue of his birth at Tarſus.

Let us now conſider the external evidence, and enquire what privileges the Roman or Greek authors aſcribe to Tarſus. Strabo ſays, (lib. xiv.) The people of Tarſus were much given to the ſtudy of philoſophy, and all other parts of polite literature: That Tarſus was very populous, and reckoned the metropolis of the country; but he no where ſays, it was a colony or municipium. It has been thought by ſome, that Auguſtus conferred upon them the honour of the citizenſhip of Rome, beſide other privileges, as a reward for their attachment to the intereſt of Julius Ceſar, and as a recompenſe for the hardſhips they ſuffered from Caſſius. But there is no proof of this. None of the authors who have mentioned theſe matters ſay any thing of the citizenſhip. Apion ſays, that Mark Antony, gave liberty, and immunity from taxes to Laodicea and Tarſus, and ordered by a ſpecial decree, that all citizens of Tarſus that had been taken captive, and ſold for ſlaves, ſhould be ſet at liberty. Pliny calls Tarſus a free city; which is an inconteſtable proof, it was not a Roman colony; for then he would have called it ſo. When Ammianus Marcellinus mentions Tarſus, he ſpeaks of it only as a conſiderable city of Cilicia. Ulpian ſays, there were two colonies in Cilicia; but Tarſus is not one of thoſe which he mentions.

Monſieur Tillemont refers to Baron Spanheim's Treatiſe of medals, as the ſource of the proofs he brings for the citizenſhip of Tarſus. But though the Baron did then ſuppoſe Tarſus had this privilege, yet, I think, the arguments he uſes are no proof of it, as he himſelf was ſatisfied afterwards; (ſee his Orbis Romanus, edit. Lond. 1703.) The only proof he then had of it was a medal of Gordian in which Tarſus is ſtiled a colony and a free city.' But though it were a colony then, it is no evidence, that it was ſo, when Paul was born; or that it was made a colony by Auguſtus. And after all, the medal on which Monſieur Spanheim relied, does not ſtile Tarſus a colony; but only a free city, as he found afterwards.

Upon the whole therefore, Luke's account is fully confirmed by the beſt authorities. Tarſus was no mean city, but it was not a muncipium, or a town of Roman citizens.

Poſſibly ſome may enquire, if Paul was not a Roman citizen, or entitled to ſome other peculiar privileges, by his being born at Tarſus, to what purpoſe did he make any mention of it? I anſwer, every one in Paul's circumſtances is naturally led to mention the place of his nativity, or reſidence, eſpecially when he is aſked, who he is. But Paul's innocence did not depend upon his being a Roman, but a Jew. And therefore this laſt, together with the place of his birth, is what he here mentions. The outcry, when Paul was ſeized, was, Men of Iſrael help, this is the man that teacheth all men every where againſt the people; ——— And farther brought Greeks alſo into the temple and hath polluted this holy place. ——— And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: And they took Paul and drew him out of the temple; and forthwith the doors were ſhut, ver. 28, 29, 30.

The Jews which were of Aſia, who began the diſturbance, knew well enough that Paul was a Jew; but the cry being, that the temple had been polluted, and Paul being taken by them, and drawn out of the temple, it is likely, a great part of the multitude that Paul had been a Gentile, who had gone beyond the bounds preſcribed to ſuch; which, when any one but a Jew had done, he was liable to the heavieſt puniſhment. Therefore, when the chief captain aſked him who he was, he told him, he was a Jew of Tarſus; which was enough to ſatisfy him, the Jews had no right to uſe him as they did, for going into the temple. And it is obſervable, that immediately upon Paul's beginning to ſpeak: Men, brethren, and fathers hear ye my defence, when they heard that he ſpake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more ſilence. This for the preſent allayed the heat, becauſe it was a ſtrong preſumption, that he was not a Gentile.

Paul therefore had no reaſon, at this time, to tell them he was a Roman citizen; but it was of the laſt importance to aſſure both the chief captain, and the multitude, that he was a Jew.

Luke has not informed us, how Paul's citizenſhip was derived to him. He was free born: But what was the original of this privilege does not appear. It ſeems to me however not unlikely, that ſome of Paul's anceſtors had obtained it for ſervices they had done the Roman commonwealth in the wars. The Jews had formerly ſerved the kings of Syria in their armies, and afterwards, the Romans. But they had been long ſince diſcharged from that ſervice upon the account of ſome religious ſcruples which they had. There are in Joſephus the copies of theſe diſcharges given them at Epheſus, Delus and other places. One of theſe diſcharges runs thus; "Lucius Lentulus the conſul declared: I have diſmiſſed from the ſervice the Jewiſh Roman citizens who obſerve the rites of the Jewiſh religion at Epheſus," Ant. l. xiv. 10. Again, the decree of the Delians is thus; "Bæotus being Archon, the order of the prætors. Marcus Piſo the ambaſſador, who was alſo the officer appointed to raiſe ſoldiers, being in our city, having called together us, and a ſufficient number of other citizens, gave orders, that if there were any Jews Roman citizens, no man ſhould diſturb any of them on the account of military ſervice; foraſmuch as Cornelius Lentulus the conſul had diſmiſſed the Jews from the military ſervice on account of their religion," ib.

This may give ground to ſuppoſe, that a good number of Jews, who ſerved the Romans in ſome auxiliary armies, had obtained the freedom of the city. But, whether any of Paul's anceſtors deſerved it this, or ſome other way, I do not determine; nor is it neceſſary we ſhould.

VII. We have ſufficiently conſidered Paul's citizenſhip. We muſt not however paſs by what the chief captain ſaid to him; With a great ſum, obtained I this freedom. It was often given to men and cities as a reward of ſome ſpecial merit or ſervices; Tacit. Ann. l. 13. c. 40. but that it was alſo bought, and that at a great price, appears from a paſſage of Dio, which I leave with the reader. "He [Claudius] took away the freedom of the city from many who were unworthy of it, and he gave it without any reaſon to others, ſometimes to ſingle perſons, at other times to great numbers together. For Romans having the preference above ſtrangers, there were many who begg'd the citizenſhip of the emperor; and others, who bought it of Meſſalina, or the freed men. By which means, this privilege, which had been bought formerly at a great price, became ſo cheap, that merry people would ſay, a man might be made a Roman citizen for a few pieces of broken glaſs," Dio. l. lx.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 As Paul pleadeth his cauſe, 2 Ananias commandeth them to ſmite him. 7 Diſſention among his accuſers. 11 God encourageth him. 14 The Jews laying wait for Paul, 20 is declared unto the chief captain. 27 He ſendeth him to Felix the governor.

AND Paul earneſtly beholding the council, ſaid, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conſcience before God, until this day.

2 And the high-prieſt Ananias commanded them that ſtood by him, to ſmite him on the mouth.

3 Then ſaid Paul unto him, God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited wall: for ſitteſt thou to judge me after the law, and commandeſt me to be ſmitten contrary to the law?

4 And they that ſtood by, ſaid, Revileſt thou Gods high-prieſt?

5 Then ſaid Paul, I wiſt not, brethren, that he was the high-prieſt: For it is written, Thou ſhalt not ſpeak evil of the ruler of thy people.

6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Phariſees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Phariſee, the ſon of a Phariſee: of the hope and reſurrection of the dead, I am called in queſtion.

7 And when he had ſo ſaid, there aroſe a diſſention between the Phariſees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8 For the Sadducees ſay that there is no reſurrection, neither angel nor ſpirit; but the Phariſees confeſs both.

9 And there aroſe a great cry: and the ſcribes that were of the Phariſees part aroſe, and ſtrove, ſaying, We find no evil in this man: but if a ſpirit or an angel hath ſpoken to him, let us not fight againſt God.

10 And when there aroſe a great diſſention, the chief captain fearing leſt Paul ſhould have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the ſoldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the caſtle.

11 And the night following, the Lord ſtood by him, and ſaid, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou haſt teſtified of me in Jeruſalem, ſo muſt thou bear witneſs alſo at Rome.

12 And when it was day, certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themſelves under a curſe, ſaying, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conſpiracy.

14 And they came to the chief prieſts and elders, and ſaid, We have bound our ſelves under a great curſe, that we will eat nothing until we have ſlain Paul.

15 Now therefore ye with the council, ſignify to the chief captain, that he bring him down unto you to morrow, as though ye would enquire ſomething more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

16 And when Pauls ſiſters ſon heard of their lying in wait, he went and entred into the caſtle, and told Paul.

17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and ſaid, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and ſaid, Paul the priſoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath ſomething to ſay unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aſide privately, and asked him, What is that thou haſt to tell me?

20 And he ſaid, The Jews have agreed to deſire thee, that thou wouldſt bring down Paul to morrow into the council, as though they would enquire ſomewhat of him more perfectly.

21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more then forty men, which have bound themſelves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promiſe from thee.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou haſt ſhewed theſe things to me.

23 And he called unto him two centurions, ſaying, Make ready two hundred ſoldiers to go to Ceſarea, and horſemen threeſcore and ten, and ſpearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night.

24 And provide them beaſts, that they may ſet Paul on, and bring him ſafe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lyſias, unto the moſt excellent governor Felix, ſendeth greeting.

27 This man was taken of the Jews, and ſhould have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and reſcued him, having underſtood that he was a Roman.

28 And when I would have known the cauſe wherefore they accuſed him, I brought him forth into their council:

29 Whom I perceived to be accuſed of queſtions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And when it was told me, how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I ſent ſtraightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accuſers alſo, to ſay before thee what they had againſt him. Farewel.

31 Then the ſoldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32 On the morrow they left the horſemen to go with him, and returned to the caſtle.

33 Who when they came to Ceſarea, and delivered the epiſtle to the governor, preſented Paul alſo before him.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he underſtood that he was of Cilicia:

35 I will hear thee, ſaid he, when thine accuſers are alſo come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herods judgment-hall.

Ver. 2. ——— The high-prieſt Ananias, &c.] As this high-prieſt Ananias is not recorded by Joſephus in his account of their ſucceſſion, it is probable from what is written below, at verſe 5. and in chap. xxii. 5. that he was either a perſon brought in by ſome male-practices and bribery, or corruption, according to the diſorders and irregularity of thoſe times, or at moſt, that he was no more than a ſurrogate, a deputy to diſpatch licences, &c. in the name, and by the authority of the high-prieſt. In a word, had he been God's high-prieſt; Paul could not poſſibly have been ignorant thereof, nor would he have ſaid, I wiſt not brethren, that he was the high-prieſt; ſee the note on ver. 5.

Ver. 3. — Thou whited wall.] A proverbial expreſſion importing, thou hypocrite, who endeavoureſt to cover thy tyranny and oppreſſion, injuſtice and cruelty, under the mask of zeal for religion; ſee the like expreſſion in Ezek. xiii. 10. Matt. xxiii. 27.

Ver. 5. —— Then Paul ſaid, I wiſt not.] Or, I knew not, i. e. all men know very well, that this man Ananias is not a lawful high-prieſt, and therefore may be reprehended for his faults with any violation of God's commands; ſee the note on ver. 2.

Ver. 6. But when Paul perceived, that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Phariſees, he cried out in the council, &c.] From the frequent mention of the Phariſees and Sadducees in the Goſpels and Acts of the Apoſtles, it is natural to conclude, that they were the prevailing ſects among the Jews at that time. This is agreeable to the accounts, which Joſephus has given of the Jewiſh ſects in his ſecond book of the wars of the Jews, at the 8th chapter; and in the firſt chapter, &c. of the eighteenth book of his Antiquities, and is evident from the remarks I have already ſet down in the Annotations in the Goſpel according to Matthew. So that, at preſent, I ſhall only obſerve, that the Phariſees were reckoned the moſt religious of any of the Jews, and to be the moſt exact and skilful in explaining the laws; ſee Joſephus de B. J. l. 1. c. 5. and Acts xxvi. 5. They were ſuperſtitiouſly fond of traditions, invented by themſelves, by which they drew after them the multitude of common people, Antiq. l. 13. 10. They affected the direction of publick affairs, and very much abuſed the credulity of the people by a boaſted pretence to ſanctity; ſee Matt. xxiii. 14. Mark xii. 38.—40. Luke xx. 46, 47. and Joſephus de B. J. l. 1. c. 5. And they were quite oppoſite in their doctrine to the Sadducees; ſee Joſ. Ant. l. xiii. c. 10. though at ſome times we find them united to deſtroy Chriſt and his religion, Matt. xvi. 1. yet we have one inſtance in the context, wherein their different opinions drove them into different meaſures, and occaſioned a downright quarrel, for there aroſe a great cry and diſſention in the council, when Paul declared himſelf a Phariſee, &c. ſee from ver. 6. to ver. 10. This neceſſarily leads us to conſider their different tenets; but as I have done that already in the notes on the third of Matthew, ver. 7. I ſhall omit their rehearſal, and only take notice, that Paul's notions did directly contradict thoſe of the Sadducees, and ſavour and confirm, not to ſay, improve thoſe of the Phariſees, as is evident from Joſephus's account, which I have tranſcribed in the foreſaid note. And it is not at all wonderful, that one ſect laid hold of an advantage againſt another, eſpecially to us, who may have opportunities to make the like remark among the ſectaries of the Chriſtian Church every day. But,

Though theſe two ſects ſtood thus, in a manner, in oppoſition to each other, yet Luke repreſents them both as concerned together in that admiration of affairs, which was allowed the Jewiſh nation by the Romans, to whom they were then ſubject, as the words of this text plainly declare, ſaying, that the members of the council, before which Paul was brought, were the one part Phariſees, and the other Sadducees; and we have read in the fifth chapter of another council, in which there was a good number of Sadducees, ver. 17. of whom it is noted by Joſephus, that they were the moſt cruel of all the Jews in their judicial ſentences, Antiq. l. xx. c. 8. which I think does likewiſe appear by ſome inſtances in the Acts of the Apoſtles, where the Phariſees were for the milder ſentence, and had a majority.——The high-prieſts themſelves were ſometimes Sadducees; ſee the notes on Matt. iii. 7. and ſee Acts v. 17.

——I am a Phariſee.] i. e. My doctrine is taught by the Phariſees. Yet he does not hereby approve of the Phariſaical doctrine in all its branches, but only in that one of the reſurrection of the dead, in oppoſition to the Sadducees; and herein upbraids the partiality of his judges, who pretended to perſecute him out of pure zeal for Judaiſm, and yet tollerated the damnable hereſy of the Sadducees, by honouring them with a place in their council. Moreover by this means he raiſed a diſſention among them, which proved of great advantage to his own ſafety, and the propagation of the Goſpel.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Paul being accuſed by Tertullus the orator, 10 anſwereth for his life and doctrine. 24 He preacheth Chriſt to the governor and his wife. 26 The governor hopeth for a bribe, but in vain. 27 At laſt, going out of his office, he leaveth Paul in priſon.

AND after five days Ananias the high-prieſt deſcended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor againſt Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuſe him, ſaying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietneſs, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence,

3 We accept it always, and in all places, moſt noble Felix, with all thankfulneſs.

4 Notwithſtanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee, that thou wouldſt hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5 For we have found this man a peſtilent fellow, and a mover of a ſedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes:

6 Who alſo hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took, and would have judged according to our law.

7 But the chief captain Lyſias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

8 Commanding his accuſers to come unto thee: by examining of whom thy ſelf mayſt take knowledge of all theſe things, whereof we accuſe him.

9 And the Jews alſo aſſented, ſaying, that theſe things were ſo.

10 Then Paul, after that the governor had beckned unto him to ſpeak, anſwered, Foraſmuch as I know that thou haſt been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully anſwer for my ſelf:

11 Becauſe that thou mayſt underſtand, that there are yet but twelve days ſince I went up to Jeruſalem for to worſhip.

12 And they neither found me in the temple diſputing with any man, neither raiſing up the people, neither in the ſynagogues, nor in the city:

13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuſe me.

14 But this I confeſs unto thee, that after the way which they call hereſy, ſo worſhip I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the Prophets:

15 And have hope towards God, which they themſelves alſo allow, that there ſhall be a reſurrection of the dead, both of the juſt and unjuſt.

16 And herein do I exerciſe my ſelf to have always a conſcience void of offence toward God, and toward men.

17 Now after many years, I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.

18 Whereupon certain Jews from Aſia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude nor with tumult.

19 Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had ought againſt me.

20 Or elſe let theſe ſame here ſay, if they have found any evil-doing in me, while I ſtood before the council,

21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried ſtanding among them, Touching the reſurrection of the dead, I am called in queſtion by you this day.

22 And when Felix heard theſe things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and ſaid, When Lyſias the chief captain ſhall come down, I will know the uttermoſt of your matter.

23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he ſhould forbid none of his acquaintance to miniſter, or come unto him.

24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wiſe Druſilla, which was a Jeweſs, he ſent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Chriſt.

25 And as he reaſoned of righteouſneſs, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and anſwered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient ſeaſon, I will call for thee.

26 He hoped alſo that money ſhould have been given him of Paul, that he might looſe him: wherefore he ſent for him the oftner, and communed with him.

27 But after two years Porcius Feſtus came into Felix room: and Felix willing to ſhew the Jews a pleaſure, left Paul bound.

Ver. 1. ——— Ananias the high-prieſt.] See chapter xxiii.

——— Tertullus.] This was a noted man for pleading of cauſes in the courts of judicature, before the Roman governors, and was retained by the nation of the Jews, that they might obtain their end againſt Paul the more eaſily, who alone pleaded for himſelf. They knew, that they could lay no facts to his charge worthy of death, and were reſolved to employ ſuch an orator againſt him, 23 And he called unto him two centurions, ſaying, Make ready two hundred ſoldiers to go to Ceſarea, and horſemen threeſcore and ten, and ſpearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night.

24 And provide them beaſts, that they may ſet Paul on, and bring him ſafe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lyſias, unto the moſt excellent governor Felix, ſendeth greeting.

27 This man was taken of the Jews, and ſhould have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and reſcued him, having underſtood that he was a Roman.

28 And when I would have known the cauſe wherefore they accuſed him, I brought him forth into their council:

29 Whom I perceived to be accuſed of queſtions of their law, but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And when it was told me, how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I ſent ſtraightway to thee, and gave commandment to his accuſers alſo, to ſay before thee what they had againſt him. Farewel.

31 Then the ſoldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32 On the morrow they left the horſemen to go with him, and returned to the caſtle.

33 Who when they came to Ceſarea, and delivered the epiſtle to the governor, preſented Paul alſo before him.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he aſked of what province he was. And when he underſtood that he was of Cilicia:

35 I will hear thee, ſaid he, when thine accuſers are alſo come. And he commanded him to be kept in Herods judgment-hall.

Ver. 2.——The high-prieſt Ananias, &c.] As this high-prieſt Ananias is not recorded by Joſephus in his account of their ſucceſſion, it is probable from what is written below, at verſe 5. and in chap. xxii. 5. that he was either a perſon brought in by ſome male-practices and bribery, or corruption, according to the diſorders and irregularity of thoſe times, or at moſt, that he was no more than a ſurregate, a deputy to diſpatch licences, &c. in the name, and by the authority of the high-prieſt. CHAP. XXV.

2 The Jews accuſe Paul before Feſtus. 8 He anſwereth for himſelf, 11 and appealeth unto Ceſar. 14 Afterwards, Feſtus openeth his matter to king Agrippa, 23 and he is brought forth. 25 Feſtus cleareth him to have done nothing worthy of death.

NOW when Feſtus was come into the province, after three days he aſcended from Ceſarea to Jeruſalem.

2 Then the high-prieſt, and the chief of the Jews informed him againſt Paul, and beſought him,

3 And deſired favour againſt him, that he would ſend for him to Jeruſalem, laying wait in the way to kill him.

4 But Feſtus anſwered, that Paul ſhould be kept at Ceſarea, and that he himſelf would depart ſhortly thither.

5 Let them therefore, ſaid he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuſe this man, if there be any wickedneſs in him.

6 And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Ceſarea, and the next day ſitting in the judgment-ſeat, commanded Paul to be brought.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jeruſalem, ſtood round about, and laid many and grievous complaints againſt Paul, which they could not prove;

8 While he anſwered for himſelf, Neither againſt the law of the Jews, neither againſt the temple, nor yet againſt Ceſar, have I offended any thing at all.

9 But Feſtus willing to do the Jews a pleaſure, anſwered Paul, and ſaid, Wilt thou go up to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe things before me?

10 Then ſaid Paul, I ſtand at Ceſars judgment-ſeat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knoweſt.

11 For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuſe not to die: but if there be none of theſe things whereof theſe accuſe me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Ceſar.

12 Then Feſtus when he had conferred with the council, anſwered, Haſt thou appealed unto Ceſar? unto Ceſar ſhalt thou go.

13 And after certain days, king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Ceſarea to ſalute Feſtus.

14 And when they had been there many days, Feſtus declared Pauls cauſe unto the king, ſaying, There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

15 About whom, when I was at Jeruſalem, the chief prieſts and the elders of the Jews informed me, deſiring to have judgment againſt him.

16 To whom I anſwered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accuſed, have the accuſers face to face, and have licence to anſwer for himſelf concerning the crime laid againſt him.

17 Therefore when they were come hither, without any delay on the morrow I ſat on the judgment-ſeat, and I commanded the man to be brought forth.

18 Againſt whom the accuſers ſtood up, they brought none accuſation of ſuch things as I ſuppoſed:

19 But had certain queſtions againſt him of their own ſuperſtition, and of one Jeſus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

20 And becauſe I doubted of ſuch manner of queſtions, I asked him whether he would go to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe matters.

21 But when Paul had appealed to be reſerved unto the hearing of Auguſtus, I commanded him to be kept till I might ſend him to Ceſar.

22 Then Agrippa ſaid unto Feſtus, I would alſo hear the man my ſelf. To morrow, ſaid he, thou ſhalt hear him.

23 And on the morrow when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entred into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Feſtus commandment Paul was brought forth.

24 And Feſtus ſaid, King Agrippa, and all men which are here preſent with us, ye ſee this man, about whom all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jeruſalem, and alſo here, crying that he ought not to live any longer.

25 But when I found that he had committed nothing worthy of death, and that he himſelf hath appealed to Auguſtus, I have determined to ſend him.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore I have brought him forth before you, and ſpecially before thee, O king Agrippa, that after examination had, I might have ſomewhat to write.

27 For it ſeemeth to me unreaſonable to ſend a priſoner, and not withal to ſignify the crimes laid againſt him.

Ver. 16.——It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he who is accuſed, have the accuſers face to face, and have licence to anſwer for himſelf concerning the crime laid againſt him.] We have before obſerved the juſtice of the Roman laws, on ſeveral occaſions; and here I ſhall note that Cicero, the moſt celebrated Roman orator or lawyer; in his oration againſt Verres, the infamous pretor of Sicily, continually repreſents theſe as the moſt illegal and inhuman practices, to receive accuſations againſt men when they were abſent, and condemn others without permitting or calling upon them to anſwer for themſelves, as that Verres had done. And Tertullian makes mention of a Roman preſident, who, when a Chriſtian was ſent to him with a libel, perceiving that there had been ſome unfair dealing, tore the libel to pieces, and ſaid, that he ſhould not act contrary to law, and hear a man without his accuſer. But,

As it may be urged againſt the Roman juſtice and equity, That it was as unjuſt to bind or confine, as to ſcourge a Roman citizen, as Paul was: And that therefore the keeping of Paul thus in bonds was a breach of juſtice.

To this I anſwer, That a citizen might not be bound with thongs as a puniſhment, or in order to be ſcourged: But a Roman citizen might certainly be kept in cuſtody, upon juſt ſuſpicions, or when there were any credible accuſations brought againſt him. And there was nothing at all illegal in the way, in which Paul was confined. There are many inſtances in the Roman authors of knights and ſenators of Rome who were chained in the ſame manner that Paul was.

In this hiſtory of Paul there is mention ſometimes of chains in the plural number, and at other times of chain in the ſingular. When the chief captain took him from the Jews, he commanded him to be bound with two chains, Acts xxi. 33. Whether Paul continued to be bound with two chains ſo long as he was kept in Judea, I cannot ſay; becauſe, though the word bands be uſed generally afterward in the plural number, yet the original word is of a general meaning, and may imply no more than confinement, with one, or more chains. However, it is certain he was bound with but one chain whilſt he was at Rome: For it is ſaid, That Paul was ſuffered to dwell with a ſoldier that kept him, chap. xxviii. 16. And he tells the chief of the Jews, whom he had ſent for there, that for the hope of Iſrael he was bound with this chain, ver. 20. And in another place he ſays (though the text is generally thought not to relate to this confinement) The Lord give mercy to the houſe of Oneſiphorus, for he oft refreſhed me, and was not aſhamed of my chain, 2 Tim. i. 16.

The way of chaining priſoners was in this manner. There was an iron chain of a convenient length, which was faſtened, at one end, to the hand of the priſoner; and at the other, to the arm of the ſoldier. When a perſon was committed to the care of one ſoldier, which was a very common way, and conſequently there was but one chain, the chain was faſtned to the right arm of the priſoner, and to the left arm of the ſoldier. This is evident from a paſſage of Seneca, epiſt. v. It is eaſy to conclude, that when a ſecond ſoldier, and another chain was appointed, the priſoner muſt wear the other chain on his left hand, and the ſoldier on his right.

It is likely, that this method of confinement obtained very much all over the Roman empire. Peter was bound thus at Jeruſalem by Herod Agrippa, then king of Judea, Acts xii. 6.

It is obſervable, that when Lyſias brought Paul before the council, that he might know wherefore he was accuſed of the Jews, he looſed him from his bands, chap. xxii. 30. But it is ſomewhat doubtful, whether Paul had not his chain on, when he appeared before Agrippa; for he ſays, I would to God that all that hear me this day were altogether ſuch as I am, except theſe bands. Perhaps Paul means no more hereby than this ſtate of impriſonment. I think indeed, that it was not a generous treatment of his priſoner, nor very decent upon other accounts, for Feſtus to ſet Paul before Agrippa and Bernice, with his chains on. However, there was a Roman of conſiderable quality, who was accuſed, and made his defence before the ſenate of Rome, in the reign of Tiberius, with his chains upon him. Tacit. Ann. lib. iv. c. 28.

Paul ſeems to have been under a military cuſtody. I need not remind the reader of any particulars for a proof of this: It runs through the whole account. There were, however, ſeveral changes of the manner of his confinement. At firſt, he was carried into the caſtle of Antonia at Jeruſalem, chap. xxi. 37. xxii. 24. chained undoubtedly to a ſoldier, or ſoldiers: For that muſt be ſuppoſed all along. When he was ſent to Ceſarea, Felix commanded that he ſhould be kept in Herod's judgment-hall, chap. xxiii. 35. But there was ſome alteration made, after that Felix had heard Paul and the high-prieſt, and others that came down from Jeruſalem. And he [Felix] commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he ſhould forbid none of his acquaintance to miniſter, or come unto him, Acts xxiv. 23. Theſe are certainly new orders, the former ſtraitneſs muſt have been hereupon abated; and perhaps the place of confinement was changed. I am inclined to think, that Paul was now removed from Herod's judgment-hall, to the centurion's own habitation, or to that part of the city where the ſoldiers had their quarters.

But the moſt gentle eaſy confinement of all, was that which Paul had at Rome. There he was ſuffered to dwell by himſelf with a ſoldier that kept him,——in his lodging, ——in his own hired houſe, chap. xxviii. 16. xxiii. 30. This muſt have been owing very much to the honourable teſtimonial, which Porcius Feſtus tranſmitted with him, and in part, it is likely, to the account given in by the centurion, who had conducted Paul and the other priſoners from Ceſarea into Italy; as alſo in part, and perhaps chiefly, to the goodneſs of Burrhus, then prefect of the prætorium or captain of the guard to Nero.

There were ſeveral methods of keeping priſoners made uſe of in the city, and in the provinces. Ulpian ſays, "That the proconſul is wont to judge, whether the perſon ought to be put into the priſon, or delivered to a ſoldier to keep, or whether he ſhould be committed to ſureties, or even to himſelf." (that is, to the accuſed perſon himſelf) "and herein uſually regard is had to the nature of the crime charged upon any one, and to the preſervation of his honour, as alſo to the wealth or ſubſtance, ſeeming innocence, or dignity of the party accuſed."

It is very eaſy to perceive, what was chiefly regarded by thoſe Roman officers who treated Paul ſo mildly, not his wealth, nor his dignity, but his innocence.

There is no one ſingle inſtance that I know of, that will ſo much illuſtrate the whole ſtory of Paul's impriſonment, as that of Herod Agrippa, who was impriſoned by Tiberius in the latter end of his reign, and afterward came to be king of all Judea, as has been ſhewn already.

Agrippa had ſaid ſome improper things of Tiberius in the hearing of one of his own ſervants, who, having ſome time after taken a diſguſt at his maſter Agrippa, went and informed Tiberius againſt him. Agrippa went one day, as others did, to wait on Tiberius. Tiberius crediting what the ſervant had ſaid, and bearing likewiſe ſome grudge againſt Agrippa, ordered Macro, the prefect of the pretorium to bind him. Whereupon "the officers took him and bound him in his purple dreſs which he was then in."—But Antonia was extremely afflicted at this misfortune of Agrippa, and yet ſhe judged it very difficult to ſay any thing to Tiberius in his favour: And that indeed, it would be to no purpoſe, if ſhe ſhould. She therefore went to Macro, and deſired he would take care that the ſoldiers which kept guard upon him ſhould be civil, good natured fellows, and that the centurion who preſided over the guard, and the ſoldier to whom Agrippa was bound, might be men of the ſame character, and that his freed men and friends might have acceſs to him; and in a word, that he might want nothing neceſſary for his health. Theſe therefore went to him, his friend Silas, and his freed men Marſyras and Stoechus, who brought him the proviſion he choſe to have. They brought in likewiſe bed-clothes, and ſuch like things as if they were for ſale, which they accommodated with him at night, the ſoldiers themſelves joining with them in theſe ſervices, in obedience to Macro's orders. Thus things went with Agrippa for ſix months."

When Tiberius was dead, "there came two letters to Rome from Caius [Caligula], one to the ſenate, notifying the death of Tiberius, and his own acceſſion to the empire; and another to Piſo the prefect of the city, containing the ſame things, and alſo ordering, that Agrippa ſhould be removed from the pretorium, to the houſe in which he had lived before he was bound. Here, indeed, he was in cuſtody, but however, he had more liberty, and was at eaſe. In a ſhort time, Caius came to Rome, —— and in a few days after, ſent for Agrippa to his palace, ordered him to be ſhaved, and changed his garments; and then put a diadem on his head —— and made him alſo a preſent of a gold chain of the ſame weight with the iron one with which he had been bound. This chain, Agrippa afterward laid up in the temple of Jeruſalem, as a monument that God can bring down thoſe things that are great, and raiſe up thoſe things which are fallen."

I take it, that Agrippa's firſt confinement was of the ſame kind with that, which was allotted Paul by Felix, after the firſt hearing at Ceſarea; with this difference however, that a good deal of Agrippa's kind uſage was given him by ſtealth, it not being by the orders of Tiberius, by whom he was committed: Whereas, the centurion, who kept Paul, had expreſs orders from Felix, the chief officer in the province, to let him have liberty, and to forbid none of his acquaintance to miniſter, or come unto him: Which muſt have been a conſiderable advantage. And, I reckon, that Agrippa's confinement at laſt, when he was removed to the houſe he had lived in before he was bound, was of the ſame kind with Paul's cuſtody, when he dwelt at Rome in his own hired houſe.

A Diſſertation on the Princes and Governors mentioned in the New Teſtament.

In this Diſſertation upon the princes and governors mentioned in the New Teſtament, I purpoſe, according to former references, to clear up many doubtful hiſtorical paſſages in the Goſpels and Acts of the Apoſtles, by producing collateral proofs from Jewiſh and Heathen authors. Therefore,

Firſt, Of Herod. The Evangeliſt Matthew aſſures us, that Jeſus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, whom Luke expreſly ſtiles the king of Judea; ſee Matt. ii and Luke i. 5. This Herod was ſon of Antipater, who had enjoyed ſeveral poſts of honour and truſt under Alexander Jannæus, and his wife Alexandra; who ſucceeded her husband in the civil government of Judea, and their eldeſt ſon Hyrcanus, who was high-prieſt in his mother's life time, and ſucceeded her, at her death, in the civil power alſo.

He was by extraction, or birth, an Idumean; Joſ. Ant. l. xiv. c. 1. The Idumeans were a branch of the ancient Edomites, who according to Dean Prideaux, "while the Jews were in the Babyloniſh Captivity, and their land lay deſolate, took poſſeſſion of as much of the ſouthern part of it, as contained what had formerly been the whole inheritance of the tribe of Simeon, and alſo half of that, which had been the inheritance of the tribe of Judah; and there dwelt ever after --till at length going over into the religion of the Jews, they became incorporated with them into the ſame nation," Connect. part ii. b. 3. Of which converſion, we have the following account out of Joſephus: "Hyrcanus took Adora and Mariſſa, cities of Idumea; and having ſubdued all the Idumeans, he permitted them to remain in the country, upon condition, that they would be circumciſed, and uſe the Jewiſh law. So that rather than leave their native land, they received circumciſion; and ſubmitted to live in every reſpect as Jews. And from that time they became Jews, Antiq. xiii. c. 9. i.e. About the 129th year before the Chriſtian Æra, Prid. Connect. part. ii. lib. v. So that altho' Herod was not deſcended of an ancient Jewiſh family, the ſtock of Iſrael, yet it is certain, that he was a Jew, even according to the confeſſion of the Jews themſelves; ſee Joſ. de Bell. jud. l. i. c. 10. and 4. alſo, his Antiq. lib. xx. c. 7.

Herod obtained the crown of Judea, upon occaſion of a difference there was between two branches of the Aſmonean family; ſee the note on Matt. ii. and Joſ. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 14. and de Bell. l. i. c. 14. And having reigned thirty-ſeven years, from the time of his being declared king by the Romans, he died of a very painful and loathſome diſtemper; inſomuch that, as Joſephus ſays, "ſome then pronounced it to be a judgment of God upon him for many impieties;" De Bell. l. i. c. 33. Antiq. xxii. 6.

Archelaus ſucceeded Herod his father in Judea; ſee Matt. ii. 21, 22. This is confirmed by Joſephus in his Antiquities, l. xvii. c. 8. and book of Jewiſh Wars, lib. i. c. 33. and lib. ii. c. 6. Tacit. hiſt. l. v. c. 9. ſee alſo my notes on Matthew ii. 21, 22. He ſeems from all accounts, to have been the worſt of Herod's ſons, except Antipater, whom the father had put to death five days before his own deceaſe.

Herod beſides this, left alſo two other ſons, Herod tetrarch of Galilee, and Philip tetrarch of Iturea, and the region of Trachonitis; ſee Luke iii. 1. compared with Joſ. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 5. and it was this ſame Herod tetrarch of Galilee, to whom our Saviour was ſent by Pilate, when he was accuſed before him; ſee Luke xxii. 6, 7. for he continued tetrarch of Galilee, till he was removed by Caligula, the ſucceſſor of Tiberius, Joſ. ibid. c. 8.

This alſo is the Herod who married his brother's wife; ſee Matt. xiv. 1—13. Mark vi. 14—29. and Luke iii. 19, 20. of which Joſephus gives a full account agreeable to the Goſpel Hiſtory; ſee Joſ. Ant. 18 6. only with this difference, that Joſephus calls Herodias's firſt husband Herod, whereas the Evangeliſts call him Philip: Which objection I have removed in its proper place.

There was alſo one Lyſanias tetrarch of Abilene, of whom ancient writers have left us no diſtinct account. But if the reader will be pleaſed to obſerve ſome paſſages, which will be produced immediately concerning the two Agrippas, he will be convinced there muſt have been about this time, ſome prince of this name, who was tetrach of Abilene.

We may now proceed to another of Herod's family; of whom Luke has given us a very remarkable hiſtory.

Now about that time, Herod the king ſtretched forth his hands, to vex certain of the Church. And he killed James the brother of John with the ſword. And becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the Jews, he proceeded farther to take Peter alſo. Then were the days of unleavened bread, Acts xii. 1—3.

Luke calls this perſon Herod, by the family name; Joſephus calls him Agrippa. He was grandſon of Herod the Great. His father was Ariſtobulus, Herod's ſon by Mariamne, Grand-daughter of Hyrcanus: And is the ſame perſon who has been already mentioned as brother of Herodias: Luke gives him the title of king, and relates ſeveral acts of ſovereign authority done by him. He does not ſay expreſly, that they were done by him at Jeruſalem. But there are divers particulars in the relation, which plainly determine that to be the ſcene of action. For Luke obſerves, that when he took Peter, then were the days of unleavened bread, that he intended after Eaſter to bring him forth to the people. And that when Peter was out of priſon, and was come to himſelf, he ſaid, Now know I of a ſurety, that the Lord —— has delivered me out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews, ver. 11. And when he had commanded the keepers to be put to death, he went down from Judea to Ceſarea and there abode, ver. 19. A paſſage or two from Joſephus will confirm the repreſentation Luke gives of Herod's being king, and that of Judea.

It was by ſeveral ſteps that he was advanced to this dignity. His firſt preferment was from Caligula, A. D. 37. "And ſending for him to his palace, he (Caligula) put a crown upon his head, and appointed him king of the tetrarchy of Philip, intending alſo to give him the tetrarchy of Lyſanias," Antiq. 18. c. 7.

His next preferment was the addition made by the ſame emperor, of the tetrarchy of Galilee. The laſt was what follows: "Claudius, by a decree confirmed to Agrippa, the dominion which Caius (Caligula) had given him; adding alſo Judea, and Samaria, in the utmoſt extent as poſſeſſed by his grandfather Herod. This he reſtored, as due to him by right of conſanguinity, and moreover, added of his own Abila, which had been Lyſanias's, together with the country in mount Libanus," Antiq. 19. 5.

Joſephus therefore confirms the repreſentation Luke has given of Herod's ſovereign power in Judea. This is worthy of our particular notice, becauſe his three years reign in Judea, (the laſt of his life) was the only time, in which Judea, properly ſo called, was not a Roman province, from the baniſhment of Archelaus in the ſixth or ſeventh year of the Chriſtian Æra, to the year 66, when they revolted from the Romans.

Luke ſays, that having killed James the brother of John with the ſword; becauſe he ſaw it pleaſed the Jews, he proceeded further, to take Peter alſo. That it is very likely, he ſhould be moved by ſuch a conſideration as this, is evident from the character which Joſephus has given of him. Herod the Great, his grandfather, he ſays, was continually obliging foreign ſtates and cities by large bounties; but did very few things to gratify the Jews. Whereas, "Agrippa was of a mild and gentle diſpoſition, and good to all men; he was beneficient to ſtrangers, but eſpecially kind to the Jews his countrymen, and ſympathized with them in all their troubles. For which reaſon alſo he lived much at Jeruſalem, obſerved the Jewiſh Inſtitutions, practiſed the purity they require, and did not let a day paſs without worſhipping God according to the law." This his zeal for the inſtitutions and cuſtoms of the Jews, and his deſire to oblige that people very much, confirm the account Luke gives of his forwardneſs in perſecuting the diſciples of Jeſus.

What Luke adds concerning this perſon is a very extraordinary relation; and Joſephus concurs with him in it. And he went down from Judea to Ceſarea, and there abode —— And upon a ſet day, Herod arayed in royal apparel, ſat upon his throne, and made an oration to them. And the people gave a ſhout, ſaying, It is the voice of a god and not of a man. And immediately the Angel of the Lord ſmote him, becauſe he gave not God the glory, and he was eaten of worms and gave up the ghoſt, Acts xii. 19. 23.

Joſephus's words are theſe: "Having now reigned three whole years over all Judea, he went to the city Ceſarea, formerly called Straton's Tower. Here he celebrated ſhows in honour of Ceſar, a feſtival having been appointed to be obſerved there at this time, for his ſafety. On this occaſion there was a vaſt reſort of perſons of rank and diſtinction from all parts of the country. On the ſecond day of the ſhows he came into the theatre, early in the morning, dreſſed in a robe of ſilver, of moſt curious workmanſhip. The rays of the riſing ſun, reflected from ſo ſplendid a garb, gave him a majeſtick and awful appearance. In a ſhort time, they began in ſeveral parts of the theatre flattering acclamations, which proved pernicious to him. They called him a god, and entreated him to be propitious to them, ſaying, Hitherto we have reſpected you as a man; but now we acknowledge you to be more than mortal. The king neither reproved theſe perſons, nor rejected the impious flattery. Soon after this, caſting his eyes upward, he ſaw an owl ſitting upon a certain cord over his head. He perceived it to be a meſſenger of evil to him, as it had been before of his proſperity; and was ſtruck with the deepeſt concern. Immediately after this, he was ſeized with pains in his bowels extremely violent at the very firſt. Then turning himſelf toward his friends, he ſpoke to them in this manner: I your God, am required to leave this world; fate inſtantly confuting theſe feigned applauſes juſt beſtowed upon me; I, who have been called immortal, am hurried away to death. But God's appointment muſt be ſubmitted to. Nor has our condition in this world been deſpicable; we have lived in the ſtate which is accounted happy. While he was ſpeaking theſe words, he was oppreſſed with the increaſe of his pains. He was carried therefore with all haſte to his palace. Theſe pains in his bowels continually tormenting him, he expired in five days time, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and of his reign the ſeventh," Antiq. 19. 8.

It is needleſs to make many reflections here. The reader's thoughts cannot but carry him to many points of agreement in theſe two relations. They agree, that this event happened at Ceſarea: Luke ſays, it was upon a ſet day, Joſephus, that it was upon the ſecond day of the ſhows celebrated in honour of the emperor. The magnificence of Herod's dreſs is hinted by Luke, and particularly deſcribed by Joſephus. The flattery is exactly the ſame in both. But in two things, above all others, is the harmony of theſe accounts obſervable. Firſt, the temper of mind with which Herod received this flattery. Luke ſays, he gave not God the glory; Joſephus, he neither reproved theſe perſons, nor rejected the impious flattery: Words that deſerve particular notice in Joſephus, becauſe he has at times repreſented this Herod Agrippa as an extraordinary perſon, and free from the vices of his grandfather Herod; and indeed has endeavoured to raiſe his character for lenity and goodneſs beyond what is conſiſtent with ſome other accounts. For Dio Caſſius ſays, Agrippa was reckoned one of Caligula's adviſers in his cruel and tyrannical meaſures.

Another thing, in which this harmony is very conſiderable, is, that according to Luke, immediately the Angel of the Lord ſmote him: And Joſephus aſſures us, that theſe pains ſeized him in the theatre, before all the aſſembly, and that he apprehended a fatal neceſſity of ſpeedily leaving this world. And when Joſephus ſays, theſe flattering acclamations proved pernicious to Agrippa, he plainly intimates that his death was ſuppoſed to be a puniſhment for the approbation with which he received them.

Though Luke only had related this event, and there had been no account of it extant in Joſephus, or any other ancient writer, yet I ſhould not have doubted the truth of it. Luke would not otherwiſe have dared to relate an affair ſo diſadvantageous, as this is, in many reſpects, to ſo conſiderable a perſon as Herod; who was very acceptable to the Jewiſh people, and had received many honours and civilities from two ſucceſſive Roman emperors, Caligula, and Claudius. Nor would any man of tolerable capacity, much leſs ſo ſenſible a perſon as Luke appears to be by his writings, have expoſed his credit by placing ſuch an event in ſo publick and noted a place as Ceſarea, the perſon concerned being ſeated on a throne, ſurrounded by attendance ſuitable to the occaſion of a particular ſolemnity, if he had not been ſure of the fact. And yet it may be ſaid to receive a farther confirmation from Joſephus, who, we may be aſſured, out of regard to his own credit, and his favourable inclination to Agrippa, would never invent ſuch a ſtory as this.

As for the owl which Joſephus ſpeaks of, and which is now ſaid to be a meſſenger of evil to Agrippa, as it had been before of his proſperity; it has reference to an account he has given of the perching of ſuch a bird upon a tree near this ſame Agrippa, when he was put into chains by order of Tiberius, and to a prognoſtication which a German Aſtrologer is ſaid to have delivered, at that time, concerning him. Whether ſuch a bird did now appear in the theatre or not, I will not determine, nor do I think it material. Joſephus does now and then throw a circumſtance or two into his relations that give them an Heatheniſh air, with a deſign, it is probable, of rendring his hiſtory more agreeable to the Greeks and Romans, for whom it was principally intended. But it is evident from his account, that Herod was ſeized with a very uncommon diſorder, and that he had the moſt lively apprehenſions of his approaching death.

Luke ſays, Herod was eaten of worms; this is not mentioned by Joſephus. And this has been ſuppoſed by ſome to be a conſiderable objection againſt Luke's account. But in my opinion, without any good reaſon. For the diſtemper of which this Herod Agrippa died, was, according to Joſephus's own deſcription of it, very like to that of Herod his grandfather; who beſide other diſorders, was afflicted with violent pains in his bowels, and an ulcer which bred worms. And it is not at all unlikely, that Agrippa's caſe was, in this laſt reſpect alſo, very much the ſame with that of Herod the Great. I ſhould think, that moſt perſons muſt be aſhamed to repreſent the omiſſion of this particular in Joſephus, as an objection of any moment. The diſtempers of great men are ſeldom particularly deſcribed. A certain delicacy often reſtrains men from making mention of ſuch matters, and eſpecially are hiſtorians ſhy of relating them concerning thoſe princes, in whoſe honour they are intereſted. Upon the whole, I believe, this paſſage of Joſephus will be allowed to be a very remarkable atteſtation of this extraordinary event, related by Luke.

It will be of uſe to put down here from Joſephus the names of Herod Agrippa's children. "Thus died king Agrippa, leaving behind him one ſon named Agrippa, then ſeventeen years of age, and three daughters, Bernice, who was married to Herod her father's brother, being ſixteen years of age, Mariamne, and Druſilla, who were unmarried. The former was ten years old, and Druſilla ſix —— Druſilla was contracted to Epiphanes, ſon of Antiochus king of Commagene."

From the 23d and two following chapters of the Acts of the Apoſtles, we learn that Felix was governor in Judea, and that Porcius Feſtus ſucceeded him; the truth of which is particularly atteſted by Joſephus, in divers parts of this hiſtory.

Concerning Felix, Luke has mentioned divers things beſides his being governor that will deſerve our conſideration. Whilſt Paul was at Ceſarea, Luke ſays; and after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Druſilla, which was a Jeweſs, he ſent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Chriſt, Acts xxiv. 24. This Druſilla is the youngeſt daughter of Herod Agrippa, as was ſhewn juſt now. We have this account in Joſephus, of her marriage with Felix.

"Agrippa having received this preſent from Ceſar, (viz. Claudius) he gave his ſiſter Druſilla in marriage to Azizus, king of the Emeſenes, when he had conſented to be circumciſed. For Epiphanes the ſon of king Antiochus had broke the contract with her, by refuſing to embrace the Jewiſh cuſtoms, although he had promiſed her father he would.——But this marriage of Druſilla with Azizus was diſſolved, in a ſhort time, after this manner. When Felix was procurator of Judea, having had a ſight of her, he was mightily taken with her, and indeed, ſhe was the moſt beautiful of her ſex. He therefore ſent to her, Simon, a Jew of Cyprus, who was one of his friends, and pretended to magic; by whom he perſuaded her to leave her huſband and marry him, promiſing to make her perfectly happy, if ſhe did not diſdain him. It was far from being a ſufficient reaſon, but to avoid the envy of her ſiſter Bernice, who was continually doing her ill offices becauſe of her beauty, ſhe was induced to tranſgreſs the laws of her country, and marry Felix." Ant. 20. 6.

It has been thought indeed by ſome, that Tacitus gives a different account of this Druſilla, when he ſays that Felix had for his wife, Druſilla, grandaughter of Cleopatra and Antony. But I don't know that I am obliged to take notice of this; ſince Joſephus agrees with Luke (that ſhe was a Jeweſs). And he may be juſtly ſuppoſed to be as well acquainted with Druſilla's original as Tacitus. I ſhall only obſerve, that Suetonius ſays, that Felix married three queens, or three women of royal families. It is certain that Druſilla, a Jeweſs, ſiſter of Agrippa the younger, was one of them. And if Tacitus was not miſtaken, another of them was deſcended from Cleopatra, the queen of Egypt, and Antony, and was called Druſilla. Who the third was, doth not appear, that I know of.

Tacitus ſays, that whilſt Felix was procurator of Judea, "he acted in a very arbitrary manner, and ſcrupled no kind of injuſtice." Joſephus has recorded one inſtance of abominable villainy he was guilty of. "Jonathan the high-prieſt often admoniſhed Felix to correct his adminiſtration; for that otherwiſe he himſelf was in danger of the ill-will of the people, ſince he had deſired the emperor to make him procurator of Judea." But he not being able to bear theſe frequent remonſtrances, "by a large ſum of money corrupted an intimate friend of Jonathan's, who got him to be aſſaſſinated." His government was ſo irregular, that the Jews followed him with complaints to Rome, after he had left the province: And it was owing to a very powerful intereſt made for him at court, that he eſcaped the reſentment of Nero.

All theſe above-mentioned particulars from Joſephus and Tacitus, may ſatiſfy us, that when Paul reaſoned of righteouſneſs, temperance (or chaſtity) and judgment to come, Acts xxiv. 25. his ſubjects were well choſen with reſpect to both his hearers; and that what Luke adds, concerning Felix, that he hoped that money ſhould have been given him of Paul, that he might looſe him, ver. 26. is no calumny.

Some may think it ſtrange, that Felix ſhould have had any hopes of receiving money from this priſoner, when it does not appear he had any eſtate, and he has intimated, that he was at times obliged to labour, working with his hands for a ſubſiſtence, 1 Cor. iv. 12. Acts xx. 34. But in anſwer to this, it has been obſerved by expoſitors, that Paul had told Felix, that after many years he came to bring alms to his nation and offerings, Acts xxiv. 17. It is likely therefore, that Felix imagined, that money had not been all diſtributed as yet, ſince Paul was apprehended within a few days after his coming to Jeruſalem, xxi. 27. xxiv. 11. or at leaſt concluded he muſt needs be a perſon of ſome conſequence, and have good friends.

Luke ſays, Acts xxv. 13. And after certain days, king Agrippa and Bernice came to Ceſarea to ſalute Feſtus; this Agrippa is the ſon of Herod Agrippa above-mentioned. Luke calls him king, as Joſephus alſo does very often, Antiq. xx. c. 8. But Luke does not ſuppoſe him to be king of Judea: For all the judicial proceedings in that country relating to Paul, are tranſacted before Felix, and this Feſtus his ſucceſſor. Beſides, he ſays here, that Agrippa came to Ceſarea to ſalute Feſtus; that is, to pay his reſpects to him, and compliment him upon his arrival in the province; ſee Acts xxv. 1.

When his father was dead, Claudius intended at firſt to have put him immediately in poſſeſſion of his father's dominions: But Agrippa being then but ſeventeen years of age, the emperor was perſuaded to alter his mind, "and appointed Cuſpius Fadus, prefect of Judea, and of the whole kingdom, Antiq. xix. 9. Which Fadus was ſucceeded by Tiberius Alexander, Cumanus, Felix, Feſtus, Antiq. xx. de Bell. lib ii. though theſe did not poſſeſs the province in the ſame extent that Fadus did.

This Agrippa therefore was diſappointed of his father's kingdom; but he had by this time got conſiderable territories.

"Herod, brother of king Arigppa the Great, died in the eighth year of the reign of Claudius Cæſar.——Claudius then gave his government to Agrippa the younger, Antiq. ib. This is our Agrippa we are now ſpeaking of.

"The twelfth year of his reign being completed, he (Claudius) gave Agrippa the tetrarchy of Philip, and Batanea, adding alſo Trachonitis with Abila; this had been the tetrarchy of Lyſanias. But he took away from him Chalcis after he had governed it four years, ibid." In the war of the Jews Joſephus expreſſeth it thus: "After this, he ſent Felix the brother of Pallas to be procurator of Judea, Galilee, Samaria, and Peræa; and promoted Agrippa from Chalcis to a greater kingdom, giving to him the tetrarchy which had been Philip's. (This is Batanea and Trachonitis, and Gaulanitis). And he added moreover, the kingdom of Lyſanias, and the province that had been Varus's, de Bell. lib. ii. c. 12.

"Nero in the firſt year of his reign, gave Agrippa a certain part of Galilee, ordering Tiberias and Taricheas to be ſubject to him. He gave him alſo Julias a city of Peræa, and fourteen towns in the neighbourhood of it." Ant. xx. 7. Luke therefore is in the right to give Agrippa the title of king at this time.

The reader has doubtleſs obſerved, that when Paul was before Agrippa, he addreſſed himſelf to him as a Jew. I think myſelf happy, king Agrippa, becauſe I ſhall anſwer for myſelf this day before thee.——Eſpecially becauſe I know thee to be expert in all cuſtoms and queſtions which are among the Jews, Acts xxvi. 2, 3.——King Agrippa, believeſt thou the Prophets? I know that thou believeſt, xi. 27.

From what hath been alledged relating to Herod Agrippa, it is plain he was a zealous Jew, or at leaſt appeared ſo at Jeruſalem, and had educated all his children in the Jewiſh religion. This Agrippa his ſon, undoubtedly maintained the ſame profeſſion; and now, he had, by the permiſſion of the emperor, the direction of the Sacred Treaſury, the government of the temple, and the right of nominating the high-prieſts. No wonder therefore, that Paul told Agrippa he knew him to be expert in all cuſtoms and queſtions which were among the Jews.

As to Bernice, ſhe was a lady well known in thoſe times. There are ſeveral reflexions made upon her conduct by Joſephus, as well as other writers, Ant. xx. 6. But as Luke ſays nothing of her, beſides her making a viſit to Feſtus with Agrippa; and it has been ſhewn already who ſhe was, namely the daughter of Herod Agrippa, and the ſiſter of Agrippa the younger, I am not bound to add any thing farther concerning her. I ſhall only ſay, the reſpect which Titus Veſpaſian ſhewed her, gave occaſion for much diſcourſe; and that ſhe had once hopes of being empreſs: But the murmurs of the people of Rome prevented it, Dio ex Xiphil. lib. 66.

There are but two things more I ſhall take notice of here. They may be judged by ſome too minute to be inſiſted on; but they appear to me inſtances of great exactneſs and propriety, and to afford a ſtrong proof, that Luke was perfectly well acquainted with the matters of which he wrote. Therefore,

Paul and Barnabas having preached the word of God at Salamis (in Cyprus) went through the iſle to Paphos, where they found Barjeſus, which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, Acts xiii. 7. But in the Greek it is with the proconſul, Sergius Paulus, i. e. σὺν τῷ 'Ανθυπάτῳ Σεργίῳ Παύλῳ.

It is well known to the learned, that upon Auguſtus's becoming abſolute maſter of the Roman common-wealth, there was a diviſion made of the provinces of the empire; ſee Strab. Geog. lib. iii. and 17. Sueton. Auguſt. c. 47, 48. Dio lib. 53. The moſt powerful, or at leaſt, thoſe which required the greateſt number of troops, the emperor kept to himſelf; the reſt were made over to the people and ſenate. The officers ſent by the emperor were called lieutenants, or proprætors, though they were conſular perſons; that is, though they had ſerved the conſulſhip in the city. The governors ſent by the ſenate, into the provinces that belonged to their ſhare, he appointed to be called proconſuls, a name more ſuitable to the peaceful ſtate which the provinces allotted to the ſenate were in. But the diviſion made at this time, An. U. C. 727. underwent many changes. And a province aſſigned at firſt to the ſenate, was afterwards made over to the emperor, and on the contrary. Such a change happened with reference to this province of Cyprus; which in the firſt partition, was one of the emperor's provinces, but was afterward, together with Gallia Narbonenſis given to the ſenate; in the room of which he took Dalmatia, which at firſt was theirs. And in this ſtate this province continued, and the proper title of the governor of Cyprus was that of proconſul. See Dio ibid.

It is true, Strabo ſays, Cyprus was a prætorian province, lib. 14. and this has made this text a mighty difficulty with many learned men. Beza went ſo far into the opinion of the impropriety of this expreſſion, as to attempt to correct it in his tranſlation of this text; and he put proprætor in the room of proconſul. And the ſolutions which have been offered by divers other learned men, have, I believe, appeared unſatisfactory. But if Dio Caſſius's whole account of this matter had been attended to, the difficulty had vaniſhed. Cyprus was undoubtedly a prætorian province, as all the people's provinces were, except two. But the governors of all their provinces had the title of proconſul. " It was decreed that two of their provinces, Aſia and Africa, ſhould be appropriated to ſenators that had been conſuls, and all the reſt were given to thoſe which had been prætors." " But that they ſhould be all called proconſuls, not only thoſe which had been conſuls, but thoſe alſo which had been only prætors," and Suetonius ſays, " That Auguſtus took the more powerful provinces to himſelf, and gave the reſt to proconſuls choſen by the ſenate." Ibid.

Examples alſo ſupport this uſe of the word. Crete was a prætorian province, according to Strabo and Dio; yet Tacitus calls Cæſius Cordus, proconſul of Crete. There is alſo an ancient inſcription of Caligula's reign, in which Aquius Scaura is called proconſul of Cyprus; ſee Gruter. inſcript. p. 360.

The laſt thing I ſhall take notice of, is the title given to Gallio; who in our rranſlation is called the deputy, but in the Greek, proconſul, 'Ανθυπατεύοντος, of Achaia. In this inſtance Luke's accuracy appears more conſpicuous than in the former, becauſe this province had a more various fortune than the other. In the original partition, they were aſſigned to the people and ſenate; Dio p. 503. In the reign of Tiberius, they were at their own requeſt made over to the emperor, Tacit. Ann. l. 1. c. 76. In the reign of Claudius, when L. Quinctius Criſpinus, and M. Statilius Taurus, were conſuls, A. U. 797. A. D. 44. They were again reſtored to the ſenate, Suet. in Claud. c. 25. and therefore from that time, (as Dio ſays, upon Auguſtus's giving Cyprus to the ſenate) proconſuls were ſent into this country. Paul was brought before Gallio in the year of our Lord 52, or 53; conſequently Gallio was proconſul of Achaia, as Luke calls him.

CHAP. XXVI.

2 Paul, in the preſence of Agrippa, declareth his life from his childhood, 12 And how miraculouſly he was converted and called to his Apoſtleſhip. 24 Feſtus chargeth him to be mad, whereunto he anſwereth modeſtly. 28 Agrippa is almoſt perſwaded to be a Chriſtian. 31 The whole company pronounce him innocent.

THEN Agrippa ſaid unto Paul, Thou art permitted to ſpeak for thy ſelf. Then Paul ſtretched forth the hand, and anſwered for himſelf,

2 I think my ſelf happy, king Agrippa, becauſe I ſhall anſwer for my ſelf this day before thee, touching all the things whereof I am accuſed of the Jews:

3 Eſpecially, becauſe I know thee to be expert in all cuſtoms and queſtions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beſeech thee to hear me patiently.

4 My manner of life from my youth, which was at the firſt among mine own nation at Jeruſalem, know all the Jews,

5 Which knew me from the beginning, (if they would teſtify) that after the moſt ſtraiteſt ſect of our religion, I lived a Phariſee.

6 And now I ſtand and am judged for the hope of the promiſe made of God unto our fathers:

7 Unto which promiſe our twelve tribes inſtantly ſerving God day and night, hope to come: for which hopes ſake, king Agrippa, I am accuſed of the Jews.

8 Why ſhould it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God ſhould raiſe the dead?

9 I verily thought with my ſelf that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jeſus of Nazareth.

10 Which thing I alſo did in Jeruſalem: and many of the ſaints did I ſhut up in priſon, having received authority from the chief prieſts; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice againſt them.

11 And I puniſhed them oft in every ſynagogue, and compelled them to blaſpheme; and being exceedingly mad againſt them, I perſecuted them even unto ſtrange cities.

12 Whereupon as I went to Damaſcus, with authority and commiſſion from the chief prieſts;

13 At midday, O king, I ſaw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightneſs of the ſun, ſhining round about me, and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice ſpeaking unto me, and ſaying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? It is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks.

15 And I ſaid, Who art thou, Lord? And he ſaid, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt.

16 But riſe, and ſtand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpoſe, to make thee a miniſter and a witneſs both of theſe things which thou haſt ſeen, and of thoſe things in the which I will appear unto thee;

17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I ſend thee,

18 To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveneſs of ſins, and inheritance among them which are ſanctified by faith that is in me.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not diſobedient unto the heavenly viſion:

20 But ſhewed firſt unto them of Damaſcus, and at Jeruſalem, and throughout all the coaſts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they ſhould repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

21 For theſe cauſes the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witneſſing both to ſmall and great, ſaying none other things than thoſe which the prophets and Moſes did ſay ſhould come:

23 That Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, and that he ſhould be the firſt that ſhould riſe from the dead, and ſhould ſhew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

24 And as he thus ſpake for himſelf, Feſtus ſaid with a loud voice, Paul, thou art beſide thy ſelf: much learning doth make thee mad.

25 But he ſaid, I am not mad, moſt noble Feſtus; but ſpeak forth the words of truth and ſoberneſs.

26 For the king knoweth of theſe things, before whom alſo I ſpeak freely: for I am perſwaded that none of theſe things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.

27 King Agrippa, believeſt thou the prophets? I know that thou believeſt.

28 Then Agrippa ſaid unto Paul, Almoſt thou perſwadeſt me to be a Chriſtian.

29 And Paul ſaid, I would to God, that not only thou, but alſo all that hear me this day, were both almoſt, and altogether ſuch as I am, except theſe bonds.

30 And when he had thus ſpoken, the king roſe up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that ſat with them.

31 And when they were gone aſide, they talked between themſelves, ſaying, This man doth nothing worthy of death, or of bonds.

32 Then ſaid Agrippa unto Feſtus, This man might have been ſet at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Ceſar.

1 Paul ſhipping toward Rome, 10 foretelleth of the danger of the voyage, 11 but is not believed. 14 They are toſſed to and fro with tempeſt, 41 and ſuffer ſhipwreck, 22. 34, 44. yet all come ſafe to land.

AND when it was determined that we ſhould ſail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other priſoners, unto one named Julius, a centurion of Auguſtus band.

2 And entring into a ſhip of Adramyttium, we lanched, meaning to ſail by the coaſts of Aſia, one Ariſtarchus a Macedonian, of Theſſalonica, being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteouſly entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refreſh himſelf.

4 And when we had lanched from thence, we ſailed under Cyprus, becauſe the winds were contrary.

5 And we had ſailed over the ſea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ſhip of Alexandria ſailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

7 And when we had ſailed ſlowly many days, and ſcarce were come over-againſt Cnidus, the wind not ſuffering us, we ſailed under Crete, over-againſt Salmone:

8 And hardly paſſing it, came unto a place which is called, The fair havens, nigh whereunto was the city of Laſea.

9 Now when much time was ſpent, and when ſailing was now dangerous, becauſe the faſt was now already paſt, Paul admoniſhed them,

10 And ſaid unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ſhip, but alſo of our lives.

11 Nevertheleſs, the centurion believed the maſter and the owner of the ſhip, more than thoſe things which were ſpoken by Paul.

12 And becauſe the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part adviſed to depart thence alſo, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the ſouth-weſt, and north-weſt.

13 And when the ſouth-wind blew ſoftly, ſuppoſing that they had obtained their purpoſe, looſing thence, they ſailed cloſe by Crete.

14 But not long after there aroſe againſt it a tempeſtuous wind, called Euroclydon.

15 And when the ſhip was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain iſland, which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat:

17 Which when they had taken up, they uſed helps, undergirding the ſhip; and fearing leſt they ſhould fall into the quickſands, ſtruck ſail, and ſo were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly toſſed with a tempeſt, the next day they lightned the ſhip;

19 And the third day we caſt out with our own hands the tackling of the ſhip.

20 And when neither ſun nor ſtars in many days appeared, and no ſmall tempeſt lay on us, all hope that we ſhould be ſaved was then taken away.

21 But after long abſtinence, Paul ſtood forth in the midſt of them, and ſaid, Sirs, ye ſhould have hearkned unto me, and not have looſed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loſs.

22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there ſhall be no loſs of any mans life among you, but of the ſhip.

23 For there ſtood by me this night the angel of God, whoſe I am, and whom I ſerve,

24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou muſt be brought before Ceſar: and lo, God hath given thee all them that ſail with thee.

25 Wherefore, ſirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it ſhall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit we muſt be caſt upon a certain iſland.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight, the ſhipmen deemed that they drew near to ſome country:

29 Then fearing leſt they ſhould have fallen upon rocks, they caſt four anchors out of the ſtern, and wiſhed for the day.

30 And as the ſhipmen were about to flee out of the ſhip, when they had let down the boat into the ſea, under colour as though they would have caſt anchors out of the foreſhip.

31 Paul ſaid to the centurion, and to the ſoldiers, Except theſe abide in the ſhip, ye cannot be ſaved.

32 Then the ſoldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul beſought them all to take meat, ſaying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried, and continued faſting, having taken nothing.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take ſome meat; for this is for your health: for there ſhall not an hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus ſpoken, he took bread, and gave thanks to God in preſence of them all, and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they alſo took ſome meat.

37 And we were in all in the ſhip, two hundred threeſcore and ſixteen ſouls.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightned the ſhip, and caſt out the wheat into the ſea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they diſcovered a certain creek with a ſhore, into the which they were minded, if it were poſſible, to thruſt in the ſhip.

40 And when they had taken up the anchors, they committed themſelves unto the ſea, and looſed the rudder-bands, and hoiſted up the main-ſail to the wind, and made toward ſhore.

41 And falling into a place where two ſeas met, they ran the ſhip aground; and the forepart ſtuck faſt, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42 And the ſoldiers counſel was to kill the priſoners, leſt any of them ſhould ſwim out, and eſcape.

43 But the centurion willing to ſave Paul, kept them from their purpoſe, and commanded that they which could ſwim, ſhould caſt themſelves firſt into the ſea, and get to land:

44 And the reſt, ſome on boards, and ſome on broken pieces of the ſhip: And ſo it came to paſs that they eſcaped all ſafe to land.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1 Paul, after his ſhipwreck is kindly entertained of the Barbarians. 5 The viper on his hand hurteth him not. 8 He healeth many diſeaſes in the iſland. 11 They depart towards Rome. 17 He declareth to the Jews the cauſe of his coming. 24 After his preaching ſome were perſuaded, and ſome believed not. 30 Yet he preacheth there two years.

AND when they were eſcaped, then they knew that the iſland was called Melita.

2 And the barbarous people ſhewed us no little kindneſs: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, becauſe of the preſent rain, and becauſe of the cold.

3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of ſticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and faſtned on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians ſaw the venomous beaſt hang on his hand, they ſaid among themſelves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom though he hath eſcaped the ſea, yet vengeance ſuffereth not to live.

5 And he ſhook off the beaſt into the fire, and felt no harm.

6 Howbeit, they looked when he ſhould have ſwollen, or fallen down dead ſuddenly:

but after they had looked a great while, and ſaw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and ſaid that he was a god.

7 In the ſame quarters were poſſeſſions of the chief man of the iſland, whoſe name was Publius, who received us, and lodged us three days courteouſly.

8 And it came to paſs that the father of Publius lay ſick of a fever, and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entred in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So when this was done, others alſo which had diſeaſes in the iſland, came, and were healed:

10 Who alſo honoured us with many honours, and when we departed, they laded us with ſuch things as were neceſſary.

11 And after three months we departed in a ſhip of Alexandria, which had wintered in the iſle, whoſe ſign was Caſtor and Pollux.

12 And landing at Syracuſe, we tarried there three days.

13 And from thence we ſet a compaſs, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the ſouth-wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli:

14 Where we found brethren, and were deſired to tarry with them ſeven days: and ſo we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came to meet us as far as Appii-forum, and the three taverns: whom when Paul ſaw, he thanked God, and took courage.

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the priſoners to the captain of the guard: but Paul was ſuffered to dwell by himſelf, with a ſoldier that kept him.

17 And it came to paſs, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together. And when they were come together, he ſaid unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing againſt the people, or cuſtoms of our fathers, yet was I delivered priſoner from Jeruſalem into the hands of the Romans.

18 Who when they had examined me, would have let me go, becauſe there was no cauſe of death in me.

19 But when the Jews ſpake againſt it, I was conſtrained to appeal unto Ceſar; not that I had ought to accuſe my nation of.

20 For this cauſe therefore have I called for you, to ſee you, and to ſpeak with you: becauſe that for the hope of Iſrael I am bound with this chain.

21 And they ſaid unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came, ſhewed or ſpake any harm of thee.

22 But we deſire to hear of thee what thou thinkeſt: for as concerning this ſect, we know that every where it is ſpoken againſt.

23 And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; to whom he expounded and teſtified the kingdom of God, perſwading them concerning Jeſus, both out of the law of Moſes, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24 And ſome believed the things which were ſpoken, and ſome believed not.

25 And when they agreed not among themſelves, they departed, after that Paul had ſpoken one word, Well ſpake the Holy Ghoſt by Eſaias the prophet unto our fathers,

26 Saying, Go unto this people, and ſay, Hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand; and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and not perceive.

27 For the heart of this people is waxed groſs, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they cloſed; leſt they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and underſtand with their heart, and ſhould be converted, and I ſhould heal them.

28 Be it known therefore unto you, that the ſalvation of God is ſent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29 And when he had ſaid theſe words, the Jews departed, and had great reaſoning among themſelves.

30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired houſe, and received all that came in unto him,

31 Preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching thoſe things which concern the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Ver. 1. Melita.] The ſame as we now call Malta.

Ver. 2. ——— The barbarous people.] So called, not becauſe they were ſavage or cruel, but only by a phraſe of ſpeech common to the Greeks, who called all nations barbarous, that did not ſpeak their language, and follow their cuſtoms.

Ver. 6. ——— Said that he was a God.] Becauſe the venemous creature had no power over him, which they thought could not be perverted by any other than a Divine Power.

Ver. 7. In the ſame quarters] Or, part of the iſland.

Ver. 8. ——— Laid his hands on him] According as Chriſt had commanded his diſciples in Mark xvi. 18.

——— Healed him.] In a miraculous manner, praying and laying his hands on him in the name of Chriſt.

Ver. 10. ——— Honoured us.] Paul and Luke.

——— Departed.] On ſhipboard for Rome.

Ver. 11. ——— Whoſe ſign was Caſtor and Pollux.] That ſhip either had the images of theſe two Heathen gods, carved or painted in the ſtern, or in a flag as the manner is now-a-days with us, Caſtor and Pollux were known by the common name of Dioſcuri, i. e. Jupiter's children, and were eſteemed by the Pagans to be gods of the ſea.

Ver. 12. ——— Syracuſe.] At that time a famous city in Sicily; it is ſtill extant.

Ver. 13. ——— Rhegium.] The nigheſt haven in Italy from Sicily.

——— Puteoli.] A Sea-port in the kingdom of Naples.

Ver. 15. ——— Apii Torum.] A village in the way to Rome, on the Via Appia, built by one Apius a noble Roman, at his own expence.

Ver. 16. ——— Paul was ſuffered to dwell by himſelf, with a ſoldier that kept him.] The only thing we have to obſerve here, is, that the captain of the guard often had the cuſtody of the priſoners, as may be collected from my notes on the xxivth chapter. And it ſeems, that generally the priſoners, which were ſent to Rome from the provinces, were committed to the charge of that officer, and not to the præfect of the city; ſee Pliny, l. x. ep. 65.

The caſe of the loſs of life is that of Stephen, whoſe death he ſays, he was conſenting to, and kept the raiment of them that ſlew him. Beſide this, in his ſpeech to Agrippa, he ſays, and when they were put to death, I gave my voice againſt them.

Here it ought to be obſerved, that it is not expreſſed by what authority they were put to death. Though the ſentences were pronounced and executed by the Roman magiſtrate, (as in the caſe of our Saviour) Saul might be one who gave his voice againſt thoſe who were ſo puniſhed; as the people at Jeruſalem did demand of Pilate, that Jeſus might be crucified. It is of ſome ſuch act as this, that Saul's giving his voice againſt them muſt be underſtood; viz. of witneſſing againſt them, promoting a popular clamour againſt them, or of approving, and conſenting to their condemnation and puniſhment. This is all that can be intended, becauſe whether they were put to death, by the authority of the Sanhedrim, or of a Roman Governor, it cannot be ſuppoſed, that Saul was one of the judges,

But I think, it may be very well queſtioned, whether in theſe words, Paul refers to any thing, beſide the death of Stephen. This is the only perſon whoſe death he has any where expreſly ſaid he was concerned in. There is not any one inſtance, beſide the death of Stephen, hinted by Luke; whereas, if there had been any, it is very improbable, that he ſhould have omitted them, ſince he has given ſo particular an account of that of Stephen. It is very common in leſs exact, nay, in almoſt all kinds of relations, to uſe the plural number, where one only is meant. Thus Matthew ſays, that the thieves alſo which were crucified with him, caſt the ſame in his teeth, Matt. xxvii. 44. Whereas, it appears from Luke, that only one of the malefactors, which were hanged, railed on him, whilſt he was rebuked by the other for it, Luke xxiii. 39, 40. Again, Paul ſaid unto them (the keepers of the priſon at Philippi) they have beaten us openly uncondemned being Romans, Acts xvi. And yet, moſt probably, Paul only was a Roman, and not Silas. And in no caſe could a plural number be put for a ſingular more properly than here, where the Apoſtle, in his great humility, aggravates his former blindneſs and madneſs. And the meaning of his words here is no more than, when any one was put to death, I was very forward in approving it.

Thus, I think, that all which does evidently appear to have been done by a proper authority of the chief prieſts and council of the Jews, are impriſonment, ſcourging in the ſynagogue, and in ſome publick place, and harraſſing in ſuch a manner, as to oblige men to leave Judea. Stephen is put to death, but it ſeems to have been in a tumultuous manner.

However it muſt be allowed, that this was a time of very heavy ſufferings for the followers of Jeſus. And one would be apt to ſuppoſe, that for a good part of this period, the Jews had no Roman Governor reſiding among them, or if they had, that he connived at ſome diſorders; or elſe, that their zeal rendred them ſo tumultuous, that he was not able to keep things in good order amongſt them.

There is one thing very obſervable, that for ſome time before the end of this period, the diſciples of Chriſt enjoyed peace in Judea. Then had the Churches reſt throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, Acts ix. 31.

We go on now to the third period, which is the reign of Herod the king. The account we have of the tranſactions in this period, is contained in the twelfth chapter of the Acts of the Apoſtles; particularly from ver. 1. to the 7th, and ver. 18, 19. There being no difficulty in it, I need not tranſcribe it. Every order and act of Herod, here mentioned, his killing James with the ſword, impriſoning Peter with intent to bring him forth to the people, commanding the keepers to be put to death, is an undeniable proof of his ſoveraign authority at this time in Judea.

The fourth period reaches from the reign of this Herod, to the concluſion of the evangelical hiſtory.

The main thing which occurs here, is the treatment of Paul in Judea, ſo far as there is any appearance of a legal procedure. He being come to Jeruſalem, and having been perſuaded to purify himſelf with others that had a vow, he entred into the temple to ſignify the accompliſhment of the days of purification,——and when the ſeven days were almoſt ended, &c. Acts xxi. 4—26. But before he was lead in, with the chief captains leave, he made a ſpeech to the people in the Hebrew tongue: in which he relates at length, that he had received directions in a trance,——ſaying, depart, for I will ſend thee far hence unto the Gentiles. The Jews not being able to contain themſelves any longer, lift up their voices, and ſaid, Away with ſuch a fellow from the earth: For it is not fit that he ſhould live, Acts xxii. 22, 23. The chief captain then commanded that he ſhould be brought into the caſtle, and bad that he ſhould be examined by ſcourging. But Paul affirming that he was a Roman, the centurion appointed to attend the torture, went and gave the chief captain information of it; ſee ver. 25, &c. and xxiii. 1.—5.

The chief captain, after this, being informed of a conſpiracy againſt Paul, ſent him with a guard of two hundred ſoldiers to Felix at Ceſarea; who, when he had received him, together with a letter from Lyſias the chief captain; told Paul he would hear him when his accuſers alſo were come; ſee Acts xxiii 35. and xxiv. 1,—27. and xxv. 1,—9. Where you will find that,

The caſe is this: A man was like to have been killed in a popular tumult at Jeruſalem, a Roman officer there reſcues him, takes him into his own hands, and lodges him in a caſtle. Afterwards, that his priſoner might be ſafer, he removes him to Ceſarea, the reſidence of the governor, before whom there are divers hearings. There was therefore at this time a Roman governor in Judea, at firſt Felix, who was ſucceeded by Feſtus. But beſide them, here is alſo a Jewiſh council, which appears not void of authority.

This is the ſum of the ſtory. But here are divers particulars to be reviewed. The pretence for ſeizing this man at firſt is extremely complicated. That he taught men every where againſt the people, and the law, and this place; and had brought Greeks into the temple, and polluted this Holy Place. The whole charge, however, ſeems to have been of a religious nature. This appears from divers teſtimonies.

When Paul was brought before the council at Jeruſalem by Lyſias, Paul ſaid, I am a Phariſee, the ſon of a Phariſee: Of the hope and reſurrection of the dead am I called in queſtion, Acts xxii. 6. This is a preſumption, the debates then ran upon matters of religion. Lyſias, in the letter he ſent with Paul to Felix, ſays:——I brought him forth into their council, whom I perceived to be accuſed of queſtions of their law. Tertullus, whom Ananias took along with him to Ceſarea, tells Felix: We have found this man a peſtilent fellow, and a mover of ſedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the ſect of the Nazarenes, who alſo hath gone about to profane the temple, chap. xxiv. 5, 6. Here are hard words, and ſome grievous charges thrown in to increaſe the account, and nothing true, but that Paul was a Nazarene, as Paul affirms, and ſeems to make out to Felix. And Paul's anſwer ſhews that Paul's notions; (ſee xxiv. 12,—24.) were the great ſubject of enquiry to ſee whether there was any thing dangerous or puniſhable in them.

Thus, before Feſtus at Ceſarea, the Jews which were come down from Jeruſalem, laid many and grievous complaints againſt Paul which they could not prove, Acts xxv. 7. They might mix other matters in their complaints, as men intent upon a point are wont to do, but Feſtus perceived no truth in their charges, but what concerned their ſuperſtition, or religion. Feſtus afterwards brings forth Paul to Agrippa: And Paul having rehearſed the manner of his life from firſt to laſt, before, and ſince his converſion; and having acquainted them in particular with his commiſſion from Chriſt to preach the Goſpel, after all was over, Agrippa ſaid unto Feſtus, This man might have been ſet at liberty, if he had not appealed unto Cæſar, Acts xxvi. 15, —30. Which words ſhew, Agrippa was convinced by what Paul ſaid, firſt, that theſe principles of his were his only crime, and ſecondly, that notwithſtanding the charges and pretences of the Jews, Feſtus had a right to ſet Paul at liberty.

From all which particulars it appears, that all the evidence againſt Paul was of facts that concerned the Jewiſh religion, or the ſecurity of their worſhip, and yet we find, that Felix and Feſtus were the judges of this priſoner, in this cauſe; all parties acknowledge it.

The Jews ſeem to have owned it by their conduct: for Ananias went down to Ceſarea with Tertullus, and accuſed Paul there before Felix. And when Feſtus came into the province, they went to Ceſarea again, and pleaded againſt Paul, Acts xxv. 6, 7.

Paul plainly acknowledges them to be ſo. Then Paul, after that the governor had beckned to him, to ſpeak, anſwered for himſelf: Foraſmuch as I know that thou haſt been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more chearfully anſwer for my ſelf, xxiv. 10. And that his cauſe belonged to the Roman juriſdiction he declared farther by his appeal at laſt to Ceſar.

Theſe governors evidently claim the right of judgment. When Paul was firſt delivered to Felix at Ceſarea, Felix ſaid to him, I will hear thee when thine accuſers alſo are come, xxiii. 35. And after he had heard the accuſers and Paul the priſoner in judgment, he deferred them, and ſaid, When Lyſias the chief captain ſhall come down, I will know the uttermoſt of your matter, xxiv. 22. When Feſtus went firſt to Jeruſalem, after he came into the province, the high-prieſt and chief of the Jews deſired favour againſt him (Paul) that he would ſend for him to Jeruſalem. But Feſtus anſwered, that Paul ſhould be kept at Ceſarea, and that he himſelf would depart ſhortly thither. Let them therefore, ſaid he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuſe this man, if there be any wickedneſs in him, xxv. 2,—5. Paul having pleaded there before him, Feſtus willing to do the Jews a pleaſure, anſwered Paul, and ſaid, Wilt thou go up to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe things before me? ver. 9.

It ought to be conſidered likewiſe, that the Jews are all along ſtiled accuſers, only in their perſecutions againſt Paul, as I could ſhew by collating together the ſeveral paſſages; but as the reader may recollect divers of them, and it would be too tedious to recite them all, I ſhan't detain you any longer upon this circumſtance. But,

Though this affair thus ſtated, favours a ſuppoſition, that the Jews had not in this period of time the power of life and death; yet there are ſome difficulties that deſerve conſideration. As,

Firſt, That paſſage of Acts xxiv. 5,—7. where we read that Lyſias forced Paul out of the hands of the Jewiſh council, who were about to judge him according to their law. Which act of Lyſias may be interpreted irregular, and arbitrary in the governors, who ſupported Lyſias in that action.

To which I anſwer, That Lyſias bears ſuch an excellent character in every other part of this narration, that it is not eaſy to ſuppoſe, he had acted irregular in this action. He paid ſuch a regard to the diſpoſition of the Jewiſh people againſt Paul, as to bind him with two chains, as ſoon as he had got him into his poſſeſſion. Not being able to find the truth from the different accounts given him, he ordered Paul to be examined by ſcourging. As ſoon as he knew that he was a Roman, he deſiſted from that method of enquiry. That he might know the certainty, he ſummoned a council at Jeruſalem, brought Paul down to them, and was ſo humane as to unbind him while he pleaded for himſelf. As ſoon as he was informed of a clandeſtine conſpiracy againſt his priſoner, he prudently took meaſures to convey him under a ſtrong guard to Ceſarea, where he might be ſafe. And in his letter to Felix the governor, he gives a moſt juſt account of the whole affair, and of his own conduct in particular, ſaying: This man was taken of the Jews, and ſhould have been killed by them: Then came I with an army and reſcued him. Which particulars, together with many others, that may be remembred, are ſufficient to aſſure us, that Lyſias had a ſtrict regard to juſtice, and the form of a government then eſtabliſhed in Judea, and that in reſcuing Paul from a mob, he had acted nothing but the part of a faithful and vigilant commander.

Secondly, It may be urged that Paul would never have ſaid, No man may deliver me unto them, Acts xxv. 11. if he had been afraid that Feſtus would have given the cauſe out of his own hands, and permitted the Jewiſh council to try him for his life. But,

I anſwer, this cannot be the meaning of Paul, becauſe Feſtus's propoſal was, Wilt thou go up to Jeruſalem, and there be judged of theſe things before me? Beſides,

This is not the meaning of the original phraſe; οὐδεὶς με δύναται αὐτοῖς χαρίσασθαι, which imports that no man may condemn me to death to pleaſe the Jews; Paul being afraid, that if he was carried up to Jeruſalem, Feſtus might be induced by the whole weight of the Jewiſh people there, to condemn him, though innocent; ſee Lardner vol. 1. p. 134, 135.

In a word, the accounts we have recorded in the 14th chap. of Acts at the 10th to 21ſt verſe, which have a particular regard to the religious ſtate of the Jews, ſerve to prove, that the Romans had a right to judge cauſes of a religious nature among them; ſee alſo ver. 23. and chap. xxii. 30.

Now, after this collection of authorities from the Sacred Writers, let us ſee how they are ſupported by the ancient writings of heathen and Jewiſh authors.

We have related, and you have read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, how Peter and John, and the other Apoſtles were ſummoned before the Jewiſh council, impriſoned, threatned, ſcourged, Stephen was ſtoned, and a very ſevere perſecution commenced, and was carried on for a conſiderable time againſt all the diſciples of Jeſus in that country, and at Damaſcus. This may be thought very extraordinary, if the Jews were, as certainly they were at this time, under the Roman government; and if they had not the power of life and death within themſelves.

Now I would in the firſt place obſerve, that though the ſtate of Judea, as I have repreſented it from Joſephus and Philo, in the introduction to the Acts, did not afford us any conſiderations, which might enable us to account for ſuch a behaviour of the Jews, as ſeems inconſiſtent with their ſubjection to the Romans; yet it may be fairly ſuppoſed from Luke's hiſtory, that the Jews were very riotous and turbulent at this time.

Here was now in this country a number of men, who affirmed, that Jeſus, who had wrought no temporal deliverance for the Jewiſh people, was the Chriſt; that he who had been lately condemned and crucified by them, was now riſen from the dead, and was now aſcended up to Heaven. They exhorted even the rulers of the Jews and all the people to repentance. They proved their aſſertions, and ſupported their exhortations by no other method, but by reaſonings from the Scripture, and by a healing power exerted on many miſerable objects. But however, the prieſts and all the rulers were grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jeſus the reſurrection of the dead. And though theſe diſciples of Jeſus made no tumult, yet they were very firm in their tenets; and when commanded by the council not to ſpeak at all, nor preach in the name of Jeſus, they ſcrupled not to profeſs, that it was with them an undoubted maxim rather to obey God than them, and told them, that they could not but ſpeak the things which they had ſeen and heard, Acts iv. 20. and ſo they did. Whereupon we find, they were brought again before the council: And the high-prieſt asked them, ſaying, Did not we ſtraitly command you, that you ſhould not teach in this name? And behold ye have filled Jeruſalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us, chap. v. 28. May not any man be aſſured, that the high-prieſt who ſpoke theſe words, and the council in whoſe name he ſpoke, would exert all the authority they were poſſeſſed of againſt rhe diſciples of Jeſus? As rulers in ſynagogues beat them there, as members of the council iſſue out orders for apprehending all of that way, impriſon them, whip them in publick places; and, if this was all they could do themſelves, have them, after that, before the governor; and if he did not fully execute their rage, by artful inſinuations raiſe a ſpirit in their people, which the moſt vigilant adminiſtration could not hinder from breaking out ſome times into riots, and ſuch like diſorders; by which ſome of the followers of Jeſus might loſe their lives. No people in the world are always peaceable and orderly, as they ſhould be; and the Jews were as likely as any to aſſume a power that was not legal. We have proofs of it in Joſephus. "When Fadus came "procurator into Judea, he found the Jews of Peræa (on "the other ſide of Jordan) in a riot fighting with the Phi"ladelphians about the limits of the village Mias. And "indeed the people of Peræa had taken up arms without "the conſent of their chief men, and had killed a good "number of the Philadelphians. When Fadus heard of "it, he was very much provoked, that they had taken up "arms and not left the deciſion to him, if they thought "the Philadelphians had done them any wrong." Ant. 20. c. 1.

The Diſſertation upon the ſtate of the Jews continued from the reſurrection of our Bleſſed Saviour, to the death of the Apoſtles.

It does not appear by any account in the Sacred Hiſtory, that there was any Roman Officer, or Preſident in Judea, from the reſurrection of Chriſt to the reign of Herod, mentioned in the twelfth chapter of Acts; yet it does not follow, that there was no proper officer during that interval: But it is proper to make this remark, tho' the reaſon of this omiſſion does not appear. Nevertheleſs,

It is certain, that whether the Romans had, or had not a preſident, or other chief officer in Judea about this time, the Jews were permitted to hold their council, and to call offenders before them, tho' it does not appear, that they had any power to inflict corporal puniſhments, (except whipping) by their own ſole authority. For, when we read in the fourth of Acts, that Peter and John were apprehended by Jewiſh Officers, (ver. 1.) through vexation, that they taught the people, and preached through Jeſus the reſurrection from the dead, (ver. 2.) though they put them in hold until the next day, (ver. 3.) yet all their proceedings concluded with this ſingle reſolution, That it ſpread no further among the people, let us ſtraitly threaten them, that they ſpeak henceforth to no man in this name —— and having threatned them, they let them go, Acts iv. 15, 20.

In the following chapter it is recorded, that the high-prieſt and his faction, the Sadducees filled with indignation, laid hands on the Apoſtles, and put them in the common priſon, from whence they were delivered by an Angel in the night. The Apoſtles zealous in their duty, went to the temple early in the morning and taught; of which when the council, which aſſembled that ſame morning were informed, they doubted of them, whereunto they would grow; wherefore they ſent proper officers to recal them without violence. And when they had brought them, they ſet them before the council; and the high-prieſt aſked them, ſaying, Did not we ſtraitly command you, that ye ſhould not teach in this name? ver. 21—28. And when Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles had made their defence, thoſe of the council were cut to the heart, and took counſel to ſlay them. Yet the Apoſtles, being ſkreened by the moderate advice of Gamaliel, eſcaped with a few ſtripes, and this command, that they ſhould not ſpeak in the name of Jeſus, ver. 29—40. Now,

Let us make a few remarks on the proceedings of the Jewiſh Council. It is here ſaid, that the Apoſtles were put into the common priſon. But in the fourth chapter we are told at verſe the third, That they laid hands on them, (Peter and John) and put them in hold unto the next day. And in the times immediately preceding this period, now under our conſideration, we are informed, that our Saviour was bound by the high-prieſt's authority, aſſoon as he was apprehended; ſee John xviii. 12. though Matthew does not ſpeak of it, till he relates his being carried away from the high-prieſt to Pilate, Matt. xxvii. 2. Mark xv. 1. However, be that as it will, I think, that a power of apprehending, implies alſo a power of keeping in cuſtody.

The next particular is, that the Apoſtles were beaten. We often meet in the New Teſtament with whipping in the ſynagogues; but it is probable, that this was a more publick beating. And poſſibly the ruler, and chief men of every ſynagogue, had a right of appointing a whipping there. The puniſhment recorded in this place, to have been inflicted on the Apoſtles, by order of the Sanhedrim, was, its likely, in ſome open place, whereby the ſufferers were expoſed. And therefore it is ſaid, and they [the Apoſtles] departed from the preſence of the council, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer ſhame for his name, Acts v. 41.

We ought alſo to obſerve, that though Gamaliel adviſed the council to refrain from theſe men, and to let them alone, and it is ſaid that they agreed to this advice; yet the Apoſtles were not let alone, they were beaten. From which it may be fairly collected, that the great council of the Jews had power to inflict greater puniſhments, than that of whipping or beating; tho' at the ſame time, I can't be perſwaded that this ſaying, They took counſel to ſlay him, implies any ſuch power, that they could, by their own authority, put any man to death; becauſe the Jews are recorded to have had the ſame deſign againſt Jeſus; yet, it has appeared, I preſume, in my Diſſertation on the Jewiſh State, during the time of our Saviour's Miniſtry, at the end of Luke, that they could not themſelves, legally, or according to the conſtitution of things at that time, put him to death; ſee Matt. xxvi. 3, 4. Luke xxii. 2, 3. and Matt. xxvii. 1. Mark xv. 1. As therefore, the meaning of this phraſe in the Goſpels, when uſed concerning their proceedings againſt our Saviour, can mean no more, than their reſolving to proſecute him before the governor, as a criminal worthy of death, and conſulting together how they might manage the proſecution, and get him condemned to death; ſo it is not unlikely, but that the ſame phraſe ought to be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe here, for the Jewiſh freedom was rather more oppreſſed: And when Gamaliel adviſes them to refrain from theſe men, and let them alone, for ought that appears, he muſt be underſtood to diſſwade them from purſuing their reſentment ſo far as to proſecute them before the governor, as men worthy of death, and only threaten them again; and if they thought fit, order them to be beaten, as we find they did.

The next affair of this kind recorded in the Acts, is the proſecution and death of Stephen; ſee Acts vi. ver. 8—15. vii. 1—53. And they ſtoned Stephen calling upon God, and ſaying, Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit, ver. 54—60. See alſo Acts xxii. 20. In which paſſages we find a man brought before the council, and, after witneſſes were heard, ſtoned to death, (an ordinary puniſhment among the Jews) without any mention of his being proſecuted before a Roman Magiſtrate. And in the concluſion it has very much the aſpect of a legal Jewiſh puniſhment, for the witneſſes ſeem to have ſtoned him, or to have caſt the firſt ſtone at him. Wherefore,

Let it be reminded, that the Sacred Hiſtorians are not accountable for the legality of the facts or proceedings which they relate; therefore, altho' this affair of Stephen's proſecution and puniſhment ſhould be allowed to have all the forms of a legal proceſs, ſentence and puniſhment, according to the Jewiſh law and cuſtoms; yet it does not follow, that it was rightful according to the conſtitution they were then under. It is as certain, that magiſtrates do ſometimes tranſgreſs the bounds of their authority, as well as people commit diſorders, as may be exemplified by the unwarrantable proceedings of the magiſtrates at Philippi, againſt Paul and Silas, whom they commanded to be beaten and impriſoned againſt law, as they were ſoon convinced; ſee Acts xv. And thus it is not impoſſible, but that the Jewiſh Council at Jeruſalem, in compliance with their own malice, and with the clamours of the people, might pronounce a ſentence, that exceeded the limits of their authority, and the people might execute it in their rage, before the Roman officer ſhould come in to the ſuccour of the oppreſſed, and to prevent their tyranny, and illegal proceedings.

This might be ſaid, ſuppoſing there were a form of a legal proceſs, which I preſume, no body can ſuppoſe from the hiſtory thereof. ——— It is true, that witneſſes were brought, and they laid their charge, but here is no ſentence pronounced by the council, neither does the high-prieſt collect the opinions; for, had that been done, the accurate hiſtorian Luke would never have paſſed them in ſilence. In the account of the proceedings againſt our Saviour, we have a particular recital of the high-prieſt's care to aſk the opinion of the council, and of the anſwer which they returned; ſee Matt. xxvi. 66. Mark xiv. 64. and this ſame Luke has given us the reſult of their debates, Luke xxii. 71. So, when the Apoſtles were at firſt apprehended, they, ſays Luke, were not only informed againſt, admitted to make their defence; but he, both in their firſt and ſecond apprehenſion, records the debates of the council, after the priſoners had been heard; who were ordered to go aſide till the debates paſſed into a final reſolution, when the priſoners were remanded again into the aſſembly to receive their ſentence, which was paſſed in a juridical and lawful way; ſee Acts iv. 15—18. and v. 34—40. And

In the preſent caſe, after the witneſſes which they had ſuborned, had delivered their accuſations; then ſaid the high-prieſt, Are theſe things ſo? that is, he gave Stephen leave to make his defence. So that it is incredible to ſuppoſe, that Luke would have omitted all the other circumſtances of a juſt trial, i. e. how he was ſent out, till the debates were reſolved, and called in to receive his ſentence. But Luke only ſays, That they, having heard what Stephen ſaid, gnaſhed on him with their teeth; and that he then looking up to Heaven, and ſaying ——— I ſee the Heavens opened, and Jeſus ſtanding on the right hand of God, then they cried out with a loud voice ——— and ran upon him with one accord, and caſt him out of the city, and ſtoned him. This has all the appearance of a tumultuous proceeding of the people, which the council probably had no inclination to check, but were highly pleaſed with; for of them I underſtand theſe words, when they heard theſe things they were cut to the heart, and they gnaſhed on him with their teeth, which words are the indication of nothing leſs than malice, and unbridled paſſion.

And if I miſtake not, Stephen is not convicted upon the evidence of the witneſſes, but upon his ſaying, I ſee the Son of man ſtanding on the right hand of God, they ran upon him with one accord.

His expreſſions they termed blaſphemous; and in that caſe, the Jewiſh people at this time, ſeem to have made no ſcruple at all of ſtoning a man immediately, without any trial. There are ſo many inſtances of this in the Goſpels, that it ſeems needleſs to alledge any in particular; ſee John v. 17, 18. viii. 58, 59. x. 30—39.

And, as for the appearance of a legal puniſhment in theſe particulars, that they caſt him out of the city and ſtoned him; and the witneſſes laid down their clothes at a young man's feet whoſe name was Saul; I think, they cannot prove, that this was not a tumultuous action: For, even the moſt unruly and diſorderly multitude, will oftentimes in their utmoſt extravagancies, aſſume ſome formalities of a legal procedure.

Notwithſtanding this, there are ſome learned men, who do think, this was not a ſudden act of the people, but that it was a puniſhment inflicted by the Jewiſh Council. They ſay, that it was not allowed for a private perſon to put any man to death, for any crime againſt their law, unleſs they did it whilſt the criminal was in the very act: So Selden, l. x. de jure Nat. & gent. c. 4. M. Wagenſelius in Carm. Lip. confut. p. 301.

But it may be queſtioned, whether the ſcheme of zelotiſm at this time, was exactly the ſame, which is repreſented in the writings, which theſe learned men quote. And though it were, it is not impoſſible, but when ſuch a principle was countenanced, as that of the right of private perſons to kill men in the act, they might ſometimes go beyond the bounds of that principle. And it is highly probable, that the chief men of the Jewiſh nation, when their authority was certainly under ſome reſtraints, might connive at the exorbitancies of this zeal. It is certain, we have in the Acts of the Apoſtles many inſtances of the Jews, in ſeveral places, laying in wait for Paul's life, not to catch him in the act of what they might call blaſphemy, or any other violation of their law; but to kill him for facts done by him ſome time before. It is not material to enquire, what this was owing to; whether it ought to be called zelotiſm, or any thing elſe. It is certain, theſe were common practices among them. One thing, which they ſeem, at this time, to have thought the proper object of this private zeal, is, what they called blaſphemy. Now, a criminal could not well be puniſhed for this in the very act. The words muſt firſt be out of a man's mouth, before he could be guilty. Here were words ſpoken by Stephen, which they termed blaſphemy: Behold, I ſee the Heavens opened, and the Son of man ſtanding at the right hand of God. Theſe words were ſpoken before the council, and it is likely, before a good many other perſons, who were preſent as witneſſes and proſecutors, therefore before ten or more perſons. And Stephen was put to death with all the expedition poſſible, that is, in the very act as near as could be. For it follows immediately, Then they cried out with a loud voice, and ſtopped their ears, and ran upon him with one accord, and caſt him out of the city and ſtoned him, Acts vii. 57, 58.

Nor is the putting Stephen to death by ſtoning, any proof that there had been a ſentence pronounced, or that there was any legal form obſerved in his death. For this was common in their tumultuous attempts. Jeſus having ſaid ſome things which gave them offence, Then the Jews took up ſtones again to ſtone him, John x. 31. He went on to argue with them; they anſwered him, ſaying, for a good work we ſtone thee not, but for blaſphemy, ver. 33. See John xi. 7, 8. The ſtoning which Paul ſuffered at Lyſtra, was merely tumultuous. ——— And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who perſwaded the people (τοὺς ὀχλοὺς the multitude), and having ſtoned Paul, drew him out of the city, ſuppoſing he had been dead, Acts xiv. 19. Thus much for the caſe of Stephen.

4. "It follows, and Saul was conſenting to his death. And at that time there was a great perſecution againſt the Church which was at Jeruſalem, and they were all ſcattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the Apoſtles," Acts viii. 1. ——— "As for Saul, he made havock of the Church, entring into every houſe, and haling men and women, committed them to priſon," ver. 3. ——— "And Saul yet breathing out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of the Lord, went unto the high-prieſt, and deſired of him letters to Damaſcus, to the ſynagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jeruſalem," Acts ix. 1, 2. When Ananias, at Damaſcus, was directed in a viſion to go to Saul, "he anſwered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he has done to thy ſaints at Jeruſalem. And here he has authority from the chief prieſts to bind all that call on thy name," — ix. 13, 14.

It muſt, I think, be ſuppoſed that Saul could not have taken up any at Damaſcus, which was ſubject to Aretas, by the authority of the Council at Jeruſalem, unleſs the governor there gave him leave; and it is highly probable, the correſpondence between them was ſuch, as that he would not refuſe it; ſee Acts ix. 23, 24. 2 Cor. xi. 32. & Clerici Hiſtor. Eccleſ. Ann. xxxi. Num. 1.

And Paul ſays of himſelf, in his ſpeech to the people of Jeruſalem; "and I perſecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into priſons both men and women, as alſo the high-prieſt doth bear me witneſs, and all the eſtate of the elders: From whom alſo I received letters unto the brethren, and went to Damaſcus, to bring them which were there, bound unto Jeruſalem for to be puniſhed. ——— And I ſaid, Lord, they know that I impriſoned, and beat in every ſynagogue them that believed on thee; and when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was ſhed," &c. Acts xxii. 4, 5—19, 20.

In his ſpeech to king Agrippa, Paul ſays; ——— Which things I alſo did in Jeruſalem, and many of the ſaints did I ſhut up in priſon, having received authority from the chief prieſts, and when they were put to death, I gave my voice againſt them. And I puniſhed them oft in every ſynagogue, and compelled them to blaſpheme; and being exceedingly mad againſt them, I perſecuted them even unto ſtrange cities. Whereupon as I went to Damaſcus with authority and commiſſion from the chief prieſts, at mid-day, O king, I ſaw in the way a light from Heaven, &c. Acts xxvi. 9—13.

Here is a great variety of particulars, impriſoning, beating in the ſynagogue, perſecuting into ſtrange cities, and putting to death.

As for the perſecuting into ſtrange cities, it is not at all ſurprizing, that the Jews ſhould have ſufficient authority and power in their own country, (though they had a Roman Governor amongſt them) to impoſe hardſhips upon the followers of Chriſt that would make them leave Judea; ſince, as has appeared from inſtances in the Acts of the Apoſtles already alledged, they were able to drive them from one place, and city to another, in Greece, and in ſeveral parts of Aſia.

The puniſhments inflicted in the ſynagogues, muſt be ſuppoſed inflicted by a mere Jewiſh authority, ſince they had the free exerciſe of their religion.

The Apoſtle ſays alſo expreſly, that many of the ſaints did he impriſon by the authority from the chief prieſts. When he ſays, he perſecuted this way unto the death; I think, he expreſſes his aim and deſign; and that in the oppoſition he had made againſt the followers of Jeſus, he propoſed to bring upon them not the leſſer puniſhments only of fines, whipping or impriſonment, but death it ſelf.

c. 1. There is another inſtance of the like kind afterwards. The Samaritans had offered an injury to ſome Jews, as they were paſſing through their country to Jeruſalem. The Jews made reprizals. “ Hereupon the chief “ men of the Samaritans go to Ummidius Quadratus, pre- “ ſident of Syria, then at Tyrus; and accuſe the Jews of “ plundering and burning their towns. Nor were they ſo “ much concerned, they ſaid, for the injury done to them, “ as for the contempt ſhewed to the Romans, to whom “ they ought rather to have appealed as judges, if they “ had been injured; and not make incurſions of their own “ heads, as they had done, as if they were under no ſub- “ jection to the Romans. They therefore came to him “ for juſtice,” ibid. c. 5.

The riot of the Jews beyond Jordan, ſeems to have happened in the interval between the death of Herod Agrippa, and the arrival of Fadus in the province. The incurſions into Samaria were made while Cumanus was actually in Judea. Indeed Joſephus endeavours to acquit the chief men of Judea as to both theſe facts, But the common people ſeldom take arms, and make incurſions, without ſome encouragement from their ſuperiors. And if the chief men at Jeruſalem were perfectly innocent as to this laſt affair, Quadratus the preſident of Syria muſt have been horribly impoſed upon, though he came into the country on purpoſe to examine the caſe upon the ſpot. For he beheaded ſome Jews, and crucified others, and ſent the high-prieſt, the captain of the temple, and divers other chief men at Jeruſalem to Rome, to anſwer for themſelves. Vid. de B. J. l. 2. c. 12, & Ant. ubi ſupra.

If then ſome of the Jewiſh proceedings, mentioned in the Acts, ſeem not very ſuitable to the ſtate of a Roman province, it may be fairly taken for granted, they were illegal or tumultuous.

But ſecondly, I am apt to think the ſtate of the Jews at this time, if reflected on, will help us to account for theſe proceedings. If our Saviour was crucified at the paſſover, A. D. 33. then this was the eighth paſſover of Pilate's adminiſtration: For he came into the province before the paſſover of the year 26. But if our Saviour was crucified in the 29th year of the Chriſtian Æra, which is the ſooneſt that is ſuppoſed by any, yet that would be the fourth paſſover after Pilate's arrival in that country. Now it was very common for the preſidents, if they had not behaved well, to ſtand in fear of the people of their province; and they dreaded extremely the ſending complaints to the emperor. And in order to ward off theſe, they uſually thought it proper to do ſome popular things.

Philo has given us a remarkable inſtance in Flaccus, prefect of Egypt, about this very time. The five firſt years of his adminiſtration, which were the five laſt years of Tiberius's reign, Flaccus was a moſt excellent governor. But in the 6th year of his preſidentſhip, which was the firſt of Caligula's reign, he became quite another man. It is not neceſſary to produce here all the reaſons of this alteration. But in the life-time of Tiberius, Flaccus had been no friend of Caligula. When therefore Caligula came to be emperor, and had put to death the young Tiberius, and Macro, in whom Flaccus had ſome intereſt, he was thrown into a terrible fright: His concern was viſible, and all the Egyptians knew very well the cauſe of it: Hereupon they got him entirely into their own hands, “ and of a governor, Flaccus became a ſubject, and they of ſubjects became preſidents, inventors of uſeleſs decrees, directors of all affairs, taking him in as a mere mute image in a play, for no other reaſon, but becauſe he had the name of governor. Theſe men therefore, the Dionyſii, the Lampones, the Iſidores, all theſe conſpire together to form a moſt wicked deſign againſt the Jews: and coming to Flaccus, they tell him, Sir, You have loſt the young Tiberius, and your next hope after him, your friend Macro: You have no expectations of favour from the emperor, but rather otherwiſe. We muſt neceſſarily contrive for you ſome powerful advocate with Caius (Caligula). This advocate, Sir, is the city of Alexandria, which has been ever honoured by the imperial family, and eſpecially by our preſent ſovereign: If ſhe may but obtain ſome favour of you, ſhe will undertake your cauſe. You can oblige her by nothing ſo much as by delivering up the Jews into her hands. Then, he who ought to have been provoked at ſo impudent a propoſal, and to have reprimanded the authors of it as incendiaries, and diſturbers of the public peace, tamely complied with what they deſired.” Philo in Flacc.

After this, Flaccus began to ſhew a ſtrange neglect of the Jews, and in all cauſes the Jews were caſt, till at length he became their open enemy. The Egyptians taking encouragement from this behaviour came by degrees to the rifling of the Jews houſes, and murdered great numbers of them. “ And the preſident of the country, who, if he had pleaſed, could in one hour have quieted this mad multitude, pretended not to ſee, or hear any thing.” Id. de Legat. ad Cai. The Egyptians, receiving no rebukes for what they had done already, proceeded to demoliſh the Jewiſh oratories at Alexandria.

Thus matters went in Egypt. The people there had no right, according to the conſtitution of the country, to treat the Jews as they did; nor did the prefect formally convey the power of life and death to them. But for his own convenience he overlooked their diſorderly proceedings.

The caſe of Pilate in Judea ſeems very much to have reſembled that of Flaccus in Egypt. That is, they were both apprehenſive of the emperor's diſpleaſure, though perhaps the grounds of theſe apprehenſions were different. Pilate had been tyrannical in the very beginning of his adminiſtration, and had thereby rendered himſelf diſagreeable to the Jews. For this reaſon he ſtood in fear of them. This appears in the proſecution of Jeſus before him. The Jews cried out, If thou let this man go, thou art not Ceſar's friend, John xix. 12. Pilate ſeems to have underſtood the meaning of this ſpeech. If he had not gratified them in this point, they might have drawn up a long liſt of male-adminiſtrations for the emperor's view.

His condemnation of Jeſus at the importunity of the Jews, contrary to his own judgment and inclination, declared to them more than once, was a point gained: And his government muſt have been ever after much weakened by ſo mean a condeſcenſion. And that Pilate's influence in the province continued to decline, is manifeſt, in that, the people of it prevailed at laſt to have him removed, in a very ignominious manner, by Vitellius, preſident of Syria. It is therefore highly probable, that to ſcreen other acts of injuſtice, and to gratify the chief men at Jeruſalem, he might ſign decrees of condemnation againſt ſome of the diſciples of Jeſus, or at leaſt connive at, or not reſtrain ſome irregular proceedings of the Jewiſh magiſtrates, and the riots of the people. Nor can it be concluded, that Pilate did not act in this manner, becauſe he had not the favour of the people of his province. For Flaccus did himſelf no real ſervice by all his compliances with the Egyptians, but was at laſt accuſed by the men, whoſe tool he had been; ſee Philo ut ſupra.

After this manner, then, affairs might be carried on in Judea during the remainder of Pilate's adminiſtration, after the reſurrection of our Saviour, till about the beginning of the year 36.

And after the removal of Pilate, the Jews would, very probably, take an unuſual licence; they not having then any procurator among them, but being more immediately under the government or Preſident of Syria, whoſe chief reſidence was at Antioch.

Beſides, Vitellius ſeem to have been at a yet greater diſtance from them, the greateſt part of the year that followed the removal of Pilate. This, if I miſtake not, was the ſeaſon of Vitellius's expedition to Parthia. It is true, that Suetonius (Calig. c. 14.), and Dio (lib. 59.) place the congreſs of Vitellius and Artabanus, in the firſt year of Caligula. But Joſephus (Antiq. 18. 5.) places it in the laſt of Tiberius's reign; and gives ſo diſtinct an account of this matter, that he cannot but be relied on. He ſays, that Vitellius, having, whilſt in Syria, ordered Pilate away for Rome, went up to Jeruſalem to the Paſſover, which appears to me very evidently to be the Paſſover of the year 36. Having put Caiaphas out of the prieſthood, and done divers other things to the great ſatisfaction of the Jews, he returned to Antioch. Joſephus then ſays, that Vitellius having received orders from Tiberius to make an alliance with Artabanus, went to the Euphrates, where Vitellius and Artabanus had a congreſs, and a league was made, that Artabanus ſent his ſon hoſtage to Tiberius; that after the league was made, Herod the tetrarch of Galilee, who was there, entertained the Preſident of Syria, and the king of Parthia; and ſent an expreſs to Rome with an account of the concluſion of this treaty, as did alſo Vitellius. Herod's meſſenger came firſt to Rome, and Tiberius wrote back to Vitellius, that his expreſs brought him no news, for he had heard all before. Vitellius thinking Herod had done him a great injury herein, retained a ſecret grudge againſt him, till he had an opportunity of being revenged in the reign of Caligula. At the next Paſſover, A. D. 37. Vitellius was again at Jeruſalem. So that this expedition to the Euphrates was made in the year 36. Joſephus appears perfectly maſter of this whole affair; the concern of Herod the tetrarch are interwoven with it. Joſephus was nearer the event than Suetonius or Dio. Beſides, Tacitus concurs with him. For he ſays, (In Ann. l. 6. c. 32.) that A. U. 788. which is the year of our Lord 35, when C. Ceſtius Gallus, and M. Servilius Nonianus were conſuls, Tiberius gave Vitellius the command of all things in the eaſt. He then relates Vitellius's expedition, and what he performed in it, and concludes his account thus: "And then he returned with the army into Syria. I have here put together the actions of two ſummers" (ib. c. 37.). I think it therefore very plain, that according to Tacitus, this commiſſion, given to Vitellius in the year 53, was finiſhed in 36.

This then was a fine opportunity for a people, fond of power, to exert ſome acts of authority they could not have done, whilſt a governor was among them, or near them. The behaviour of Ananus, and his council, in the interval between the death of Porcius Feſtus, and the arrival of his ſucceſſor Albinus, is a proof of it. Nor were there any on whom they were ſo likely to ſhew their power, as the followers of Jeſus.

Moreover, ſuch was the temper of this Vitellius, that it may be fairly ſuppoſed, the Jews enjoyed ſome peculiar indulgences under his adminiſtration.

There are divers things recorded of him in Joſephus, which may ſatisfy us there was a moſt loving correſpondence between him and the chief men of the Jewiſh nation. At the requeſt of the Jews and Samaritans he removed Pilate. The Paſſover following he went up to Jeruſalem, and was magnificently received by the Jews. It was through his hands, that the Jews obtained from Tiberius the right of having in their own keeping the high-prieſt's Sacred Veſtment, which he wore on their great ſolemnities (ſee Antiq. 18. 5.); a privilege they had not enjoyed before, ſince the beginning of Herod's reign. This favour they received at the Paſſover in the year 36.

In the beginning of the next year, when Vitellius was going to march his forces through Judea, which was the ſhorteſt way, to attack Aretas, at the requeſt of the Jews, he ordered his troops to take another rout, that he might not offend them with his idolatrous enſigns; and when he had given theſe orders he went up himſelf to Jeruſalem to worſhip God, Joſ. ibid. Which things are an argument that the Jewiſh people had a great influence upon him.

And from the Roman hiſtorians it appears, that Vitellius was a man of a moſt obſequious diſpoſition. For he, who had ſacrificed to God at Jeruſalem, when he was out of his province, and returned to Rome, paid Divine Honours to the emperor. And indeed was one of the firſt, that began that idolatrous worſhip, which Caligula was ſo fond of the latter part of his reign. Vitellius was ſo exquiſite in this, and other kinds of flattery, that at length his name became proverbial to denote an eminent flatterer; ſee Sueton. A. Vitell. c. 2.

And it muſt be allowed, that Vitellus had a great influence on the affairs of Judea, all the time he was preſident of Syria, after the removal of Pilate, becauſe all the great concerns of the Jews mentioned by Joſephus, are tranſacted by him.

Vitellius was recalled from Syria, in the third year of Caligula's reign, and was ſucceeded by Petronius; with orders to ſet up the Emperor's Statue in the temple at Jeruſalem. It is not improbable, but the Jews of Judea might be affected at the condition of their countrymen at Alexandria; ſee above; where, by this time, they were almoſt ruined: But this order from Caligula was a thunder-ſtroke.

Joſephus ſays, "That Caligula ordered Petronius to go with an army to Jeruſalem, to ſet up his Statues in the temple there, enjoining him, if the Jews oppoſed it, to put to death all that made any reſiſtance, and to make all the reſt of the nation ſlaves. Petronius therefore marched from Antioch into Judea with three legions, and a large body of Auxiliaries raiſed in Syria.——All were hereupon filled with conſternation, the army being come as far as Ptolemais; ſee Joſ. de Bell. l. ii. c. 10. The Jews then gathering together, went to the plain near Ptolemais, and entreated Petronius in the firſt place for their laws, and in the next place for themſelves." Petronius was moved by their entreaties, and leaving his army and the Statues at Ptolemais, went into Galilee; and at Tiberias calls together the chief men of the Jewiſh people, and exhorts them to ſubmit to the Emperor's orders. When they could not engage ſo to do, he asked them; "Will ye then fight againſt Cæſar. The Jews anſwered him, that they offered up ſacrifices twice every day for Cæſar and the Roman people. But that if he would ſet up the images, he ought firſt of all to ſacrifice the whole Jewiſh nation; and that they were ready to ſubmit themſelves with their wives and children to the ſlaughter." Ibid. Antiq. l. 18. c. 7.

Philo ſays, That the tidings of theſe orders having reached Jeruſalem, the Jews "abandoning their cities, villages, and the open country, all went to Petronius in Phenicia, both men and women, the old, the young, and the middle aged;—that they threw themſelves down upon the ground before Petronius, with weeping and lamentation;——that being ordered by him to riſe up, they approached him covered with duſt, with their hands behind them, as men condemned to die; and that then the Senate beſpoke Petronius in this manner: We come to you, Sir, as you ſee, unarmed. We have brought with us our wives and children, and families, and throw our ſelves down before you, as at the feet of Caius, having left none at home, that you may ſave all, or deſtroy all." Philo de Legat. ad Cai.

Petronius deferred his journey to Jeruſalem, that the Jews might not, out of concern for ſuch a violation of their religion, neglect their gathering in their corn, it being then ripe, as Philo ſays; ibid. or loſe the ſeedstime, as Joſephus ſays; Ant. lib. 18. c. 9. He was the more moved by this conſideration, becauſe it was expected that Caligula would be at Alexandria the next ſummer: And he judged it not proper to do any thing that might hinder a ſufficient plenty for the company that would follow the Emperor from Italy, and the concourſe of the princes of Aſia, and other great men in thoſe parts. And in his letter to Caligula, he made uſe of this, as the excuſe for not immediately executing his orders. Philo ut ſupra. Theſe two writers differ ſomewhat as to the time, when the Jews waited on Petronius. Poſſibly they might be reconciled together even as to this. However, they agree in repreſenting the concern of the Jews, as very great and general. And it is very likely, that the perſecution of the Chriſtians ceaſed now, and that the Jews were fully employed in warding off this terrible blow from the temple, which was their glory and confidence.

Some learned men have aſcribed this reſt of the churches to the converſion of Paul, who had been a very zealous Perſecutor. But this is, in my opinion, to do Paul a great deal of wrong, on one hand, and too much honour on the other. It appears to me a great injuſtice to aſcribe to him all the ſufferings of the Chriſtians which enſued upon the death of Stephen; when, after his converſion, we find the Jews of Judea, Damaſcus, and every other place were filled with malice and ſpite againſt Chriſtianity, and againſt Paul, and every one elſe of that way. On the other hand, it is doing him at the ſame time too much honour. Paul was then but a young man; ſee Acts vii. 58. and though a forward and active inſtrument, yet he could be no more than an inſtrument in that perſecution. It cannot be ſuppoſed, that whilſt he was with the high prieſts and Phariſees, they were directed and animated by him, and that when he had left them, their ſpirits were ſo ſunk, that they could no longer purſue their old meaſures. His own dangers at Damaſcus and Jeruſalem are a proof of the contrary.

Moreover, according to the ſeries of Luke's hiſtory, though the great perſecution, Acts viii. 1. xi. 19. he ſpeaks of, might be abated ſooner; yet it could not be quite over till ſeveral years after Paul's converſion. Luke firſt mentions Paul's return from Damaſcus to Jeruſalem, (which was not till three years after his converſion; Gal. i. 18.) and the treatment he met with there from the Grecians; "which when the Brethren knew, they brought him down to Ceſarea, and ſent him forth to Tarſus. Then had the Churches reſt throughout all Judea and Galilee, and Samaria, and were edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the Comfort of the Holy Ghoſt, were multiplied." Acts ix. 29—31. So that Laſtly, according to this deſcription given by Luke of the reſt, which the Churches enjoyed, it appears to have been very extenſive and complete. And ſo conſiderable event muſt have been owing to ſome other conſiderable circumſtance with which the whole people of that country was affected; and this I apprehend, were the ſufferings of the Jews in Alexandria, and the imminent danger of ruin, which that whole people in Judea, and other places were in, in the days of the Roman Emperor Caligula. This perſecution of the Jews, I conceive, gave that peace or reſt to the Chriſtians, which Luke ſpeaks of, and which certainly happened about the ſame time of theſe ſufferings of the Jews.

I have now finiſhed that whole account of the ſtate of the Jews in Judea, according to the Sacred and other writers, ſo far as I promiſed. And

I ſhall now add a ſhort and more particular account of the ſtate of the Jews out of Judea. Becauſe it may be obſerved, that the Sacred Penmen of the New Teſtament make frequent mention, that at the time of their preaching the Goſpel, after the aſcenſion of our Saviour, there were great numbers of Jews in ſeveral parts of the world beſides thoſe, who lived conſtantly in Judea; ſee Acts ii. 4—11. where it is written among other particulars, that there were dwelling at Jeruſalem, Jews, devout men, out of every nation under Heaven, ——— Jews and proſelytes. Where, by dwelling at Jeruſalem, we are only to underſtand reſiding there for a time only; on account of the feaſt, or ſome other particular occaſion; ſee Grotius on the place.

In the hiſtory of Paul's travels, we find him preaching in Jewiſh ſynagogues in many places. When Paul and Barnabas came to Antioch in Piſidia, they went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day. And we read of the ſame practice at Iconium, Theſſalonica, Athens, Corinth and Epheſus; ſee xiii. 14. xiv. 1. xvii. 1, 2, 17. xviii. 4. and xix. 8.

Beſides, it is evident from the hiſtories of Philo and Joſephus, as well as from ſeveral Heathen authors, that the Jews were ſcattered abroad, and dwelt in almoſt all parts of the world, even before the deſtruction of their city and ſtate by Titus. For,

Philo witneſſeth, that "there were no leſs than a million of Jews in Alexandria, and the other parts of Egypt, when Caligula mounted the throne of the Roman Empire. To which he adds, that as the Jews are exceeding numerous, they have extended themſelves into the beſt and moſt flouriſhing countries of Europe and Aſia, into the iſlands as well as the continents, &c." in Flacc. Which is more diſtinctly and particularly enumerated in Agrippa's letter to the Emperor Caligula, to diſſwade him from erecting his ſtatue at Jeruſalem; ſee it at large in Philo's Works, de legat. ad Cai. And

When the war was ready to break out in Judea, Agrippa the younger, in a ſpeech he delivered at Jeruſalem, makes uſe of this, as an argument to perſwade the Jews in Judea, to deſiſt from ſo deſperate a remedy, and to live peaceably, for the ſake of their countrymen, diſperſed all over the Roman Empire, who, if they ſhould be worſted, muſt inevitably be cruſhed in the ruin of their laws, liberty and nation; ſee Joſeph. de B. J. l. ii. c. 16.

A Diſſertation on the Feaſts or Feſtivals of the Jewiſh Nation.

God out of his great wiſdom appointed ſeveral feſtivals among the Jews for many and wiſe reaſons; as, Firſt, to perpetuate the memory of thoſe great events and wonders, which he had wrought in favour of his choſen people, e. g. The ſabbath put them in mind of the world's creation; the paſſover recalled the great wonders and power, by which the Almighty brought the children of Iſrael out of the Egyptian ſlavery, and out of the houſe of bondage; the pentecoſt celebrates the promulgation of the law on mount Sinai, fifty days after the departure of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, &c. Secondly, Theſe feſtivals were appointed with a view to bind them the firmer to their religion, by the appearance of many ceremonies, and the awful majeſty of Divine Service. Thirdly, To procure them certain pleaſures, and allowable times of reſt. For, their feſtivals were attended with rejoycings, feaſts of charity, and innocent diverſions. Fourthly, To give them inſtructions; for, in their religious aſſemblies, the Law of God was conſtantly read and explained. Fifthly, to renew the acquaintance, correſpondence, and friendſhip of their tribes and families with one another, by coming from the ſeveral towns in the country, and meeting in the Holy City three times a year, at the feaſt of paſſover, the feaſt of weeks, and the feaſt of tabernacles.

It is true, that the Hebrews had many more feſtivals than theſe three, as the feaſt of trumpets, celebrated on the firſt day to proclaim the beginning of the new year, which was in the month Tizri, or September, (ſee Levit. xxiii. 24, 25.) The new moons, which was the ſounding of the trumpet on the firſt day of every month, which was a kind of conſequence of the feaſt of trumpets; ſee Numb. xxviii. 11. x. 10. and 1 Sam. xx. 5, 18. The feaſt of expiation, or chippur, or pardon, kept on the tenth day of Tizri, which was the firſt day of the civil year, inſtituted for the expiation of all the ſins, irreverences and pollutions of all the Iſraelites from the high-prieſt to the loweſt of the people, committed by them throughout the whole preceding year; ſee Levit. xxii. 27, 28. Numb. xxix. 7. The feaſts of lots, or purium, inſtituted upon the occaſion of the Jews deliverance, when the wicked Haman had contrived their deſtruction in the reign of Ahaſuerus, king of Perſia; ſee Eſther ix. 29, 30. A feaſt in memory of the death of Holofernes; ſee Judith, ult. ver. 31. The feaſt of the dedication of the temple, or rather of the reſtoration of the temple, after its pollution by Antiochus Epiphanes; this feaſt was kept in the winter, (ſee John x. 22. and 1 Macc. iv. 52, &c.) and is called by Joſephus, the feaſt of lights; Antiq. l. xii. c. 11. The feaſt of branches, kept on the 21ſt of September, in memory of taking the city Jericho. The feaſt of collections in the ſame month, upon which occaſion they met to contribute for the expence of the ſacrifices. We alſo read of a feſtival for the death of Nicanor, 1 Macc. vii. 48, 49. 2 Macc. xv. 37. The feaſt for the diſcovery of the Sacred Fire in the time of Nehemiah, 2 Macc. i. 18, &c. and the feaſt Xylophoria, when great quantities of wood was carried to the temple; ſee Joſeph. de Bello, l. ii. c. 17. But,

Theſe three, are what I am chiefly concerned to be more particular in. Wherefore, I obſerve, that

The feaſt of the paſſover was, as I have ſaid before, inſtituted in memory of the Iſraelites departure out of Egypt, and of the favour which God ſhewed his people in ſparing their firſt-born, at the time that he killed all the firſt-born of the Egyptians; and the laws relating to it, are to the following purpoſe.

I. It ſhall be of perpetual obligation, both to the Iſraelites, and to all circumciſed proſelytes, Exod. xii. 14, 24 & alibi.

II. No circumciſed perſon, whether of the ſeed of Abraham, or admitted into the commonwealth by circumciſion, unleſs hindred by ſickneſs, journeying, or ſome legal impurity, ſhall omit the annual celebration thereof, under the penalty of being cut off from his people; ſee Numb. ix. 13, 14. and the Univerſal Hiſtory, &c. Vol. i. p. 500. d.

III. No ſervant, or ſtranger, ſhall eat of it, unleſs he become circumciſed, Exod. xii. 43, &c.

IV. The feaſt ſhall begin on the eve of the fourteenth day of the month Abif, or, as the original expreſſes it, between the two evenings, (ib. ver. 6.) at which time the Paſchal Lamb ſhall be killed, and the feſtival be continued until the 21ſt day of the ſame month at evening.

V. The firſt and laſt day ſhall be kept Holy and free from all ſervile work, even as the ſabbath-day is kept Holy, except only that on the paſſover feſtival, it is lawful to the Jews to dreſs victuals, but not ſo on the ſabbath-day; compare Exod. xii. 16. with xxxv. 3. Yet thoſe days ſhall be ſolemnized by an Holy Convocation, ib. ver. 16.

VI. No leaven of any kind ſhall be uſed, or even kept in the houſe, during thoſe ſeven days, whoſoever uſeth any leaven on thoſe days, ſhall be cut off from Iſrael, ib. ver. 15, 19. All leaven therefore, ſhall be removed out of the houſe before the Paſchal Lamb is killed, ib. ver. 34, 35. & alibi.

VII. On the firſt day of the Paſſover ſhall be offered a burnt ſacrifice of two young bullocks, one ram, and ſeven lambs of the firſt year, with ſome other offerings of leſs value, Numb. xxviii. 19, &c. And on the ſecond day of the feaſt ſhall be offered, beſides the uſual ſacrifices, a ſheaf of the firſt-fruit of that years harveſt; no new corn ſhall be eaten in any way, before the firſt ſheaf has been preſented unto the Lord, Levit. xxiii. 10, &c.

Theſe are the principal ordinances or laws concerning the Paſſover; it may be, that you may find ſome of leſs moment interſperſed in the Penteteuch, which are not neceſſary to be inſiſted upon in this place. Where,

Let it be noted, that this feſtival is called in the original Peſach, from the Hebrew verb paſſach, which ſignifies to paſs by, or to leap over, as God himſelf explains the Etymon thereof, in Exod. xii. 27. where he commanded the Iſraelites to tell their children, that this was the ſacrifice of the Lord's Paſſover, (Aſher-paſſach) who paſſed by, or leaped over the houſes of the children of Iſrael. And,

As it is deſcribed to begin (Ben-habarvaim), i. e. between the two evenings of the 14th day of the month, called by Moſes Abif, which properly ſignifies the ſtalk that bears the ear of corn; becauſe the wheat began to ripen about that time of the year in thoſe countries, which was afterwards called Niſan, and anſwers to our March and April; it cannot be improper to add the following remarks.

The expreſſion between the two evenings is variouſly taken. Some reckon the firſt evening to be between noon and ſun-ſet; others between two and ſix o'clock in the evening; but the moſt rational and received opinion is, that the firſt evening is that which immediately follows ſun-ſet, and that the ſecond begins when that planet is ſo far ſunk below the horizon, that the ſtars do viſibly appear above it; ſee my notes on Matt. xxvi. and xxvii.

The computation of this new year, began at the firſt new moon that happened neareſt, or upon the vernal equinox; with this rule, that the preceding full moon, how near ſoever to it, belonged to the laſt month of the former year. But as they had no aſtronomical tables to regulate thoſe conjunctions, but were forced to guide themſelves by the firſt appearance of the new moon, they could not prevent great irregularities happening in their months and years, notwithſtanding all their diligence in ſending out people, to obſerve its riſing from high places at ſun-ſet; becauſe ſometimes it is not to be ſeen till the ſecond or third night, nor even then, if it happens to be a cloudy evening. However, as to the new moons, and thoſe feſtivals that depended on them, and indeed, all other computations of time, they were committed to the care of the prieſts and judges, and the people were obliged to abide by their calculations, whether they happened to be right or wrong.

We find no precept in the law about keeping of the five intermediate days, except by eating of unleavened bread, and abſtaining from very laborious works; but the Rabbies have ſupplied that ſilence by their own inventions. ——— They allow that ſpace of five days to be ſpent in mirth, and all lawful recreations; ——— they enjoin all, eſpecially the women, to wear the gayeſt apparel; to eat fleſh, fiſh, and fowl, and to drink wine. Yet no one may marry in this time, leſt the joy that attends the wedding, ſhould make them forget the reaſon of the feſtival. Some allow labours of neceſſity to be done in the intermediate five days, whilſt others give it as their opinion, that it is unlawful to take up a ſtraw to pick their teeth. Yet they all agree, that women may dreſs and waſh themſelves, and even their clothes upon ſome occaſions.

As to the ſheaf of the firſt-fruit of that years harveſt, it was to be of barley, becauſe that is the firſt corn that is ripe about this time in that country. It was reaped on the evening of the 15th day of Abif or Niſan, and was to be offered up in the name of the whole nation, as we learn from the Sacred Text; to which the Jewiſh commentators add, that aſſoon as the evening of the firſt day of the paſſover was come, at which time the ſecond day began, and in which ſome kind of work might be done, the Beth-ain, or great council aſſembled, and deputed three men to go and gather the ſheave with a kind of ſolemn form, at which great crowds from the neighbouring cities, flocked to Jeruſalem, within whoſe territories it was to be gathered. Theſe deputies asked three times whether the ſun was ſet, and were as often anſwered by the by-ſtanders in the affirmative. —— Then they repeat thrice over their requeſt, that they might be permitted to reap the ſheave, and it was no ſooner granted than they entered into three different fields, each with a ſickle in his hand, and gathered each a diſtinct parcel, which they put into three different boxes, and brought them to the temple, where they were threſhed, winnowed and parched; and an Homer thereof, which contains about three pints, was preſented full to the prieſt, who pouring a quantity of oil and incenſe thereon, heaved it to the Lord, towards the four corners of the earth, and then throwing part of it on the ſacred fire of the altar, kept the remainder to his own uſe. After which ceremony it was lawful for every man to begin his harveſt; ſee Maimon. and Abenezr. in Deut. xxvi. &c.

The next feaſt to be deſcribed is that called the feaſt of weeks, or Pentecoſt, which was inſtituted in memory of the law being delivered to Moſes upon mount Sinai, fifty days after the Exod, or journeying of the Iſraelites out of Egypt: for, it may be remembred that the children of Iſrael came out of Egypt on the 15th of the firſt month Abif or Niſan; Exod. xii. 3, 6, 41, 51. and arrived at Sinai on the third day of the third month, two days after which the law, or ten commandments, was given in preſence of all the people; Exod. xix. 1—13, &c.

By this inſtitution the people were obliged to appear before the Lord, to offer the firſt fruits of their harveſt, as an acknowledgment of God's abſolute right and dominion over them and their land, and of their dependance on him.

Seven weeks, or fifty days, were to be reckoned from the ſixteenth day of the month Niſan, which was the ſecond of the Paſſover, and the fiftieth day was to be the firſt day of this feſtival. It is therefore called in the original Hebrew Chag Shebugboth, or the feaſt of weeks, from the ſeven weeks, which were reckoned from that of the Paſſover; as from the number of fifty days, the Greeks gave this feſtival the name of Pentecoſt.

Neither the ſacred text, nor Joſephus, nor any ancient Hebrew writer tells us whether or no this feaſt laſted ſeven days, like thoſe of the Paſſover, and of the taberancles. This we know, the modern Jews keep it but two days with the ſame reſpect, and reſt as the ſabbath day, except that on theſe two days they may dreſs their meat. As for the other ceremonies on theſe two days, they being foreign to my purpoſe, I refer the curious reader to ſee them in Leo of Modena's Ceremon. Jud. part iii. c. 4. ſee alſo Levit. xxxiii. 15—19. Exod. xxiv. 22. Numb. xxviii. 27, & alibi.

The ſacrifices ordained upon this day were to be, beſides the two loaves, ſeven lambs of the firſt year, one young bullock and two rams, to be for a burnt-offering, together with their uſual meat and drink-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering.

There is ſome difference between the ſacrifices that are ordered on this feſtival in Leviticus and Numbers; as may be obſerved by comparing the xxiii. 18, 19 of Levit. with Numb xxviii. 27. And tho' Joſephus joins them together, I believe the ſagacious reader will find upon the compariſon that the difference doth rather ariſe from ſome error of the tranſcriber, than from any original difference in the ſacred text.

Buxtorf tells us, that the Jews of his time were ſo afraid leſt they ſhould be miſtaken in their calculation of this feſtival, and that of the Paſſover, that they kept it two days inſtead of one. He inſtances in one place in Judith viii. 6. in which the Greek ſeems to confirm his aſſertion, and by that means removes the difficulty which has been ſtarted of our Saviour's eating the Paſſover one day before the reſt of the Jews.

The feaſt of tabernacles was ordained in remembrance of the forty years abode of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, for which reaſon it is called in the original Chag Haſſukoth, i. e. the feaſt of the tents or booths, whence the Greeks gave it the name of Skenopegia. And it is alſo thought to have been inſtituted as a feaſt of thankſgiving for the concluſion of their harveſt and vintage, which did generally end about that time, in the beginning of October.

Moreover, this feaſt was called the feaſt of tabernacles, not only becauſe they lived in tents, or booths, during all the time of their journeying in the wilderneſs, but becauſe it was to be celebrated in ſuch kind of booths, made of the branches of ſeveral ſorts of trees, ſuch as willows, palms, olives, &c and erected in the moſt decent and convenient manner, in which they were obliged to dwell, ſo as to eat and drink and lye in them, unleſs lawfully hindred, during the whole ſpace of the feſtival, which laſted ſeven days, commencing on the eve of the 15th day of the ſeventh month Tizri, or September, and ſo continuing ſeven days ſucceſsfully; the firſt and laſt whereof were kept with the greateſt ſtrictneſs, by repairing to the temple, or tabernacle, with palms and other branches in their hands; by marching round the altar, and ſinging praiſes to God; by ſacrifices peculiar to the ſolemnity over and above the uſual ones, and by a ceſſation from all ſervile work, except neceſſary cookery; ſee Exod. xxiii. 16. and Numb. xxix. 13.

The Jews add moreover, that every Iſraelite that neglected to carry theſe branches, any morning of the feſtival, and to go round about the altar of burnt-offering, was not to eat during all that day. The 118th Pſalm is likewiſe ſuppoſed to have been ſung on, if not compoſed for that ſolemn occaſion; becauſe there are not only many expreſſions in it that have an affinity to it, but alſo from the very analogy of the whole compoſure, with the ceremonies of that feaſt: Such as the praiſing more particularly for the coming of the Meſſiah; for the proſperity of the next year; the fetching of water from the pool of Siloah, &c. But whether theſe, and ſeveral other particulars, which were obſerved in it, were uſed during the ſtanding of the firſt temple, or were afterwards introduced by the authority of Eſdras, and of others of their Sanhedrim or great council in proceſs of time, is not eaſy to determine; and therefore don't require that I ſhould dwell longer upon them.

The Jews alſo except out of the number of thoſe who were obliged to dwell in tents, the ſick and their nurſes, and thoſe who could not bear either the dampneſs of the earth, or the flagrancy of the boughs; adding, that as theſe booths were not to be covered with any thing but branches, and even thoſe not to be laid ſo thick, but that they might ſee the ſtars through them; they were allowed to retire into their houſes, if it ſhould happen to rain through them; ſee Munſter in Levit. xxiii.

Moſes giving the reaſon why God inſtituted this feſtival, ſays, That it was to inſtruct their poſterity how God had made the Iſraelites to dwell in booths at their coming out of Egypt; Levit. xxiii. 42. And when they departed from Rameſes and encamped at Succoth; Exod. xii. 37. which was ſo called from the booths which they reared up there, the place abounding with proper materials for them.

Walton, our countryman and author of the Polyglott Bible, adds another reaſon to that of Moſes, viz. That it was on the tenth day of the month Tirzi, or Tizri, in which Moſes came down a ſecond time from the mount, and brought the Jews the joyful tydings, that God was appeaſed for the ſin of the golden calf, and that he had ordered the tabernacle of the congregation to be reared up which that idolatrous defection had obſtructed for a time, in token that he did now no longer diſdain to be among them, ſeeing he vouchſafed to dwell with them in the tabernacle: And as he obſerves that this happened ſix months after the departure of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, it doth account for that feaſt being inſtituted in that month, rather than in the firſt, in which the people began to live in booths, or tents.

The ſacrifices peculiar to this feaſt were, on the firſt day, thirteen bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of a year old; all without blemiſh; ſee this fully deſcribed in Levit. xxiii.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,

ON THE

Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,

TO THE ROMANS.

The PREFACE to St. PAUL's Epiſtles.

Being now by God's bleſſing upon our labour and ſtudy, arrived to that part of the Canonical Books of the New Teſtament, called the Epiſtles of Paul, I ſhall introduce them with an account of their author; and ſome general remarks upon each Epiſtle.

Paul was of the tribe of Benjamin, a native of Tarſus in Cilicia, and a Phariſee by profeſſion; at firſt a perſecutor of the Church, and afterwards a diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt, and his Apoſtle to the Gentiles. It is thought, that he was born about two years before our Saviour, ſuppoſing that he lived ſixty-eight years, according to the account we read in the ſixth tome of Chryſoſtom's Works, Hom. 30.

The Ebionites, as Epiphanius records, related ſeveral particulars of the education, family, and converſion of Paul, which do not deſerve a place with us, as ſavouring too much of fiction; ſee Epiph. her. 30. c. 16. And in regard of his tribe, and fury in perſecuting the Chriſtians, Auſtin often applies Jacob's Prophecy to him; Benjamin ſhall ravin as a wolf, in the morning he ſhall devour the prey, and at night he ſhall divide the ſpoil, Gen. xlix. 27.

He was circumciſed on the eighth day, according to the law of Moſes, and named Saul; he had one ſiſter called Junia, and a nephew, Andronicus; beſides theſe kinſmen, Herodion, Jaſon, Lucius, and Soſipater, whom he ſalutes in the cloſe of his Epiſtle to the Romans. His father was a Phariſee, and a Roman citizen, wherefore Paul boaſted of his being free-born. Which freedom his father obtained, with the other inhabitants of Tarſus, from Auguſtus, on account of their firm adherence to his intereſts.

The inhabitants of this city being very thirſty after learning and ſciences, they travelled for their better inſtruction into other countries, that nothing might eſcape their ſtudies; ſee Strabo, l. 14. Hence it was, that Jeruſalem was always ſo full of them, that it was neceſſary to build them a ſynagogue proper for the people of that city, which was known by the name of the ſynagogue of the Cilicians. And amongſt others we read, that Saul was ſent thither by his parents in his youth, to be brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, in the moſt exact knowledge of the law of Moſes, Acts xxii. 3. to whoſe excellent inſtructions he ſo diligently conformed himſelf, that without boaſting, he affirmed of himſelf, that touching the righteouſneſs of the law he was blameleſs, and durſt appeal to his enemies to alledge any thing to the contrary, even in his youth; being very zealous for the whole obſervation of the law of Moſes, Acts xxvi. 4, 5. Beſides this, his liberal education, he was alſo educated to a trade or ſecular occupation, according to the cuſtom of the Jews, who taught, That it was a parent's duty to circumciſe, redeem and marry his ſon, and inſtruct him in the law, and in ſome honeſt trade; and he that did not teach his ſon a trade, made him a thief; ſee Talmud. tract. Kidduſh, c. 1. And this was done either to keep them from idleneſs, or to ſecure to them a maintenance in time of adverſity. So Saul's trade, was that of a tent-maker, for the uſe of ſoldiers and ſailors, which, in thoſe days were made of skins ſewed together.

Saul having had ſo good an education in the Jewiſh learning, and being naturally of a very hot temper, became a great zealot for the law of Moſes, and tradition of the elders, which his maſters had taught him was zeal towards God. This made him impatient of all oppoſition to the doctrines and tenets he had imbibed, and a vehement blaſphemer and perſecuter of the Chriſtians, who were commonly reputed the enemies and deſtroyers of the Moſaic Oeconomy. The firſt engagement he had with them in the defence of his preſent ſentiments, was among his countrymen of the Cilician ſynagogue, in the diſputation they had with Stephen about the Meſſias, that holy Deacon was too hard for them in the diſpute; but they were too powerful for him in the civil intereſts; for, being enraged at him for his convincing arguments, they convened him before the high-prieſt, and by falſe accuſations had him condemned to death; ſee Acts vi. 9. How far Paul was concerned in this cruel action it doth not appear, only thus much is evident, from his own confeſſion, that he was an abettor in his martyrdom; for, he ſtood by, conſented to his death, and kept the raiment of them which ſlew him; ſee Acts xxii. 20. So he ſtoned him, as it were by proxy, and by the hands of others. This happened in the 33d year of the common Æra, ſometime after our Saviour's death.

After the death of Stephen, the Jews, finding their intereſt with the Roman governor, who had connived at that outrage, (ſee the Diſſertation on the ſtate of the Jews, &c.) proceeded to more violent methods, endeavouring to extirpate the Chriſtian Church at Jeruſalem; ſo ſoon began the Chriſtians to find their maſters words fulfilled, which he had ſpoken to the Jews; Behold, I ſend you Prophets, and wiſe-men, and ſcribes, and ſome of them ye ſhall kill and crucify, and ſome of them ye ſhall ſcourge in your ſynagogues, and perſecute them from city to city; yea, and whoſoever killeth you, will think that he doth God ſervice; ſee Matt. xxiii. 34. John xvi. 2. In this perſecution, Paul was one of thoſe, that ſhewed moſt violence in diſtreſſing the believers. He entred into their houſes, and drew out by force both men and women; loaded them with chains, and ſent them to priſon. He even entred into the ſynagogues, and cauſed the diſciples of Jeſus to be beaten there with rods, compelling them to blaſpheme the name of the Lord, (Gal. i. 13. Acts xxvi. 11. compared with Acts ix. 1, 2, 3, &c.) not only in Jeruſalem, but even as far as Damaſcus, ibid. Into ſuch exceſſes, and extravagant acts, was God pleaſed to ſuffer this veſſel of election, whom he had choſen to eternal life from his mother's womb, (Gal. i. 15. 1 Tim. i. 16.) to run, and ſo long to continue in them, that he might in him teach us, not to condemn them as reprobates, whom we ſee great ſinners, and ſhew us an example of his patience in his long-ſuffering of our infirmities, that none may doubt of their acceptance to pardon, after the commiſſion of enormous crimes, ſince ſo great a perſecuter of the Church, and murderer of Stephen, found mercy, and became an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt. For, in his way to Damaſcus, Jeſus ſpake to him in ſuch terms, as of a perſecuter, to bring him to a thorough knowledge of his error, repentance of his wickedneſs, and firm converſion to his faith; ſee Acts ix. 1, &c. So that, at his arrival at Damaſcus, inſtead of a perſecuter, he was baptized by Ananias, as the Lord commanded, and became a diſciple and preacher of the Goſpel, preaching in the ſynagogues, and proving that Jeſus was the Meſſiah.

Paul ſtayed but a few days at Damaſcus after his converſion; for, being commiſſioned to go to the Gentiles, he retreated into the neighbouring part of Arabia, which was in ſubjection to one Aretar, king of the Arabians; whence having being fully inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt with all the myſteries of Chriſtianity, he returned to Damaſcus, and became a more zealous and able preacher of the Goſpel in that city; inſomuch that the Jews, not able to withſtand his reaſonings, thought proper to make friends with the governor thereof, under king Aretas, to put him to death. Yet though the governor had promiſed to favour their deſign, and the Jews laid great wait to apprehend him, the Chriſtians found means to convey him away privately through a window in a basket, over the wall of the city, which at once fruſtated the vigilance of the city garriſon, and the deſigns of his enemies; ſee Acts ix. 23, &c. 2 Cor. xi. 32. Thus Paul eſcaped, ſhewing us, that it is not unlawful to make an eſcape from perſecuters, and ſave our lives, where the glory of God doth not call immediately to the contrary, and the good of the Church may require our preſervation.

The Apoſtle, freed from this danger, went up to Jeruſalem to ſee Peter and the Church in that city. But when the diſciples refuſed to admit him into their company, Barnabus, either more bold, or having had ſome better information of Paul's ſincerity than the other Apoſtles, aſſociated with him, and introduced him to Peter and James, which gave him an opportunity to relate unto them the manner of his converſion, and all that had followed in conſequence thereof. Then he began to preach both to the Jews and Gentiles, in ſuch ſtrenth of argument, that, not being able to withſtand him in reaſoning, they reſolved to take away his life. For this reaſon the brethren brought him to Ceſarea of Paleſtine, from whence he ſailed into his own country, Tarſus in Cilicia. Whence,

About the year 43, Paul was brought by Barnabas to Antioch, where they both preached to the faithful one whole year; when they choſe theſe two Apoſtles to go with their offerings to the brethren at Jeruſalem, who now were in great diſtreſs by reaſon of a famine, which prevailed in Judea, Acts xi. 27, &c. They arrived there in the year of Chriſt 44. And having acquitted themſelves of their commiſſion, they returned again to Antioch, and brought with them John ſirnamed Mark, a kinsman of Barnabas. It was ſoon after this, that Paul was wrapped up into the third heaven or paradiſe, that by the ſight of ineffable myſteries, he ſhould be made equal with the very chiefeſt Apoſtles in knowledge and revelation, and might be encouraged to preach the Goſpel boldly among thoſe barbarous nations, whither he was to go, in hopes of the future enjoyment of that glory he had then ſo clear a proſpect of; ſee 2 Cor. xii. 2--4. and 5--9. where we read, that leſt he ſhould be exalted by the abundance of revelations, and be unfit to compaſſionate the weak and tempted, God put into his fleſh ſome ſinful and unruly luſts, through the miniſtry of Satan's agents, which he terms, a thorn in the fleſh, by which he was ſo humbled and grieved, that he beſought God thrice to remove it from him: But the Divine Wiſdom thought it fit to continue it in ſuch ſtrength all his life, that had he not given him a great ſufficiency of grace, and excited him to conſtant mortification, he had certainly become a caſt-away; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 27. Thus is God pleaſed to exerciſe the greateſt of his Saints with temptations, that the tempted may neither deſpair of his favour, nor his choiceſt ſervants preſume too much of their own ſtrength.

It was in this ſituation that Paul was prepared to embark with Barnabas for Seleucia, a city in Syria, on the ſea-coaſt, from whence they ſailed to Cyprus, an iſle in the Mediterranean-Sea, where they began to preach in the ſynagogues of the Jews, firſt at the city Salamais, and then wandering up and down the iſland, they at length came to Paphos, a large city, ſituate on the farther ſide of the iſle, and the ſeat of the proconſul of the iſle, whoſe name at that time was Sergius Paulus, who, though a very wiſe and prudent man, had been ſeduced by the magical arts of one Barjeſus, a Jewiſh ſorcerer. But hearing of the fame of the Apoſtles, whoſe miracles and doctrine publiſhed their reputation, ſent for them to preach to him; who, when they were come, not only convicted the ſorcerer of his prejudicial practices, but confirmed their doctrine by the miraculous ſtriking him blind; which effectually reconciled the proconſul to the Chriſtian faith. Nor had it leſs effect upon the ſorcerer himſelf, if we may credit the authority of theſe ancient writers, Origen and Chryſoſtome; ſee Acts xiii. 4---16.

Many are of opinion that Saul now only began to bear the name of Paul, which Luke always gives him afterwards, in memory of this remarkable converſion of Sergius Paulus, which God had wrought by his means. But Aſterius believes he changed his name immediately, upon his own converſion, in the city of Damaſcus. Again, Chryſoſtom ſuppoſes this mutation of names to be made at the time of his ordination, and when he received his miſſion at Antioch. Others ſay, that he took the name of Paul, which is a Latin name, only when he began to preach to the Gentiles, and eſpecially to the Romans. And finally many, that he, after the manner of many other Jews, who travelled, always had two names, Saul in Hebrew, and Paul in Greek or Latin. But, I think, the firſt opinion is the moſt probable, becauſe he is never called by the name of Paul, before the converſion of Sergius Paulus, which happened in the city of Paphos, in the 45th year of Chriſt.

Satan being thus conquered by the ſword of the Goſpel in Cyprus, Paul ſoon after departed with his companions to Perga in Pamphilia, a country of the leſſer Aſia; where they were no ſooner arrived but John Mark, weary of this travelling unſettled life, bid them adieu, and departed for Jeruſalem. Neither did Paul make any ſtay at Perga, but haſtened to Antioch in Piſidia, the capital city of thoſe countries, that he might the more effectually diſperſe the knowledge of the Goſpel into the neighbouring regions. And his preaching was attended with ſo good effect in this city, that at the firſt hearing the Gentiles, unacquainted with ſuch ſort of doctrines, deſired him to explain himſelf more clearly on the next ſabbath-day; and the Jews, who waited for redemption in Iſrael, believed and aſſociated with Paul and Barnabas for further inſtruction. But when the next ſabbath-day was come, the unbelieving Jews enraged to ſee the whole city of the Gentiles, met to hear the word which Paul preached in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, ſtrove to prevent the apparent ſucceſs of his preaching, by maliciouſly aſperſing the reputation both of the doctrine, and preachers, contradicting it as falſe, and blaſpheming them as teachers of lies; and they prevailed ſo far with the chief men and women of the city, that the Apoſtles were forced to fly for their ſafety, and abandon the city, and the neighbouring parts; ſee Acts xiv. 1, &c. Yet, tho' they withdrew as far as Iconium, aſſoon as the unbelieving Jews heard that they made many proſelytes there alſo, they purſued them till the Apoſtles were obliged to retire to Lyſtra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, leaſt they ſhould be ſtoned by the deceived Gentiles, Acts xiv. 8--28.

At Lyſtra, Paul cured a lame man, by commanding him in the name of Jeſus, to ſtand upon his feet, and when the people ſaw this miracle they cried out, that the gods were deſcended among them in the ſhape of men, and, calling Barnabas, Jupiter, and Paul, Mercury would have paid them Divine honours, had not the Apoſtles prevented their idolatry. Yet for all that, they had much ado to reſtrain the men of Lyſtra from offering ſacrifices to them, as gods, they ſoon changed their opinion, and by the perſwaſions of certain Jews, who came from Antioch and Iconium, ran into the other extreme, for they took Paul, and having ſtoned him, drew him out of the city, ſuppoſing him to have been dead. Thus did God bring that ſhower of ſtones, which Paul poured out upon Stephen, upon his own head, tho' not with ſuch fatal blows; for as the diſciples were accompanying his corpſe, he aroſe, and returned into the city with them: But becauſe he would not provoke his perſecutors, he departed the next day, with Barnabas to Derbe, where they taught the people and converted many, no danger being able to fright them from their work. From hence they returned to Lyſtra, and Iconium, and Antioch in Piſidia, Acts xiv. 25, 26. So paſſing through Piſidia, they came to Pamphilia, and having preached the word of God at Perga, they went down to Attalia, where they ſet ſail for Antioch in Syria. This was only one years progreſs from the time they had left this city, and being arrived ſafe they aſſembled the Church, and told them what great things God had done by their means, and how he had opened to the Gentiles a door of ſalvation; and Paul continued with them a long time, which our moſt learned Chronologers fix at the ſpace of five years; becauſe his hiſtorian Luke gives us no account of his actions from the 45th year of Chriſt, to the time of the Council at Jeruſalem, which was held in the fiftieth year of Chriſt.

It is very probable that Paul, during this interval, travelled over that large extent of land, which he ſpeaks of in Romans xv. 19. From Jeruſalem round about as far as Illyricum, preaching the Goſpel, tho' he often reſorted to Antioch, as the place of his ſettled abode. Tho' he does not acquaint us with the particulars of theſe journies, nor with the ſucceſs of his preaching; yet in general he ſays, that he had ſuffered more labours than any other, and had endured more priſons. He was often very near death itſelf, ſometimes upon the water, ſometimes among thieves. He ran great dangers, ſometimes from the Jews, and ſometimes amongſt falſe brethren and perverſe Chriſtians; he was expoſed to great hazards, as well in the cities, as in the deſerts. He ſuffered hunger, thirſt, nakedneſs, cold, faſtings, watching, and the fatigues inſeparable from long journies, which were undertaken without any proſpect of human ſuccour; ſee Rom. xv. 19. x. 10. and 2 Cor. xi. 23, 27. He made it a point of conſcience to preach the Goſpel gratis, working with his own hands, that he might not be chargeable to any one, 1 Cor. ix. 1.

Neither do we find the countries included within this compaſs of his five years miniſtry about Antioch in Syria, particularized in Scripture; but it is generally believed, that all Judea, Phenice, Syria, Arabia, Cappadoica, Thrace, Greece and Macedonia, are contained in it; ſee Hierom's Epiſt. 148. and Chryſoſt. in Rom. hom. 29.

It was during this interval of time, or courſe of his preaching, that our Apoſtle received five times of the Jews thirty-nine ſtripes with a whip, 2 Cor. xi. 24, 25. was twice beaten of the Romans with rods; was thrice ſhipwrecked; did paſs a night and a day in the deep; ibid. Where let it be obſerved, that tho' ſome interpret this of his having been actually a night and a day at the bottom of the ſea, as Hillary, Bede, and Sulpitius Severus; others ſuppoſe, that it is meant of the Apoſtles being hid for a night and a day at the bottom of a well, after the danger he was in at Lyſtra, where he had been ſtoned; and again others explain it by ſaying, that at Cyzicus, he was caſt into a priſon called Bythos, or the deep, which is the term made uſe of by Paul; yet, I think, with the greateſt part of the fathers, and ſeveral moſt eminent moderns, that we learn no more from this account, than that Paul, after a ſhipwreck, was a day and a night in the open ſea in a boat, or on a plank, ſtruggling with the waves; for the Greek word Buthos, or Bythos, when it is put by it ſelf, is commonly taken for the bottom of the ſea, or for the open ſea.

It was about the cloſe of this five years miniſtry, that the controverſy begun at Antioch about the neceſſity of circumciſion for ſalvation in the Chriſtian covenant, which ſome believers, who had been Phariſees, coming from Judea affirmed, which Paul and Barnabas denied; yet the queſtion proved of that conſequence, that it was thought proper to delegate Paul and Barnabas to Jeruſalem, to receive the Apoſtles opinion and direction thereon, by which they were to be determined, who having heard the whole affair from the mouth of Paul and Barnabas, decreed that the Gentiles who were converted to Chriſtianity, ſhould not be obliged to ſubmit to the yoke of the law; but only to avoid idolatry, fornication, and the eating of things ſtrangled and blood; ſee Acts xv. 1--31.

In this voyage to Jeruſalem, Paul took opportunity to confer privately with the Apoſtles, and moſt eminent pillars of that Church, in the preſence of Barnabas and Titus, about ſome difficult points of the Chriſtian Doctrine, and Apoſtolical Office, and to give them an account of his teaching; whereby he exhibited ſo good a reaſon of his faith and practice, that without adding to or taking from it, they approve it pure and blameleſs in every particular; ſee Gal. ii. 2--9. Then the Apoſtles admitted Paul into their fellowſhip, and as the Apoſtleſhip of the circumciſion was given to Peter, ſo they agreed that Paul ſhould be acknowledged the Apoſtle of the Gentiles; and that he ſhould go unto the uncircumiſion, and they unto the circumciſion; only providing, that Paul ought to have a particular care of the poor, i. e. of the poor Chriſtians of Judea, who had ſold all their goods to uphold the Church, and therefore ought to be relieved by the Gentiles; to which Paul readily conſented, and then departed from them to his charge; ſee Heb. x. 34. And both he, and Barnabas, who were accompanied by Jude, ſirnamed Barſabas and Silas, by Apoſtolical appointment, were kindly received by the Chriſtians at Antioch, being comforted to hear themſelves diſcharged from the obſervance of the Jewiſh ceremonial law. All which came to paſs in the 51ſt year of the Vulgar Æra.

While Paul remained at Antioch, Peter upon ſome occaſion came down thither alſo, and, for ſometime after his coming, converſed familiarly with the Gentile converts, both eating and communicating with them; but, it happening that ſome of the Jewiſh converts, who were very zealous for the law of Moſes, came down from Judea, Peter withdrew himſelf from the ſociety of the Gentiles, and ſo, as if God had never taught him to no man, common or unclean, ſeemed to juſtify the jewdizing opinion of avoiding the Gentiles by his example; which drew away Barnabas and the Jewiſh diſciples, and ſo diſannulled the decree paſſed by the Church at Jeruſalem, which ſo incenſed Paul, that he withſtood him to the face what effect this reproof had upon Peter is not recorded by Paul, but it was, doubtleſs effectual for a reformation upon ſo good a man; ſee Acts xv.

Sometime after Paul and Barnabas differed ſomewhat about John Mark, who aſſociated with Barnabas, but Paul took Silas, and croſſing over Syria and Cilicia, came to Derbe, and afterwards to Lyſtra, confirming and ſtrengthning all the Churches in the truth they had embraced; ſee Acts xv. 30--41.

At Lyſtra, Paul met with Timothy, a young Chriſtian born of Chriſtian parents, and very eminent for his wiſdom and piety, which ingratiated him very much in the favour of Paul, who knowing him by the Spirit, to be a perſon well qualified for the ſervice of the Goſpel, determined to take him for his companion. And as Timothy was a Gentile born, Paul, tho' he had much oppoſed the neceſſity of legal rites, and would not ſuffer Titus to be circumciſed, when it was required as abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation, thought it in this caſe, the prudenteſt courſe to become a Jew, that he might gain the Jews; and therefore circumciſed him, that his preaching might be more acceptable in thoſe places, where the Chriſtians were moſt of them jewdizing. Yet, in all theſe Churches, he left them a copy of the decrees made by the Apoſtles and elders at Jeruſalem, to confirm them in the right uſe of their Chriſtian Liberty.

When they had gone over the provinces of Lycaonia, Phrygia and Galatia, the Holy Ghoſt would not allow them to preach the Goſpel in the province of Aſia properly ſo called, containing Ionia, Æolia and Lydia. Therefore they went on to Myſia, and coming to Troas, Paul had there a viſion in the night, which directed him to paſs into Macedonia, and he immediately ſet out on his journey, not doubting but that God had called him into that country; ſee Acts xvi. 1, &c. And Sailing from Troas they arrived at Neapolis, a city of Macedonia, very near the frontiers of Thrace; from whence they came to Philippi, which was the firſt Roman colony on that ſide of Macedonia. In this city Paul, according to his cuſtom preached in a proſeucha, or oratory of the Jews, which ſtood by a river ſide, at ſome diſtance from the city, and was much frequented by the devouter women of their religion, who met there to pray, and to hear the law. Among theſe women was one Lydia, a dealer in purple, who was converted, baptized, and invited Paul and his company to lodge in her houſe, ſo long as they abode in this city they kept on their daily courſe of worſhipping God in the ſame oratory; and as they were going one day to the ſame place of devotion, they were followed by a maid, that had a prophetick ſpirit, or was poſſeſſed with a devil, which, after ſhe had acknowledged his authority and commiſſion, Paul commanded in the name of Jeſus to come out of her; upon which the devil immediately left her, which miracle brought on ſuch a proſecution againſt Paul and Silas, that they were whipped with rods on their backs and ſhoulders, and caſt into priſon by order of the magiſtracy. Concerning which, what paſſed in the priſon, and how they obtained their liberty; ſee Acts xvi. 1, &c. For the magiſtrates hearing that they were Roman citizens came to the priſon to excuſe their unjuſtifiable proceedings; brought them out of priſon, and deſired them to depart out of their city. So Paul and Silas going firſt to the houſe of the devout Lydia to viſit and comfort the brethren, departed from Philippi, to go to Theſſalonica, the capital city of Macedonia; but he was ſoon obliged to retire thence to Berea, whoſe inhabitants heard him gladly. Which converſion of the Bereans being reported at Theſſalonica, the Jews of that city came thither and animated the mob againſt them; ſo that Paul was obliged to withdraw, leaving Silas and Timothy at Berea, to finiſh the work he had ſo happily begun; ſee Acts xvii. 1, &c.

Paul leaving Berea under the conduct of certain guides, it was reported that he intended to take ſea and get out of Greece, that his perſecutors might not follow him; but, as Paul had ordered, the guides brought him to Athens, and leaving him there returned with his orders, That Silas and Timotheus ſhould come to him with all ſpeed; ſee Acts xvii. 15,--34. Now

Athens was anciently the moſt famous academy of all Greece, and yielded moſt learned and illuſtrious philoſophers; and at this time it had not ſo far degenerated, but that it was accounted a place well ſtored with learned and pious men. The inhabitants of it were very religious and devout; for the wiſe men, ſays Chryſoſtome, are always the moſt pious; they had a great number of deities, ſuch as they in the want of revelation accounted true gods: And they had an altar to the unknown god, leaſt any deity ſhould want due honour from them. Divers reaſons are given of this inſcription; and ſome affirm, that it was the name which the pagans generally gave to the god of the Jews. Others affirm, that it included all the gods of Aſia, Europe and Africa, beſides the unknown god. And while Paul remained at Athens he could not but take notice of their idolatry; for according to Petronius, it was eaſier to find gods than men of Athens, and it grieved him much to ſee ſo much zeal and devotion miſplaced, which, if he could but ſettle upon its proper object, he thought would be an eminent piece of ſervice to God. Wherefore he laboured earneſtly for their converſion, to bring them to a thorough repentance of their errors, which God had aforetime winked at; and to worſhip God according to the laws and rules of the man, Chriſt Jeſus, whom God had made judge and ruler of the world, by raiſing him from the dead. Some of the auditors laughed at, and derided this doctrine, but others, amongſt whom was Dionyſius a judge of the Areopagus, Damaris, &c. believed, and were diſcipled unto Chriſt.

While Paul continued at Athens, Timothy, according to his command, came to him, and brought him the news, that the Theſſalonian converts had been under perſecution for the name of Chriſt ever ſince his departure, 1 Theſſ. ii. 14, 17, 18. and 1 Theſſ. iii. 1, 2. This obliged the Apoſtle to ſend him into Macedonia, to comfort them, and keep them ſtedfaſt in the faith. And ſoon after he himſelf departed for Corinth; ſee Acts xviii. 1, &c. where he made ſeveral converts, and baptized Stephanus and his houſe, with Criſpus and Gaius; ſee 1 Cor. i. 14, &c. xvi. 15. and received by the mouth of Silas and Timothy, the agreeable news of the reſt and peace enjoyed by the Theſſalonians; ſee Acts xviii. 5. 1 Theſſ. iii. 6, 9. which ſo much rejoiced the Apoſtle, that it was like a comforting cordial to him in his afflictions. This made him take up ſome freſh reſolutions of going to ſee them in perſon, (1 Theſſ. iii. 7.) but in the mean-time he thought fit to ſend them a letter, which, ſays Calmet, is the firſt of all the Epiſtles that he wrote: The contents of which, and of the ſecond to the Theſſalonians you will find hereafter in their proper places.

Paul, who before was almoſt over-awed by the obſtinacy of the Jews, and as it were, diſcouraged from preaching the Goſpel, received freſh courage by the preſence of Silas and Timothy; ſo that he went on with the work of his miniſtry with new ardor, ſhewing and proving that Jeſus Chriſt was the true Meſſiah. But being blaſphemouſly and opprobriouſly oppoſed by the Jews, he ſhook his clothes at them, and ſaid, your blood be upon your own head; as for me I am innocent of it. From henceforth I ſhall go to the Gentiles. See Acts xviii. 5. So he quitted the houſe of Aquila a Jew, and went to lodge with one called Titus Juſtus, who had been a Gentile originally, but was converted to the faith of Chriſt, where he continued eight months. This man's houſe adjoined to the ſynagogue, and was therefore the more convenient for Paul's deſign, that the Jews might ſee his ſucceſs among the Gentiles, and through emulation be provoked to believe in Chriſt. Nor did his pious deſign want ſome effect; for Criſpus, the chief ruler of the ſynagogue, believed on the Lord with all his houſe, and was baptized with the lover of regeneration by the hands of Paul himſelf. But his preaching prevail much more among the Gentiles than it had been among the Jews; for we read that many of the Corinthians hearing, believed in Chriſt and were baptized, 2 Cor. i. 19. In which miniſtry he was aſſiſted by Silas and Timothy; and as this is the laſt place in where Silas is mentioned, it is thought that he died here, though Ado, in his martyrology ſays, but upon what authority, I know not, that he died in Macedonia.

This continual progreſs of Paul's ſucceſsful labours increaſed the number of his enemies, and conſequently enlarged his perſecutions. They were now arrived to that enmity and rage, that nothing leſs than his blood could ſatiate their malice; ſo they conſulted all ways how they might deſtroy him; by which, as he tells us, he was reduced to very great ſtraits and wants of bodily neceſſaries, and lived in continual fears and terror of mind; ſee 1 Cor. ii. 3. and 2 Cor. xi. 9. But leſt theſe afflicting circumſtances ſhould deter him from the work he had undertaken, Jeſus appeared to him by night in a viſion, and ſpake to him in theſe comfortable words: Fear not, ſpeak and hold not thy peace, let not thy enemies deter thee from delivering my meſſage, for I am with thee to protect and defend thee; ſo that no man ſhall ſet on thee to hurt thee; for, I have much people in this city, Acts xviii. 9,--11. This aſſurance inſpired Paul with freſh courage, inſomuch that he continued preaching there and in the neighbourhood thereof a full year and ſix months, and eſtabliſhing ſeveral ordinances among his converts concerning Church order and decency, as, That women ſhould come to places of publick worſhip, with their heads covered with a veil; that men ſhould wear ſhort hair, and women, long; with ſeveral others of like nature. See 1 Cor. xi. 2, 5, 14.

While Paul remained ſtill at Corinth, Novatus the brother of Seneca, called in the Scripture, Gallio, becauſe he was adopted by Gallio, a Roman, was by the intereſt of his brother, made proconſul of Achaia; and he was no ſooner arrived at that city to take poſſeſſion of his government, but the Jews roſe againſt Paul and carried him before his tribunal, accuſing him of attempting to introduce a new kind of worſhip among them. To which when Paul was begining to make his defence, Gallio replied, that if the Jews had laid any thing of wrong, or injuſtice to his charge, he would have given them the hearing, but that he was determined not to intermeddle with diſputes, that were foreign to his office; and ſo diſmiſſed the cauſe. And his ſervants beat Soſthenes, the head of Paul's accuſers, becauſe of his factious troubleſomeneſs. So that Paul's enemies in vain attempted to injure him; for God had warranted his defence when he promiſed, that no man ſhould be able to hurt him.

This tumult was ſo far from dejecting the Apoſtle, that he remained yet a long time at Corinth; ſee Acts xviii. 18,--23. for, it was not till the end of eighteen months that he took his leave of the Church, and embarked at Cenchrea, where, before he went on board, he cut off his hair, becauſe he had completed his vow of Nazariteſhip, in which he had engaged himſelf. From hence he ſailed into Syria, and arrived at Epheſus in his way to Jeruſalem, where he purpoſed to keep the paſſover.

From Epheſus he departed for Cæſarea of Paleſtine, and thence to Jeruſalem; where having performed his devotions, he came to Antioch, and ſtaid ſome time. And then paſſing from thence, he made a tour throughout all the Churches in Galatia and Phrygia ſucceſſively. And Having paſſed over the upper coaſts, i. e. the parts of Aſia fartheſt diſtant from the ſea, as far as Capadocia, he returned again to Epheſus, where he took up his abode for three years, in the company of Gaius of Derbe, Ariſtarchus a Theſſalonian, Timothy and Eraſtus, Corinthians, and Titus; ſee Acts xix. 1,--7. and 29. xx. 4, 31. 1 Cor. vii. 13, 14. where we may obſerve, that Paul began his miniſtry with baptizing twelve perſons in the name of Jeſus, who had before been baptized only with the baptiſm of John. By which practiſe it ſeems, that the baptiſm of John being only a bare profeſſion of repentance; and a ceremonial abſolution from ſin upon it, was not thought ſufficient to initiate them into the Chriſtian Church, nor fit them for the Holy Spirit; wherefore they were re-baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; and having received the impoſition of hands, did alſo receive the gift of tongues, then common in the Church, and an uſual effect of the ſpirits purging the heart by faith, and a ſign of the pardon of their ſins ratified in heaven. He afterwards entred into the ſynagogue and preached to the Jews for three months, endeavouring to convince them that Jeſus was the Meſſiah. But at length finding moſt of them obſtinate and hardned in their infidelity, and ſo far from believing that they reviled and abuſed his doctrine, he withdrew himſelf from their aſſemblies, and met in a private ſchool of one Tyrannus, who was a Chriſtian convert. Here we read that he preached two whole years, and converted ſo many, who were come on the account of trade, &c. to Epheſus, from all parts of the world, that partly by proper miſſioners, and partly by accidental converſation, all that dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord Jeſus, both Jews and Greeks.

In which time he conſtantly went by day and night to private houſes, to confirm thoſe that believed, and to convince the unbelievers, always working with his own hands, that he might not be burthenſome to any, Acts xx. 19, 20, 33, 34. He wrought many miracles during this time; for the very linnen that had but touched his body, being afterwards applied to the ſick, they were preſently cured of their diſeaſes, or delivered from the poſſeſſion of evil ſpirits, Acts xix. 11, 12. He alſo ſuffered much there, as well from the Jews, as from the Gentiles; for he himſelf informs us, That after the manner of men he fought with beaſts at Epheſus, 1 Cor. xv. 31, 32. being expoſed to wild beaſts in the Amphitheatre, by which he muſt have been devoured, had not God ſtopped their mouths, and delivered him out of all danger; ſee Chryſoſt. hom. 40. in 1 Cor. xv. and Theodoret, ibid.

There were at Epheſus ſeven brethren, who were Jews, and the ſons of one Sceva, the head of one of the twenty-four courſes of the prieſts; ſee Chryſoſt. in Acts, hom. 1. They went about from town to town, as ſeveral other Jews did, to caſt out Devils, and to cure diſeaſes by their exorciſms for money. Before Chriſt appeared in his miniſterial office, the Jewiſh exorciſts uſed the name of the God of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, for ſuch exorciſms. But they obſerving the miracles which Jeſus wrought in his own name, and the wonderful works performed after his death, by his name, tho' they were too obſtinate to believe in Chriſt, would often make uſe of his Holy Name, as moſt effectual to caſt out Devils; ſee Matt. xii. 27. and Luke ix. 49, 50. But Chriſt would not always ſuffer his name to be made uſe of in an abuſive way, to ſatisfy the vanity, or promote the worldly intereſt of theſe Jews; and therefore made uſe of the Devil himſelf, to puniſh the prophanation of his moſt Sacred Name, by tearing the exorciſts to pieces; ſee Acts xix. 13--20. Which accident, being reported throughout the city, both Jews and Gentiles were much frighted, inſomuch, that from that day, they never ſpake of the name of Jeſus, but with reſpect; and many were converted to the faith of Chriſt, ſo that the Goſpel ſpread it ſelf mightily, and prevailed.-----This was that great door and effectual, which Paul ſays was opened to him at Epheſus; yet it was not without much oppoſition, and great perſecution from the Jews, who lay daily in wait for him; he hazarded his life for others, and died daily, that others might live through his doctrine for ever; ſee 1 Cor. xvi. 9. and xv. 31.

While Paul abode at Epheſus, he wrote his Epiſtle to the Galatians, about the fifty-ſixth year of Chriſt, whom he had converted, and whom falſe teachers had ſeduced and diſturbed, perſwading them that to attain ſalvation, they ought to be circumciſed, and ſubmit themſelves to the obſervation of the whole ritual law of Moſes; ſee the Introduction to that Epiſtle. And,

Juſt before his departure from this city, being informed of the domeſtick troubles, diviſions and abuſes, which were riſen and reigned among the Corinthians, he wrote them the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, of which in its proper place, about a year after that was written to the Galatians. But,

Before Paul had departed from Epheſus, the way of the Lord was diſturbed by a ſedition, raiſed by Demetrius a Silver-ſmith, whoſe chief trade was the making of little models of the temple of Diana at Epheſus, one of the wonders of the world, which the ſtrangers and pilgrims, that came for curioſity or devotion, brought up. This man perceiving that his trade muſt neceſſarily fail, if Paul, and his companions, ſhould continue to convert ſo many to the faith of Chriſt, which condemned his ſuperſtitition, raiſed a mob, and would have perchance, if they could have found Paul, murdered him; wherefore Paul taking leave of his diſciples, departed to go to Macedonia; ſee Acts xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. An. Chr. 57. And the Apoſtle, tho' he eſcaped their fury, ſpeaks of this deliverance, as of a great miracle, We had the ſentence of death in our ſelves, ſays he, that we ſhould not truſt in our ſelves, but in God, who raiſeth the dead, who delivered us from ſo great a death, 2 Cor. i. 9, 10.

He travelled as far as Troas before he took ſhip, expecting to meat with Titus there, but miſſing him, he embarked, and purſued his voyage into Macedonia (2 Cor. ii. 12, 49.) where he made a very ſhort ſtay; and his whole voyage was attended by ſo many troubles and dangers, that the Apoſtle tells the Corinthians, without were fightings, within were fears; ſee 2 Cor. vii. 5, 6. But God, who is the comforter of all thoſe that are afflicted for his name ſake, comforted Paul by the opportune intervention of Titus, who brought him the joyful news of the good effects his letter had at Corinth; and that the alms of the Corinthians for the faithful in Paleſtine were already collected with liberality and cheerfulneſs; which engaged him to write a ſecond letter or Epiſtle to the Corinthians, (An. Dni 57. See the Introduction to that Epiſtle.) which he ſent by the hands of Titus, to whom he added a brother, whom the Churches had aſſociated with him to collect the alms of the faithful, whoſe name was Silas, or, as others think, Barnabas, or Luke: And ſoon after paſſing through Macedonia, and ſtaying three months in Achaia, he went in perſon to Corinth, where, having received their alms, as he was upon the point of returning into Macedonia, he writ his Epiſtle to the Romans (An. Dni 58.) in which he chiefly applies himſelf to explain the doctrine of grace and predeſtination. See the Introduction to that Epiſtle.

At laſt he left Greece, and came into Macedonia (An. Dni 58.) intending to be at Jeruſalem on the feaſt of pentecoſt. He ſtaid ſome time at Philippi, where he kept the paſſover; and from thence he ſailed to Troas, where he ſtaid a week, Acts xx. 6, 7. and raiſed to life one Eutychus, who happened to fall three ſtories high, while Paul was preaching on the firſt day of the week, called the Lord's-Day.---"This fall, ſays Chryſoſtome, ſhews what puniſhment they deſerve who hear the word of God with negligence, ſuffering their minds to wander, or their ſenſes to be locked up with ſleep." Hom. 43. And God inveſted his Apoſtle with ſo great a power, as that of raiſing the dead to life again, to magnify his own power by Paul's miniſtry.

Paul had no ſooner left off preaching, but, having ſhipped off his company at Troas, he departed alone on foot to Aſſos, where by appointment he met with Luke, and his other company, with whom he embarked and arrived at the city Mitylene, in the iſle of Lesbos, where he ſtaid but one day; for, the next day they ſailed thence and came over-againſt Chios, and the day following arrived at Samos, another iſland in the Ægean ſea, and landed at Trogyllium, a promontory of Ionia, near Samos: And the next day he went to Miletus, a famous city upon the coaſts of Aſia in the province of Caria. It was to this city that he ſent for the elders of the Church of Epheſus to give them a particular charge over that flock, of which he had made them overſeers, and eſpecially becauſe he had beſtowed ſo much pains upon them, and might now, perchance, never enjoy ſuch another opportunity to be preſent with them. And therefore after he had exhorted them to all goodneſs, he concludes his diſcourſe with a ſolemn recommendation of them to God's ſpecial grace and perfection, &c. which being ended, he kneeled down and prayed with them all; and they all wept ſore, and fell on his neck, and kiſſed him, ſorrowing at his words, becauſe he had ſaid, that he ſhould ſee them no more. And thus they accompanied him to the ſhip. See Acts xx. 13,--38.

From Miletus Paul ſailed to Rhodes, and thence to Patara, where finding a ſhip that was bound for Phænicia, they went on board, and arrived ſafe at Tyre, where they made a ſtay for ſeven days; after which, in the proſecution of their journey, they arrived at Ptolemais, and thence to Cæſarea, the reſidence of Philip the Evangeliſt, and one of the ſeven deacons. While Paul was here, the Prophet Agabus arrived alſo from Judæa, and taking Paul's girdle, he bound his own hands and feet with it, ſaying: Thus ſhall the Jews at Jeruſalem bind the man that owns this girdle, and ſhall deliver him up to the Gentiles (ſee Acts xxi. 1, 2, &c.) which came to paſs ſoon after. For,

Paul was no ſooner arrived at Jeruſalem, and given an account to the Church at Jeruſalem aſſembled in council, of what God had done among the Gentiles by his miniſtry; but James their biſhop, informed him, that the converted Jews were ſtrangely prejudiced againſt him for teaching the Jews, who lived among the Gentiles, and out of Paleſtine, that they ought to renounce the law of Moſes, and no longer circumciſe their children. And though Paul followed James's advice, by conforming to ſome of the Jewiſh ceremonies, the people ſeized him and had pulled him to pieces, or ſtoned him, had not the Roman officer Lyſias reſcued him out of their hands, and carried him into the caſtle for further examination, to find out what they laid to his charge, and what he was really guilty of.

Now Paul being ſecured in the caſtle was permitted to make his defence, which you'll find in Acts xxii. 1, &c. But when he had done, the Roman captain, ignorant of the affair, intended to ſcourge him, that he might thereby oblige him to confeſs his fault, which he apprehended could be no ſmall one, which had ſo enraged the multitude; till Paul pleaded the privilege of a Roman citizen, by which he was releaſed from chains and intended puniſhment; ſee Acts xxii. 23,—29.

Lyſias being very deſirous to know the certainty of the Apoſtles crime, reſolved to examine him before the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, which he ordered to aſſemble for that purpoſe; ſee Acts xxii. 30. which was ſwayed with ſo much prejudice, partiality and injuſtice, that Paul was forced to make uſe of a little of the ſerpent's policy for his own preſervation, tho' he was as innocent as a dove; and therefore, when he found that no arguments from reaſon, nor revelation, were able to deliver him out of their hands, he endeavoured to ſet the Phariſees and Sadducees, of whom the council conſiſted, by the ears together. And his ſtratagem had ſo good an effect, that the Phariſees took his part againſt the Sadducees, which contention being obſerved by the Roman captain to riſe into a tumult, he ſecured Paul, and carried him ſafe back to the caſtle, where Jeſus, in the following night appeared to him, and told him, that he would carry him ſafe through all dangers he might meet with from the Jews, and bring him to Rome, to teſtify of his name and truth there, which he made good in the manner you may read in xxiii, xxviii. 16. of Acts. Thus,

Paul having eſcaped the malice and treachery of the Jews in Judea, and many perils by ſea, and done many wonderful works to the glory of God in his voyage, was ſet aſhore at Puteoli, a port of Campania in Italy, near Naples, where the Alexandrian ſhips uſually anchored to unlade. Where Paul being permitted to ſtay ſeven days, with ſome Chriſtians he met with there, he proceeded in his journey to Rome, and was met in the way by many Chriſtians, who lived at Rome, and had been told of his coming.

Being arrived in the city, he was committed amongſt the other priſoners, by Julius the centurion, to one Afranius Barrus, captain of the Emperor's guards, who was naturally a good-tempered man, and more eſpecially obliging to Paul, whom he permitted to live with a ſingle guard at his own hired houſe, and to receive what company he pleaſed. This continued for two years, during which time Paul received all that came unto him, whether out of curioſity or kindneſs, and preached the kingdom of God, (ſee Acts xxviii. 30, 31.) teaching thoſe things which concern the Lord Jeſus Chriſt with all confidence, and without any oppoſition or diſcouragement; (ſee Phil. i. 12, 13. iv. 18.) inſomuch, that his impriſonment ſerved very much for the propagation of the Goſpel, and made the Apoſtle famous at the Emperor's court, where he had converted ſeveral to Chriſtianity; and the brethren waxing confident by his bonds, grew bolder to preach the word without fear, tho' it appeared that ſome did it with a deſign to ſtir up Nero's fury, that he might perſecute Paul the more ſeverely.

Some are of opinion that while Paul was at Rome, he was converſant with that pious Moraliſt and excellent Philoſopher, Seneca, and that they wrote ſeveral letters to each other; but, if that be true, we muſt reject thoſe that now are publiſhed in their names, as ſpurious, for very good reaſons, which all the learned world are convinced of.

While the Apoſtle was under this confinement, the Chriſtians at Philippi ſent him a ſupply of money by the hands of their Biſhop Epaphroditus; who, by his conſtant attendance and care to him, in aſſiſting his perſon, brought himſelf into ſuch a bad way, that he fell into a dangerous diſtemper, which endangered his life, and kept him a long time at Rome; and at his return, carried Paul's Epiſtle to his Church at Philippi, which contained his thanks of their work of charity, &c. See the introduction to the ſaid Epiſtle. But, One of the moſt eminent fruits of Paul's impriſonment was the converſion of Oneſimus, who of a ſlave, renegado, and thief, became a faithful ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, and was thought worthy by Paul, of the names of his dear and faithful brother, his ſon, his bowels, himſelf; ſee Philem. v. 10, 12, 17. He was a native of Coloſſe, a city of Phrygia, and a ſervant of Philemon, an inhabitant there, who had embraced the faith, and was an intimate friend of Paul's; ſee Col. iv. 9. This affair gave occaſion to the Epiſtle of Paul to Philemon, of which in its proper place. So

Philemon having received this Epiſtle, and finding that Oneſimus was helpful to Paul, ſent him back again to the Apoſtle, and he ſerved him faithfully in the miniſtry of the Goſpel.

Oneſimus being returned to Rome, the Apoſtle writes an Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, and ſends it him, at the requeſt of Epaphras, their teacher, but then in bonds for the ſake of Chriſt at Rome; ſee Philem. v. 23. To Oneſimus was added, Tychicus; ſee Col. iv. 7, 8, 9. with orders, that the ſame Epiſtle ſhould be read to the Church at Laodicea. Where let it be noted, that the Epiſtle handed about by the name of Paul's Epiſtle to the Laodiceans, is ſpurious, and a manifeſt forgery.

Paul was yet at Rome, or at leaſt in Italy, when he wrote his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, or thoſe Jews who had embraced the Chriſtian Faith in Judea, to confirm them under the perſecution, which they ſuffered from the unbelieving part of their nation; which is the ground of ſome peoples opinion, that this is the Epiſtle which Peter mentions in 2 Pet. iii. 15. partly becauſe it was written to the Jews, and partly becauſe it was written after ſeveral of his other Epiſtles; ſee the Introduction to this Epiſtle.

It is not known by what means Paul was delivered from his confinement, and diſcharge from his accuſation, that the Jews had brought againſt him: And ſuch an enquiry would be needleſs, becauſe neither he, himſelf, nor any ancient author ſpeaks any thing of it. There is indeed great probability, that they durſt not proſecute him, before the Emperor, for want of ſufficient proof of the crimes they had alledged againſt him in Judea. This is certain, that he was ſet at liberty in the ſixty-third year of Chriſt, being, as Euſebius, and ſome others write, brought before the imperial tribunal to anſwer for himſelf, which he did ſo effectually, that he vindicated his own innocency, of which proceeding he wrote Timothy this word, That at his firſt anſwer no man ſtood with him; yet he was delivered out of the mouth of the lion, i. e. Nero and his Judges; 2 Tim. iv. 16, 17.

Whither the Apoſtle travelled after this his deliverance, is not certain; but it is probable, that he ſpent his time in making new, or perfecting his old converſions; ſee Euſeb. l. ii. c. 22. He undertook new voyages, and travelled into ſeveral nations to preach the Goſpel. He again ſuffered many torments, impriſonments, and many dangers of death; ſee Chryſoſt. p. 480. Several fathers have thought that he went into Spain, but we have no other grounds for that opinion, but his deſign, when he wrote his Epiſtle to the Romans, Rom. xvi. which we have reaſon to believe, was prevented by intervening circumſtances; and it is certain, that in all his Epiſtles written from Rome, he never ſpeaks of going into Spain, but into the Eaſt only, when Timothy ſhall come to him, Heb. xiii. 23. Therefore we are ready to credit what Theodoret ſays of this matter, That Paul now went and preached in the Iſle of Crete, (ſee Tit. iii. 13.) where, after he had laid the foundations of a Church, he left Titus to finiſh what was wanting, and to place elders in every city; and it is alſo probable, that at his firſt departure from thence, he left Apollos, and Zeno the lawyer, behind him there; ſee Titus iii. 13.

He went alſo into Judea, as he had promiſed in his Epiſtle to that nation, and doubtleſs he was in Aſia; ſee 2 Tim. iv. 13---20. And he was as certainly at Coloſſe, as may be gathered from Philemon, v. 22. He continued ſometime at Epheſus in this tour, and at his departure from thence, he left Timothy with a charge to take care of all Aſia; ſee 1 Tim. iii. 14. xiv. 13. and xiii. 15. From Epheſus he departed for Macedonia, where he performed his promiſe to the Philippians, of ſeeing them. And it is thought, that he wrote his firſt Epiſtle to Timothy from Macedonia; for it is plain, that it was written in the latter part of his life. He promiſes to come to him ſoon;

Roman officer Lyſias reſcued him out of their hands, and carried him into the caſtle for further examination, to find out what they laid to his charge, and what he was really guilty of.

Now Paul being ſecured in the caſtle was permitted to make his defence, which you'll find in Acts xxii. 1, &c. But when he had done, the Roman captain, ignorant of the affair, intended to ſcourge him, that he might thereby oblige him to confeſs his fault, which he apprehended could be no ſmall one, which had ſo enraged the multitude; till Paul pleaded the privilege of a Roman citizen, by which he was releaſed from chains and intended puniſhment; ſee Acts xxii. 23,—29.

but leſt he ſhould be prevented, he gives him inſtructions how to behave himſelf in his office by letter; ſee the Introduction to this Epiſtle hereafter.

Paul being now minded to remove out of Macedonia, and to paſs the winter at Nicopolis, a city in Thrace, wrote a letter to Titus to meet him there, and ſent Artemas and Tychicus to ſupply his place by governing the Church in his abſence. See the Introduction to this Epiſtle.

The year following he returned into Aſia, as he had promiſed Timothy. He went to Troas, and lodged there with Carpus, one of his diſciples, where he left ſome books and parchment rolls, I ſuppoſe, the Scriptures wrote on parchment, and rolled up in the manner as the law had been kept in the temple. He left Timothy at Epheſus, who wept ſore at his departure. (See 2 Tim. i. 4. and iv. 13.) From thence he went to Miletum, which was but a ſhort way diſtant, where Trophimus was left behind ſick. And it was, probably, at this time that he ſuffered at Antioch in Piſidia, Iconium and Lyſtra, thoſe other perſecutions which he mentions in general in his Second Epiſtle to Timothy, iii. 11. and thanks God for his deliverance from them.

According to the accounts we read in the ancient fathers, God about this time revealed to Paul that his death was approaching; ſee Auſtin, de pec. l. 1. c. 16. And Athanaſius ſays, that God particularly revealed to him, that he ſhould ſuffer martyrdom at Rome, and that thereupon our Apoſtle, inſtead of endeavouring to avoid it, made what haſte he could to Rome, where, as Dionyſius, Biſhop of Corinth aſſures us, he met with Peter, and joining with him, they both uſed their utmoſt endeavours to inſtruct the Jews in their ſynagogues, and convert the Pagans in all the publick places and aſſemblies: Labouring always to inſtil into the minds of all men the true and pure knowledge of God; the rules of virtue and Chriſtian morality; and to perſwade men from dancing, drunkenneſs, and other ſenſual pleaſures, the concomitants of incontinence, and the prevailing vices both of the Roman Emperor and his ſubjects; ſee Athanaſ. Sug. Euſeb. l. 2. c. 25. Alt. h. 8. Bib. Pat. Auct. 1.

The Emperor Nero, who was an enemy to all virtue, and a promoter of all vice, was very angry when he was informed of this reformation, which Peter and Paul wrought among the inhabitants of Rome. He therefore firſt brands their pious doctrines with the ignominious name of peſtilent innovations, and then made that a plea to ſeize upon thoſe Apoſtles, and to caſt them into priſon. To which we may add the reaſon which Chryſoſtome gives as the immediate cauſe of their falling into Nero's diſpleaſure. It was reported, ſays he, that Paul going to ſee a cup-bearer, and a concubine of Nero's, to convert them to the faith, he brought them to a real ſenſe of their own vileneſs, to a true and ſincere repentance, and to embrace the faith of the Lord Jeſus, which ſo provoked Nero, who was very fond of her, that he cauſed Paul to be immediately apprehended and clapt into priſon; Chryſoſt. in Act. hom. 46.

Alexander the copper-ſmith, who had been excommunicated by the Apoſtle a little bebefore, now wrecked his malice upon the Apoſtles, and did them no ſmall miſchief, which Paul wiſhed the Lord would reward him for; ſee 2 Tim. i. 15, 16, 18.

Phygellus and Hermogenes, diſciples, who had followed him from Aſia, forſook him on this occaſion, fearing to run any hazard with him. But Oneſiphorus, another diſciple of Aſia, who had been very ſerviceable to him at Epheſus, coming to Rome, ſought him out, and miniſtred to him in priſon, not being aſhamed of his chains.

It was in this his laſt confinement, and before he was brought before Nero's tribunal, that he wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, who was at that time in ſome part of Aſia, but not at Epheſus. It is apparent from his own words, that it was written not long before his death or martyrdom; wherefore ſays Chryſoſtome, This Epiſtle was, as it were, his laſt will and teſtament, Hom. 9. See the Introduction to the ſaid Epiſtle. In this Epiſtle he deſires Timothy to come to him, becauſe he had none of his old companions and diſciples with him but Luke. Demas had forſaken him, and was gone to Theſſalonica to ſettle his worldly occaſions; Creſcens was gone to Galatia; Titus to Dalmatia; and he had ſent Tychicus to Epheſus with that Epiſtle, which bears the name of the Epheſians only; concerning which, you will find a more particular account in its Introduction.

Paul having thus ſerved God in the Goſpel of his Son, according to the calling, by which he was called to be an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, came at laſt through many travels, perſecutions and dangers, to death it ſelf, his deſired end in a good old age. Long had he deſired to be diſſolved, and to be with Chriſt, as being a more preferable portion; but he waited God's wiſe appointment, which he embraced as a welcome gueſt on the twenty-ninth of June, in the year of Chriſt 66. juſt at the ſame hour it had been foretold to him. His head was ſtruck off, to the glory of God, at a place called Aquæ Salviæ, in the preſence of Nero, who beheld his execution with pleaſure, ſuppoſing that he had overturned the Church by deſtroying its chief architect, but this was his miſtake; for the Church was not founded upon Paul or Peter, or any of the Apoſtles, but upon the rock Chriſt Jeſus, tho' the blood of thoſe, who die for the faith, are the ſtrongeſt ſement and props of it; ſee Greg. l. 12. ep. 9. Euſeb. l. 2. c. 25.

He was interred in the via oſtienſis, or out of the city-gate that leads to the city Oſtia, where ſince has been built a magnificent Church to his name, deſcribed at large by Prudentius, (de m. 12.)

Thus died, as the Popiſh writer Du Pin confeſſeth, that holy, learned, and incomparable Apoſtle, Paul, at the head city of the world, who himſelf was the head of the Apoſtles, and chief miniſter of the Church; ſee Du Pin in his life at the end. Which is a plain confeſſion, that Peter was neither head of the Apoſtles, nor chief miniſter of the Church. What then becomes of their beloved doctrine of ſupremacy, which the Papiſts derive from the headſhip of Peter? Who was not the head according to this conceſſion.

He committed thoſe Churches which he had planted to the care of his diſciples, Luke, Timothy, Titus, Clemens, Dionyſius, Mark, Thecla, Creſcens, Eraſtus, Andronicus, Amphas, Urban, Tertius, &c. whoſe zeal and knowledge he had long experienced; and they treading in their maſter's footſteps, eſtabliſhed thoſe Churches, of which Paul had made them overſeers, and by their miniſtry made the Goſpel to be known and practiſed in far and many nations.

Thus I have given you a particular hiſtory of Paul's miniſtry, and now according to promiſe, I proceed to give you ſome remarks upon his works.

The Apoſtle Paul left behind him all the following Epiſtles, which bear his name, and contain many excellent inſtructions for the faithful, in what regards both our faith and manners. They have been received as ſuch by the Churches of Chriſt without contradiction, and ſome pious and well-inſtructed fathers have declared, that every word of them ſounded like a clap of thunder to a drouſy ſoul. And Beſides theſe, Clemens of Alexandria quotes ſeveral other diſcourſes under the name of Paul's Epiſtles, ſuch as an Epiſtle to the Laodiceans; a third Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and the like to the Corinthians; a ſecond to the Epheſians; Letters to Seneca; alſo he mentions a book of the Acts of this Apoſtle, a Revelation and a Goſpel, pretended to be all written by Paul himſelf: To theſe we may add his voyage with Thecla, and his ſermons, which have long ago been proved to be the forgeries of evil and deſigning men. Yet, I dare venture to aſſert, that he, in a great meaſure, aſſiſted the Evangeliſt Luke in the penning of his Goſpel, if he was not the author of it all, as Tertullian was of opinion; ſee Tertull. Max. l. 4. c. 5. But this is not our province at preſent to diſpute, neither doth it add more or leſs credit to that Goſpel, which of them was the author. Therefore,

Let us ſee what thoſe remarks are which will be advantageous to the reader, to obſerve before he enters upon the Epiſtles.

Remark I. In the firſt place it muſt be remembred, that as theſe Epiſtles were not written at one time, nor to one people, there were particular occaſions of writing ſome of them, from the condition and ſtate of the reſpective Churches to which they were directed, and by reaſon of ſome diſputes in thoſe times, and of ſome particular caſes in which the new Chriſtians deſired to be reſolved; ſee 1 Cor. i. 11. vii. 1. and viii. 1. And therefore, the firſt means to attain a thorough underſtanding of theſe, or any of theſe Epiſtles, is to obſerve, what appears to be the occaſion or chief deſign of them. And the neglect of this obſervation, has been the cauſe of many and great errors, and the ſeed of dangerous ſchiſm and damnable hereſy. For, to pick out a verſe or two, and to criticiſe on a word or phraſe, and ground a doctrine thereon, without conſidering the main ſcope of the Apoſtle's argument or diſcourſe, and what was the occaſion of his writing it, is juſt as if a man ſhould interpret ancient ſtatutes or records, by two or three words or expreſſions in them, without due regard to the true occaſion or reaſon of their being made, and without any manner of knowledge and inſight into the hiſtory of the age in which they were written, which it muſt be confeſſed, would cauſe many and great miſtakes.

Remark II. As theſe Epiſtles from the occaſion of their writing are diſcovered to have been of immediate uſe to the particular Churches to which they were directed; ſo it muſt be obſerved from their contents, that the Holy Ghoſt, who is the Spirit of Truth, and was ſent into the world to aſſiſt and be with the Church of God to the end of the world, did providentially deſign and dictate the doctrines contained in each of them, in ſuch terms as to be of general uſe for the whole Church at all places and at all times. For here we find many of the fundamental doctrines of Chriſtianity, and the myſteries of our Holy Religion more particularly explained, and enlarged on; ſuch as the reſurrection from the dead, the deſign and uſe of the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the meaning of many dark propheſies concerning Chriſt in the Old Teſtament, the atonement for our ſins by the ſacrifice of the blood of the Son of God, and ſuch like. So that they, together with the Goſpels, in which theſe particulars could not be ſo fully and particularly explained, make up the complete rule of the Chriſtian Faith, the Apoſtles being inſtructed by the Holy Ghoſt to write theſe Epiſtles. Beſides, Theſe Epiſtles are a magazine of Chriſtian duties. For in them we have the virtues of love, charity, juſtice, mercifulneſs, pity, patience, contentedneſs, temperance, devotion, and the publick worſhip of God; as alſo the relative duties between rulers and ſubjects; parents and children; husbands and wives; maſters and ſervants; more fully treated of, and explained. Which has cauſed ſome to ſay, that the Chriſtian life and Spirit of Chriſtianity, is more largely deſcribed in them, to conſiſt in nicely avoiding all ſin and impurity; in living in diſregard of the world, and exerciſing the duties of an Heavenly converſation, having a ſtedfaſt faith in Chriſt's merits, and being ſupported under all difficulties and ſorrows, with the joyful hope of eternal life. In all which, we find new and great occaſions of adoring the wiſdom and goodneſs of God, whoſe providential care of his Church, did thus infuſe the ſpirit of knowledge into the hearts and minds of the Holy Apoſtles, to enlighten their underſtandings in ſuch a manner, that from particular occaſions the Church of Chriſt, ſhould by them be always guided in the way of truth, even unto the end of the world.

Remark III. The reader muſt not expect to find in theſe Epiſtles, a collection of injunctions for the ordering and well-governing of the Church. For as the Churches to which they were written, were already founded and eſtabliſhed, before the Apoſtle writ to them, we cannot expect to meet with any directions as to the ritual or ceremonial part of Chriſtianity in theſe Epiſtles, excepting where the diſpute concerning ſuch things have given occaſion to the Apoſtle to mention ſome particulars. The Apoſtles always ordered the diſcipline and government of the Church, and all the circumſtances of religious worſhip in their own perſons; ſee 1 Cor. xi. 2, 34. Tit. i. 5.

Remark IV. The occaſion of ſome of theſe Epiſtles was the ſpreading about of thoſe dangerous opinions, or thoſe deſtructive principles and practices, of worſhipping Angels, under a notion that they were the creators of the world; of eating things offered to the Heathen idols; of ſacrificing to idols and renouncing the faith of Chriſt to avoid perſecution for his name's ſake; of teaching that good works were a bondage, not agreeing to our Chriſtian liberty and privileges; and of maintaining the lawfulneſs of ſinful pleaſure; ſee Irenæus, l. 1. c. 20. & Not. Grabe, ibid. Confer Cave's St. Paul, ſect. 9. and Whitby on Coloſſ. ii. 23. And,

As theſe hereticks in the Apoſtles time began to plead openly for ſin and debauchery, ſo others, on the contrary, run into the extreme of ſome Jews and Heathen devotees, who had formed themſelves into ſocieties, much reſembling the communities of nuns, friars, monks, &c. denying the lawfulneſs of marriage; teaching the neceſſity of abſtaining from fleſh, &c. and pretending that ſalvation could not be acquired otherwiſe, than by ſome ſupererogatory deeds, or more than ordinary ſeverities and mortifications of the body, and abſtinence from things lawful to be uſed with thankſgiving. And foraſmuch as theſe hereticks contended, that their practices were neceſſary to ſalvation thro' Chriſt, the Apoſtles in many of their diſcourſes had an eye to theſe principles and practices. For Coloſſians ii. 18. is written againſt Angel-worſhip, the 1 Cor. viii. and 2 Cor. vi. 16, &c. againſt idols and their offerings, Heb. x. 23. exhorts the diſciples to hold faſt the faith, and not to draw back for fear, Rom. xiii. 12, &c. Philip. iii. 17, &c. Eph. v. 3---6. 2 Pet. ii. condemn the debauches and vices of thoſe hereticks, as does Col. ii. 20, 21. their pretenſions to extraordinary mortification and abſtinence.

Remark V. Let it be obſerved, that Paul in many of his Epiſtles lays it down as a fundamental principle, that our reconciliation with God proceeds altogether from his free grace and favour, in offering a new covenant unto mankind in Chriſt Jeſus; which principle led him into a diſpute with the Heathen, unbelieving Jews, and Jewdaizing Chriſtians. And therefore, as we read in the firſt part of the Epiſtle to the Romans, and Eph. ii. 1---10. he aſſerts againſt the two former of his antagoniſts, That they are not the works either of the Gentile or the Jew, whether according to the law of nature, or the law of Moſes, which can juſtify, or exempt from the puniſhment due for ſins paſt, and make one acceptable to God. And therefore, that there is a neceſſity for all men, Jews or Gentiles, who would be ſaved, to believe Chriſt to be the Son of God, and the true Meſſiah, and to conform our hearts to keep all the words of that law he has delivered to us from the Father; becauſe thoſe are the terms of his covenant with man for his redemption, and without which no man can be ſaved; for this is life eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom thou haſt ſent.

Remark VI. It has been ſaid in the laſt remark, that Paul in his Epiſtles diſputed againſt a third ſort of adverſaries to the truth of Chriſtianity, theſe were called Jewdaizing Chriſtians, becauſe they would join the ceremonial ordinances of the law of Moſes, together with Faith in Chriſt, as equally neceſſary terms of our ſalvation; (ſee our notes on Acts xxi.) From which opinion it began to be debated between the Gentile and Jewiſh converts, "whether only the belief and practice of the Chriſtian religion, as taught by Chriſt and his Apoſtles were ſufficient, or all that was neceſſary to ſalvation; or elſe whether circumciſion, and other obſervances of the law of Moſes, were abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation?"--- This diſpute raiſed no ſmall ſtir in the Church, at Antioch and Jeruſalem eſpecially; the Apoſtles aſſembled on that occaſion, and our Apoſtle of the Gentiles did there openly, and ſufficiently maintain the cauſe of Chriſtian liberty, and the nullity of the ritual law of Moſes. But it is a hard matter to ſatisfy all parties, when ſome thro' weakneſs, cannot be taught; and others frequently thro' pride, will maintain their own darling opinions againſt the conviction of reaſon. So that by one or other of theſe ways, tho' the Apoſtles decided the diſpute in favour of our Chriſtian liberty, and wrote to the Churches of Antioch, &c. to lay aſide the obſervances of circumciſion and other Moſaical inſtitutes, we find, that the Jewdaizing Chriſtians ſo reſiſted and propagated their doctrine, that it coſt our Apoſtle much pains, and took up a great part of his Epiſtles, eſpecially thoſe to the Romans and Galatians, to ſet this point in a clear light, or to ſhew, that the Chriſtian doctrine teacheth, "that the belief and practice of the Chriſtian religion is perfectly ſufficient to ſalvation, without circumciſion and the other obſervances of the law of Moſes. Not but that the Apoſtles themſelves, complied ſometimes with the Jews in the uſe of ſome Levitical ceremonies, the better to gain upon them: (ſee Acts xvi. 3. and xx. 20, &c. 1 Cor. ix. 20.) But they could not allow, that, after the manifeſtation of Chriſt, the ceremonial law, which was the ſhadow, ſhou'd be impoſed as neceſſary; for that would have imported, that the Meſſiah, who is the ſubſtance, was not yet come. Moreover, the Apoſtle argues from matter of fact, (ſee Gal. iii. 2.) in that they had received the Spirit, or the miraculous power or gifts of the Spirit, not by the works of the law, but by the hearing of faith, i. e. the hearing and embracing the doctrine of faith in Chriſt, to which the law was to give place; ſee Juſtin Martyr's Trypho. From hence, and to criticiſe on a word or phraſe, and ground a doctrine thereon, without conſidering the main ſcope of the Apoſtle's argument or diſcourſe, and what was the occaſion of his writing it, is juſt as if a man ſhould interpret ancient ſtatutes or records, by two or three words or expreſſions in them, without due regard to the true occaſion or reaſon of their being made, and without any manner of knowledge and inſight into the hiſtory of the age in which they were written, which it muſt be confeſſed, would cauſe many and great miſtakes.

Not but that the Apoſtles themſelves, complied ſometimes with the Jews in the uſe of ſome Levitical ceremonies, the better to gain upon them: (ſee Acts xvi. 3. and xx. 20, &c. 1 Cor. ix. 20.) But they could not allow, that, after the manifeſtation of Chriſt, the ceremonial law, which was the ſhadow, ſhou'd be impoſed as neceſſary; for that would have imported, that the Meſſiah, who is the ſubſtance, was not yet come. Moreover, the Apoſtle argues from matter of fact, (ſee Gal. iii. 2.) in that they had received the Spirit, or the miraculous power or gifts of the Spirit, not by the works of the law, but by the hearing of faith, i. e. the hearing and embracing the doctrine of faith in Chriſt, to which the law was to give place; ſee Juſtin Martyr's Trypho. From hence, We may learn the Apoſtle's meaning, when he ſays, that we are juſtified by faith, not by works, or without the deeds of the law, (as we read in many places, but more eſpecially in Rom. iii. 38. and Gal. ii. 16.) which can never be underſtood, that good works are unneceſſary for Chriſtians to ſalvation; for Chriſt himſelf on the mount, and at other times taught his diſciples, that it is in vain to hope for acceptance, without doing the will of our Heavenly Father: Therefore, when the Apoſtle oppoſeth works to faith; by works he ſometimes means the merit of obedience, by vertue of any covenant of works, which neither Jew nor Gentile can boaſt of, foraſmuch as they are all ſinners, and conſequently not able to do any good, but through the gift and grace of God. But by works the Apoſtle moſt commonly intends to deſcribe the ceremonial laws and ordinances recorded in the books of Exodus and Leviticus; which the Jews ſo much depended upon and eſteemed. Wherefore,

It ſhould be always carefully obſerved, that thoſe works, which Paul excludes from juſtification, are by him ſtiled either ſimply works, or elſe works of the law; but never good works, of which he ſays on the contrary, we are created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them, Eph. ii. 9, 10. And

When the Apoſtle ſaith, that faith juſtifieth, he does not mean a bare believing the truth of Chriſtianity without an holy life; but thus: That we ought not to pretend to juſtification by vertue of any covenant of works, and the merit of them, nor depend on the law of Moſes, after the manner of the Jews; but if we believe in Chriſt, and take him for our Lord, by living according to the Goſpel, this will juſtify us, or make us accepted with God for eternal ſalvation; for as the Apoſtle tells the Galatians, In Jeſus Chriſt, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but faith, which worketh by love, Gal. v. 6. which love is demonſtrated by keeping the commandments of God, 1 John i. So that

From the premiſes it will be eaſy to reconcile that ſeeming contradiction of Paul, who ſays, that we are juſtified by faith without the deeds of the law; and of James, who declares that our faith without works is dead, James ii. 14. becauſe Paul in this place diſputes againſt heathens, unbelieving Jews, and Jewdaizing Chriſtians; and therefore, as hath been ſhewn, means that we muſt believe in Chriſt, and acknowledge him to be our Lord by living as he hath taught us, without the pretence of the merit of works, and eſpecially the works of the Jewiſh ceremonial law. And James in his place diſputes againſt another ſort of hereticks, ſuch, who in his time denied the neceſſity of good works, as if a bare belief in Chriſt would have ſaved them: And conſequently James means thoſe works enjoined by Chriſt and his Apoſtles in the Goſpel, as the condition of the Chriſtian covenant on our part, without which our faith is dead, and prevails nothing. In which light both the propoſitions are true, faith without works juſtifieth us; and faith without works will not juſtify us. See theſe explained more at large in their proper texts. But,

As concerning works; this term is variouſly uſed in the Scriptures. Faith without works juſtifieth us, ſays Paul; that is, Chriſtianity without pretence of merit, and without circumciſion and the other Moſaical ordinances: And faith without works will not juſtify us, ſays James, that is, not without the works of an holy life and religious converſation, according to the Goſpel of Chriſt, which Paul earneſtly preſſes upon the Roman converts, Rom. xii. Moreover, it is to be obſerved, that even the works under the Goſpel mentioned in James ii. 24. do not juſtify us, by procuring pardon of ſins, and making us accepted with God, as being any ways meritorious in themſelves; but as being the terms of the new covenant in Chriſt Jeſus, and the condition upon which we are made partakers of the merits of Chriſt.

Remark VII. Another occaſion of many paſſages in the Epiſtles, ſuch as the compariſon of the Church of God to an olive tree with branches broken off, and others grafted into the old ſtock, Rom. xi. 17, &c. was a diſpute in thoſe times about the Gentiles having an intereſt in the Meſſiah, and being admitted members of the Church of God; ſee Rom. ix. 10, 11. Gal. iii. Eph. iii. 6, 9, 11.

Remark VIII. As we have remarked before in the notes on the Goſpels, that in thoſe books the expreſſion of Chriſt's coming, &c. ſignifies his coming to judgment on the Jews; ſo now I put you in mind, that the like phraſes in the Epiſtles are often to be underſtood to have relation to the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation and people, whereby the firſt Chriſtians, being generally perſecuted by the unbelieving Jews, might be exhorted to meekneſs and patience for the preſent, in expectation that God in a ſhort time would avenge them of their enemies, and diſable their perſecutors from doing them any more miſchief; ſee Philip. iv. 5. Heb. x. 25, 37; ſee alſo James v. 8, 9. and 1 Pet. iv. 7. But when you read theſe texts, The day of the Lord, and the day of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt in the Epiſtles (ſee 1 Cor. i. 8. 2 Cor. i. 14. Phil. i. 6. 1 Theſſ. v. 2.) they generally direct us to underſtand thereby the laſt day of judgment.

Remark IX. When you meet with the word propheſy in the Epiſtles, it moſt commonly ſignifies to declare the will of God, and expound the myſteries of the Scriptures by the immediate aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, 1 Cor. xiv. 3. and ſometimes to praiſe God with inſpired hymns or Pſalms. See Luke i. 67.

Remark X. It is nicely to be obſerved, that Paul often alludes to the cuſtoms of his nation, and of others alſo to whom he wrote his Epiſtles. So when we read, that we are buried with Chriſt by baptiſm, wherein alſo we are riſen with him, Col. ii. 12. Note, that the Apoſtle alludes to the cuſtom of the Jews, and thoſe Chriſtians that inhabited hot countries, who generally plunged or dipped the perſon to be baptized under water, and then raiſed him out of it again. In like manner when he writes to the Epheſians, to put off concerning the former converſation the old man,---and to put on the new man, Eph. iv. 22. the Apoſtle alludes to the cuſtom of thoſe who were baptized, that as they put off their garments to receive baptiſm, they ſhould at the ſame time renounce and quit the old habits of ſin, and when after baptiſm they put on their garments again, they ſhould reſolve to enter and continue in a new courſe of holineſs. And,

As the Iſthmian races were much in vogue at Corinth, at the time Paul wrote to the Corinthians, therefore he illuſtrates our Chriſtian converſation and means to obtain Heaven by comparing it to the running of a race, and winning a prize; ſee 1 Cor. ix. 24, &c. I need ſay nothing of that alluſion which he calls an allegory; for he has explained himſelf very fully upon that head in 1 Cor. v. 7, 8. and x. 1,---5. and more particularly in Gal. iv. 24.

Remark XI. As at the time in which the Goſpel was preached at firſt, it was a token of mutual love and charity among the people to kiſs each other; ſee Luke vii. 45. So the Apoſtles enjoined the like practice among their diſciples, to be obſerved at the end of their public worſhip; ſee Rom. xvi. 16. 1 Cor. xvi. 20. 1 Pet. v. 14. and this practice continued ſome time in the Chriſtian Church, the clergy ſaluted their biſhop, the men each other of their ſex, and the women theirs; whereby the whole aſſembly teſtified their good will, and that they were in charity with each other; ſee Juſt. Martyr. Apol. i. ſect. 85. edit. Grabe, compared with conſtitution. Apoſt. l. 8. c. 11. and Grotius in Rom. xvi. 16.

Remark XII. The phraſe in the latter times, and in the laſt days, in the Epiſtles, plainly refers to the time of the Goſpel, chiefly to Chriſt's firſt appearance, or the beginning of Chriſtianity; for, firſt, the ſame phraſe in the Old Teſtament, is underſtood by the ancient Jews, to import the days of the Meſſiah's coming, and to be of the ſame ſignification with the word afterward, even as Joel ſaid, It ſhall come to paſs afterward, that I will pour out my ſpirit upon all fleſh, &c. for ſo Peter expreſly interprets this text, ſaying, This is that which was ſpoken by the Prophet Joel, and it ſhall come to paſs in the laſt days, ſaith God, I will pour out my ſpirit upon all fleſh, &c. Acts ii. 16, 17. which both aſſures us, that the afterwards in Joel, is the ſame with the time called the laſt days in the Acts; and alſo infallibly directs us to the time when Chriſt's kingdom or the Chriſtian Church was erected by the Meſſiah i. e. in the laſt days. Accordingly Paul having mentioned ſome things, which the Spirit ſpeaketh expreſly, or plainly, were to come to paſs in the latter times, bids Timothy put the brethren, then living, in remembrance of them, which therefore muſt be at the time when he wrote; ſee 1 Tim. iv. 1, 6. See alſo Heb. i. 1, 2. James v. 3. Yet,

It muſt not be forgot, that, although this expreſſion, the laſt days, imports the time of the Meſſiah, we are ſometimes thereby to underſtand, with reſpect to the diſpenſation of Moſes, all the time from the firſt manifeſtation of Chriſt to the laſt day of univerſal judgment. And thus all thoſe prophecies, which promiſe ſuch abundance of peace and happineſs, in the days of the Meſſiah, and are not yet viſibly accompliſhed, are true, and may be expected; becauſe it will be ſufficient, if they are made good in any part of the days of the Meſſiah, though God's wiſdom ſhall not think proper to ſatisfy our deſires till towards the end thereof.

Remark XIII. I ſhall now conclude theſe remarks with this, That whereas many of the Epiſtles are directed to the firſt Chriſtians by the appellation of ſaints (ſee Lightfoot in 1 Cor. vii. 10.) it is to be obſerved, that the Apoſtle does not by any ſuch term intend that we ſhould underſtand, that all thoſe who were ſo called, were inwardly ſanctified and holy: But he only called his diſciples and brethren by that name, in oppoſition to the unconverted Jews and Heathens, and is well explained by that interpretation of Peter, Thoſe who have obtained like precious faith with us, 2 Pet. i. 1. or, all profeſſed Chriſtians. And

The term holy, or ſaints, in this ſenſe ſeems to be borrowed from their former converſation among the Jews, who had been an holy people, ſeparated by God from the reſt of the world, and ſo ſtiled themſelves holy and pure in oppoſition to the Gentiles, whom they called impure.

Thus we have done with the general remarks on the Epiſtles, and what more might be expected here ſhall more properly be remarked in the particular Introduction to each Epiſtle in its proper place.

THE

THE INTRODUCTION TO THE Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE, TO THE ROMANS.

This Epiſtle to the Romans has obtained the firſt place in the order of Paul's Epiſtles, not becauſe it was written before any of the others, nor becauſe the Church of Rome was in thoſe days eſteemed the Mother Church, or the biſhop thereof the ſupreme and head over all the Chriſtian Church, but either becauſe the city of Rome was then the Emporium Mundi, the reſort of all the nations of the known world, and the ſeat of their emperor; or, as I rather ſuppoſe, becauſe of the excellency of the ſubject on which it was wrote, or of the magnificence and ſublimity of thoſe myſteries, which are treated of and explained therein. For this is accounted both the moſt exalted and moſt difficult of all Paul's Epiſtles. Inſomuch that Hierom gives it as his opinion, that it would require many volumes to explain it alone. See Hier. Epiſt. 151. c. 8. And ſome have thought, that the difficulties contained in this Epiſtle, gave Peter an occaſion to ſay, that in ſome of his brother Paul's Epiſtles are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they that are unſtable and unlearned, wreſt---into their own deſtruction, 2 Pet iii. 15, 16. But it muſt alſo be obſerved, that others, with as good reaſon think, that Peter then ſpoke of Paul's Epiſtle to the Hebrews. But be that as it will, I don't ſee any great matter to enter into a debate thereon, from whence can ariſe any matter proper to ediſy or inſtruct my reader. Therefore I proceed to

The occaſion of this Epiſtle. Where I muſt inform you, that there were certain domeſtick diſputes at Rome, which prevailed ſo ſtrongly among the believers, that they made a ſchiſm between the converted Jews and the Gentiles, who had embraced the faith of Chriſt. The Jews were opinionated concerning what they called their birth-right, and the promiſes made to their fathers: Upon which they claimed to themſelves a certain priority, preſidence or preference, before, or above the converted Gentiles in the Chriſtian Church, whom they look'd upon no otherwiſe than foreigners and interlopers, who, out of pure favour, had been admitted into the ſociety of the faithful, and to a participation of the prerogatives of Chriſtianity. Thus ſtood the caſe of the Gentiles with the Jews, converted to the faith of Chriſt. So that the Gentiles on the other hand, exaſperated by theſe reproaches from the Jews, ſtood up for the merit of their own ſages, and philoſophers, the prudence of their legiſlators; the purity of their morality, and their exactneſs in following the dictates and rules of the law of nature: And at the ſame time upbraided the Jews for their infidelity towards God, and breach of his laws. They aggravated their faults and thoſe of their fathers, which had excluded the greateſt part of them from the inheritance of the ſaints, and from the gift of faith; whereas the Gentiles, being found leſs blameable than they in the eye of God, had deſerved to be called to the faith, when they were excluded. And this brings me to ſhew you the deſign of this Epiſtle.

The Apoſtle, willing to put an end to theſe contentions, applies himſelf to reſtrain the preſumption of the two antagoniſts, by ſetting forth the extravagancy of both parties, and ſhewing them the excellency of the Chriſtian Belief, and the neceſſity which mankind lies under of embracing the Goſpel; which is the power of God to ſalvation, both to the Jews and Gentiles.

He takes this method, in the four firſt chapters, having premiſed ſome expreſſions of his affection towards them, and forms of common ſalutation, he ſhews, that the Gentiles were in a loſt condition as to themſelves, or any power in themſelves, to deliver themſelves out of it; for that, whereas the works of God, which are ſeen, declare him to be the true God, who is the maker of all things, they abuſed the light of nature in worſhipping and ſerving the creature more than the Creator, and gave themſelves up to the luſt of all impiety; which brought them all under ſin, and kept them ſhort of the glory of God. As to the Jews, he ſays, that though they were puffed up with, and depended on circumciſion (the ſeal of God's covenant with them) and other obſervances of the law of Moſes; they had broken and tranſgreſſed that law, and ſo could not on the account thereof be righteous or accepted with God; but were alſo inexcuſable in judging and condemning the Gentiles for tranſgreſſing the law of nature, when they themſelves were tranſgreſſors both againſt the natural, and their own Moſaical law. And beſides, continues he, it is not circumciſion, or other ritual obſervances of the law of Moſes, nor the merit of any good works whatever, but the free grace and mercy of God, in entering into a covenant with us in Chriſt Jeſus, which juſtifies, or renders a man ſafe in reſpect of Divine Juſtice, and makes him accepted with God. Then the Apoſtle allows in the ſingle inſtance of Abraham, the father of the faithful, that though the Jews had ſome advantage, in being intruſted with the oracles of God, or his revealed will, which was not vouchſafed to other nations, yet the Gentiles were capable of juſtification, as well as the Jews, by faith, or according to the terms of the Goſpel. For, all the faithful of what nation ſoever they be, are juſtified in that manner as he, their Spiritual Father, was; but Abraham was juſtified or received into favour with God, not by vertue of any covenant of works made with him, like thoſe in the time of Moſes, or for any merit in performing them; but God out of his free grace, made Abraham promiſes of bleſſings, and that before he was circumciſed; being juſtified or accepted with God, becauſe he truſted upon thoſe promiſes. So, in like manner, we are juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus: God having, of his own free goodneſs, offered a new covenant in Chriſt, and if we embrace the Chriſtian Religion, and duly receive the promiſes and precepts of the Goſpel, ſo as to believe and do them, we ſhall have faith in Chriſt, and ſhall be juſtified and made acceptable to God.

Then the Apoſtle anſwers the Jewiſh objection, concerning Abraham's ſeed after the fleſh, and proves that all faithful Chriſtians, tho' they were not Jews by extraction, are notwithſtanding the ſpiritual children of Abraham, by the confeſſion of a true faith, according to God's eternal purpoſe, and partakers of the promiſes made unto Abraham and his ſeed for ever. Thus concludes the fourth chapter.

At the fifth chapter the Apoſtle proceeds to ſhew the benefit of our juſtification in Chriſt, how it brings us peace of conſcience, and reconciles all mankind to the juſtice of God the Father; gives us a joyful hope of glory; and inſpires us with the ſweet influence of the Holy Spirit, working a true ſenſe of the love of God in our hearts: So that as the firſt man Adam was the fountain of ſin and death, the wages thereof, in reſpect to all men; ſo the ſecond Adam, the Lord from Heaven, Chriſt our Saviour, is the fountain of pardon and life for all, both Jews and Gentiles. But then as the Apoſtle obſerves in the next chapter, ſince we are all thus accepted, not for works, but through grace and favour, it is not to be underſtood, that, under pretence of giving opportunity for the more favours, we may ſin the more; for, our very admittance into his grace by baptiſm, ſuppoſes a being dead to all habits of ſin, as Chriſt died for ſin; and leading a new life of virtue, as Chriſt roſe from the dead.

In the ſeventh chapter the Apoſtle purſues the former ſubject, and ſhews, that all perſons, and particularly the Jews, are now in Chriſt, as free from the law, in the manner it was given by Moſes, as much as a wife is freed from ſubjection to an huſband, who is dead; foraſmuch as the law, the oldneſs of the letter, could not enable man to ſubdue ſin, and bring forth acceptable fruit unto God, in ſuch manner as when we are guided by the newneſs of the Spirit, which is the Grace and Spirit of Chriſt under the Goſpel; not, ſays he, that the law in itſelf is to be accounted the cauſe of ſin, but a man's own luſts make him ſin, and deſirous of what the law ſhews to be evil. So,

They who, being through faith the members of Chriſt's Church, live according to the Goſpel, and ſubdue their luſts through the Spirit and Grace of Chriſt, are made the children of God, and heirs of glory, to which ſafety and comfort it was not poſſible for us to arrive by the ſole power of the law. And therefore, all good Chriſtians ought to bear their afflictions patiently, which ſhall work together for their good, and ſhould comfortably hope in God, foraſmuch as it is the purpoſe, or decree of God, to ſave all thoſe, who, being called by the preaching of the Goſpel, ſhould embrace it, and live according thereto, as our Apoſtle expreſſes himſelf to Timothy, ſaying, Who hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus before the world began, 2 Tim. i. 9. and conſequently, God having foreknown, (or approved of them as ſuch, Pſ. i. 6.) hath predeſtinated, or fore-apppointed them to be confirmed, or made like unto his Son here, in patience and holineſs; and hereafter in bliſs and glory, from which nothing can ſeparate them, ſo they truly love God, and expreſs that love, by keeping his commandments, ſee ch. viii.

As for the unbelieving Jews, who ſtubbornly reſiſted the free grace of Chriſt, and reſted in their falſe opinion to be juſtified by the works of the law, the Apoſtle expreſſes himſelf with a great deal of tenderneſs for them, ch. ix. 4, 5. Yet he declares, that God had in a great meaſure rejected them for their ſtubborneſs, and was turned to the Gentiles; who, tho' not the natural, are yet the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, and accounted the children of the promiſe, according to his own free grace and mercy; for, ſays he, tho' Iſhmael was the elder brother, yet the promiſe made to his father Abraham and his ſon, belonged to Iſaac and his poſterity; and again, though Eſau was Iſaac's firſt-born, yet the ſeed of Jacob, who was the younger, inherited the promiſe. So God is not obliged, by reaſon of their privilege of having Abraham to their father, to bind himſelf to the Jews only; but may, if he pleaſes, caſt them off for their unbelief and hardneſs of heart, and receive the Gentiles into covenant with himſelf, when and after what manner he pleaſes.

Neither can it be accounted ſtrange, that God ſhould ſo reject the Jews for the hardneſs of their hearts; becauſe we read, that he had dealt ſo with Pharaoh, king of Egypt, to which dignity God had raiſed him up, and notwithſtanding the plague of boils, prolonged his life, that at laſt the power and glory of God might be the more eminently ſhewn in the Red-ſea, where he was deſtroyed for the hardneſs of his heart. So the Jews had often been pardoned, notwithſtanding their idolatries; but now ſince they hardned themſelves againſt Chriſt the Meſſiah, God had caſt them off, and would ſhew mercy to the Gentiles, according to the Prophecies of Hoſea, and Iſaiah; for, God may diſpenſe his favours as he pleaſes, like as a potter makes, at his pleaſure, one part of the clay ſerve for a veſſel of a nobler uſe, and another part, for a meaner. But,

In the concluſion the Apoſtle declares, (x. 11.) that the whole body of the Jews were not ſo caſt off, but that he prayed for their converſion; and that thoſe who ſhould quit their dependance on the law, and confeſs with their mouth the Lord Jeſus, and believe in him, might be ſaved; of which there was already a remnant, and he hoped there would be in time a greater converſion of them. And that therefore, the Gentiles inſtead of inſulting over the Jews, ſhould remember, that the Jews were the natural branches of the Church of God, but that they themſelves, were only branches grafted on their ſtock. Finally, the Apoſtle ſhews, that God is ready to have mercy on all who believe in Chriſt, both Jews and Gentiles; ſee ch. x, xi.

At the twelfth chapter the Apoſtle begins to inſtruct them in the duties of an holy life, and earneſtly preſſes the obſervance of true Chriſtian piety and behaviour. He exhorts them firſt of all to employ their ſeveral gifts and faculties to the good of the whole Church; to brotherly love; lowly-mindedneſs; peace and gentleneſs towards all men, friends or foes; and to leave vengeance to God. He commands them to be ſubject unto kings and governors; to avoid impurities and debaucheries of all ſorts; not to quarrel with their fellow Chriſtians about trifling ceremonies; but rather to inſtruct them with all meekneſs and love, after the example of Chriſt; that ſo both Jew and Gentile being ſcrupulous of ſcandalizing or judging each other raſhly, they might be filled with all joy and peace in believing in Chriſt, who came to ſave both. But,

As he was particularly commiſſioned to be the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, he expreſſes a greater deſire to ſee them; and having ſent commendations to ſeveral of the Church, by name, and repeated his requeſt, that they would mark and avoid all that ſhould cauſe diviſions among them, he concludes with his bleſſing on them all.

This Epiſtle was written, according to Calmet, in the 58th year of the Vulgar Æra in the city of Corinth, juſt before Paul's departure thence, to carry ſome collections made there for the ſaints at Jeruſalem. He ſent it by the hands of Phebe, a Deaconeſs of the Church of Cenchrea, in the neighbourhood of Corinth. It was written in Greek, by Tertius Paul's Emmanuenſis, and it has always been received among the canonical books of Scripture in the Chriſtian Church.

This Epiſtle, among the others written by Paul, ſuffered much from the Marcionites, who endeavoured to ſuppreſs the whole two laſt chapters. There is indeed ſome likelihood, that the Apoſtle intended to finiſh this Epiſtle at the end of the fifteenth chapter; but finding leiſure, he added the two laſt chapters. Again, at the end of the fifteenth chapter we read this concluſion; now the God of peace be with you all. Amen. Which ſeems to ſhew that the Epiſtle was then finiſhed; and as we find the ſame concluſion thrice in the ſixteenth chapter, (ver. 20, 24, 27.) there is all the reaſon imaginable to think it was compoſed at ſeveral intervals of time.

The method I ſhall obſerve, ſhall be firſt to give you an analytical account, and then the notes on each chapter.

CHAP. I.

1 Paul commendeth his calling to the Romans, 9 and his deſire to come to them. 16 What his Goſpel is, and the righteouſneſs which it ſheweth. 18 God is angry with all manner of ſin. 21 What were the ſins of the Gentiles.

PAUL a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, called to be an apoſtle, ſeparated unto the goſpel of God,

2 (Which he had promiſed afore by his prophets in the holy ſcriptures)

3 Concerning his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, which was made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh;

4 And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the ſpirit of holineſs, by the reſurrection from the dead:

5 By whom we have received grace and apoſtleſhip for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name:

6 Among whom are ye alſo the called of Jeſus Chriſt.

7 To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be ſaints: Grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

8 Firſt, I thank my God through Jeſus Chriſt for you all, that your faith is ſpoken of throughout the whole world.

9 For God is my witneſs, whom I ſerve with my ſpirit in the goſpel of his Son, that without ceaſing I make mention of you always in my prayers;

10 Making requeſt (if by any means now at length I might have a proſperous journey by the will of God) to come unto you.

11 For I long to ſee you, that I may impart unto you ſome ſpiritual gift, to the end you may be eſtabliſhed;

12 That is, that I may be comforted together with you, by the mutual faith both of you and me.

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purpoſed to come unto you (but was let hitherto) that I might have ſome fruit among you alſo, even as among other Gentiles.

14 I am debter both to the Greeks, and to the barbarians, both to the wiſe, and to the unwiſe.

15 So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the goſpel to you that are at Rome alſo.

16 For I am not aſhamed of the goſpel of Chriſt: for it is the power of God unto ſalvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Greek.

17 For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith.

18 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven againſt all ungodlineſs, and unrighteouſneſs of men, who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs.

19 Becauſe that which may be known of God, is manifeſt in them; for God hath ſhewed it unto them.

20 For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; ſo that they are without excuſe:

21 Becauſe that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkned.

22 Profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, they became fools:

23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God, into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beaſts, and creeping things.

24 Wherefore God alſo gave them up to uncleanneſs, through the luſts of their own hearts, to diſhonour their own bodies between themſelves:

25 Who changed the truth of God into a lye, and worſhipped and ſerved the creature more than the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever. Amen.

26 For this cauſe God gave them up unto vile affections: For even their women did change the natural uſe into that which is againſt nature:

27 And likewiſe alſo the men, leaving the natural uſe of the women, burned in their luſt one toward another; men with men working that which is unſeemly, and receiving in themſelves that recompenſe of their error which was meet.

28 And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do thoſe things which are not convenient:

29 Being filled with all unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, covetouſneſs, maliciouſneſs; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whiſperers,

30 Backbiters, haters of God, deſpiteful, proud, boaſters, inventers of evil things, diſobedient to parents,

31 Without underſtanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful:

32 Who knowing the judgment of God (that they which commit ſuch things are worthy of death) not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do them.

This chapter begins with a Preface to the whole Epiſtle, wherein the author is deſcribed by his name, calling, and employment, to preach the Goſpel, ver. 1. which is remarked for its antiquity, ver. 2. and its ſubject-matter, who is Jeſus Chriſt, deſcribed both by his human and Divine Natures, ver. 3, 4. and by his favour to Paul in beſtowing on him the Apoſtleſhip, to bring all nations, ver. 5. but more particularly the Romans, ver. 6. to the obedience of faith; as it more plainly appears from the ſeventh verſe, where we meet with a ſalutation.

At the eighth verſe he enters into the matter of the Epiſtle, inſinuating his great affection to them; as appears by his gratulation or thankſgiving for their eminent faith, ver. 8. By his ſupplication or prayer for them, ver. 9, 10. and by his deſire to ſee them to impart unto them ſome ſpiritual gift, &c. which ſhews the end or reaſon of his deſire, ver. 11. and is further explained in the twelfth verſe.

He declares that he had often deſired to come to them, not for any curioſity or private gain, but as he was in duty bound by his office, ver. 14. to endeavour to have ſome fruit, or to preach the Goſpel effectually among them, had he not been hindred, ver. 13. which being premiſed by way of clearing himſelf of a ſeeming neglect, he aſſures them that he is ready to preach the Goſpel to them, ver. 15. becauſe it is the means of ſalvation, ver. 16. revealing unto them the righteouſneſs of God, ver. 17. which brings him, as it were, inſenſibly into the body of the Epiſtle.

He begins with the doctrinal part, and therein diſputes and diſcourſes accurately about the true cauſe of our juſtification before God, which is faith. (ſee the Introduction.) He proves this, 1ſt, more conciſely by a teſtimony of Scripture, ver. 17. and then more copiouſly, in a negative method, from hence to the end of the 3d ch. and poſitively, in ch. iv.

Firſt, negatively, he declares, that none can be juſtified by works of the law, which he proves with reference both to the Gentiles and Jews, beginning with the Gentiles; who, he proves, cannot be juſtified by works, becauſe they are tranſgreſſors; as appears by the judgments inflicted on them by God for their ſins, particularly for detaining the truth in unrighteouſneſs, ver. 18. For which end he proceeds to prove: I. That they had ſome knowledge of the truth; by the light of nature, and thoſe common apprehenſions of good and evil which God planted in them, ver. 19. and by the creatures, which manifeſt to us thoſe things, which are neceſſary for us to know concerning God, ver. 19, 20. II. That they ſtifled their knowledge, by not improving it to the glory of God, and becoming guilty of ſins of omiſſion, by neglecting to glorify God, and to return him thanks; of ſins of commiſſion, ſuch as vanity, amplified by the effect, which is darkneſs; ver. 21. folly; ver. 22. and idolatry, aggravated by the conſideration of the thing changed, and that into which it was changed; ver. 23. and amplified by the judgment which God had ſent upon them for theſe ſins, ver. 24. Then he repeats their ſin of idolatry, ver. 25. and continues with an amplification of their puniſhment, That as they grew more and more corrupt in the worſhip of God, ſo by God's juſt judgment, they grew more filthy in their converſation; as, ſays he, it appears both in your women, ver. 26. and men; ver. 27. To which is added, a further aggravation of their puniſhment, wherein the ſin, the puniſhment, and the conſequents, are generally propounded; ver. 28. and particularly ſpecified, by enumerating divers foul ſins; ver. 29—31. And then concludes the chapter with an aggravation of the Gentiles ſin, ver. 32.

Ver. 1. Paul.] See his life at the beginning of the Preface to his Epiſtles.

——— The ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt.] The Apoſtle calls himſelf the ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt; either on account of our redemption through Chriſt, who therefore is ſtiled throughout the whole New Teſtament, our Lord; or more particularly, becauſe he ſerved the Lord Jeſus in the miniſtry of his Holy Word; agreeable to that of the ſaid Apoſtle to the Philippians, —— That as a ſon with the father, he hath ſerved with me in the Goſpel, Philip. ii. 22. when he ſpeaks of Timothy.

——— Called to be an Apoſtle.] Thereby ſignifying, that he had not uſurped the office and name of an Apoſtle; but that Chriſt had made him his Apoſtle, by an extraordinary and an immediate vocation, as you may read more particularly in Acts ix. xi. xiii. See alſo, Gal. i. 11, 12.

If we only conſider the etymon of the word Apoſtle, it ſignifies no more than a legate or meſſenger, or any one that is ſent with a commiſſion to execute ſome affair, as John xiii. 16. A ſervant is not greater than his Lord, neither, as it follows, ȣ̓δὲ ἀπόϛολος μείζων τȣ͂ πέμψαντος αὐτόν, he that is ſent, greater than he that ſent him. But if we add to this, the uſe which the Sacred Scriptures puts this word to, we ſhall find it confined to the Apoſtles, or thoſe twelve diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt, whom he ſent to preach the Goſpel to all nations, and to whom he gave full power to eſtabliſh and govern his Church.

——— Separated unto the Goſpel of God.] i. e. Particularly choſen to preach the Goſpel, or choſen by the Holy Ghoſt; who ſaid to the Church at Antioch, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work, whereunto I have called them, Acts xiii. 2. But Ambroſe underſtands by this ſeparated, as if God had predeſtinated Paul to this miniſtry before the foundation of the world; de incarnationis Dom. ſacramento, c. 6; ſee this confirmed by Hierom, in Epiſt. 15. ad Marcellam.

——— The Goſpel.] In the original εὐαγγέλιον, i. e. Good news, or joyful tidings. And ſometimes Evangelium, which is a Latin derivative from the Original Greek, is taken to ſignify the reward, which is given to the perſon, who brings the good and joyful tidings, as we read in the Vulgate, cui oportebat me dare Evangelia, and the LXX at 2 Reg. iv. to which we tranſlate, Who thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings, 2 Sam. iv. 10. But,

In the ſtile of the New Teſtament it is confined to ſignify by way of eminence, that moſt joyful news, that can never be ſufficiently eſteemed, even the good and joyful tidings of the redemption and ſalvation of mankind through Chriſt; in which, at the ſame time, is comprehended the publication of the whole law of Chriſtianity; as we may gather from that expreſſion of our Lord, who, ſending his Apoſtles forth to preach the Goſpel to all creatures, added, Teaching them to obſerve all things, whatſoever I have commanded you, Matt. xxviii. 20. Therefore, we are to underſtand by the Goſpel of God, that good news of man's redemption and ſalvation, which God ſent through Chriſt unto all men, provided they would keep his commandments.

——— Of God.] i. e. The Father, as the following context clearly indicates.

Ver. 2. Which he, &c.] God the Father, to whom alone all the promiſes in the Old Teſtament are aſcribed.

——— The Holy Scriptures.] The Word of God, or the books of the Old Teſtament, here only meant, as the word afore declares. Scripture is derived from Scriptura, a writing; but cuſtom has appropriated this term, κατ' ἐξοχὴν, to the Divine Writings, or, Revealed Will of God.

Ver. 4. And declared.] τȣ͂ ὁρισθέντος, which ſome have rendred predeſtinated, or fore-determined, ſo it is read in the Vulgate, predeſtinatus; but it is not true what Bellarmin declares, that ὁρίζειν, never ſignifies in Scripture to declare; for, amongſt the Greeks, Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, Theodoret and Theophylact, give it this ſignification. On the contrary, we do not find one example to corroborate this aſſertion, in the whole Scripture, where it can be proved, that ὁρίζειν, ſignifies to predeſtinate; for, wherever we read in any tranſlation, the word predeſtinate, the Original Greek is not ὁρίζειν, but προορίζειν. So that the ſenſe of this place is this, "the ſame that was made of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, was alſo declared, and by moſt demonſtrative arguments proved to be the Son of God." For, ὁριζεὶς, is moſt properly rendred demonſtrated, or defined by ſome ſolemn declaration, ſentence or definitive judgment; as David uſed it, "I will declare the decree, the Lord hath ſaid unto me, Thou art my Son," Pſ. ii. 7. See Eſtius, on Rom. i. 4.

——— With power.] i. e. By the power of working miracles.

——— According to the Spirit of holineſs.] i. e. Which the Holy Spirit of God, being ſent forth from the Father and Son upon the faithful, on the day of Pentecoſt, &c. impowered them to work; ſee Heb. ix. 14.

——— By the reſurrection from the dead.] Becauſe, as he had foretold, he by his own power raiſed himſelf up from the dead. If he had not raiſed himſelf up from the dead by his own power, as God, what would have become of his prediction. Deſtroy ye this temple of my body, and in three days I will raiſe it up; John ii. 9. Therefore, as Peter obſerves; 1 Pet. iii. 18. "being put to death in the fleſh," or, in his human nature, "he was quickned in the ſpirit," or, by the power of his Godhead, or Divine Nature quickning himſelf: For, had he been only raiſed by the power of God, and not by his own power, how could his reſurrection have been a declaration that he was the Son of God? When there would have appeared nothing more Divine in Chriſt's reſurrection, than in that of other men. For, we are all to be raiſed by the power of God, as well as he. The difference therefore, is this: Chriſt roſe by a ſelf-quickning principle; others are raiſed by a quickning principle derived from Chriſt, who is on that account, called the reſurrection and the life, John xi. 25. or, the principle of quickning life, by which the dead Saints are raiſed.

Ver. 5. By whom.] Jeſus Chriſt; ſee the notes on ver. 1.

—We, &c.] ἐλάϐομεν, i. e. We have received. Here the Apoſtle either includes the reſt of the Apoſtles with himſelf, who were all called by the Lord Jeſus to the grace and authority of the Apoſtleſhip, as well as himſelf, that he might not ſeem arrogant, and to claim any ſuperiority or ſingularity among the Apoſtles of Chriſt; or it may be looked upon as no more than a courteous form of ſpeech.

——— For obedience to the faith among all nations.] Where faith is uſed metonymically for the doctrine of faith, even as we underſtand it in Acts vi. 7. "And a great company of the prieſts were obedient to the faith," or as it is called in the former part of the ſame verſe, the Word of God. So that the ſenſe of the Apoſtle in this place, that the nations wherever the doctrine of the Goſpel is preached, may believe it to be true. He calls this obedience, becauſe, altho' faith is in the intellect, yet it cannot bring forth fruit without obedience, and an humble ſubmiſſion of the will. Wherefore, the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaking of the function of his Apoſtleſhip, ſays, that he brings into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt, 2 Cor. x. 5.

——— Among all nations.] ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ἔθνεσιν. In all nations, which the Syriac Paraphraſt, with a great ſhew of truth joins with Apoſtleſhip, as if it ſhould have been rendred, we have received through God's grace the Apoſtleſhip in all nations; which interpretation is judiciouſly founded on the commiſſion which Paul received from Chriſt, which did not limit him to one people or nation, but ſent him to preach the Goſpel to all nations.

——— For his name.] This clauſe refers to the Apoſtleſhip which Paul had received; and is to be underſtood to ſignify, "I have received this commiſſion to be executed in the name, and in the ſtead of Chriſt himſelf, whoſe Apoſtle I am," according to that, we are ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as tho' God did beſeech you by us: We pray you in Chriſt's ſtead, 2 Cor. v. 20.

Ver. 6. Among whom.] The Gentile nations.

——— Ye.] The Romans, who lived at Rome; ſee ver. 7.

——— The called of Jeſus Chriſt.] Made partakers of the free grace of God, who hath called all men to a ſtate of ſalvation through Jeſus Chriſt. Where it ſhould be obſerved, that there is a wide difference between the called here, and the called in Matthew, who ſays, many are called but few are choſen, Matt. xx. 16. for Matthew only ſpeaks of that common and external calling, which is neglected by many more than follow its good inſtruction, but the Apoſtle in this, and many other places of his Epiſtles, uſes it to ſignify that calling, which by God's Divine Purpoſe, and fore-appointment, works ſo effectually upon the ſouls of men, as to bring them to the confeſſion of a true faith, to lead a Godly and Chriſtian life, and in the end to everlaſting ſalvation.

Ver. 7.—— Beloved of God.] See the meaning of this expreſſion in the note on ch. xi. 28. —— Beloved for the Father's ſake.

——— Called to be Saints.] How called; ſee the notes on ver. 6. in what ſenſe we are to underſtand them to be Saints; ſee the General Preface to the Epiſtles, amongſt the remarks; ſee alſo, 1 Cor. i. 2. 1 Theſſ. iv. 7.

——— Grace to you, and peace, &c.] The Apoſtle having concluded his General Preface in a ſolemn manner, begins his Epiſtle with a ſincere prayer for the welfare and happineſs of thoſe he writes too; ſee the like form of ſalutation uſed by Peter and Jude, with the addition of the word πληθυνθείη, he multiplied, which is to be underſtood in this of Paul to the Romans.

——— Grace.] Gr. χάρις, Sometimes is found to ſignify no more than favour, as it is in Luke, Thou haſt found favour with God, Luke i. 30. which in the original is, εὗρες χάριν παρα τῷ θεῷ, tho' the word χάρις, which is here tranſlated grace, is there rendred favour, and that very properly; tho' for the moſt part in the ſtile of the New Teſtament, it imports the free gift of God, as faith, hope, charity, forgiveneſs of ſins, perſeverance in good works, &c. which bringeth men unto eternal life.

——— Peace.] Such peace as Chriſt ſaid he gave to his diſciples; Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you, John xiv. 27. which did not conſiſt in temporal enjoyments, but in ſuch things as might conduce to our eternal peace, even a ſolid and undiſturbed tranquility and quiet in God's goodneſs, and full reſignation to his Divine Pleaſure.

——From God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] i. e. As well from Chriſt the author and giver thereof, as from the Father: Eſtius in loc. As for what is objected by the Arians from this text againſt the equality of the Son to the Father, I have already been very copious in my notes on John i. to which I refer my readers.

Ver. 8. Firſt, I thank my God through Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] It is worthy our obſervation, that Paul in almoſt all his Epiſtles ſubjoins immediately to his ſalutation, his thanks for thoſe bleſſings, which God beſtowed on them to whom he writes. From whence we alſo learn after his example, to thank God both for thoſe good things we receive, and for thoſe which others enjoy.

——Throughout the whole world.] Which is ſaid hyperbolically, for the many and diſtant parts of the known world. So that the ſenſe of this verſe is, I thank God for your faith, the report whereof has ſpread over the whole world. And Learn from hence, that faith is the gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt, as Proſper collecteth very judiciouſly from this very text, Coll. c. 36, &c. lib. i. de Vocat. Gent. c. 23.

Ver. 9. For God is my witneſs.] See chap. ix. 1. 1 Theſſ. xi. 5. and James v.

—Whom I ſerve.] With Divine Worſhip, as the verb λατρεύω determines, if we do but compare it with the precept, ſoli deo ſervies, and that of Acts xxvii. 23. ᾧ ϗ λατρεύω.

—With my ſpirit.] In the inward man, ſpiritually by faith, hope, and charity; and not with that external and ritual, pompous ſervice of the Jews; but with ſincerity, readineſs, and chearfulneſs of mind.

—In the Goſpel of his Son.] In the work of the Goſpel, which I publiſh, preach, and propagate without fear.

—Without ceaſing, I, &c.] See 2 Tim. i. 3.

Ver. 10. Making requeſt, &c.] i. e. Among other things, praying to God to ſatisfy my earneſt deſire, by granting me a ſafe and ſpeedy journey to you as ſoon as poſſible.

Ver. 11. For, I long to ſee you.] Or, to be preſent with you.

——That I may impart unto you ſome ſpiritual gift.] Where note, that χάρισμα, which is rendred ſpiritual gift, is uſed when a perſon ſpeaks of thoſe gifts, which are beſtowed for the profit of the perſons to whom they are given, as may be gathered from the 12th chapter of this Epiſtle, and 1 Cor. xii. And here the Apoſtle ſhews you the cauſe of that his earneſt deſire, "That he has no other view than to add ſome new ſpiritual gift or grace by his miniſtry." By which at laſt they might be confirmed in thoſe they had already received, or as it follows in the text, To the end you may be eſtabliſhed.

Ver. 12. That is, that I may be comforted together with you, &c.] The ſenſe is this, "This is my deſire, that I may have comfort and joy together with you from that mutual communication or agreement, which I may obſerve between your faith and mine; ſo that we may thereby be exhorted to good works."

Ver. 13. —— (But was let hitherto.)] Some explain this text by Acts xvi. 7. But I rather think that it may better be underſtood, if we read what he ſays afterwards in chap. xv. 22. where having told the Romans, that he had preached the Goſpel to many nations, he had for that cauſe been very much hindred from coming to them.

——That I might have ſome fruit among you.] That by preaching the Goſpel I might bring you to repentance and the confeſſion of a true faith, which ſhall bring you to eternal life: Of which fruit our Lord has ſpoken before; ſaying to his Apoſtles, I have choſen you, and ordained you, that you ſhould go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit ſhould remain, John xv. 16.

Ver 14. I am a debter.] i. e. He had not as yet executed his whole commiſſion, or fulfilled his Apoſtleſhip to all nations, for that there were many, both Greeks and Barbarians, &c. to whom he had not had time and opportunity to preach the Goſpel.

——Greeks.] As this word is uſed in contradiſtinction to Barbarians, we are to underſtand, that the Apoſtle includes therein the Latins or Romans alſo: Becauſe theſe two nations called other people Barbarians on account of the impoliteneſs of their ſpeech, which was neither ſo pleaſant to the ear, nor ſo univerſal as the Greek and Latin tongues.

——Barbarians.] All people that were of a language different from the Greek and Latin. See the preceding note.

—— Both to the wiſe, and to the unwiſe.] Some will have this clauſe to be an explication of the former, both to the Greeks and Barbarians; but I can't agree thereto: Becauſe we don't find theſe terms of Greeks and wiſe: Or of Barbarians and unwiſe, ſynonymous either in any other part of Scripture, or in profane authors. But by the wiſe, it is plain from other texts, we are to underſtand the philoſophers, who were at that time moſt eſteemed for their knowledge and learning in all the nations. And by the unwiſe, we include the reſt of the people, who were not adorned with human learning. And then the ſenſe will be this; "I am bound as much as in me lies, to preach unto all nations the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, which contains ſuch glad tidings of good things to come, which neither the politeneſs of the Greeks and Romans, nor the wiſdom of their heathen philoſophers were able to attain."

Ver. 15. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Goſpel, &c.] That is, to preach the Goſpel, or of the ſubject which I preach, which is Chriſt crucified. As if he had ſaid, Though it may be accounted a ſhameful and fooliſh thing to preach the crucifixion of Chriſt as joyful tidings, and the greateſt good to mankind; yet I will not be aſhamed thereof; becauſe as it follows,

———It is the power of God unto ſalvation, to every one that believeth, &c.] Whence we ſhould collect, That the ſalvation of man, though it is not conſummate till the joyful day of his appearance in the glory of the Holy Angels; yet it is begun in this life at the time we are juſtified, as we muſt underſtand both this, and what the Apoſtle ſays to the Epheſians, By grace ye are ſaved through faith; ii. 8. and to Titus, Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us, &c. Titus iii. 5. So that

The ſenſe of the text runs thus, "The Goſpel, or the preaching of the Goſpel, or the doctrine of the Goſpel is, by the Divine Influence of the Holy Spirit, able to ſave our ſouls, by infuſing into them righteouſneſs and eternal life: For God has made the Goſpel a means of ſaving thoſe to whom it is preached. Therefore the ſame Apoſtle tells the Corinthians, that it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching, to ſave them that believe, 1 Cor. i. 21. For the preaching of the croſs is to them that periſh, fooliſhneſs; but unto us which are ſaved, it is the power of God, ibid. ver. 18. See alſo 1 Cor. xv. 2.

—To every one that believeth.] With ſuch a faith in Chriſt as ſhall be ready at all times to prove itſelf by good works, or to every one who ſhall practice the doctrine, as well as believe the truth of the Goſpel of Chriſt, otherwiſe this would not be agreeable to the other texts of Scripture, where John ſays, Whoſoever believeth in him ſhall not periſh, but ſhall have everlaſting life, John iii. 16. and he that believeth on me—out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living water, John viii. 38. Of which more fully in our Diſſertation on juſtification.

— To the Jew firſt.] i. e. In order of time, as Chryſoſtome explains it; or principally, becauſe the promiſe of ſalvation through the Meſſiah, was promiſed to the Jews, and not to the Gentiles.

——Greek.] When the Greek is put in oppoſition on contradiſtinction to the Jew, it always ſignifies (not as above, in ver. 14. but) a Gentile, one that was not circumciſed, nor bound by the law of Moſes.

Ver 17.—Therein is the righteouſneſs of God.] We can only find the righteouſneſs of God in his will, which is revealed to us through the Goſpel of Chriſt. Now the righteouſneſs of God is to be conſidered either, as that method of the Divine Will, by which God juſtifies man; for ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaks to the Philippians, not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith, Phil. iii. 9. See Auguſt. de Spiritu, & Litt. c. 9. and 11. Or, that righteouſneſs by which we are accounted juſt before God, as we read of Noah, Zacharias, and Elizabeth, who are recorded to have been found juſt, or righteous before God, that is, complying with their part of the covenant with God.

——— From faith to faith.] This is the only place where this expreſſion is uſed in Scripture: And many interpreters have given it as many interpretations, as their fancies could invent, amongſt which, I approve moſt of that which underſtands a promoting faith, and an increaſing faith; that our faith may increaſe and grow ſtronger by the faith which the preaching of the Goſpel ſhall promote. So that

The ſenſe of the context ſhould be this; "true righteouſneſs by which every one is juſtified before God, is now revealed and openly preached to all men by the miniſtry of the Goſpel, even that righteouſneſs which neither could be obtained by the law, as the Jews preſume, nor by the light of nature, as the Greeks imagine, but by faith; and therefore, it muſt be continually nouriſhed, preſerved, augmented, and perfected by faith;" as the Apoſtle more particularly ſhews by his moſt excellent application of that ſaying of the Prophet Habakkuk, ch. ii. 4. The juſt ſhall live by faith, i. e. ſuch a faith as is deſcribed above, co-operating with good works.

Ver. 18. The wrath of God is revealed from Heaven, &c.] Here note, that the Apoſtle having laid his general propoſition, in which is contained the whole argument of the Epiſtle; namely, "that righteouſneſs is to be ſought for by faith," he now aſſumes another propoſition, from which he proceeds to confirm the former in this manner, by proving that all men are wicked, unrighteous, and ſinners; and therefore ſubject to, or incurring the wrath of God. Now,

The wrath of God may be ſaid properly to be revealed to man by the Goſpel, becauſe in it are declared thoſe puniſhments, which the wicked and the ſinners undergo from the hand of Divine Juſtice. For the wrath of God doth not only conſiſt in the act of being angry, but in threatning his diſpleaſure; for as Hierom notes upon theſe words, "he that is angry does not always execute his wrath, but only threatens," Hier. in Habac. iii.

——— From Heaven.] The ſenſe of this clauſe I underſtand to be, that it is revealed through Jeſus Chriſt in his Goſpel, that God will come and take vengeance on the wicked, having made Chriſt the Judge of all the earth, ſee 2 Theſſ. i. 8.

Ungodlineſs, and unrighteouſneſs.] Theſe two immoralities ſeem to differ in this reſpect: By ungodlineſs, we are to underſtand whatever crime is committed againſt the worſhip and name of God: And by unrighteouſneſs we comprehend all other ſins.

——— Who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs.] Or, who having attained to a true knowledge of God, either ſuppreſs that knowledge, or as it were captivate it within themſelves by the pravity of their own will, which will not ſuffer them to communicate it to others, nor ſhew it forth in their works of piety; but on the contrary, more wilfully continue to pay Divine Honours to the creatures, which they know are only due to the great Creator of all the world.

The Apoſtle in theſe words alludes to the Heathen philoſophers, amongſt whom Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Ariſtotle, Hermes Triſmegiſtus, Seneca, &c. are ſaid to have attained to the knowledge of a one Supreme Being, by their comparing and reaſoning from things created to the neceſſity of a firſt Being, or Creator. Yet there was not one of them ſo honeſt, either to adore that one God, who had given them that ſuperior knowledge, as he ought, or had ſo much courage to preach that worſhip, which from the nature of things compared to the Godhead, was evidently due to him; ſee Euſebius, in præpar. evangel. l. xi. c. 9. and Plato in Timeo, where he abſolutely confeſſes, that he was afraid to preach the worſhip of the true God to the people; for, ſays he, Parentem & opificiem univerſorum neque invenire facile, neque inventum in vulgus promulgare tutum eſt, i. e. it is a hard matter to find out the exiſtence of the Great Parent and Creator of all things, and it is as dangerous to teach the exiſtence of ſuch a Being, when he is found out; ſee alſo what Auſtin ſays of the like fear in Seneca, lib. vi. de Civit. Dei. c. 10. and again of all the Philoſophers, in lib. de vera Relig. c. 5.

Ver. 19. Becauſe that which may be known of God, is manifeſt in (or to) them.] As it he had ſaid, Becauſe, whatever can be known concerning God, by natural light or human reaſon, was clearly and evidently known by them; for though ſome of them had not arrived to the ſuperior knowledge which was in other ſome, yet it is certain, that many of them knew that a one eternal God, who created and governed the whole world, &c. From hence it plainly appears, that it is poſſible to demonſtrate this article of faith, the belief of one God, the Creator of all things: And therefore it follows, for God hath ſhewed it unto them by the light of nature.

Ver. 20. For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead.] The critical note upon this text is founded upon the original κτίσις, which we tranſlate the creation, though that word is almoſt always rendred the creature, or thing created. I grant, that it is of an ambiguous interpretation, and that Auſtin in his city of God, reads this text as we do, a conſtitutione mundi; but we are rather to follow the uſe, the Apoſtle makes of this word in other parts of this Epiſtle, &c. which in the eighth chapter alone he uſes five times, and is as often rendred by us the creature: (ſee ch. viii. 19, 20, 21, 22, 39.) And therefore, as there is no viſible reaſon in the context to alter the conſtruction in this place, we ought to read it thus, "The inviſible things of him from the creature, &c." And then the ſenſe will be more conſpicuous, for we are to underſtand this Scripture to be the Apoſtle's reaſon, why he accuſes the Gentile philoſophers of ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs, in this manner, The inviſible things, or the attributes or properties of God, which cannot be ſeen by corporeal eyes, are underſtood by a right knowledge and application of all the parts of the creation, or of the uſe and beauty of every viſible creature in the world; becauſe they are made known to us in thoſe things, which are made for the ſervice of God and his creatures, or by thoſe works of God, which are ſubject to our ſenſes, even as the cauſe is known by its effect; and the ability and ſkill of the artificer, by the excellence of his work: As do all the works of God in a moſt eminent manner, declare his wiſdom, power, glory, &c. See Pſal. xix. and Wiſd. xiii. See the next note.

——— So that they are without excuſe.] Or, ſo that they may be without excuſe in the Day of Judgment; ſpeaking of the philoſophers who ſhall then be condemned, for not making a good uſe of that talent of ſuperior knowledge, which God had bleſſed them with for the good of themſelves, and their fellow-creatures. And, becauſe, that they through fear did not make their knowledge of God publick, and thereby may be ſaid to have denied God before men; ſo God will deny them, or ſay, that he does not know them in his day, when they ſhall appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, to give an account of their ſtewardſhip, how they have ſerved God, and what uſe they have made of that knowledge they were endued with; for God will require more of them, to whom more was given. Thus,

We have given ſome critical and explanatory remarks on this excellent portion of Scripture, in which lies the conviction of the whole Heathen world, and of all thoſe that are fond to be called Atheiſts, or at leaſt live, as if there were no God in the world. Therefore, I ſhall illuſtrate what has been ſaid with the following obſervations, by way of Diſſertation.

"The frame and conſtitution of the world, its aſtoniſhing magnificence, the various phænomena and kinds of beings; the uniformity obſerved in the production of things; the uſes and ends for which they ſerve, &c. do all ſhew, that there is ſome Almighty Deſigner, an Infinite Wiſdom and Power at the top of all theſe things."—This, I underſtand, was the meaning of the Apoſtle, when he in the words above accuſed the philoſophers of ungodlineſs, for not publiſhing their knowledge of that God, without whom, they knew, ſuch a frame or conſtitution of the world, ſuch a magnificent ſtructure, &c. could not be. And that theſe philoſophers were juſtly blameable is evident. For,

Was it needful at this time to prove to any one the grandneſs of this fabrick of the world; we need only to bid him conſider the ſun ſurrounded with the glory of its inſupportable rays; to demonſtrate its vaſt diſtance, magnitude, and heat; to repreſent to him the chorus of planets, moving periodically by uniform laws, in their ſeveral orbs about that body of fire, affording a regular variety of aſpects; ſome of them guarded by ſecundary planets, and, as it were, emulating the ſtate of the ſun; to remind of thoſe ſurprizing viſits the comets make to theſe lower regions, the large trains or uncommon ſplendor, which attends them; the diſtance they come from, and the curioſity and horror they excite, not only among us, but in the days of our forefathers, in which time Claudian wrote, Nunquam cælo ſpectatum impune cometen. To direct his eye and contemplation, through thoſe azure fields and vaſt regions above his head, up to the fixt ſtars, that radiant, numberleſs hoſt of Heaven; and to make him underſtand how unlikely a thing it is, that they ſhould be placed there only to adorn and beſpangle a canopy over our heads, without any further uſe; to convince him, that they rather, are ſo many other ſuns, with their ſeveral regions, and ſets of planets about them, &c. I ſay, one needs but do this, and explain to him ſuch things as the philoſophers have clearly delivered, and he muſt confeſs, as Pliny did of old, that if the world be not infinite, it is infinite ſimilis, and therefore, a moſt magnificent ſtructure, and the work of an infinite architect. But,

If with the philoſophers, we could take a view of all the particulars contained within that aſtoniſhing compaſs, which we have thus haſtily run over, how would wonders multiply upon us? Every ſcene and part of the world is, as it were made up of other worlds. If we conſider the earth alone, the habitation of us mortals, what ſcope is here for admiration! What variety of mountains, hills, valleys, plains, rivers, ſeas, trees and plants! The many tribes of different animals with which it is ſtocked! The multifarious inventions and works of one of theſe, that is, of us men, &c. And yet when all theſe are ſurveyed, as nicely, as may be, by the help of our unaſſiſted ſenſes, or philoſophical inſtruments, as many new wonders, ſays Plato, may perhaps be diſcovered, as thoſe already obſerved. So that, as before our ſenſes, and our very conception fainted in thoſe vaſt journies, we are obliged to take in conſidering the expanſe of the univerſe, ſo here again they fail us in all our reſearches into the principles and conſtituent parts thereof. Both the beginnings and endings of things; the leaſt as well as the greateſt, all conſpire to baffle us; and which way ever we proſecute our inquiries, we ſtill fall in with freſh ſubjects of amazement, and freſh reaſons to believe, that there are infinitely ſtill more and more behind, that will for ever eſcape our eagereſt purſuits and deepeſt penetration.

This mighty building is not only thus grand, and the appearances thereof ſtupendous, but the manner in which things are affected is commonly unintelligible, and their cauſes too profound for us. We indeed can arrive to the knowledge of many things in nature, and we ſeem to know ſome of their cauſes; but, alas! How few are theſe, compared to the whole ſum? And what are the cauſes we aſſign? They are ſeldom any other, than what we expreſs in general terms whilſt the bottoms of things lie undiſcovered; or, collected from experience; or, ſuch as ſeem diſproportionate, and too little; and are ſo inſufficient and unſatisfactory, that one cannot but be inclined to think, that ſomething immaterial and inviſible muſt be immediately concerned. In ſhort, we know many times that ſuch a thing will have ſuch an effect, or, that perhaps ſuch an effect is produced by ſuch a cauſe, but we cannot arrive to the manner how it is done, nor have any better than a groſs idea of the truth of the hypotheſis. —— It is impoſſible for us to come at the true principles of things, or to ſee into the œconomy of the fineſt part of, and operations of the firſt ſprings. The cauſes that appear to us, are no more than the effects of other cauſes; the veſſels, of which the bodies of plants and animals conſiſt, are made up of other, ſmaller veſſels: And the ſubtleſt parts of matter, which we have any notion of (as animal ſpirits or particles of light) have their parts, and may, for ought we know, be compound bodies. And as to the ſubſtances of all theſe things, and their internal conſtitution, they are hid from our eyes. So our philoſophy dwells in the ſurface of nature. However,

In the next place, we ourſelves muſt witneſs, that there are ſtated methods, or ſo many ſet forms of proceeding, which things punctually and religiouſly obſerve. For, the ſame cauſes, circumſtanced in the ſame manner, have always the ſame ſucceſs: All the ſpecies of animals, among us, are made according to one general idea; the ſame may be ſaid of plants, and minerals; as long as we find no new ones brought forth or ariſen any where, and we ſee the old preſerved and continued by the ancient ways.

In fine, I think it plainly appears in the parts and model of the world, that there is a contrivance, and a reſpect to certain reaſons and ends. It will always pleaſe good men and true ſcholars to obſerve, the poſition of the ſun in the middle of our ſyſtem, for the more convenient diſpenſing of his benign influences to the planets about him; and how the plain of the earth's Æquator interſects that of her Orbit, and makes a proper angle with it, in order to diverſify the year, and create a uſeful variety of ſeaſons. Who can obſerve the vapours to aſcend, eſpecially from the ſea, meet above in clouds, and fall again after condenſation, and not underſtand this to be a kind of diſtillation, in order to clear the water of its groſſer ſalts, and then by rains and dews to ſupply the fountains and rivers with freſh and wholeſome liquor; to nouriſh the vegetables below by fruitful ſhowers, that deſcend in drops as from a watering-pot upon a garden, &c. Who can view the ſtructure of a plant or animal, the indefinite number of their fibres and fine veſſels; the formation of larger veſſels, and the ſeveral members out of them, and the apt diſpoſition of all theſe; the proviſion that is made for the reception and diſtribution of nutriment to them all; the effect this nutriment has in extending the veſſels, bringing the vegetable or animal to its full growth and expanſion, continuing the motion of the ſeveral fluids, repairing the decays of the body, and preſerving life: Who can take notice of the ſeveral faculties of animals, their methods of ſaving and providing for themſelves, or the ways in which they are provided for; the uſes of plants to animals, and of ſome animals to others, particularly to mankind; the care taken that the ſeveral ſpecies ſhould be propagated out of their proper ſeeds (without confuſion), the ſtrong inclinations implanted in animals for that purpoſe, their love of their young, and the like. I ſay, who can do this, and not ſee a deſign, in ſuch regular pieces, ſo nicely wrought and ſo preſerved? How juſt therefore, is this argument of the Apoſtle againſt the ungodlineſs of the ancient philoſophers? But to proceed: If there was but one animal, and in that caſe it could not be doubted but that his eyes were made that he might ſee with them; his ears, that he might hear with them, &c. if it can much leſs be doubted, when the ſame things are repeated in the individuals of all the tribes of animals; if the like obſervations may be made with reſpect to vegetables, and other things; and if all theſe kinds of things, and therefore, much more their particulars, upon and in the earth, waters, air, are inconceivably numerous (as moſt evidently they are) one cannot but be convinced from thence, which is ſo very obvious to every underſtanding, and plainly runs through the nobler parts of the viſible world, that other things, even thoſe that ſeem to be leſs noble, have alſo their proper ends, tho' not ſo well underſtood by our imperfect ſenſes. And,

Now ſince we cannot ſuppoſe the parts of matter to have contrived this wonderful form of a world among themſelves, and then by agreement to have taken their reſpective poſts, and purſued conſtant ends by certain methods and meaſures concerted, (becauſe theſe are acts, of which they are not capable,) there muſt be ſome other Being, whoſe wiſdom and power are equal to ſuch a mighty work, as the ſtructure and preſervation of the world appears to be. There muſt be ſome Almighty mind, who models and adorns it; lays the cauſes of things ſo deep, preſcribes them ſuch uniform and ſteady laws, deſtines and adapts them to certain purpoſes; and makes each part to fit and anſwer to another, even by the confeſſion of the Heathen, who can't dare to ſay, that this can be the work of chance.

That ſuch a beautiful ſcheme, ſuch a juſt and geometrical arrangement of things compoſed of innumerable parts, and placed as the offices and uſes and wants of the ſeveral Beings require, through ſuch an immenſe extent, ſhould be the effect of chance only, is a conceit ſo prodigiouſly abſurd, that certainly no one can eſpouſe it heartily, who underſtands the meaning of the word. —— Chance ſeems to be only a term by which we expreſs our ignorance of the cauſe of any thing. —— For when we ſay any thing comes by chance, we do not mean, that it had no other cauſe; but only, that we do not know the true cauſe, which produced it, or interpoſed in ſuch a manner, as to make that fall out, which was not expected. Nor can I think, that any body has ſuch an idea of chance, as to make it an agent, or, a really exiſting and acting cauſe of any thing, and conſequently much leſs, of all things. Whatever events or effects there are, they muſt proceed from ſome agent or cauſe, which is either free or not free, (i. e. neceſſary). If it be free, it wills what it produces; and therefore, that which is produced, is produced with deſign, not by chance. If it acts neceſſarily, the event muſt neceſſarily be, and therefore, it is not by accident: For, that which is by accident or chance only, might not have been; or, it is an accident only, that it is come to paſs. Therefore, there can be no ſuch cauſe as chance. I could argue againſt the notion of chance being a cauſe, from the indefinite diviſibility of matter; but what has been ſaid ſufficeth to ſhew, that the world is not, and cannot be the child of chance. And therefore, the Apoſtle aſſerted truly, that

The things that are made, declare his Power and Godhead; ask the atheiſt if he can ſee the great variety of nature in all the parts of the creation, and then put it to his choice, whether he does think every thing does always continue without change? Whether they have jumpt into this form by chance? Whether they made one another? Or, in fine, whether each one has made it ſelf? Then remind him of thoſe philoſophical truths; how, "nothing cannot produce nothing;" "matter cannot move," "nothing cannot give more than is in its power to give." "The effect cannot precede its cauſe;" neither, "can the thing made, ſay to its maker, I made thee before I was made:" Yet theſe are the abſurdities they muſt maintain, or elude, who pretend there is no God; and if he ſhould profeſs that all things exiſt by chance; demand, how it happens there is ſuch order and uniformity in all, and every part of the creation? For, if chance had produced a world, we muſt have ſometimes ſeen trees grow with their roots upwards, and bear fruit in the earth: Men's noſes and ears, their eyes and mouths would promiſcuouſly adorn their hands and legs, as well as their heads and faces. So that by reducing atheiſts to thoſe, and many ſuch like abſurdities, we convict him of neceſſity, that every thing muſt have a Maker, and that this Maker was himſelf never made, and has no beginning; but is the Supreme Cauſe of all things and perſons, which we ſignificantly call GOD.

Let us hear what the Scripture ſaith. In the beginning God created the Heaven and the earth; that the Heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy work; becauſe he hath made the earth by his power, he hath eſtabliſhed the world by his wiſdom, and hath ſtretched out the Heaven by his underſtanding. He commanded and they were created. He hath eſtabliſhed them for ever and ever. He covereth the Heavens with clouds. He prepareth rain for the earth. He crowneth the year with his goodneſs. ——— Where it is to be obſerved, that all creatures as well ſpiritual, as corporeal; all from human race to the loweſt inſect; from the cedar of Libanus to the moſs on the wall; from the vaſt globes of the ſun and planets to the ſmalleſt particles of duſt and water, do declare their abſolute dependance upon the firſt Author and Fountain of all Being, the ſelf-exiſtent God, who by his excellent wiſdom made the Heavens and the earth, and gives rains and fruitful ſeaſons for the ſervice of man. Therefore, I ſhall delay no further upon this viſible argument, but only adviſe ſuch as live, as if there was no God to remember the words of holy Job; — xii. 7, 8, 9, 10. Ask, ſays he, the beaſts and they will teach thee, the fowls of the Heaven and they will ſhew thee, ſpeak to the earth and it will tell thee; the fiſhes of the ſea and they ſhall declare unto thee; Who is ignorant of all theſe, but the hand of the Lord has made them all? In whoſe hand is the ſoul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind, &c. With whom alone is immortality, and whoſe works declare his eternal power and Godhead; for continues the ſon of Sirach, By the greatneſs and beauty of the creatures, their Creator is proportionably ſeen; Wiſd. xiii. 5.

Surely this is a convincing evidence of God's eternal power and Godhead, upon the leaſt conſideration of the ſoul that is within us, let the man be never ſuch a worker of iniquity, his conſcience muſt yield to arguments, that might be drawn from thoſe topicks; and acknowledge, that doubtleſs there is a God that judgeth the earth. For,

If we will but look into the ſtructure of our own nature, every man muſt be ſenſible, that he is agitated by a ſoul or ſpirit of an immaterial ſubſtance, eſſentially diſtinct from the body. Ask then, as Job has adviſed, whence did it proceed? Who gave it exiſtence? Has it been from eternity? And upon a ſhort enquiry it will be found, that matter cannot think of itſelf, nor ſenſe and perception produce any kind of matter or motion; and that nothing can give more than is in its power to give. And thence it is natural to conclude, that our ſoul is created by an immaterial, eternal, intelligent Being, becauſe it is of an immaterial, intelligent ſubſtance, to continue for all eternity.

Again: If we view the texture of the body; who but ſuch a Great God, as we worſhip, can be ſuppoſed, (as is hinted before) to have created the eye, to ſee; the tongue, to taſte, and ſpeak; the hand, to hold and lift; the noſe, to ſmell; the lungs, to preſerve reſpiration; the ſtomach, to digeſt; the lacteous veſſels, to receive the chyle, and the heart, to diſtribute the blood into all the parts of the body? Heark to the language of an Heathen; Hermes Triſm. ad fil. Tatium. "If thou wouldſt ſearch after the inviſible Creator of the world by his works, reflect upon the forming man in the womb, and, after a diligent ſcrutiny, thou ſhalt underſtand, that it is the inviſible God that makes the eyes round; the ears and noſtrils hollow; his mouth open; that ſtretcheth out the ſinews, hardneth the bones, ſkinneth the fleſh, and divideth the fingers:" In one of which are ſo many bones, griſtles, ligaments, membranes, muſcles, tendons, nerves, arteries, veins, a cuticle, a nail, marrow, fat, blood, and other nutricious juices; and yet ſo ſolid, determinate in ſize, figure, texture, and ſituation; that, tho' each of them are pre-compoſed of myriads of little fibres, and filaments, imperceptible to a naked eye; one finger will puzzle the moſt fallacious atheiſt, to aſſign any other author of ſuch an extraordinary production, but him, whom we worſhip, the Almighty God: And, if ſo, what could be anſwered to the like ſpeculation, over the whole and every part of the body, whoſe fitneſs, ſymmetry, uſe and ſubſerviency to infinite functions, do manifeſtly vindicate them to be the effect of contrivance, ſkill, and the workmanſhip of a moſt intelligent, beneficent, and Almighty Being.

To what has been ſaid, I could add many more arguments for the Being of a God from other topicks; but, as this was the method obſerved by the Apoſtle, I am ſo much perſwaded of the ſtrength of the premiſes, that whoever oppoſes them to an atheiſt, will never be confounded.

We learn from what has been ſaid, the neceſſity of our belief in one God; for man is certified from a due conſideration of the premiſes, that he is not only our eternal and omnipotent Creator, but is alſo led to a deep ſenſe of his own mortality, and to make within his own breaſt a proper application of that admirable ejaculation of the devout Pſalmiſt; Lord, what is man that thou haſt ſuch reſpect unto him, or the ſon of man that thou ſo regardeſt him. Who merely of thy great goodneſs is of nothing made a rational creature, to partake of thy eternal glory; who ſuffereſt the fallen angels to be reſerved under chains of darkneſs, to be eternally puniſhed, when thou ſhalt come to make inquiſition for ſin, but haſt created man a little lower than angels to crown him with glory and worſhip: And though he falls, has ſhewed him a way to eſcape thy wrath.

Theſe great and eternal bleſſings, which we daily experience, will ſtill prove the neceſſity of our belief in the premiſes; ſhould I enter into the particular gratitude and obedience of the inferior parts of the creation to their Maker, there would be no end of my account. The book is open, and we may read in the whole volume of nature, that every thing obeys the voice of the Lord. He commanded, and the ſtars fought againſt the wicked Siſera; fire and brimſtone deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrha; the ravens fed Elias; the whale vomitted up Jonah; and if we read further, it will be found, that hail, ſnow, and vapour, ſtormy wind, and tempeſt, do fulfill his will. From thence we ought to learn, that the ſame obedience is ſuppoſed to be more eminently in us, as we are endued with the moſt knowledge; for to whom much is given, of the ſame much is required. So, if we ſuffer the inanimate world to outſtrip our obedience to the common Lord and Creator of us all, they will certainly condemn us when the Lord ſhall cry, Hear O Heavens, and give ear O earth, for the Lord hath ſpoken, Iſa. i. 2. It hath repented me that I have made man on the earth, Gen. vi. 6. And it grieveth me at my heart that I have brought up children to rebel againſt me, Iſa. i. 2. So that

By this, we are taught and profeſs, that we are ſervants and vaſſals of God. And then our neceſſity is ſtill greater to enforce our belief. For if God be our abſolute Lord, we muſt have an awful reverence of his Majeſty, and be entirely paſſive to his will; becauſe he has a right to impoſe upon us, whatſoever he ſhall know we are able to perform, with an obligation on us to comply with his commands. And,

If we conſider our ſtation in this world, ſuch a belief, as we now profeſs, is highly neceſſary to ſupport us in our troubles, loſſes, croſſes, and all manner of oppreſſions or afflictions; for hereby we are taught never to murmur, repine or object againſt the actions, or determinations of God, whoſe will is our law, who cannot abuſe his power, nor do any thing unwiſely or unjuſt.

In fine, this explicit belief is neceſſary to inform us, that all the mercies we receive are the free gifts and graces of an Almighty God. For, no man can juſtly prize the bleſſings of Heaven, but he that confeſſeth he is not worthy of them; nor be juſtly thankful, who does not firſt acknowledge, that the beſtower thereof is no ways indebted to him. So that,

The duty this Scripture ſuggeſts is, "that we ſhall give Divine Worſhip to God alone; we ſhall worſhip and ſerve him, becauſe he only is God." "We ſhall fear him only, becauſe he only hath infinite power; "we ſhall truſt only in him, becauſe he only is our rock and ſalvation;" and we ſhall pray to him alone; becauſe, he alone knoweth the hearts of the children of men. Becauſe, it is in his power to make us happy or miſerable, even as we ſerve or diſobey him in our faith and actions.

Ver. 21.——When they knew God.] Had arrived by their philoſophical diſquiſitions to the knowledge of a Supreme Being, the Creator and Preſerver of all things.

——They glorified him not as God.] i. e. They did not give him thoſe Divine Honours due to him, as their Maker and Preſerver, by praiſing his Holy Name.

————Neither were thankful.] By referring thoſe bleſſings which are received in the knowledge and praiſe of God to him alone. And that the philoſophers were unthankful, is demonſtrative from their writings. For which of the philoſophers, who can be proved from their writings and fragments to have been convinced of the exiſtence of a Supreme Being, ever wrote any thing in praiſe of that living God? They abound with hymns and ſongs of praiſe in honour of the ſtocks, ſtones, and heroes, whom they and their people worſhipped, but we can't find one pſalm or hymn compoſed by them in honour of the true God.

——Became vain in their imaginations.] Becauſe they did not purſue the end of that knowledge, which conſiſts in piety, righteouſneſs, and the true worſhip of God. For that is properly called vain, which does not purſue its proper end.

———Their fooliſh heart was darkned.] Or, was involved in many errors being ungodly and unthankful.

Note, that heart in Scripture is of various interpretation. The Hebrews look upon the heart as the ſource of wit, underſtanding love, courage, grief and pleaſure. And therefore, as the writers of the Divine Books, were originally of this nation and language, hence are derived infinite many ways of ſpeaking in the Scriptures: As to find his heart; poſſeſs his heart; incline his heart; and to bind his heart towards the Lord. A good heart; an evil heart; a liberal heart; a heart which does an act of kindneſs freely, voluntarily and with generoſity, &c. To harden ones heart; to lift up ones heart to God; to beſeech him to change our ſtony hearts into hearts of fleſh. To love with all ones heart; to have but one heart and one ſoul with any one. To turn the hearts of the children to the fathers, and the hearts of the father to the children; to cauſe them to be perfectly reconciled, and that they ſhould be of the ſame mind.

By the heart is alſo meant the middle of any thing; as Tyre is ſaid to be in the heart of the ſea; Ezek. xxvii. 4. i. e. the midſt of the ſea. In the heart of the earth; Matt. xii. 40. And Moſes ſpeaking to the Iſraelites, ſays, " And the mountains burnt with fire unto the heart, or midſt of Heaven, i. e. it roſe as high as the clouds.

To want heart, ſometimes denotes to want underſtanding and prudence, as in Hoſea vii. 11. Ephraim alſo is like a ſilly dove without heart. O fools and ſlow of heart, is a phraſe to deſcribe ſenſeleſs men, without underſtanding and inſight; ſee Luke xxiv. 25. Again, we read in Matt. xiii. 15. This peoples heart is waxed groſs, i. e. ſtupified ſo as to be deſtitute of underſtanding, &c.

The heart dilates with joy, contracts with ſadneſs, breaks with ſorrow, grows fat and hardens in proſperity, and ſometimes reſiſts truth, giving out vain imaginations inſtead thereof, as the Apoſtle here declares, and Ezekiel had ſaid before, ch. xiii. 2.

Ver. 22. Profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, they became fools.] i. e. Whereas they boaſted and preſumed of their wiſdom and knowledge above other men, in the ſecret things of nature, on which account men are generally accounted wiſe, they erred very much from the truth, which conſiſts in true piety towards God, and fell into extreme folly and ignorance, by changing the glory of the incorruptible God into an image, made like to corruptible man, &c. as it follows in the next verſe.

Ver. 23. Changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to, &c.] This is an alluſion to that of the Pſalmiſt, They changed their glory into the ſimilitude of an ox that eateth graſs; Pſalm cvi. 20. And as the Prophet alſo had declared of the Jews, My people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit, i. e. an idol; Jer. ii. 11. compared with ver. 27, 28. ibid. In both which places, by the glory, the Hebrew root directs us to underſtand God Almighty; ſee alſo Ezekiel viii. 10.

Ver. 24.———Gave them up to uncleanneſs, &c.] From this text, Auſtin and ſome other divines have noted, that ſome ſins are of that evil nature, as not only to precipitate a man into the danger of hell-fire, but are preparatory puniſhments for the wicked, in whom they are found in this world; lib. 5. contr. Julian. c. 3. et lib. de Nat. & Gratia c. 22. et alibi. And hence it is eaſy to anſwer thoſe who make uſe of this Scripture to ſupport their monſtrous doctrine of God's being the author of ſin; by obſerving that God does not force man to ſin, but only leaves him expoſed thereto either by forſaking him, not protecting him, or not aſſiſting him to eſcape therefrom; or it may be ſaid without any crime in the Deity, that he lays occaſions and means of falling in the ways of thoſe, whom he has diſtinguiſhed by their natural perfections, when they refuſe to obey his commands, or follow that light he has given them; as in the caſe before us. In fine, God gives man up to ſin in ſome ſort, by permitting him willingly to fall into thoſe occaſions of falling. Thus in the caſe of the Jews, who ſlew our Saviour Chriſt; God willingly permitted them, or they could not have done it; ſee Auſtin quæſt. 79. in Exod. And does not that petition in the Lord's Prayer, Lead us not into temptation, teach us the ſame thing, That God has a right without any breach of his Divine Attributes, of Goodneſs, Juſtice, &c. to try man by temptations, tho' ſuch a one has never deſerved ſo many and great trials by his former ſins; but God does not force him to continue in them, or to conſummate the wickedneſs contained therein; on the contrary, he always grants together with the temptation his means to eſcape, provided we lay hold of them: So that God lays before us life and death, and leaves man to make what choice he will, and if he won't endeavour to follow what is good, then God deprives him of his help, and thus he is properly given up to uncleanneſs, or ſin, through the luſts of their own hearts.

—To diſhonour their own bodies between themſelves.] By ſins of uncleanneſs; ſee 1 Cor. vi. 18. and 1 Theſſ. iv. 4.

Ver. 25. Who changed the truth of God into a lye.] Or, who having known the truth of God's eternity, omnipotence, and Deity, choſe to worſhip a dumb idol, and to pay the Divine Honour due to the living God alone, to thoſe ſenſeleſs ſtocks and ſtones. Where note, that it is common in Scripture, to uſe a lye for an idol; ſee alſo what is ſaid in the notes on ver. 23.

———And ſerved the creature more than the Creator.] By which words it ſhould ſeem, that they did worſhip the true God, though in an inferior degree to their idols, but this is a fault in the tranſlation: For here is no compariſon made of their worſhip, as if they adored both, and the creature more than the Creator; becauſe it ſhould have been rendred from the original thus, and ſerved the creature rather than the Creator.

Ver. 26.——Vile affections.] See verſe 24. Note alſo, that ſome commentators obſerve, that the vices hereafter mentioned, in this, and the next verſe, reſpects not ſo much the private vices of the Heathens, as the obſcenities which were publickly tolerated in the feaſts of their gods, Bacchus and Cybales. Though, if we may credit Tertullian, Gregory Nazianzen, amongſt the Chriſtians, and Athanæus an Heathen author, the graveſt and moſt pious of their philoſophers were addicted to lewdneſs, and carnal pleaſures.

——— Receiving in themſelves that recompenſe of their error which was meet.] This confirms my opinion, that ſome ſins are of that nature, as to be accounted the puniſhment of former ſins; ſee the notes on ver. 24.

Ver. 28. And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind.] Or, and whereas they deſpiſed that bleſſing of God, which brought them to a true knowledge of his Deity; and rather ſhewed their ingratitude by a greater ſlight of his Divinity; ſo God in puniſhment of ſo great ingratitude, delivered them to a reprobate mind, i. e. left them to themſelves, in which ſtate they behaved ſo wickedly, that they became a reproach among men; ſee the following verſes, where you have deſcribed the manner how they defiled themſelves, and became hated of all men.

Ver. 32. Who knowing the judgment of God, &c.] The philoſophers, who knew the righteouſneſs of God, ſuffered themſelves to be led away from doing good by their own luſts, not conſidering that God's juſtice would purſue them with death who did ſuch things, and all thoſe that connived and conſented to the like ſins in others, though they ſhould not be guilty of any ſuch tranſgreſſions in themſelves.

CHAP. II.

1 They that ſin, though they condemn it in others, cannot excuſe themſelves, 6 and much leſs eſcape the judgment of God, 9 whether they be Jews or Gentiles. 14 The Gentiles cannot eſcape, 17 nor yet the Jews, 25 whom their circumciſion ſhall not profit, if they keep not the law.

THerefore thou art inexcuſable, O man, whoſoever thou art that judgeſt: for wherein thou judgeſt another, thou condemneſt thy ſelf; for thou that judgeſt, doſt the ſame things.

2 But we are ſure that the judgment of God is according to truth, againſt them which commit ſuch things.

3 And thinkeſt thou this, O man, that judgeſt them which do ſuch things, and doſt the ſame, that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgment of God?

4 Or deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance?

5 But after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up unto thy ſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God;

6 Who will render to every man according to his deeds:

7 To them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality; eternal life:

8 But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs; indignation, and wrath;

9 Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil, of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile.

10 But glory, honour, and peace to every man that worketh good, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile.

11 For there is no reſpect of perſons with God.

12 For as many as have ſinned without law, ſhall alſo periſh without law: and as many as have ſinned in the law, ſhall be judged by the law,

13 (For not the hearers of the law are juſt before God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified.

14 For when the Gentiles which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, theſe having not the law, are a law unto themſelves:

15 Which ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another)

16 In this day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt, according to my goſpel.

17 Behold, thou art called a Jew, and reſteſt in the law, and makeſt thy boaſt of God;

18 And knoweſt his will, and approveſt the things that are more excellent, being inſtructed out of the law,

19 And art confident that thou thy ſelf art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkneſs,

20 An inſtructer of the fooliſh, a teacher of babes, which haſt the form of knowledge and of the truth in the law.

21 Thou therefore which teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thy ſelf? thou that preacheſt a man ſhould not ſteal, doſt thou ſteal?

22 Thou that ſayeſt a man ſhould not commit adultery, doſt thou commit adultery? thou that abhorreſt idols, doſt thou commit ſacriledge?

23 Thou that makeſt thy boaſt of the law, through breaking the law diſhonoureſt thou God?

24 For the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is written.

25 For circumciſion verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumciſion is made uncircumciſion.

26 Therefore, if the uncircumciſion keep the righteouſneſs of the law, ſhall not his uncircumciſion be counted for circumciſion?

27 And ſhall not uncircumciſion which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee who by the letter and circumciſion doſt tranſgreſs the law?

28 For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh:

29 But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumciſion is that of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men but of God.

In this chapter Paul proceeds in his negative proof of juſtification by faith, viz. that none can be juſtified by the works of the law, becauſe they are tranſgreſſors of it: This he proves concerning the heathen in reference to the light of nature, which they did notoriouſly ſin againſt, as he has made out in the 1ſt chapter. But becauſe ſome of them were more civil and unblameable, and did declaim againſt ſuch vicious courſes; therefore in this chapter he further proves, 1 Againſt theſe alſo, and likewiſe againſt the Jews (for both are here aimed at, as appears by ver. 9. and 10.) who condemned the Gentiles for their idolatry and other ſins, which they themſelves were ſuppoſed to be free from; that they are all liable to death and condemnation; and therefore can't excuſe and acquit themſelves from all ſin, nor conſequently pretend to juſtification by works. Here then we have.

A proof of their inexcuſableneſs, or that they can't acquit themſelves from all ſin; becauſe when they condemn others for thoſe ſins or ſuch like, whereof they themſelves are guilty, they condemn themſelves interpretatively, ver. 1. as the judgment of God paſſed upon ſuch offenders bare witneſs, which is always according to truth, ver. 2. Then

The Apoſtle enquires into the thoughts of a ſecure ſinner concerning his impurity, ver. 3. inſinuates the danger of the bad uſe, which ſinners make of God's goodneſs calling them to repentance, ver. 4. and then declares that the iſſue of ſuch a bad courſe muſt be the heavier vengeance; all which he amplifies by the cauſe; hardneſs by the time; day of wrath. Which he deſcribes by the reward that ſhall be allotted then to every one; and by the rule, according to which God will proceed.

1 Generally propounded in ver. 6. and, 2. Particularly ſpecified, concerning the righteous, both in regard to the qualification of the perſon, and the reward of his work, ver. 7. and concerning the wicked; where both their ſin and puniſhment are ſpecified, ver. 8, 9. Then he ſubjoins a repetition of the reward of the righteous, ver. 10.

He ſhews that God's impartiality is the ground or reaſon hereof, ver. 11. and man's diſobedience, who by acting contrary to knowledge, falls into tranſgreſſions, which brings him juſtly into condemnation, ver. 12. and herein he anſwers a two-fold tacit objection againſt what he had delivered, ibid. as 1 Obj. of the Jews, we are hearers of the law, and therefore ought not to be judged by it.

Anſw. To this the Apoſtle anſwers by both a negative and poſitive deſcription of thoſe perſons, who ſhall be juſtified and acquitted at the day of judgment, that none may groundleſsly flatter themſelves in this caſe, ver. 13.

2 Obj. of the Gentiles. We had not the law; and therefore ought not to be condemned for the tranſgreſſion of it.

Anſwer. To this the Apoſtle anſwers, that they have the law of nature (though not the written law) for their rule; as appears by their deeds, ver. 14. and by the teſtimony of their own conſciences, accuſing in breaches, and excuſing in obſervances of this law, ver. 15. Then

He cloſes with an account of the time when this ſentence or puniſhment ſhall take place, ver. 16.

II. He proves more particularly and cloſely concerning the Jews, That notwithſtanding all their pretences and privileges, they were tranſgreſſors of the law, and ſo could not be juſtified by works any more than the Gentiles. Where we find,

1 A conceſſion or enumeration of their privileges both outward, ver. 17. and inward, ver. 18,—20.

2 A correction, or vehement chiding in many cutting, convincing queſtions, to bring them to a thorough conviction of their own unworthineſs, ver. 21,—23. proved from a teſtimony of ſcripture, ver. 24.

3 He ſhews that the benefit which follows thoſe who keep the law excels circumciſion and all other external privileges; wherein he grants the benefit of circumciſion in conjunction with obedience, and ſhews the unprofitableneſs thereof without obedience, ver. 25. and then proceeds to ſhew the benefit of obedience without circumciſion, in point of acceptation with God, ver. 26. as an evidence to convince tranſgreſſing Jews, ver. 27. And ſo concludes with a diſtinction of a two-fold Jew, and two-fold circumciſion, fully clearing the point in hand, by ſhewing what kind of circumciſion and Jews are acceptable to God, ver. 28, 29.

Ver. 1. Therefore thou art inexcuſable, O man, whoſoever thou art that judgeſt.] The Apoſtle in the foregoing chapter expoſed the vices of the Gentiles, but now he paſſes by way of innuendo concealing their name, to upbraid the Jews for blaming the Gentiles, or for excluding them from the way of ſalvation, for thoſe crimes and vices, which they themſelves were not free from. It was the Apoſtle's intention to convince both Jew and Gentile that they were both born in ſin the children of wrath; and that they were both ſubject to the like infirmities of nature, and had both abuſed that bleſſing and knowledge, which God had vouchſafed to them in different ways of manifeſtation. So that this agrees with the preceding context in this manner: Although the Gentiles were guilty of ſo many and great ſins; yet, thou, O Jew! who deſpiſes and condemns them by your law, art inexcuſable; for thou canſt not plead that thy ſins are the effect of ignorance.

——Doſt the ſame things.] In thought, word, or deed, and perhaps would be worſe than the heathen, was it not for fear of that puniſhment, which the law pronounces againſt the tranſgreſſors thereof, ver. 2. But we] Jews, ——Are ſure that the judgment of God is according to truth againſt them which commit ſuch things.] Becauſe they had the oracles of God committed to their charge, wherein their whole duty, and the perfections of God were revealed unto them.

Ver. 3 —Judgeſt.] i. e. condemneſt.

Ver. 4. —— Not knowing that the goodneſs of God, &c.] Manifeſted to the Jewiſh nation in his law, doctrine, prophets, and by promiſing, and now ſending the Meſſiah to ſave them and all the world, who ſhould repent at his preaching.

Ver. 5.—The day of wrath.] The laſt and great day of judgment, when every man ſhall be judged according to his works, called the day of wrath, becauſe then it will be too late to think on repentance; God's mercy will be no more to be obtained, for he then cometh to execute juſtice upon every man, and vengeance upon thoſe that have refuſed his mercy in this life.

Ver. 6. Who will render to every man according to his deeds.] See Job xxxiv. 11. Pſal. lxii. 12. Jer. xvii. 10. and xxxii. 19. Matt. xvi. 27. Rev. xxii. 12.

——According to his deeds.] In the manner deſcribed in the next verſes following.

Ver. 9.——Of the Jew firſt, and alſo of the Gentile.] i. e. Of both Jew and Gentile; or of all mankind: Yet firſt, and eſpecially of the Jews, becauſe as God had granted to them greater prerogatives and bleſſings, than to other people, he would alſo puniſh them the more for their diſobedience.

Ver. 11. There is no reſpect of perſons with God.] See Deut. x. 17. 2 Chron. xix. 7. Job xxxiv. 19. Acts x. 34. Gal. ii. 6. Eph. vi. 9. Col. iii. 25. 1 Pet. i. 17.

Ver. 14.——Which have not the law.] Of Moſes, or the revealed will of God.

—Do by nature.] Or rather by the light of nature.

Ver. 16.——According to my Goſpel.] i. e. That doctrine which I am commiſſioned by Chriſt to preach to the Gentiles.

Ver. 17. Behold thou art called a Jew.] Now the Apoſtle ſpeaks openly by way of reprehenſion, to the Jews. If, ſays he, thou art proud of the name of a Jew, and thinkeſt that thou art thereby preferred to thy fellow creatures. Where note, That at that time it was as honourable a name to be called a Jew, as we account it now to be called Chriſtians. Yet

The name of Jews is no ancienter than the Babyloniſh captivity. For, the Iſraelites who returned from the captivity of Babylon took their name from the tribe of Judah, becauſe it was not only the moſt powerful, but almoſt the only one which made any figure, and appeared with any ſplendor. So that from that time, when we read the name of Jews in the Scripture, or Joſephus, &c. we are to underſtand the whole nation of the children of Abraham.

——Thou reſteſt in the law.] Acknowledging the great bleſſing of God therein to thy nation; thou often reads and hears it read.

——And makeſt thy boaſt of God.] Becauſe he had choſen thee from among all nations, to worſhip him according to his law revealed to Moſes.

Ver. 18. And knoweſt his will.] And art taught in his law what to do, and what to avoid and forbear.

Ver. 19. And art confident that thou thy ſelf art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkneſs.] i. e. Thou aſſumes to thy ſelf ſuch a knowledge of the law, as to offer thy ſelf to be a guide to thoſe that err from, and are ignorant of the truth, as if thou wert able to guide them into the light of ſound doctrine; ſee 2 Cor. iii. 4, &c.

Ver. 20. The form of knowledge, &c.] Or the rule or means of attaining knowledge.

Ver. 21.] Thou therefore, &c.] See Pſal. l. 16.

Ver. 24.——Through you.] By your fault.

——As it is written.] In Ezek. xxxvi. 20, 23. ſee alſo 2 Sam. xii. 14. Iſa. lii. 5.

Ver. 28. Outwardly.] Made one in name by circumciſion, and obſerving the ceremonial part of Moſes law.

Ver. 29.——Inwardly.] Who in his heart obeys the commands of God purely for the love of God. And does not comply with outward ceremonies, only to be ſeen of and to pleaſe men; but with the law of God for the ſalvation of their ſouls.

CHAP. III.

1 The Jews prerogative: 3 Which they have not loſt: 9 Howbeit the law convinceth them alſo of ſin: 20 Therefore no fleſh is juſtified by the law, 28 but all, without difference, by faith only: 31 And yet the law is not aboliſhed.

WHAT advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumciſion?

2 Much every way: chiefly, becauſe that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

3 For what if ſome did not believe? ſhall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

4 God forbid: yea, let God be true, but every man a lyar; as it is written, That thou mightſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mightſt overcome when thou art judged.

5 But if our unrighteouſneſs commend the righteouſneſs of God, what ſhall we ſay? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I ſpeak as a man)

6 God forbid: for then how ſhall God judge the world?

7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lye unto his glory; why yet am I alſo judged as a ſinner?

8 And not rather (as we be ſlandrouſly reported, and as ſome affirm that we ſay) Let us do evil, that good may come? whoſe damnation is juſt.

9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wiſe: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under ſin;

10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no not one:

11 There is none that underſtandeth, there is none that ſeeketh after God.

12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, there is none that doeth good, no not one.

13 Their throat is an open ſepulchre; with their tongues they have uſed deceit; the poiſon of aſps is under their lips:

14 Whoſe mouth is full of curſing and bitterneſs.

15 Their feet are ſwift to ſhed blood.

16 Deſtruction and miſery are in their ways:

17 And the way of peace have they not known.

18 There is no fear of God before their eyes.

19 Now we know that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty before God.

20 Therefore by the deeds of the law there ſhall no fleſh be juſtified in his ſight: for by the law is the knowledge of ſin.

21 But now the righteouſneſs of God without the law is manifeſted, being witneſſed by the law and the prophets;

22 Even the righteouſneſs of God which is by faith of Jeſus Chriſt unto all, and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference:

23 For all have ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God;

24 Being juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt:

25 Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs, for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God;

26 To declare, I ſay, at this time his righteouſneſs: that he might be juſt, and the juſtifier of him which believeth in Jeſus.

27 Where is boaſting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith.

28 Therefore we conclude, that a man is juſtified by faith without the deeds of the law.

29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not alſo of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles alſo:

30 Seeing it is one God, which ſhall juſtify the circumciſion by faith, and uncircumciſion through faith.

31 Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we eſtabliſh the law.

The Apoſtle having ſhewn in the latter part of the former chapter, that the external privileges of the Jews were not available for juſtification; now in this chapter,

I. He ſhews what they could do; and what benefit they had by them, for which purpoſe he puts a two-fold queſtion; ver. 1. And then gives firſt a general anſwer thereto, and after that replies more particularly; inſtancing in one of the chief privileges they enjoyed by being Jews, viz. the Scriptures and means of ſalvation; ver. 2. This he proves to be a great privilege, though not effectual for the ſalvation of all; becauſe, though ſome by their unbelief rendred the promiſes uneffectual to themſelves: Yet to others they ſhould become effectual, and ſo God's faithfulneſs remain unſhaken; ver. 3. This he illuſtrates by its oppoſite man's faithfulneſs, and proves it by the teſtimony of David; ver. 4.

II. He anſwers ſome objections againſt what he had delivered. As in ver. 5. which he amplifies by his anſwer, wherein you will find a caution, ver. 5. a deteſtation, and a confutation, ver. 6. Then he propounds another cavil; ver. 7, 8.——and anſwers it by a denunciation of judgment againſt thoſe that maintain it, ver.—8. After this follows a third allegation of the Jews, founded upon the Apoſtle's conceſſion; (ver. 2.) if we have the advantage of the Gentiles, then ſure we are in a better condition as to juſtification by works. This is propounded, and anſwered, That though the Jews have the advantage of the Gentiles in ſome reſpect; yet not in this, becauſe both Jews and Gentiles were guilty of ſin; ver. 9. Which he continues to prove by diverſe teſtimonies of their own Prophets concerning their univerſal corruption. Theſe are recited in ver. 10—18. and applied to the Jews, together with the end of theſe and ſuch like ſpeeches; ver. 19. Then

III. He, by way of inference from the premiſes, lays down his principal point, or poſition concerning the way of juſtification.

1. Negatively; that it is not by the deeds of the law; which he confirms by a new reaſon, taken from the contrary uſe and effect of the law, to diſcover ſin, and not to juſtify; ver. 20.

2. Poſitively; the righteouſneſs of God by faith which he deſcribes (1) by the negative means; not the law. (2) By the concurrent teſtimony of the law and premiſes; ver. 21. (3) By the poſitive means, faith in Chriſt. (4) By the ſubjects; all believers. (5) By the equity and equality of God's way of juſtifying man, without difference; ver. 22. (6) By a reaſon, ſhewing the neceſſity of faith to juſtification, taken from the equal ſtate of guiltineſs in all; ver. 23. (7) By the impulſive cauſe, which is none on our part, but the free grace of God, which inwardly operates in our ſouls through our redemption in Chriſt; ver. 24. according to God's appointment; ver. 25. Where alſo, we have the means whereby we partake of this redemption or propitiation, viz. faith in his blood: And the end of this appointment, amplified by an emphatical repetition of this end, ſet down, (1) more generally; with the time to which it relates: (2) diſtributively; with reference to himſelf and believers; ver. 26.

To this he adds by way of amplification, an inference or concluſion, againſt all boaſting in a man's ſelf; which he manages by ſhort queſtions and anſwers, the more effectually to ſubdue that ſelf-confidence that is in us all; ver. 27.

IV. He lays down this principal concluſion more plainly and fully concerning juſtification; which is (1ſt) propounded affirmatively by faith, a nd then excluſively, without the works of the law; ver. 28. (2) Confirmed by two reaſons taken from God's equal reſpect to Jews and Gentiles; ver. 29. The ſameneſs of the method he uſes in juſtifying both; ver. 30. to the end.

Ver. 2.——The oracles of God.] The revelation of his Divine Will.

Ver. 3.——If ſome did not believe.] See Heb. iv. 2.

——Shall their unbelief make the faith of God of none effect?] Or, is it poſſible that their ſin of infidelity or unbelief can evacuate the promiſes which God had made, ſo as that he ſhall not keep his covenant.

——The faith of God.] Here faith is taken for the truth or certainty of God's promiſes, that they ſhall be all accompliſhed in their due time.

Ver. 4. God forbid.] That it ſhould be in the power of man's corruptible nature to evacuate the veracity of God. And this phraſe is ſpoken by way of reproof, or in diſdain of ſuch an opinion, which is ſo improbable and abſurd: As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, It is impoſſible that God ſhould lye, or break his covenant with his creatures. Therefore it follows, that ——Leſt God be true.] In all his ſayings and promiſes; for he is truth itſelf.

——But every man a lyar.] Who ſhall pretend to oppoſe or call the veracity of God in queſtion.

——As it is written.] In Pſ. li. 4. which imports that the ſins of men can't change, or alter the promiſes of God. On the contrary, his verity and righteouſneſs is more apparent, and remarkable by our iniquities, as the Pſalmiſt has well obſerved in Pſ. lxxxix.

Ver. 5.——Commend.] i. e. Diſtinguiſh, or ſet the righteouſneſs of God in a better and clearer light among men; or confirms his righteouſneſs and faith towards men; what ſhall we ſay, to this queſtion that follows:

——Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?] By his juſtice on thoſe that have ſinned and rebelled againſt him.

——(I ſpeak as a man)] Unaſſiſted by the ſpirit of God, and according to the light of nature only, and as one that has learned by experience.

Ver. 6. God forbid.] That any one ſhould have ſuch abſurd and unworthy thoughts of God.

——For then how ſhall God judge the world?] It would be the greateſt abſurdity imaginable, that a people, who believe that God ſhall make inquiſition for ſin, and judge the world in righteouſneſs, (ſee Gen. xviii. 25) ſhould at the ſame breath ſay, or ſuppoſe that this God is unjuſt in his ſentence.

Ver. 7.——Through my life.] i. e. My ſin or iniquity: For, no man ſins, but he endeavours to cover it under ſome ſpecious pretence of truth, if he can.

——Why, yet am I alſo judged as a ſinner?] The ſenſe of the whole verſe runs thus: "If the faith and veracity of God is become more illuſtrious by ſin or unrighteouſneſs; why am I then judged, condemned, and puniſhed as a liar and ſinner." Or, why is any man puniſhed for what encreaſes the glory of God? Surely if the caſe was ſo between God and man, it would be more ſuitable for man to add ſin to ſin, to attain the glory of God, as the Apoſtle argues in the next verſe.

Ver. 8.——Let us do evil that good may come.] By this, which the Apoſtle calls a ſlanderous report invented againſt the diſciples of Chriſt, he inſinuates a rule, that we muſt never do evil for the ſake of any good; we muſt not commit any pious frauds; nor endeavour to propagate the cauſe of God with a lye.

——Whoſe damnation is juſt.] We may either underſtand the damnation of thoſe, who ſpread that ſlanderous report; or thoſe who do evil for what they call a good end.

Here note, That according to Theodoret's method, or diviſion, this verſe concludes the firſt part of this Epiſtle. For, ſays he, when the Apoſtle had blamed the Jews and Gentiles for their ſins, and proved them both to be ſubject to the juſt puniſhment of God; he then offers them the medicine of faith, and informs them of the Divine Goodneſs revealed to them in the Goſpel of Chriſt.

Ver. 9.——Are we better than they? No, in no wiſe.] This, at firſt ſight, may ſeem to claſh with that preheminence, which the Apoſtle allow'd the Jews over the Gentiles in the beginning of this chapter, ver. 1, 2. But then it muſt be forgot, that in the former conceſſion of the Jews advantage, the Apoſtle only ſpoke of the external advantages, which God had granted to the Jews; ſee ver. 2. And here he ſpeaks in regard to the inward advantage, or true righteouſneſs, from which alone the true and ſolid excellence of one above another is to be ſought, which he denies was more eminent in the Jew, than in the Gentile, becauſe they were both under ſin, as is proved before in the firſt and ſecond chapters; and is long ago teſtified by the Pſalmiſt, as it is written in Pſ. xiv. 1, 2, 3. and liii. 1.

Ver. 13. Their throat is an open ſepulchre.] See Pſalm v. 9. Not that the Apoſtle would from hence teach us, that all and every man ſingly was ſo wicked to work all the iniquity and commit all the ſins he enumerates in this place; but only that all men do ſin more or leſs, and that all theſe ſins are to be found more or leſs in all men.

Ver. 19.—— May become guilty before God] Or, ſubject to the judgment of God; ſee the Diſſertation on reaſon and paſſion in their original and preſent ſtate in the ſeventh chapter, at the 23d verſe, where all this context will be more fully explained.

Ver. 22. ——— For there is no difference.] Between the Jew and Gentile in the ſight of God, in reſpect of juſtification; for no man can be juſtified at any time, or under any diſpenſation, otherwiſe than thro' faith in Chriſt.

Ver. 23. All have ſinned.] Both Jew and Gentile, and therefore, have need of a common Saviour. For, where the diſeaſe is common, there alſo is need of a common remedy. Which remedy is deſcribed in the following verſes.

——— Come ſhort of the glory of God] Have nothing whereof they may boaſt themſelves before God, as above their fellow-creature; ſee ver. 27.

Ver. 28. Therefore we conclude that a man is juſtified by faith, without the deeds of the law.] Theſe words have been quoted frequently, as contradicting the doctrine of the Apoſtle James, who ſaith, that by works a man is juſtified, and not by faith only, as the Solifidians would teach from this text of the Apoſtle Paul. Therefore,

I think it will be very proper in this place to explode that error, and wreſt this text from their bad interpretation, by ſhewing, that tho' Paul and James differ in words and expreſſions, do yet really teach both the ſame doctrine; becauſe Paul, in excluding works from having any thing to do in our juſtification, does not mean to exclude ſuch works as James declares to be neceſſary; neither doth James, in aſſerting the neceſſity of good works, together with faith, and as the effects of it, mean to attribute more to them than Paul doth. So as the apparent difference between theſe two texts lies only in their uſing in different ſenſes, the words juſtify, faith and works, every one of which words is capable of, and is very often in Scripture uſed in different ſenſes, I ſhall proceed to remove the difficulty in this manner:

I. As to the word juſtify, not to trouble you with the etymology of it, which is but an uncertain way of knowing the common acceptation of a word; nor yet with the ſenſe which Heathen writers have uſed the word in, from whence we cannot with certainty collect in what ſenſe the Sacred Writers do uſe it; it may be ſufficient to obſerve, that the moſt obvious and uſual ſignification thereof in Holy Scripture, is, to receive to mercy, to abſolve and acquit from former tranſgreſſions. When God juſtifies a man, it is by forgiving him his treſpaſſes, and accepting, eſteeming and rewarding him as a righteous perſon, altho' he is not really and ſtrictly ſuch. And thus Paul himſelf ſeems to expound the word, at the 25th verſe. "Being juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus, whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteouſneſs for the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, through the forbearance of God" In which text, being juſtified, and having our ſins remitted, ſeemed to be uſed as terms of the ſame ſignification. And the Pſalmiſt, meaning to deſcribe the bleſſedneſs of a juſtified perſon, thus expreſſes it; Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered, Pſal. xxxii. 1, 2. Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute ſin, Rom. iv. 5, 6, 7, 8. And indeed this is all the juſtification that ſinful men (and ſuch all men are) are capable of: For being in truth ſinners, they cannot by a juſt God, be acquitted as innocent. They can, therefore, be juſtified no other way, but by having their ſins forgiven them, and by being received to mercy; for if God ſhould enter into ſtrict judgment with us, no man living could be juſtified in his ſight, as the Pſalmiſt ſays, Pſal. cxliii. 2.

To juſtify therefore, in the common Scriptural notion of it is, to abſolve from guilt, to diſcharge from puniſhment; and accordingly it is frequently in Scripture oppoſed to condemnation. It is God that juſtifieth, ſays the Apoſtle, who is he that condemneth? Rom. viii. 33, 34. And in another place, Being juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath, through him, Rom. v. 9.

Now taking the word in this ſenſe, there is a two-fold juſtification.

Firſt, When we take upon us the profeſſion of the Chriſtian Religion in baptiſm; for then our paſt ſins are forgiven us, then we are received into a covenant of grace and pardon.

But this is not a full juſtification; for our ſins are not then clearly pardoned and forgiven, becauſe they may, after this be ſtill imputed to us; and ſo they will be, in caſe we afterwards do either in profeſſion or in works deny that faith, which we then take upon us. Our ſecond therefore, and our compleat and final juſtification is not till the great Day of Judgment, when God will for ever acquit from the guilt, and free from the puniſhment of all their paſt ſins, all thoſe who continued faithful to that covenant, which they entred into with God at their baptiſm.

Suppoſing, therefore, at preſent, that Paul and James do by faith and works both mean the ſame things: Yet if they do not both ſpeak of the ſame juſtification; if Paul, when he ſpeaks of juſtification by faith, means the firſt juſtification, which is diſpenſed to us in baptiſm; and James, when he affirms, that we are juſtified by works, and not by faith only, means the ſecond and final juſtification at the laſt day; there is plainly no manner of contrariety between them. For it may be true, that in order to our being admitted into the covenant of juſtification and pardon, nothing more may be required, but only that we firmly believe and embrace the Chriſtian Religion; and accordingly we may obſerve, that, as a previous diſpoſition to baptiſm, nothing elſe ſeems to be required; but only that we ſhould believe the Goſpel, and in profeſſion renounce our former ſins, according to that of Philip to the eunuch, Acts viii. 37. If thou believeſt with all thine heart, thou mayſt be baptized; and yet it may be true too, that our being put into a juſtified ſtate by baptiſm, will in the event be no advantage to us, but rather only increaſe our condemnation, unleſs afterwards we continue true and faithful to that profeſſion which we then take upon us, and are careful to perform our part of that covenant which we then enter into with God. Now, I ſay, this laſt ſeems to be what James affirms, and the firſt of all that Paul teaches, at leaſt in many of thoſe places, where he ſays, we are juſtified by faith.

For that by the juſtification which James ſpeaks of, when he ſays, We are juſtified by works, and not by faith only, he means our final juſtification at the Great Day, upon which that ſalvation will immediately be beſtowed upon us, which at our baptiſm was only promiſed and aſſured to us upon certain conditions, is evident, by his uſing juſtification and ſalvation, in this diſpute, as terms equivalent. For, thus James expreſſeth himſelf in the 14th verſe, where he firſt begins to handle this ſubject; What doth it profit, my brethren, if a man ſay he hath faith and have not works? Can faith ſave him? It is plain, that he means the ſame thing there by being ſaved, that does in the other verſes of this chapter, by being juſtified; and conſequently that by juſtification, in this diſcourſe of his concerning faith and works; he means that final juſtification, upon which ſalvation is immediately conſequent.

And on the other ſide, that Paul in very many at leaſt, if not in all thoſe places wherein he attributes juſtification to faith only without works, means therefore only our firſt juſtification, that is, our being admitted into the covenant of grace, and being put into a juſtified ſtate by baptiſm, will, I ſuppoſe, be no leſs evident, if theſe two things be conſidered.

1. That in many places he ſpeaks of juſtification as a thing paſt, which he could not do, if he had meant the ſame thing by juſtification that James does. For thus, writing to the Corinthians, he ſays, 1 Cor. vi. 11. Ye are, or ye have been juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus: And Rom. vi. 1. ſpeaking of himſelf and other Chriſtians that were then living, and conſequently not finally juſtified in James's uſe of the Word, he ſays, that being juſtified by faith they had peace with God. And upon this he grounds their hope that they ſhould alſo, if they continued in faith, be finally juſtified by God at the laſt day, ver. 9. For if while we were ſinners Chriſt died for us, much more then, being now juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath through him.

2. It may be alſo further obſerved, That in many places he expreſly joins juſtification with baptiſm, as an effect or concomitant of it; as in Tit. iii. 5, 7. Not by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, ——— that being juſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life, and in 1 Cor. vi. 11. Such were ſome of you; but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified, they were juſtified, it ſeems, at the ſame time that they were waſhed, that is, at their baptiſm, when they openly and ſolemnly renounced thoſe wicked works which they had formerly lived in, and took upon them the profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith.

Now therefore, if this be granted, which ſeems to be very probable, that Paul generally means this by juſtification, (viz. only our being admitted into a ſtate of grace and favour with God, at our baptiſm, in which ſtate, if we continue by perſevering in faith and obedience, we ſhall at laſt be juſtified and acquitted finally in the great judgment;) it will be eaſy to underſtand all thoſe places wherein he attributes this to faith only, in a ſenſe very agreeable to the doctrine which James here teaches; it will be eaſy then to underſtand what Paul means, Rom. iv. 5. where he ſays, that God juſtifies the ungodly; then, I ſay, that paſſage which hath been thought the ſtrongeſt, will appear to be no objection at all againſt James's doctrine; the meaning thereof being only this, That the grace of God in Chriſt Jeſus is ſo large, as that he does not refuſe even the vileſt and greateſt ſinners, but readily accepts them to favour, upon their belief of the Goſpel, and cloſing with the terms of it. And there will be then no difficulty at all in underſtanding how Abraham was juſtified by faith only, according to Paul, and how he was juſtified by works, that is, not by faith only, as James expreſly affirms he was, at the 21ſt verſe of the 2d chapter. For the caſe was thus: Upon his giving a full and hearty aſſent to the truth of the Divine Promiſes, he was immediately received into God's favour and acceptance, even before the ſincerity of his faith has been actually tried by his obedience: Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteouſneſs, Rom. iv. 3. ſo that he was then in a juſtified ſtate: And yet, if after this he had declined to leave his country and his father's houſe, or even to ſacrifice his ſon at God's command, he would by this diſobedience have fallen from that ſtate of Divine favour, and not have been finally juſtified by God; but then all his former (as well as his latter ſins, which had been once remitted to him, with a temporary and conditional remiſſion, upon his firſt entring into the covenant of grace, by faith, (by virtue of which remiſſion, he was, while he continued in the covenant, a juſtified perſon) would nevertheleſs have been imputed to him, and he condemned for them, if he had afterwards ſwerved from his obedience.

In ſhort therefore, the juſtification which Paul generally ſpeaks of, is, that whereby we are made heirs of ſalvation, as he himſelf explains it, in the afore-cited text, Tit. iii. 7. That being juſtified by grace we ſhould be made heirs, according to the hope of eternal life: But the juſtification which James ſpeaks of, is, that by which we are actually admitted into the poſſeſſion of this inheritance. And therefore, though in order to the firſt juſtification nothing more be neceſſary but only that we cloſe with, and accept of thoſe terms of reconciliation, which God offers to us: Yet, in order to the ſecond juſtification, it is moreover neceſſary, that we ſhould make good that covenant which we before entred into; or elſe, though we are already juſtified in Paul's ſenſe, that is, are now already by our embracing and believing and profeſſing the Goſpel, in ſuch a capacity and likelihood of obtaining eternal life, as an heir is of enjoying his father's eſtate; we ſhall never be juſtified in James's ſenſe, that is, we ſhall never actually poſſeſs and enjoy the eſtate; but notwithſtanding our preſent heirſhip, ſhall at laſt be caſt off, and diſinherited for our diſobedience. And this obſervation concerning the different ſenſes, wherein theſe two Apoſtles do ſometimes uſe the word juſtify, may, I ſuppoſe, be alone ſufficient to reconcile them in moſt, if not in all thoſe paſſages wherein they ſeem to differ. But,

II. The word faith or belief, which they do both uſe in treating of this ſubject, is likewiſe a word capable of, and frequently in Scripture uſed in different ſenſes; and, I believe, it may eaſily be made appear, that in thoſe places wherein Paul attributes ſo much to faith, wherein he is thought to declare, that that is the only condition of our final juſtification, and admittance into the promiſed inheritance, he means quite another thing by faith than James does, when he ſays, that that alone is not ſufficient, even all that James means by faith and works too. I will not trouble you now with all the ſignifications, in which the word faith or belief is uſed in Holy Scripture; but ſhall take notice only of two, which I ſuppoſe moſt applicable to the caſe in hand.

1. The firſt ſenſe of it which I ſhall take notice of, is, that which indeed is the moſt obvious and proper meaning of the word; that is, when by faith is meant, An aſſent of the mind to the truth of ſome revealed propoſition. And in this ſenſe James uſes the word: By that faith which being without works, he ſays, is not ſufficient to juſtify or ſave us, he plainly means nothing more than only a belief of thoſe truths, which are revealed in the Goſpel. And the caſe that he puts, is this, That a man believes there is a God, and that thoſe things which he has revealed are true, and that all his promiſes and threatnings ſhall be made good, but nevertheleſs takes no care to live well; and in this caſe he ſays, that ſuch a faith as this, is an empty dead faith, and that it will be of no real advantage to us, any more than it is to the Devil's, who believe all theſe truths as firmly as we can do, but without any benefit to themſelves, becauſe the promiſes being not made to them, they are not thereby incited to the doing of good. But the promiſes are made to us, and therefore it can hardly be conceived, it is ſcarcely to be ſuppoſed, that any man that firmly believes all the truths of the Goſpel, and conſiders his own intereſt therein, ſhould nevertheleſs allow himſelf in a wicked life. Faith is naturally ſuch an active, lively, and working principle, that it can hardly fail to ſhew it ſelf by its effects.

2. And for this reaſon, ſecondly, the word faith, which moſt properly ſignifies nothing but the cauſe or principle, is oftentimes in Scripture put to ſignify both the cauſe and the effect too, that is, both a belief of the Goſpel-truths, and alſo a life led anſwerably to ſuch a belief.

And in this large and comprehenſive ſenſe, it is clearly evident, Paul does uſe the word in divers places, and eſpecially in thoſe Epiſtles where he treats of juſtification by faith, as may appear from his oftentimes uſing other words and phraſes inſtead of the ſingle word faith. For what he ſometimes calls faith, he at other times in thoſe ſame Epiſtles, calls the law of faith, and the obedience of faith, (Rom. iii. 27. i. 5. xvi. 26. And in Rom. x. 16. he moſt clearly explains his own meaning to be, to include and comprehend obedience in the word faith, whenever he attributes ſo much to faith: But they have not all obeyed the Goſpel, for Eſaias ſaith, Lord, who hath believed our report? In which words the ſame thing is plainly meant by obeying the Goſpel, and believing the report of the preachers of it; from whence it clearly appears, That the faith or belief which he ſo much magnifies in that Epiſtle, is not an idle, ineffectual belief, but ſuch a faith as makes men to be obedient.

Foraſmuch, therefore, as the faith which Paul ſpeaks of, when he ſays we are juſtified by faith, includes in it all that James means by faith and works too; it is plain, That though we ſuppoſe that they do both uſe the word juſtify always in the ſame ſenſe, there is not, however, any contrariety in their doctrines, although one ſays that we are juſtified by faith, and the other, that we are juſtified by works, and not by faith only. But,

III. There is alſo an ambiguity in the word works: And it is not improbable, (nay, I ſuppoſe I ſhall make it very plain) that theſe two Apoſtles, Paul and James in their ſeveral diſcourſes upon the ſubject of juſtification, do likewiſe uſe this word in very different ſenſes; and that Paul, when he excludes works, does not mean the ſame by works that James does, when he affirms that we are juſtified by works, and not by faith only. And if James by works, when he affirms them to be neceſſary together with faith, means thoſe works of piety, juſtice and charity, and other moral duties which are required in the Goſpel; as to any one that reads the former part of his 2d chapter, it will be evident that he does; and on the other ſide, if Paul, when he excludes works, means by works only, either thoſe materially good works, which men might do without the grace of the Goſpel, or the merit of good works, or elſe thoſe ritual obſervances which were required by the ceremonial law of Moſes: Then, though their words and expreſſions be different, yet their ſenſe may be the very ſame. Now

Concerning the place in James, I think there can be no diſpute; he plainly takes both faith and works in the moſt proper and uſual acceptation of the words: By faith, when he affirms that faith alone is not ſufficient, he plainly means a meer belief of the truths of the Goſpel; and by works, when he affirms that they are neceſſary together with faith, he plainly means ſuch a ſort of life and converſation, as the belief of the Goſpel-truths is naturally apt to produce, a converſation becoming the Goſpel of Chriſt: And both theſe he affirms to be neceſſary, in order to our final juſtification at the laſt day, And on the other ſide, Paul, if at any time he ſpeaks of the ſame juſtification that James does, means, by faith, when he ſays we are juſtified by that only, all that James means by faith and works too (as hath been ſhewn already) and by works, when he ſays we are juſtified by works, he means only, either the merit of good works, or ſuch works as might be done by unregenerate men without the grace of the Goſpel, or elſe the ritual obſervances of the Moſaical law. And that he uſes the words in theſe ſenſes, and does not mean to exclude from being a condition of our final juſtification that hearty obedience to the precepts of the Goſpel, which a firm belief of the truths of it is naturally apt to produce, will further appear if theſe two things be conſidered:

1 The occaſion and deſign of thoſe diſcourſes of St. Paul, wherein faith is ſo much magnified, and works are ſet ſo light by: And,

2 The ſeveral cautions that are here and there intermixed in thoſe diſcourſes, as it were on purpoſe to prevent our miſtaking his meaning, and thinking that we may be ſaved by faith alone, without a good life.

1 We may conſider the occaſion and deſign of thoſe diſcourſes of Paul, wherein faith is ſo much magnified, and works are ſet ſo light by; and which conſequently do ſeem moſt to contradict the doctrine taught by James. And,

I premiſe this firſt of all; that none of Paul's Epiſtles ſeem to have been written, as if they were intended to comprehend the whole Chriſtian Religion; they rather ſuppoſe Chriſtianity already planted in thoſe places, to which his Epiſtles are directed. (ſee the introduction). It was not conſequently his intention, in every Epiſtle that he wrote, to teach all the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, and to lay again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, Heb. vi. 1. for all this had been done before; thoſe ſame Apoſtles, by whoſe miniſtry they had been converted and baptized, having alſo then, (according to the commiſſion given them by Chriſt) taught them to obſerve all things whatſoever our Lord had commanded. As ſuch therefore the Apoſtle conſidered the perſons to whom he wrote, viz. as true diſciples of Chriſt, as perſons that had before been taught to obey as believe the Goſpel; and ſo had no fear upon him, that by his uſing the word faith or works in an uncommon ſenſe (and yet in ſuch a ſenſe, as the controverſy he was handling led him to uſe them in) they to whom he wrote, would ever be in danger of embracing an opinion ſo contrary to the firſt principles of the Chriſtian Religion, as it plainly was, to think that they might be ſaved only by believing, without obeying the Goſpel. The main deſign then I ſay, of moſt of Paul's Epiſtles, I mean of the controverſial parts of them) ſeems to be to furniſh the Chriſtians to whom he wrote, with anſwers to thoſe objections, which the enemies to Chriſtianity, among whom they lived, did make againſt it. And moſt of the Churches to which theſe Epiſtles were directed, were made up chiefly of Gentile converts, with whom nevertheleſs, there were ſome Jewiſh converts alſo intermixed; but the far greateſt part of the inhabitants of thoſe places were profeſſed Jews or Gentiles, who, though both zealous, each for their own way, and againſt each other, yet readily joined their forces together as againſt a common enemy, to hinder the growth and ſpreading of Chriſtianity. So that Paul had three ſorts of adverſaries to to deal with, viz. the Gentiles, the Jews, and the Jewdaizing Chriſtians, as I have obſerved in the introduction. The Gentiles, who had been long bred up under the inſtitution of their philoſophers, and by their good and wholſome precepts of morality, were in a good readineſs and diſpoſition to embrace the Goſpel; which, in general, commanded little more than they were taught before their own philoſophers, only requiring a ſtricter and more perfect obſervance of thoſe rules, and adding new motives and encouragements to it, from the plain revelation of a future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments, of which, before the coming of Chriſt, men had but an obſcure notion, and very ſlender aſſurance. The main objection therefore which theſe had to make againſt Paul, was, that he took (as they thought) a great deal of pains to little purpoſe, in going about to eſtabliſh a new belief, and a new profeſſion of religion among them, ſeeing that, as to practice, they had been taught all the ſame things in ſubſtance by their own philoſophers: So that conſequently they thought, he might have ſpared his labour.—They were of the mind of our modern Deiſts, " That natural religion was ſo good and perfect that it needed no revelation to improve it. Againſt theſe therefore the Apoſtle proves the neceſſity of the Chriſtian diſpenſation; and of faith in Chriſt: Becauſe, though men had been taught well before; they had never practiſed, as they had been taught; that by reaſon of the weakneſs of human nature, they had never lived up to that, which they knew was their duty: That therefore no man was, or could be juſtified in God's ſight, by the law of nature, or the firſt covenant made with mankind, which required ſtrict and unſinning obedience; that conſequently it was neceſſary to believe in Chriſt, and to enter into that more gracious covenant, which he by his blood had made between God and us, whereby he had encouraged good works with better promiſes, and offered to afford us divine ſtrength and ſuccour to aſſiſt our endeavours; by which covenant of grace in Chriſt (though we were ſtill obliged to the ſame duties, which the law of nature had laid upon us) we might be juſtified, which we could not be by the other; becauſe that required ſtrict and unſinning obedience, whereas this made allowance for the weakneſs of human nature, and left room for repentance; if at any time through careleſneſs or ſurprize we ſhould fall ſhort of our duty.—And to ſhew the advantage of this covenant made by Chriſt, and the impoſſibility of being juſtified any other way, than by having our ſins remitted to us through faith in his blood, ſeems to have been chiefly deſigned by the Apoſtle in this former part of his Epiſtle to the Romans. Now

The firſt covenant made with mankind being indeed a covenant of works without grace; therefore in oppoſition to, and to diſtinguiſh this from that, he, with good reaſons, calls this, ſometimes grace, ſometimes the law of faith, ſometimes the preaching of faith, and ſometimes barely faith; which he ſays is the only way, by which it is poſſible for us to be juſtified; becauſe our nature is ſo corrupt, and degenerate, that we cannot perform perfect and unſinning obedience. But,

2 The Jews were alſo as conceited of themſelves as the Gentiles, and as unwilling to accept of the covenant made by Chriſt; becauſe they truſted to be ſaved by the obſervation of the law of Moſes. And therefore the Apoſtle likewiſe, againſt theſe, endeavours to ſhew, that they were ſinners as well as the Gentiles, and ſtood in as much need of a Saviour as they; as is evident from the firſt four or five chapters of this Epiſtle to the Romans, in ſome paſſages of which (eſpecially in the firſt and ſecond chapters) he ſeems to have a particular reſpect to the Gentiles; and in other places to the Jews more eſpecially, and in ſome to them both as I have and ſhall remark in the notes upon each chapter; though the ſum of the argument is what I ſhall now ſet down in the following terms: — " Since all, both Jews and Gentiles had ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God, it was therefore neceſſary that a redeemer ſhould come, to make atonement for their paſt ſins, and to eſtabliſh a new covenant between God and man; which he calls faith, or the law of faith to diſtinguiſh it from the law of Moſes, which was truly a law of works; and by this covenant of grace or faith in Chriſt, which was open and free for all to enter into, both Jews and Gentiles, he ſays, might be juſtified, which they could not either of them be by the law of works, nor the Jews any more than the Gentiles by the ceremonial law of Moſes; that being never deſigned by God as a condition of juſtification, as having only temporal rewards and puniſhments annexed to it. Seeing therefore, the Jews as well as the Gentiles had broken the firſt law given to mankind, which required unſinning obedience, he ſays, there was no means of juſtification left now for either of them, but by faith in Chriſt, or by coming into that new covenant which Chriſt had eſtabliſhed by his death, and offered to us in the Goſpel. But,

3. Beſides theſe two, the Apoſtle had alſo a third ſort of adverſaries to deal with, which coſt him as much trouble as either of the former; theſe were ſuch, who being born and bred Jews, had been converted to Chriſtianity by the preaching of the Apoſtles, yet retained ſuch a liking and great veneration for Moſes and his law, that they thought themſelves ſtill bound to obſerve it as much as ever: And not only ſo, but they would fain have forced the ſame upon the Gentiles too, telling them that, notwithſtanding Chriſt, they were bound to be circumciſed as the Jews had been, and to keep the law of Moſes, if they expected to be ſaved, for without it there could be no ſalvation. Therefore

Againſt theſe the Apoſtle proves at large, eſpecially in his Epiſtle to the Galatians, that the law given by Moſes was never deſigned to oblige the Gentiles, nor even the Jews any longer than till the coming of Chriſt; that that law was the Jews themſelves, only a Schoolmaſter to bring them unto Chriſt, i. e. to prepare and diſpoſe them to receive his more pure and heavenly doctrine; that therefore now, after the revelation and preaching of the Goſpel, that law was of no further uſe; for after that faith is come, ſays he, or, after the Goſpel is preached, we are no longer under a ſchoolmaſter; Gal. iii. 25. That the ceremonial law was made up only of types and ſhadows, whereof Chriſt was the ſubſtance, being now come, they were to ceaſe; that the ceremonial law was given only to exerciſe the Jewiſh nation for ſome time, and was then to give way to a better law, the law of faith, or Evangelical Obedience; that Abraham himſelf was juſtified by the ſame means, and method which is now propounded in the Goſpel, viz. by a lively faith in the promiſes of God working in him a ready obedience to whatſoever God required of him; and that he was thus juſtified before he was circumciſed, and therefore ſo might they be too, without circumciſion and ſuch other ritual obſervances.

In the managing of which diſpute with the Judaizing Chriſtians, the Apoſtle calls the Chriſtian religion, as oppoſed to the Jewiſh, by the word Faith, to diſtinguiſh it from the obſervation of the law of Moſes, which was called works, or the works of the law, and uſing the word in this ſenſe, he ſays, We are juſtified by faith, and by faith only, i. e. by the faith and obedience of the Goſpel; and that there is no need at all of works, i. e. of ſuch works as were enjoined by the ceremonial law of Moſes, upon which they laid ſo great ſtreſs; for thus he often explains himſelf, expreſly calling theſe works, which he rejects, the works of the law, thereby plainly diſtinguiſhing them from the works of Evangelical Obedience, and clearly intimating, that it was not his intention to exclude theſe, though he did thoſe.

Thus the Apoſtle managed the controverſy he was engaged in with theſe three adverſaries: And that his main deſign was to oppoſe one or other of them in all thoſe places wherein thoſe paſſages are found, which ſo much magnify faith, and vilify works (which are eſpecially the Epiſtle to the Galatians, and this to the Romans) will, I ſuppoſe, readily appear to any one that ſhall attentively read them over; and, I think, it will be impoſſible to make out the context, or to ſhew how thoſe places do at all tend to the carrying on theſe deſigns, if we take the words, faith and works, in any other ſenſe than I have before ſaid Paul does uſe them in. But,

Secondly, That the Apoſtle Paul did not intend to exclude ſuch good works, as James requires (viz. obedience to the precepts of the Goſpel) from being neceſſary to our final juſtification at the great day, will yet further and more plainly appear, if in reading over thoſe Epiſtles, we do but obſerve the ſeveral cautions that are here and there intermixed, as it were on purpoſe to prevent our putting ſuch an interpretation upon his words. And 1ſt, In this very Epiſtle to the Romans he tells us plainly, that God will render to every man according to his works, &c. ch. ii. 6. Which paſſages, according to his works, and again, to every man that worketh good, would ſtand very impertinently in a diſcourſe wherein it is pretended by ſome, that he was proving the ſufficiency of faith alone for juſtification, if thereby he had meant ſuch a faith as might be without good works. Again, in the 13th verſe of the ſame chapter, he expreſly contradicts the Solifidian doctrine: Not the hearers of the law, ſays he, ſhall be juſtified before God, but the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified. Where it ſeems that Paul's juſtification by faith only, was not a juſtification without works; the faith that he there ſpeaks of, muſt needs therefore be ſuch a faith as includes works in it; The doers of the law ſhall be juſtified. And ſo again, ch. iii. 21. after he had ſaid that both circumciſion and uncircumciſion muſt be juſtified by faith; and that they could not be juſtify'd any other way; that they might not take faith in ſuch a narrow ſenſe as to exclude good works, he adds, Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; Yea, we eſtabliſh the law. And to the ſame purpoſe again, ch. vi. 1. What ſhall we ſay then? ſhall we continue in ſin that grace may abound? God forbid. How ſhall we that are dead to ſin live any longer therein? And again, ver. 15. What then? ſhall we ſin, becauſe we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid. And laſtly (to name no more) in the 8th chapter of this Epiſtle, ver. 1. when he was come to the concluſion of this controverſy, having ſhewn at large the inſufficiency of all other ways, and the abſolute neceſſity of accepting the Goſpel Truths, in order to juſtification, he goes on to ſhew the bleſſedneſs of thoſe who believ'd in Chriſt, in theſe words; There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus: But then, leſt they ſhould miſtake him, and think, that a bare belief in Chriſt, or the profeſſion of his religion only, was enough to entitle them to this bleſſedneſs, he adds, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit. The like care he has alſo taken in his Epiſtle to the Galatians, where he handles this controverſy again, with a ſpecial reſpect to the Jewiſh law; where we may obſerve, that to prevent all miſunderſtanding of what he had delivered touching the ſufficiency of faith without works, he takes frequent occaſion to declare his meaning to be, only to exclude the works of the law, not the obedience of the Goſpel. Particularly in the two laſt chapters he is very large in explaining what kind of liberty he had been before pleading for; Stand faſt therefore, ſays he, in the liberty wherewith Chriſt has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage, Gal. v. 1. And what bondage he meant, appears in the next verſe. Behold, I Paul ſay unto you, that if you be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing; that is, if you ſtill truſt to be ſav'd by your Jewiſh obſervances, you diſclaim and renounce the covenant which Chriſt hath made for you, and ſo can expect no benefit from it; Whoſoever of you, ſays he, are juſtify'd, that is, hope to be juſtify'd, by the law ye are fallen from grace. For we, through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteouſneſs by faith; We, that is, we Chriſtians, no leſs than you Jews, do wait for the hope of righteouſneſs, that is, for a reward of our righteouſneſs: But then it is not ſuch a righteouſneſs as yours, a righteouſneſs conſiſting in the obſervation of rites and ceremonies, but through the Spirit, that is, by a ſpiritual righteouſneſs; and 'tis by faith, that is, 'tis ſuch a righteouſneſs as is wrought in us by faith, that is, by our belief of the Goſpel of Chriſt. For, ſays he, ver. 6. In Chriſt Jeſus neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but faith; not any faith, but faith which worketh by love, or faith which is made perfect by love, which words he repeats again in ch. vi. 15. only inſtead of faith putting in another word, not ſo ambiguous; In Chriſt Jeſus, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion but a new creature. And the ſame Apoſtle in another parallel place, in another of his Epiſtles, puts it out of all doubt what he means in the firſt of theſe places, by faith, when he expreſſes the ſame by obedience; circumciſion is nothing, and uncircumciſion but the keeping the Commandments of God, 1 Cor. vii. 19. And

Now by all that hath been ſaid, I ſuppoſe, it ſufficiently appears, that by faith, Paul means ſomething more than only a bare belief of the Goſpel-Truths, when he makes it the ſole condition of juſtification; and that by works, he does not mean works of Evangelical Obedience, when he excludes them from being neceſſary in order to it: So that Paul does not, any more than James exclude ſuch good works as are the natural effects of a true, lively, and Chriſtian Faith, from being neceſſary together with faith, in order to our full and final juſtification at the laſt day. And

From all that hath been ſaid, I think it appears, that Paul and James agree very well together; which was the point that I propos'd to make good, James indeed ſays, that faith alone, or a bare belief of the Goſpel, will not do without works anſwerable to our belief; Ye ſee how that by works a man is juſtify'd and not by faith only: Paul here, on the other ſide ſays, that we are juſtify'd by faith: But though this manner of expreſſion be different from, and in the letter, ſeemingly contradictory to James's meaning, is plainly the ſame. He affirms, indeed, that we are juſtify'd by faith: But then as I have ſhewn, he means the ſame thing by faith, that James does by faith and works too; he means ſuch a faith as a Abraham's was, (for that in his example as well as James's;) he means ſuch a faith as however it is try'd, approves itſelf by a ready obedience, as Abraham's did: And the works which he rejects as uſeleſs and unneceſſary, or as not ſufficient, are not ſuch as Abraham's were, the fruits of a lively faith; but either mere ritual obſervances, or elſe ſuch works, as though materially good, are not done out of a good and virtuous principle. In a word, he oppoſes faith, his juſtifying and ſaving faith, not to Evangelical Obedience; but either to unſinning obedience, by which none can be juſtify'd, becauſe all are ſinners; or, to an opinion of merit, which there can never be any ground for; or, laſtly, to the rites and ceremonies of Moſes's law, which law, he ſhews, was not then obliging, and ſo could not be the condition of juſtification.

The uſe we ſhall make of what hath been ſaid upon this ſubject, is this; we ſhould be hereby incited to the diligent performance of that whole condition that (according to the doctrine taught by both theſe Apoſtles) is requir'd of us in order to ſalvation; which is not only to believe in Chriſt, and to make profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith, but likewiſe to live as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt, and to bring forth plenteouſly all the fruits of righteouſneſs. And this likewiſe Peter teaches in his Second Epiſtle, i. 5, &c. with whoſe words I ſhall conclude; Beſides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godlineſs; and to godlineſs brotherly kindneſs; and to brotherly kindneſs charity. For if theſe things be in you and abound, they make you that you ſhall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, But he that lacketh theſe things, is blind, and cannot ſee afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſins. Wherefore, the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election ſure: for if ye do theſe things ye ſhall never fall: For ſo an entrance ſhall be miniſtred unto you abundantly, into the everlaſting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

CHAP. IV.

1 Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteouſneſs, 10 before he was circumciſed. 13 By faith only he and his ſeed received the promiſe. 16 Abraham is the father of all that believe. 24 Our faith alſo ſhall be imputed to us for righteouſneſs.

WHAT ſhall we ſay then, that Abraham our father, as pertaining to the fleſh hath found?

2 For if Abraham were juſtified by works, he hath whereof to glory, but not before God.

3 For what ſaith the ſcripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteouſneſs.

4 Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.

5 But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs.

6 Even as David alſo deſcribeth the bleſſedneſs of the man unto whom God imputeth righteouſneſs without works,

7 Saying, Bleſſed are they whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſins are covered.

8 Bleſſed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute ſin.

9 Cometh this bleſſedneſs then upon the circumciſion only, or upon the uncircumciſion alſo? For we ſay that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteouſneſs.

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumciſion, or in uncircumciſion? not in circumciſion, but in uncircumciſion.

11 And he received the ſign of circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of the faith which he had yet being uncircumciſed: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumciſed: that righteouſneſs might be imputed unto them alſo:

12 And the father of circumciſion to them who are not of the circumciſion only, but alſo walk in the ſteps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumciſed.

13 For the promiſe that he ſhould be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his ſeed through the law, but through the righteouſneſs of faith.

14 For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promiſe made of none effect.

15 Becauſe the law worketh wrath: for where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion.

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed, not to that only which is of the law, but to that alſo which is of the faith of Abraham, who is the father of us all,

17 (As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations) before him whom he believed, even God who quickneth the dead, and calleth thoſe things which be not, as though they were:

18 Who againſt hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations; according to that which was ſpoken, So ſhall thy ſeed be.

19 And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sara's womb.

20 He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God:

21 And being fully perſwaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs.

23 Now it was not written for his ſake alone, that it was imputed to him;

24 But for us alſo, to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead,

25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raiſed again for our juſtification.

This chapter conſiſts of three parts, a confirmation, a commendation, and an application.

I. The confirmation is a proof of that general poſition, That we juſtified by faith without the works of the law.

By the inſtance of Abraham; concerning whom he ſhews, (1ſt,) Negatively, that he was not juſtified by any fleſhly or ceremonial privilege, and this is implied in that queſtion in the firſt verſe, and is proved by an argument taken from the abſurdity that would follow thereupon, if it were ſo, viz. glorying, ver. 2. (2.) Poſitively, That he was juſtified by faith; as appears by the expreſs teſtimony of Scripture, propounded in the third verſe, and opened and applied to the point in hand, in ver. 4, 5.

2dly, He proves his poſition by the teſtimony of David, as in ver. 6—8.

3dly, By a conſideration of the perſons to whom this bleſſing belongs, laid down in a rhetorical dialogiſm; wherein we find a doubt, whether juſtification belongs to the Jews only, or to the Gentiles alſo. And a ſolution of the doubt, declaring that, if they have faith, it belongs to the Gentiles alſo; as appears by the inſtance of Abraham, ver. 9. Then there follows another doubt, whether Abraham was juſtified before or after circumciſion. And it is reſolved, before circumciſion, ver. 10. For that he was circumciſed, not that thereby he might be juſtified; but that circumciſion might be an aſſurance of his juſtification, that he might be the pattern of the juſtification of believers among the Gentiles, when their calling ſhould begin; becauſe he was juſtified before he was circumciſed, ver. 11. and alſo to be a pattern of the juſtification of the Jews; becauſe he was circumciſed afterwards, if they ſhould be endued with ſuch a faith as he was endued with, ver. 12.

5thly, From the end and ſcope, which the Lord propoſes into himſelf in our juſtification and ſalvation, which is the glory of his grace, and our comfort in the certainty of the promiſed bleſſedneſs, amplified by the ſubjects to whom his certainty belongs, expreſſed generally, by all the ſeed; and diſtributively, by both Jews and Gentiles, becauſe Abraham is the father of them both, ver. 16. which univerſal paternity of Abraham, he illuſtrates by comparing it with God's paternity; amplified by a deſcription of God, pertinent to the point in hand, ver. 17. and alſo by a commendation of Abraham's faith.

II. The commendation reſpects Abraham's faith, and directs us what courſe we muſt take to ſtrengthen that faith in us, which is required of us for our juſtification. And the Apoſtle executes this commendation by ſhewing his courage, in believing againſt hope; his prudence, in believing according to what was ſpoken, ver. 18. and his ſtrength of faith, amplified by, (1.) Removing from him certain effects of weak faith: As looking at the impediments, ver. 19. and ſtaggering at the ſtrangeneſs of the promiſe. (2.) By aſſerting the ſtrength of his faith in ſeveral expreſſions, ver. 20, 21. —— (3.) By ſhewing, that the power of God is the ground of his faith, ver. — 21. And (4.) By declaring that righteouſneſs was the fruit of his faith, ver. 22.

III. The application is of Abraham's faith for our example; wherein we are informed of the uſe and comfort ariſing to us from the record of Abraham's juſtification, ver. 23, 24. —— The condition required of us, that we may ſhare with Abraham in the bleſſing of juſtification, ver. — 24. and the reaſon brought to aſſure us of the like favour, taken from the two pillars, the meritorious cauſe, which is Chriſt's death; and the evidence of the worth and value of it, which is the reſurrection from the dead, on which our juſtification reſts and depends, ver. 25.

Ver. 1. —— As pertaining to the fleſh.] i. e. Circumciſion, which was wrought on the fleſh, by cutting the foreskin of every male child. So this Scripture has been interpreted by ſome, ſuppoſing that by the fleſh, the Apoſtle means circumciſion; but Chryſoſtome, and many more Greek expoſitors, I think, more reaſonably expound this text by others of like import, as of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, Rom. i. 3. My brethren and my kinſmen according to the fleſh, ix. 3. And again, of whom as concerning the fleſh Chriſt came, ib. ver. 5. Behold, Iſrael after the fleſh, 1 Cor. x. 18. Which, ſay they, directs us to underſtand this Scripture, that Abraham was the father of the Jews, according to, or after the fleſh, and then the ſenſe of the whole verſe will run thus, What ſhall we ſay then, that our father Abraham, whoſe ſeed we are, obtained by the gift of circumciſion, or was profited by being circumciſed?

Ver. 2. —— Juſtified by works.] The outward ceremony of the law of Moſes, ſuch as circumciſion, &c. See the notes on ch. iii. 28.

—— Not before God.] This Scripture is well expounded by iii. 20.

Ver. 3. For what ſaith the Scripture?] Gen. xv. 6.

Ver. 4. Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.] i. e. God hath covenanted with mankind upon certain conditions, that he will give him eternal life. Now, ſays the Apoſtle, if man complies with his part of the covenant, the reward which he receives of eternal life on this account, being the condition in the covenant, it is not to be reckoned a free gift, but a reward which is due to him on account of his faithful compliance, with his part of the covenant, in which God's grace was offered to him upon ſuch conſiderations. Yet this is far from the Popiſh doctrine of merit of good works; as I ſhall make it appear in the following Diſſertation.

A Diſſertation concerning the merit of good works, as taught by the Church of Rome.

The doctrine of merit of good works, is ſo far from being Apoſtolical, that it may be properly ſaid to be only the invention of the preſent Church of Rome.

The Council of Trent anathematizes thoſe, who deny that a man juſtified by good works, does truly merit eternal life, Seſſ. 6. can. 32. and Vega, who wrote his book of juſtification, during the time that he was at the council, maintains (in queſt. 5.) That the council, by truly meriting, did underſtand meriting, de condigno. Where

Obſerve, that the ſchoolmen have invented this diſtinction about juſtification, de congruo & de condigno, meaning by de congruo, a good work, which is worthy of Divine Reward, not out of any obligation from juſtice, but out of a principle of fitneſs, (or congruity), and from the free bounty of God. But the merit de condigno, ſay they, is a good work, to which a reward is due from a principle of juſtice, as well becauſe of the worth or dignity of the work, as becauſe of the worth of the perſon that has done it. And,

That this is the doctrine of the Church of Rome, may be further proved from Bellarmine, de juſtif. lib. v. c. 17. Gregory de Valentia, tom. 2. diſp. 8. q. 6. punct. 1. §. 1. and Cardinal Quiroga's Index expurgatorius, &c. And,

To be ſure, this is one of the proudeſt errors that it ever could poſſibly be guilty of. By it they renounce that grand principle of Chriſtianity, which looks upon that reward, which God does vouchſafe to good works, as the effect, not of commatative juſtice, which gives ſo much for ſo much, but as the effect of the faithfulneſs of God, to ſuch as ſhould obey his commandments, though their obedience had nothing in itſelf able to merit ſuch a reward, according to that of our Apoſtle, The ſufferings of this preſent time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that ſhall be revealed in us, Rom. viii. 18.

Moreover, we are very ſure, that if the Church of Rome, in this article of her belief, be quite of another opinion than Paul, and the whole ſtream of antiquity was of, for the eleven firſt ages of the Church, which has ſufficiently been proved; ſo neither does it agree with the moſt eminent doctors of the Latin Church, which have been ſince the eleventh age. To prove this, is the deſign of this diſcourſe, that there may be no refuge left for this error in this matter.

I begin with that exhortation which Anſelme Archbiſhop of Canterbury, required ſhould be given to a certain monk when he was a dying, after this manner: Do you believe that you cannot be ſaved, but by the death of Jeſus Chriſt? A. I do believe ſo. Do you heartily thank him for it? A. I do. Be you therefore ever thanking him for it as long as you live, and put your whole truſt and confidence in that death alone; and let that be your only ſafe-guard. And if the Lord will enter into judgment with thee, ſay thus, O Lord, unleſs I hold the death of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt betweeen me and thee and thy judgment, I am not able to plead with thee. If he tells you, that you have merited damnation, ſay unto him, I hold the death of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt between me and my ill deſerts; and inſtead of thoſe merits which I ought to have, but alas! have not, I offer to thee the merit of his moſt meritorious paſſion. Let him ſay moreover, I hold the death of Jeſus Chriſt between me and thine anger; after which let him add, Into thy hands, &c. and he ſhall die with aſſurance, and he ſhall never ſee death; ſee his works page 291.

After this manner did Anſelme, who died in the year 1109. require that a monk, that is, ſuch a one, as according to their opinion, has merits enough, both for himſelf and others, ſhould make his confeſſion upon his death-bed. Concerning which action of his, one may obſerve, firſt, That this Anſelme was canonized, and his name is to be found upon the 21ſt of April in the Roman Martyrology, which ſhews that he was no teacher of hereſy (as they call hereſy). Secondly, That this exhortation which he required ſhould be given to perſons that were dying, was look'd upon as ſo excellent a one all Europe over, that there is ſcarce any book, belonging to the Church-affairs, wherein it is not to be found. Thirdly, That the Church of Rome itſelf did own it, as Cardinal Hoſius does witneſs, Confeſſ. Fidei Petric. cap. 73. Fourthly, That it was never charged with containing any pernicious doctrine, till the Popes, and the inquiſitors of the faith, and the Council of Trent, cauſed thoſe articles to be blotted out, as contrary to the belief of their Church. Fifthly, That notwithſtanding this condemnation of it by the Index Expurgatorius, it is ſtill retained in France, and may be ſeen in that edition of the book intituled Ordo Baptizandi, which was publiſhed in the year 1614, where the ſame queſtions and anſwers are now to be ſeen, which were formerly condemned by Cardinal Quiroga.

One had need to tranſcribe the greateſt part of Bernard's works, to produce all thoſe places, wherein that father has ſhewn himſelf to be of the ſame opinion with Anſelme. Thus he ſpeaks in his ſixty-firſt ſermon upon the Canticles. In the mercy of the Lord is my merit; I am rich in merits, ſeeing he is rich in compaſſion. As the mercies of the Lord are numberleſs, ſo are my merits. If my conſcience does accuſe me of a great many ſins, where ſins do abound, there does grace much more abound;——ſhall I ſing of my own righteouſneſſes? O Lord, I will make mention of thy righteouſneſs only, which is mine alſo becauſe thou haſt made it ſo.

He ſpeaks ſtill more particularly at the end of his book of Grace and of Free-will. How, ſays he, does the Apoſtle call that crown, which he ſays is laid up for him, a crown of righteouſneſs? Is it not becauſe one may juſtly claim, as a due debt, whatſoever is never ſo freely promiſed? He ſays, in effect, I know whom I have believed; and I am perſwaded, that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him. And becauſe he believed him, who had promiſed him, he does with confidence demand that which had been promiſed. The promiſe is of mercy, but it ought to be performed in juſtice. The crown then which Paul does wait for, is a crown of righteouſneſs, not of his own righteouſneſs, but of God's. For it is but juſt, that he ſhould pay what he owes, and he owes whatſoever he has promiſed. So then, it is the juſtice of God only on which the Apoſtle does rely.——If any one therefore would give our merits their due name, they are certain ſeeds of hope, motives to charity, marks of a ſecret predeſtination, preſages of future happineſs, the way to a kingdom, but by no means the cauſe which does entitle us to it. It is impoſſible to blaſt this proud doctrine of merits of condignity more effectually than Bernard does in theſe words: The ſame ſenſe is repeated in ſome others of his works; as in his firſt ſermon of the Annunciation, and in the fifteenth ſermon on Quis habitat, and eſpecially in his hundred and ninetieth Epiſtle againſt the hereſies of Petrus Abælardus, who was one of the firſt, after the Pelagians, who did oppoſe this doctrine of the Goſpel.

We may obſerve in the mean-time, Firſt, That Bernard was canonized by Alexander the IIId. in the year 1165, viz. twelve years after his death; Secondly, That Pope Innocent the IId. does approve of this Epiſtle of Bernard's againſt Abælardus, as may be ſeen by that Epiſtle which he wrote to the Archbiſhops of Sens and of Rheims, to their ſuffragans, and to Bernard himſelf, and which is the one hundred ninety-fourth amongſt Bernard's Epiſtles. Thirdly, That he was the moſt learned man in his time. Fourthly, That he was the founder of an eminent order, which is diſperſed throughout all the weſtern part of the world, and that a great number of Abbots, Biſhops, and Cardinals, have come out of his ſchool.

Petrus Abbot of Rhemy——at Rheims, and afterwards biſhop of Chartres, wrote theſe words, a little before the year 1170. Tract. de Panibus, cap. 15. That the conſcience of him who does make confeſſion of his greateſt ſins, does ſtand in need of a handful of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt: inſtead of dipping the tip of his finger in water, let him waſh his hands, not in the blood of a ſinner, but in the death of his Redeemer. Let him dip his finger in the place where the nails were. He does afterward compare the blood of Jeſus Chriſt upon the croſs, to that of the lamb which was ſprinkled by the prieſt; and from thence takes occaſion to expreſs himſelf thus: Dip then thy finger, and ſprinkle it againſt the veil of the ſanctuary, to the end that the blood of our Lord's paſſion, may ſerve thee for a key to open the gates of Heaven.

The ſame author ſays alſo in another work of his, lib. 1. de Tabern. Moſaici Expoſit. p. 929, B. P. We muſt every day preſent before God, not our own merit, which is evil, but the privilege of his nature, and his mercy. This is the conſtant doctrine of the XIIth age.

Urban the IVth lived about the middle of the XIIIth age. He is famous for inſtituting the feaſt of the ſacrament, upon the account of a pretended revelation to a certain religious woman of the country of Liege. There is a Commentary of his upon the Miſerere, where he ſhews, that he does follow the ſame doctrine concerning the merit of good works, which was univerſally received before his time. Firſt, He proteſts that he does appeal from juſtice to mercy, according to the exhortation of Anſelme. Secondly, He does confeſs, that there is nothing in him able to merit that glory which he does wait for, (quia igitur ſolvendo non ſum, paſſionis condignæ ad futuram gloriam quam expecto). Thirdly, He declares that mercy has no reſpect to our merits, but only to our miſery. Fourthly, He does make uſe of ſuch terms as theſe: I do not beg for my own merit's ſake, or for thy juſtice or my own,——or for my works ſake, wherein I have miſerably gone aſtray, but for thy great mercy. "Non peto ſecundum meritum meum, vel ſecundum juſtitiam tuam vel meam.——vel ſecundum opera mea, quibus miſer deviavi, ſed ſecundum magnam miſericordiam tuam."

Thomas Aquinas, who was contemporary with this pope, ſpeaks thus, 1, 2. Q. 114. A. 1. No man can make any pretence of merit before God, unleſs by ſuppoſing a divine diſpoſition, by virtue of which man does obtain of God by his operation, quaſi mercedem, in manner of a ſalary as it were, that for which God has given him the power of working. This is the doctrine of the Goſpel. But ſee here the leaven which Thomas adds to it, and which has ſo

21 And being fully perſwaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs.

23 Now it was not written for his ſake alone, that it was imputed to him ;

24 But for us alſo, to whom it ſhall be imputed, if we believe on him that raiſed up Jeſus our Lord from the dead,

25 Who was delivered for our offences, and was raiſed again for our juſtification.

This chapter conſiſts of three parts, a confirmation, a commendation, and an application.

I. The confirmation is a proof of that general poſition, That we juſtified by faith without the works of the law.

By the inſtance of Abraham ; concerning whom he ſhews, (1ſt,) Negatively, that he was not juſtified by any fleſhly or ceremonial privilege, and this is implied in that queſtion in the firſt verſe, and is proved by an argument taken from the abſurdity that would follow thereupon, if it were ſo, viz. glorying, ver. 2. (2.) Poſitively, That he was juſtified by faith ; as appears by the expreſs teſtimony of Scripture, propounded in the third verſe, and opened and applied to the point in hand, in ver. 4, 5.

2dly, He proves his poſition by the teſtimony of David, as in ver. 6—8.

3dly, By a conſideration of the perſons to whom this bleſſing belongs, laid down in a rhetorical dialogiſm ; wherein we find a doubt, whether juſtification belongs to the Jews only, or to the Gentiles alſo. And a ſolution of the doubt, declaring that, if they have faith, it belongs to the Gentiles alſo ; as appears by the inſtance of Abraham, ver. 9. Then there follows another doubt, whether Abraham was juſtified before or after circumciſion. And it is reſolved, before circumciſion, ver. 10. For that he was circumciſed, not that thereby he might be juſtified ; but that circumciſion might be an aſſurance of his juſtification, that he might be the pattern of the juſtification of believers among the Gentiles, when their calling ſhould begin ; becauſe he was juſtified before he was circumciſed, ver. 11. and alſo to be a pattern of the juſtification of the Jews ; becauſe he was circumciſed afterwards, if they ſhould be endued with ſuch a faith as he was endued with, ver. 12.

4thly, From the means of conveyance of the inheritance to Abraham, which is propounded both negatively and poſitively, in ver. 13. and confirmed (as to the former part, that it could not be by the law) by a double inconvenience that would follow from the manner of obtaining the inheritance ; as the voidance of faith, and of the promiſe, ver. 14. which laſt inconvenience he proves to be ſo far from being a bleſſing, that it binds over to wrath, and is an occaſion of falling, in caſe that the promiſe of bleſſedneſs, as the Jews pretend, belongs only to the obſervers of the law.

5thly, From the end and ſcope, which the Lord propoſes into himſelf in our juſtification and ſalvation, which is the glory of his grace, and our comfort in the certainty of the promiſed bleſſedneſs, amplified by the ſubjects to whom his certainty belongs, expreſſed generally, by all the ſeed ; and diſtributively, by both Jews and Gentiles, becauſe Abraham is the father of them both, ver. 16. which univerſal paternity of Abraham, he illuſtrates by comparing it with God's paternity ; amplified by a deſcription of God, pertinent to the point in hand, ver. 17. and alſo by a commendation of Abraham's faith.

II. The commendation reſpects Abraham's faith, and directs us what courſe we muſt take to ſtrengthen that faith in us, which is required of us for our juſtification. And the Apoſtle executes this commendation by ſhewing his courage, in believing againſt hope ; his prudence, in believing according to what was ſpoken, ver. 18. and his ſtrength of faith, amplified by, (1.) Removing from him certain effects of weak faith : As looking at the impediments, ver. 19. and ſtaggering at the ſtrangeneſs of the promiſe. (2.) By aſſerting the ſtrength of his faith in ſeveral expreſſions, ver. 20, 21. —— (3.) By ſhewing, that the power of God is the ground of his faith, ver. — 21. And (4.) By declaring that righteouſneſs was the fruit of his faith, ver. 22.

III. The application is of Abraham's faith for our example ; wherein we are informed of the uſe and comfort ariſing to us from the record of Abraham's juſtification, ver. 23, 24. —— The condition required of us, that we may ſhare with Abraham in the bleſſing of juſtification, ver. — 24. and the reaſon brought to aſſure us of the like favour, taken from the two pillars, the meritorious cauſe, which is Chriſt's death ; and the evidence of the worth and value of it, which is the reſurrection from the dead, on which our juſtification reſts and depends, ver. 25.

Ver. 1. —— As pertaining to the fleſh.] i. e. Circumciſion, which was wrought on the fleſh, by cutting the foreskin of every male child. So this Scripture has been interpreted by ſome, ſuppoſing that by the fleſh, the Apoſtle means circumciſion ; but Chryſoſtome, and many more Greek expoſitors, I think, more reaſonably expound this text by others of like import, as of the ſeed of David according to the fleſh, Rom. i. 3. My brethren and my kinſmen according to the fleſh, ix. 3. And again, of whom as concerning the fleſh Chriſt came, ib. ver. 5. Behold, Iſrael after the fleſh, 1 Cor. x. 18. Which, ſay they, directs us to underſtand this Scripture, that Abraham was the father of the Jews, according to, or after the fleſh, and then the ſenſe of the whole verſe will run thus, What ſhall we ſay then, that our father Abraham, whoſe ſeed we are, obtained by the gift of circumciſion, or was profited by being circumciſed ?

Ver. 2. —— Juſtified by works.] The outward ceremony of the law of Moſes, ſuch as circumciſion, &c. See the notes on ch. iii. 28.

—— Not before God.] This Scripture is well expounded by iii. 20.

Ver. 3. For what ſaith the Scripture ?] Gen. xv. 6.

Ver. 4. Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.] i. e. God hath covenanted with mankind upon certain conditions, that he will give him eternal life. Now, ſays the Apoſtle, if man complies with his part of the covenant, the reward which he receives of eternal life on this account, being the condition in the covenant, it is not to be reckoned a free gift, but a reward which is due to him on account of his faithful compliance, with his part of the covenant, in which God's grace was offered to him upon ſuch conſiderations. Yet this is far from the Popiſh doctrine of merit of good works ; as I ſhall make it appear in the following Diſſertation.

A Diſſertation concerning the merit of good works, as taught by the Church of Rome.

The doctrine of merit of good works, is ſo far from being Apoſtolical, that it may be properly ſaid to be only the invention of the preſent Church of Rome.

The Council of Trent anathematizes thoſe, who deny that a man juſtified by good works, does truly merit eternal life, Seſſ. 6. can. 32. and Vega, who wrote his book of juſtification, during the time that he was at the council, maintains (in queſt. 5.) That the council, by truly meriting, did underſtand meriting, de condigno. Where

Obſerve, that the ſchoolmen have invented this diſtinction about juſtification, de congruo & de condigno, meaning by de congruo, a good work, which is worthy of Divine Reward, not out of any obligation from juſtice, but out of a principle of fitneſs, (or congruity), and from the free bounty of God. But the merit de condigno, ſay they, is a good work, to which a reward is due from a principle of juſtice, as well becauſe of the worth or dignity of the work, as becauſe of the worth of the perſon that has done it. And,

That this is the doctrine of the Church of Rome, may be further proved from Bellarmine, de juſtif. lib. v. c. 17. Gregory de Valentia, tom. 2. diſp. 8. q. 6. punct. 1. §. 1. and Cardinal Quiroga's Index expurgatorius, &c. And,

To be ſure, this is one of the proudeſt errors that it ever could poſſibly be guilty of. By it they renounce that grand principle of Chriſtianity, which looks upon that reward, which God does vouchſafe to good works, as the effect, not of commutative juſtice, which gives ſo much for ſo much, but as the effect of the faithfulneſs of God, to ſuch as ſhould obey his commandments, though their obedience had nothing in itſelf able to merit ſuch a reward, according to that of our Apoſtle, The ſufferings of this preſent time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that ſhall be revealed in us, Rom. viii. 18.

Moreover, we are very ſure, that if the Church of Rome, in this article of her belief, be quite of another opinion than Paul, and the whole ſtream of antiquity was of, for the eleven firſt ages of the Church, which has ſufficiently been proved; ſo neither does it agree with the moſt eminent doctors of the Latin Church, which have been ſince the eleventh age. To prove this, is the deſign of this diſcourſe, that there may be no refuge left for this error in this matter.

I begin with that exhortation which Anſelme Archbiſhop of Canterbury, required ſhould be given to a certain monk when he was a dying, after this manner: Do you believe that you cannot be ſaved, but by the death of Jeſus Chriſt? A. I do believe ſo. Do you heartily thank him for it? A. I do. Be you therefore ever thanking him for it as long as you live, and put your whole truſt and confidence in that death alone; and let that be your only ſafe-guard. And if the Lord will enter into judgment with thee, ſay thus, O Lord, unleſs I hold the death of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt betweeen me and thee and thy judgment, I am not able to plead with thee. If he tells you, that you have merited damnation, ſay unto him, I hold the death of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt between me and my ill deſerts; and inſtead of thoſe merits which I ought to have, but alas! have not, I offer to thee the merit of his moſt meritorious paſſion. Let him ſay moreover, I hold the death of Jeſus Chriſt between me and thine anger; after which let him add, Into thy hands, &c. and he ſhall die with aſſurance, and he ſhall never ſee death; ſee his works page 291.

After this manner did Anſelme, who died in the year 1109. require that a monk, that is, ſuch a one, as according to their opinion, has merits enough, both for himſelf and others, ſhould make his confeſſion upon his death-bed. Concerning which action of his, one may obſerve, firſt, That this Anſelme was canonized, and his name is to be found upon the 21ſt of April in the Roman Martyrology, which ſhews that he was no teacher of hereſy (as they call hereſy). Secondly, That this exhortation which he required ſhould be given to perſons that were dying, was look'd upon as ſo excellent a one all Europe over, that there is ſcarce any book, belonging to the Church-affairs, wherein it is not to be found. Thirdly, That the Church of Rome it ſelf did own it, as Cardinal Hoſius does witneſs, Confeſſ. Fidei Petric. cap. 73. Fourthly, That it was never charged with containing any pernicious doctrine, till the Popes, and the inquiſitors of the faith, and the Council of Trent, cauſed thoſe articles to be blotted out, as contrary to the belief of their Church. Fifthly, That notwithſtanding this condemnation of it by the Index Expurgaterius, it is ſtill retained in France, and may be ſeen in that edition of the book intituled Ordo Baptizandi, which was publiſhed in the year 1614, where the ſame queſtions and anſwers are now to be ſeen, which were formerly condemned by Cardinal Quiroga.

One had need to tranſcribe the greateſt part of Bernard's works, to produce all thoſe places, wherein that father has ſhewn himſelf to be of the ſame opinion with Anſelme. Thus he ſpeaks in his ſixty-firſt ſermon upon the Canticles. In the mercy of the Lord is my merit; I am rich in merits, ſeeing he is rich in compaſſion. As the mercies of the Lord are numberleſs, ſo are my merits. If my conſcience does accuſe me of a great many ſins, where ſins do abound, there does grace much more abound;——ſhall I ſing of my own righteouſneſſes? O Lord, I will make mention of thy righteouſneſs only, which is mine alſo becauſe thou haſt made it ſo.

He ſpeaks ſtill more particularly at the end of his book of Grace and of Free-will. How, ſays he, does the Apoſtle call that crown, which he ſays is laid up for him, a crown of righteouſneſs? Is it not becauſe one may juſtly claim, as a due debt, whatſoever is never ſo freely promiſed? He ſays, in effect, I know whom I have believed; and I am perſwaded, that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him. And becauſe he believed him, who had promiſed him, he does with confidence demand that which had been promiſed. The promiſe is of mercy, but it ought to be performed in juſtice. The crown then which Paul does wait for, is a crown of righteouſneſs, not of his own righteouſneſs, but of God's. For it is but juſt, that he ſhould pay what he owes, and he owes whatſoever he has promiſed. So then, it is the juſtice of God only on which the Apoſtle does rely.——If any one therefore would give our merits their due name, they are certain ſeeds of hope, motives to charity, marks of a ſecret predeſtination, preſages of future happineſs, the way to a kingdom, but by no means the cauſe which does entitle us to it. It is impoſſible to blaſt this proud doctrine of merits of condignity more effectually than Bernard does in theſe words: The ſame ſenſe is repeated in ſome others of his works; as in his firſt ſermon of the Annunciation, and in the fifteenth ſermon on Quis habitat, and eſpecially in his hundred and ninetieth Epiſtle againſt the hereſies of Petrus Abælardus, who was one of the firſt, after the Pelagians, who did oppoſe this doctrine of the Goſpel.

We may obſerve in the mean-time, Firſt, That Bernard was canonized by Alexander the IIId. in the year 1165, viz. twelve years after his death; Secondly, That Pope Innocent the IId. does approve of this Epiſtle of Bernard's againſt Abælardus, as may be ſeen by that Epiſtle which he wrote to the Archbiſhops of Sens and of Rheims, to their ſuffragans, and to Bernard himſelf, and which is the one hundred ninety-fourth amongſt Bernard's Epiſtles. Thirdly, That he was the moſt learned man in his time. Fourthly, That he was the founder of an eminent order, which is diſperſed throughout all the weſtern part of the world, and that a great number of Abbots, Biſhops, and Cardinals, have come out of his ſchool.

Petrus Abbot of Rhemy——at Rheims, and afterwards biſhop of Chartres, wrote theſe words, a little before the year 1170. Tract. de Panibus, cap. 15. That the conſcience of him who does make confeſſion of his greateſt ſins, does ſtand in need of a handful of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt: inſtead of dipping the tip of his finger in water, let him waſh his hands, not in the blood of a ſinner, but in the death of his Redeemer. Let him dip his finger in the place where the nails were. He does afterward compare the blood of Jeſus Chriſt upon the croſs, to that of the lamb which was ſprinkled by the prieſt; and from thence takes occaſion to expreſs himſelf thus: Dip then thy finger, and ſprinkle it againſt the veil of the ſanctuary, to the end that the blood of our Lord's paſſion, may ſerve thee for a key to open the gates of Heaven.

The ſame author ſays alſo in another work of his, lib. 1. de Tabern. Moſaici Expoſit. p. 929, B.P. We muſt every day preſent before God, not our own merit, which is evil, but the privilege of his nature, and his mercy. This is the conſtant doctrine of the XIIth age.

Urban the IVth lived about the middle of the XIIIth age. He is famous for inſtituting the feaſt of the ſacrament, upon the account of a pretended revelation to a certain religious woman of the country of Liege. There is a Commentary of his upon the Miſerere, where he ſhews, that he does follow the ſame doctrine concerning the merit of good works, which was univerſally received before his time. Firſt, He proteſts that he does appeal from juſtice to mercy, according to the exhortation of Anſelme. Secondly, He does confeſs, that there is nothing in him able to merit that glory which he does wait for, (quia igitur ſolvendo non ſum, paſſionis condignæ ad futuram gloriam quam expecto). Thirdly, He declares that mercy has no reſpect to our merits, but only to our miſery. Fourthly, He does make uſe of ſuch terms as theſe: I do not beg for my own merit's ſake, or for thy juſtice or my own,——or for my works ſake, wherein I have miſerably gone aſtray, but for thy great mercy. "Non peto ſecundum meritum meum, vel ſecundum juſtitiam tuam vel meam.——vel ſecundum opera mea, quibus miſer deviavi, ſed ſecundum magnam miſericordiam tuam."

Thomas Aquinas, who was contemporary with this pope, ſpeaks thus, 1, 2. Q. 114. A. 1. No man can make any pretence of merit before God, unleſs by ſuppoſing a divine diſpoſition, by virtue of which man does obtain of God by his operation, quaſi mercedem, in manner of a ſalary as it were, that for which God has given him the power of working. This is the doctrine of the Goſpel. But ſee here the leaven which Thomas adds to it, and which has ſo very much ſowred the whole maſs of the divinity of the Church of Rome. The ſame Thomas in the third article of the ſame queſtion, with ſome other divines in his time, does maintain, That becauſe of the operation, and the grace of the Holy Spirit wrought in the faithful, and from whence good works do proceed, their good works do merit de condigno, which is ſo very weak a foundation, that one might naturally draw from it a doctrine quite contrary to that which Thomas Aquinas has gathered from it. Upon which account alone Vaſquez thought himſelf obliged to refute it. The ſame leaven is to be found alſo in Bonaventure, in Gulielmus Antiſſiodorenſis, and in Gulielmus Pariſienſis. But all this could not hinder, but that the Holy Doctrine ſhould ſtill be preſerved in the choirs and ſchools of the Latin Church.

Ægidius de Roma is very famous for both his birth and dignities, but eſpecially for having undertaken the defence of Thomas. The ſum of which has been critically examined by an eminent divine of Oxford, in a book entituled, Thomæ Reprehenſorium, Auc. Miræ. c. 409. In the mean time he has made no difficulty of deſerting Thomas in the matter of merit. He does expreſly ſay, In 2. Diſt. 27. Q. 1. Art. 3. Firſt, That there muſt be ſome equality between the merit and its reward, and that it is this equality, which is the foundation of juſtice; then he concludes, that where there is not ſuch an equality, there can be no juſtice. Secondly, He maintains that the faithful are conſidered in reſpect of God, as ſervants are in reſpect of their maſters, children of their parents, and the wife of her husband. He could not have ſpoken more expreſly of juſtice or of merit. Thirdly, He ſhews how that out Saviour Jeſus Chriſt declared this truth, Luke xvii. 10. where he ſays, "When ye ſhall have done all thoſe things that are commanded you, ſay we are unprofitable ſervants, we have done that which was our duty to do." For a ſervant cannot do more than he ought, for whatſoever he does, is but his duty. "There is not therefore any thing ſimply juſt, nor ſimply a merit between a maſter and a ſervant, but there may be ſomething like it." This is the opinion of him whom they commonly call the Prince of Divines.

Raymondus de Rochefort Penitentiary of Gregory IX. and the third general of the order of the Jacobins compos'd at the ſame time a ſummary of the caſes of repentance, an abridgment of which may be found in that place, where the author does ſet down the confeſſion of dying perſons, in the ſame terms that Anſelme had preſcrib'd to them. There is no need of repeating them, I ſuppoſe it was made a little after Raymonds's work was publiſh'd, becauſe there are ſo many ancient Manuſcripts of it to be found in libraries.

Durandus Biſhop of Puy, and afterwards Biſhop of Meaux, does ſolemnly confute the doctrine of Thomas Aquinas, about the merit of good works, n. 2. Diſt. 27. q. 2. And he does it ſo notably both by Scripture and reaſon, that the divines of the Church of Rome are forc'd to look upon him as an antagoniſt of their Thomas Aquinas. Yet for all that, this Durandus taught divinity at Rome, and at Paris they had generally a great reverence and eſteem for him.

Moreover it is plain, that this was not his opinion in particular, but was the general belief of moſt people: Firſt, That very year in which Durandus died, viz. in the year 1333. Guilielmus de Montrotier publiſh'd a Treatiſe of his for a direction for Curates, in which theſe words do occur upon the Lord's Prayer; Ch. 2. du traitte 3. part 2. "But why do we rather ſay thy kingdom come, than ſay, Let us come into thy kingdom? I anſwer, that it is to ſhew us, that no man does obtain the glory of Paradiſe by his own merits, but purely by the grace of God, according to that of the Apoſtle, not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us. It is therefore we ſay adveniat, that is to ſay, Let thy grace come unto us, and not, Let us arrive at that; becauſe, as was ſaid, we cannot arrive at it by our own merits."

Secondly, Nicholas de Lyra has made notes upon the whole Bible, and has preſerved that little knowledge of the Holy Scriptures which did remain before the reformation. He wrote theſe words at rhe ſame time, upon the tenth chapter of John. "The glory of Heaven cannot properly be call'd wages, but a kind of free gift, in as much as that only which is paid as a recompence for ſome labour, is called wages. And the reaſon of this is, becauſe that an inheritance is diſtinguiſh'd from wages properly ſo called; juſt as a ſon, to whom the inheritance does belong, ought to be diſtinguiſh'd from a hireling, to whom wages is due. Thus the glory of Heaven is given to the faithful, as an inheritance is to children, and has not therefore the nature of wages."

Thirdly, Simon de Caſſia, who died in the year 1348. ſpeaks after the ſame manner, lib. 6. c. 21. upon thoſe words, "Call the labourers, and give them hire, Jeſus Chriſt, ſaith he, has made uſe of a ſoft word, when he ſaid not, their hire, becauſe no man does merit rewards for his good works, nor indeed the greateſt wages. Upon which account it is, that he does not add their, but hire only, viz. that which he has from all eternity prepar'd to beſtow upon thoſe that work righteouſneſs.

The famous Richard, Archbiſhop of Armagh, in his Treatiſe againſt the errors of the Armenians, ſpeaking of the word merces; does explain himſelf in theſe terms, lib. 12. c. 21. "Seeing ſome certain ſort of recompence ought to be given to any one, not upon the account of the condignity of his work, but upon the account of the promiſe, and ſo alſo of the juſtice of him who gives it, and who promiſed it only in general; let this ſort of recompence be given in any degree whatſoever, one may ſtill call it wages for work."

Bradwardin Chancellor of Oxford, A. 1350. and afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury, does attack the Pelagians with a vaſt volume, wherein he overthrows the doctrine of merit of condignity in ſeveral places, vigorouſly maintaining this propoſition, That merits are not the cauſe of eternal reward, as the doctrine of the Sacred Scriptures and of antiquity.

If any one does ſtill deſire a ſtronger proof than the teſtimony of theſe three perſons does afford, though becauſe writing in the ſame time, in places far diſtant from one another, and upon a popular ſubject, one might eaſily believe them for what they ſay; I may alledge the univerſity of Paris, where Guy a profeſſor and a Carmelite friar, having propounded this propoſition againſt a Jacobin, Man does merit eternal life de condigno, that is to ſay, in ſuch a manner that unleſs it were given him, he would be injured, and God would wrong himſelf, he was forced to recant it as falſe, heretical, and blaſphemous. This was done in the year 1353. by the order of the Chancellor of the Univerſity, and of ſeveral other doctors of the faculty at Paris.

After this recantation, we may ſee many eminent Divines following the opinion of Anſelme and Bernard. One Jacobus de Hauteville profeſſor at Paris, whoſe opinion Marſilius ab Ingen does take notice of. Marſilius ab Ingen does formally maintain that our works whether conſidered in themſelves, or as the fruit of the grace of God working with us, cannot merit ex condigno, which he proves all along by Scripture; and he does determine on the contrary, that whatſoever is called merit, does depend upon the acceptance of God through the merit of Jeſus Chriſt. Gerardus de Zutphen, who died four years before Marſilius, was plainly of the ſame opinion.

Towards the end of that age, Raymondus Jordanus Abbot of Celles in Berry was of this opinion. They publiſhed his books under the name of Idiota, but father Raynaud has made it appear that they were this Raymondus's. Thus he ſpeaks: lib. 2. Contempl. p. 445. T. 5. B. P. Tribulation, ſays he, does not ſuit well with a paſt crime, which thou doſt pardon, nor with the preſent grace of conſolation which thou doſt give, nor with the future glory which thou doſt freely promiſe. Theſe words did diſpleaſe the cenſors of the Bibliotheca Patrum, who therefore put a caute legendum at the margin. They were ſo much afraid, leſt they ſhould wholly attribute the praiſe of our ſalvation to the mercy of God.

The doctrine of Anſelme, was not forgotten in the XVth age, which furniſhes with us with a great many eminent witneſſes, who did oppoſe the merit of condignity.

Petrus de Alliaco Biſhop of Cambray, and afterwards a Cardinal, does maintain that merits are but improperly called the cauſe of recompence.

Gerſon Chancellor of the univerſity of Paris, a perſon admired all Europe over in the time of the council of Conſtance, ſtance, does in his treatiſe of the Art of Dying, put theſe words in the mouth of a dying believer, O Lord, I implore thy pardon, not for any value of my own merits, but by the virtue and efficacy of thy moſt Holy Paſſion, by the which thou wert willing to redeem me, even me that was miſerable, and didſt vouchſafe to purchaſe paradiſe for me by the price of thy blood. The ſame Gerſon when he made his will, concluded it with this verſe, Spes mea tu Jeſus es, gratia, non opera.

Johannes Waldenſis, whoſe works were examined at Rome, and approved of by Pope Martin the Vth, does at the ſame time expreſs himſelf in as preciſe a manner. When he ſaw a great party of Thomas Aquinas's opinion concerning merit of condignity, he expreſſes himſelf thus, " I take him for a moſt Holy Divine, for a moſt faithful catholick, and moſt agreeing with the Holy Scriptures, who does ſimply renounce any ſuch merit, and does avow with the moderation of the Apoſtle and the Scriptures, that no man does ſimply merit the kingdom of Heaven, but by the grace of God, or by the will of him who beſtows it." He proves his opinion by the Sacred Scripture, by the fathers, by the canon of the Maſs, which ſpeaking of the ſaints do import thus much, " Into whoſe company we pray thee to admit us, not regarding our merit, but granting us pardon." And in another place, he ſays, " To the end that we, who do not truſt in the quality of merits, may merit not thy judgment but thy mercy.

I confeſs that Waldenſis, as learned a man as he was, does take thoſe words of the Maſs, non æſtimator meriti, ſed donator veniæ, in a wrong ſenſe. It is certain by the expoſitions of the ages before Waldenſis, that the word meritum does not in this place ſignify good works, but ſins; the ſenſe is, " not regarding our ſins, but granting us pardon for them. Some of thoſe divines have notwithſtanding followed the error of Waldenſis; but if it be a fault, the great approbation which they have for the works of Waldenſis has authorized it. And it is very probable, that if ſo learned a man as Waldenſis could thus make uſe of this place of the Maſs, there were a great many divines in his time, who underſtood it in the ſame ſenſe as he did, more regarding the ſound of the terms, than their true ſignification. However it was, ſee what he adds, " God, ſaith he, according to this article, has no regard to our merit, either of congruity or of condignity, but to his own grace, will, and mercy. It is therefore very injurious to our Saviour, and him, who crowns us ſo freely, to diſpute ſo much about merits, without ſpeaking of his grace."

To theſe I could add many more learned, pious and eminent authors, who oppoſed this doctrine of the preſent Church of Rome concerning merits, as Paul Biſhop of Burgos; the famous Biel, profeſſor of divinity at the univerſity of Tubing; Pope Adrian the VI. Cardinal Cajetan, and Conrade Koelin, &c. But theſe ſuffice to ſhew both the Scripture Doctrine thereof, and the time when the Popiſh Doctrine was invented.

CHAP. V.

1 Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, 2 and joy in our hope, 8 That ſith we were reconciled by his blood, when we were enemies, 10 We ſhall much more be ſaved being reconciled. 12 As ſin and death came by Adam, 17 ſo much more righteouſneſs and life by Jeſus Chriſt. 20 Where ſin abounded, grace did ſuper-abound.

THerefore being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

2 By whom alſo we have acceſs by faith into this grace wherein we ſtand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only ſo, but we glory in tribulations alſo, knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 And patience, experience; and experience hope:

5 And hope maketh not aſhamed, becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghoſt which is given unto us.

6 For when we were yet without ſtrength, in due time Chriſt died for the ungodly.

7 For ſcarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man ſome would even dare to die.

8 But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet ſinners, Chriſt died for us.

9 Much more then being now juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath through him.

10 For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son: much more being reconciled, we ſhall be ſaved by his life.

11 And not only ſo, but we alſo joy in God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom we have now received the atonement.

12 Wherefore, as by one man ſin entred into the world, and death by ſin; and ſo death paſſed upon all men, for that all have ſinned.

13 For until the law ſin was in the world: but ſin is not imputed when there is no law.

14 Nevertheleſs, death reigned from Adam to Moſes, even over them that had not ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adams tranſgreſſion, who is the figure of him that was to come:

15 But not as the offence, ſo alſo is the free gift. For if through the offence of one, many be dead; much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by many one man, Jeſus Chriſt, hath abounded unto many.

16 And not as it was by one that ſinned, ſo is the gift; for the judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto juſtification.

17 For if by one mans offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, ſhall reign in life by one, Jeſus Chriſt.

18 Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation: even ſo by the righteouſneſs of one the free gift came upon all men unto juſtification of life.

19 For as by one mans diſobedience many were made ſinners: ſo by the obedience of one ſhall many be made righteous.

20 Moreover, the law entred, that the offence might abound: But where ſin abounded, grace did much more abound:

21 That as ſin hath reigned unto death, even ſo might grace reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

The Apoſtle having fully proved the doctrine of juſtification by faith, in the former chapters; here in this chapter ſhews,

I. The many bleſſed fruits and effects thereof, as 1ſt. that it produces peace with God through Chriſt, ver. 1. and the Apoſtle amplifies this by ſhewing, that Chriſt is the author of our admittance into this ſtate of juſtification, ver. 12.—(2.) That it produces joy in hope of the glory of God, ver. 2. (3.) Glory in tribulations; which alſo he amplifies by ſhewing the benefit of tribulation, ſuch as patience, ver. 3. Experience and hope, ver. 4. amplified by the ground thereof, which is the ſenſe of God's love, ver. 5. which love of God he proves by his giving Chriſt to die for us, ver. 6. illuſtrates by a compariſon between the love of men to one another. Which is propounded at ver. 7. and applied at ver. 8. (4.) Salvation, ver. 9. proved by an argument from the greater to the leſs, ver. 10. (5.) Joy in God; amplified by the grounds, ver. 11.

II. He lays down a parallel between Chriſt and Adam, ſhewing that Chriſt is more able to ſave, than Adam was to deſtroy; wherein we have (1.) the miſchief that came by Adam; ſuch as ſin and death, which all are guilty of and ſubject unto: as he affirms at ver. 12. and proves in ver. 13, 14. (2.) The diſparity between the miſchief that comes by Adam; and the benefit, that comes by Chriſt, both in reſpect of the perſons; one, the offence of a mere man; the other, the obedience or righteouſneſs of him who is God as well as man, ver. 15. And in reſpect of the extent of the efficacy of their acts; for there one ſin did condemn, here, all the ſins of believers are pardoned, ver. 16. And alſo in reſpect of the different nature of their effects; the reign of death by one; the reign of life by the other, ver. 17. (3.) The ſimilitude (which he now fully proſecutes) between the efficacy of Adam's ſin, and Chriſt's righteouſneſs, laid down in proper terms; where their influence and efficacy is compared, in regard of the extenſiveneſs of their objects; all the natural ſeed of one; and all the ſpiritual ſeed of the other, ver. 18. the intenſiveneſs of their efficacy; one to make ſinners, the other to make righteous, ver. 19. amplified by ſhewing the reaſons why the law was given (ſince ſin was in the world before) namely, that the offence might abound, and that grace might ſuper-abound, ver. 20. From hence he paſſes to metaphorical terms, ſaying, that as the kingdom of original ſin is made the fruit of Adam's tranſgreſſion; ſo the kingdom of grace is made the conſequent of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, ver. 21.

Ver. 21. That as ſin hath reigned unto death, even ſo might grace reign through righteouſneſs unto eternal life, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.] Sin is the tranſgreſſion of the law, this is the Scripture definition, and is commonly defined, quicquid actum, dictum, vel concupitum contra legem Dei, i. e. any thought, word, action, omiſſion or deſire, contrary to the law of God.

The Hebrews have ſeveral words for expreſſing ſin. They think, as for example, that chataath ſignifieth a ſin committed againſt any negative precept, and that ſhegagah ſtands for ſins of ignorance, forgetfulneſs, omiſſion, or inadvertency. But it is certain, that theſe words are often uſed one for another, and that the Scripture ſeldom obſerves theſe diſtinctions, it often calls very great ſins by the name of ſhegaga, & e contra.

The name of ſin is often given to the ſacrifice for ſin, Paul ſaith, that God was pleaſed that Jeſus Chriſt, who knew no ſin, ſhould be our victim of expiation; for he hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, &c. 2 Cor. v. 21.

God was not the author of ſin, or of death; but ſin and death entered into the world by the malice of the Devil. Adam by his diſobedience, has made us all guilty in the eyes of God, his ſin hath merited death for us; he is the reaſon that we are all born children of iniquity, and that we are inclined to evil from his mother's womb. Jeſus Chriſt by his death hath reſtored life to us; by his obedience he has reconciled us to God the father; inſtead of children of wrath, as we were, he has merited for us the character of the children of God. 'Tis by our baptiſm we are admitted to the participation of theſe privileges (ſee our notes, on ch. iii. 28.) and by repentance, that we may recover them again, when we have had the misfortune to loſe them.

The Apoſtle here particularly regards original ſin, which was the ſin of Adam communicated to all his poſterity, and has infected and corrupted it; and therefore, all men are born children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3. for by the fault of one alone ſin came into the world, and death by ſin, Rom. v. 12. And therefore, ſays Job, who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one, Job xiv. 4. See alſo, Pſ. li. 5. And this is the purport of the Apoſtles arguing in this chapter, to ſhew that man is born under the guilt of his firſt parents ſin.

Death in Scripture has three interpretations. There is a death of the body, of which ſort of death the Apoſtle ſpeaks in this Scripture, we are now expounding. There is alſo a death of the ſoul, which is that of eternal damnation, whereas the former is no more than a ſeparation of the ſoul and body at their departure from this life: Again, death is put to ſignify any great danger, or any eminent danger of death, that ſhall threaten us by a plague or any contagious diſeaſe, or by poiſon or any other great misfortune.

By the gates of death the grave is ſignified, and the ſtate of the dead after this life; by the veſſels or inſtruments of death, we underſtand dangerous and deadly weapons; by the bonds and ſnares of death, the ſnares which are laid to deſtroy an enemy; a ſon of death is a man who merits death, or is condemned to death; by the duſt of death is meant the ſtate to which the dead perſon is reduced in the grave. Love is ſtrong as death, ſays Solomon in Cant. viii. 6. or no one can reſiſt love or death.

Man having eaten of the forbidden fruit, incurred the penalty of death for himſelf and all his poſterity. The death of the ſoul was his immediate puniſhment, and he was made ſubject to the death of the body alſo, tho' this was not underſtood by him till a long time after.

It is unqueſtionable, that death was brought into the world by the envy and malice of the devil; ſee Wiſd. iii. 24. and Rom. v. 12. If Adam had continued in the obedience which he owed to his Creator, he might have avoided death, ſays Auſtin, and many other ancient fathers.

Jeſus Chriſt by his death hath ſubdued death, and hath merited for us a bleſſed immortality. By which I do not mean, that the ſoul was before mortal, and by him made immortal, nor that he has merited for us the favour of not dying; for he has not changed the nature of our ſoul, nor thought, fit to exempt us from the neceſſity of dying; but he hath given us the life of grace, and by his reſurrection hath merited an happy immortality for us; provided the merits of his blood and death are applied to us by faith, and the uſe of the ſacraments; and that we, through our own fault, do not fruſtrate his intentions to ſave all men. And herein you have the full extent of the doctrine which the Apoſtle delivers in the text we are now explaining; ſee the Diſſertation on reaſon and paſſion in the notes on the ſeventh chapter.

CHAP. VI.

1 We may not live in ſin, 2 for we are dead unto it, 3 as appeareth by our baptiſm. 12 Let not ſin reign any more, 18 becauſe we have yielded our ſelves to the ſervice of righteouſneſs, 23 and for that death is the wages of ſin.

WHAT ſhall we ſay then? Shall we continue in ſin, that grace may abound?

2 God forbid: how ſhall we that are dead to ſin, live any longer therein?

3 Know ye not that ſo many of us as were baptized into Jeſus Chriſt, were baptized into his death?

4 Therefore we are buried with him by baptiſm into death: that like as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even ſo we alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life.

5 For if we have been planted together in the likeneſs of his death: we ſhall be alſo in the likeneſs of his reſurrection:

6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin.

7 For he that is dead, is freed from ſin.

8 Now if we be dead with Chriſt, we believe that we ſhall alſo live with him:

9 Knowing that Chriſt being raiſed from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10 For in that he died, he died unto ſin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.

11 Likewiſe reckon ye alſo your ſelves to be dead indeed unto ſin; but alive unto God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

12 Let not ſin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof.

13 Neither yield ye your members as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin: but yield your ſelves unto God, as thoſe that are alive from the dead; and your members as inſtruments of righteouſneſs unto God.

14 For ſin ſhall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

15 What then? ſhall we ſin, becauſe we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.

16 Know ye not, that to whom ye yield your ſelves ſervants to obey, his ſervants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of ſin unto death, or of obedience unto righteouſneſs?

17 But God be thanked, that ye were the ſervants of ſin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you.

18 Being then made free from ſin, ye became the ſervants of righteouſneſs.

19 I ſpeak after the manner of men, becauſe of the infirmity of your fleſh: for as ye have yielded your members ſervants to uncleanneſs, and to iniquity, unto iniquity; even ſo now yield your members ſervants to righteouſneſs, unto holineſs.

20 For when ye were the ſervants of ſin, ye were free from righteouſneſs.

21 What fruit had ye then in thoſe things whereof ye are now aſhamed? for the end of thoſe things is death.

22 But now being made free from ſin, and become ſervants to God, ye have your fruit unto holineſs, and the end everlaſting life.

23 For the wages of ſin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

The Apoſtle having mentioned in the former chapter ſeveral inward benefits of juſtification by faith, he now proceeds to mention the outward advantage in reference to life and manners; as namely, that this doctrine of juſtification through Chriſt does not befriend ſin, but on the contrary tends to promote holineſs. This he,

I. Proves promiſcuouſly, ſometimes in reference to one, ſometimes to another; where, (1.) We find an objection ſuppoſed, as if this doctrine promoted licentiouſueſs, ver. 1. (2.) A rejection thereof, with abhorrence and deteſtation. (3.) A confutation of it, becauſe we are dead to ſin; which is propounded in an emphatical interrogation, ver. 2. and proved firſt by the tenor of the baptiſmal engagement, gagement, ver. 3. Secondly, by the ancient rites of baptiſm, ſignifying Chriſt's death and our communion therein with him; and Chriſt's reſurrection, and our conformity therein to him, ver. 4. Thirdly, by our union with Chriſt, both as dying and riſing, by virtue whereof, we are to expreſs a conformity to both, the one being inferred from the other, ver. 5. Fourthly, by the end of our conformity to, and communion with Chriſt in his crucifixion, ver. 6. Fifthly, by a compariſon taken from our natural death; or the analogy between the natural and ſpiritual death, ver. 7. Sixthly, By our conformity to Chriſt's reſurrection, as a conſequent of our conformity to him in his death, ver. 8. amplified by the immortality of Chriſt's life, ver. 9. The end and intent both of his life and death, ver. 10. And the application hereof to our caſe, in both parts, ver. 11.

II. Improves in an exhortation to mortification, or to depoſe ſin from its dominion, to withdraw the members from its ſervice; to dedicate ourſelves to God and to employ our members in his ſervice, ver. 13. enforced by a powerful motive wherein, (1.) Wherein we find the privilege of the renewing ſtriving Chriſtian; not to be under the dominion of ſin. (2.) The reaſon of it, expreſſed both negatively and poſitively, ver. 14. amplified by the removal of a falſe abſurd inference, as if we might thereupon take liberty to ſin; which is firſt propounded, ver. 15. and then confuted, by ſhewing that it deſtroys the ſtate to which we pretend; wherein is laid down a general maxim, evident by the light of nature, and its application is directed to the matter in hand, ver. 16. and to the perſons to whom he wrote, who were the believing Romans, deſcribed by their paſt ſtate in the law of nature, or by what they were before converſion; and by their preſent ſtate under the law of grace, ver. 17. Then the Apoſtle continues his amplification by a true inference from the foregoing diſcourſe; wherein the preſent ſtate of the believing Romans is ſet forth, ver. 18. together with an exhortation, delivered by way of compariſon of what they ſhould now do with what they had done before, ver. 19. which he proves from the equity thereof; becauſe ſin had all their ſervice before, and righteouſneſs had none, ver. 20. from the miſchief that attends the ſervice of ſin; ver. 21. and from the benefits of their preſent ſtate, under the ſervice of God, which is holineſs and happineſs, both in this life and the next; from whence he concludes by ſhewing the different ground of theſe two different ends or rewards; one is of debt, the other of grace, one deſerved, the other freely beſtowed, ver. 23.

Ver. 1.—That grace may abound.] Grace comes from the latin word gratia, and is underſtood ſeveral ways in Scripture, which it can't be improper to take notice of in this place. Therefore

1 Grace ſignifies beauty, good-grace, and agreeableneſs of perſon, as the Pſalmiſt uſes it, ſaying, full of grace are thy lips: Becauſe God hath bleſſed thee for ever, Pſal. xlv. 2. And again the author of the book of Proverbs bids us hearken to the inſtructions of wiſdom, and ſhe ſhall give to our heads an ornament of grace, Prov. iv. 9.

2 Grace is taken for favour and friendſhip; as when Abraham ſaid to the Lord, if I have found favour, [in the original it is grace] in thy ſight, Gen. xviii. 3. Again it is ſaid Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord, Gen. vi 8. And God gave the Hebrews grace in the ſight of the Egyptians, ſo that thoſe lent unto them clothes and Jewels, &c.

3 Grace is taken for pardon, and mercy: To ſhew grace and mercy; to pardon any one, or to reſtore him to our good graces.

4 Grace is underſtood alſo, to ſignify a benefit and a reward, as may be gathered from Eccluſ. vii. 37. and Luke vi. 32, 33, 34. compared with the original.

5 Grace is taken for certain gifts of God, which he beſtows freely on whom he pleaſes; but do not juſtify thoſe to whom he gives them, and tend not directly to their ſanctification. Theſe are what are called graces freely given; ſuch as the gifts of miracles, prophecy, languages, and all the reſt mentioned by the Apoſtle in 1 Cor. xii. 4. And thoſe gifts are intended rather for the advantage of others, than of the perſon who poſſeſſes them; though the good uſe which he makes of them may contribute to his ſanctification. By Grace likewiſe, all ſorts of juſtifying graces are meant, ſome whereof tend to juſtification, others actually juſtify.

There are alſo ſeveral ſorts of inward graces; for the graces of the underſtanding may be called by this name as well as the graces of the will. And there are habitual and actual graces.

Which inward actual graces are diſtinguiſhed by divines, into preventing, exciting, and operating; ſubſequent, aſſiſting, and co-operating. But it is not our purpoſe to enter upon an examination of all theſe graces, which is rather the province of a ſchool-divine. Nevertheleſs I will ſay thus much:

Auſtin defines inward, actual grace, to the inſpiration of love, which prompts us to do, what we know, out of a principal of duty, or religious affection. Legem volunt [Pelagiani] intelligi gratiam—non inſpirationem dilectionis, ut cognita ſancto amore faciamus, que proprie gratia eſt. He alſo ſays, that the grace of God is the bleſſing of God's ſweet influence, whereby we are induced to take pleaſure in that which he commands, to deſire and love it; and that if God does not prevent us with this bleſſing, what he commands, not only is perfected, but is not ſo much as begun in us, lib. 2. ad Bonif. c. 9. num. 21. For

Without the inward grace of Jeſus Chriſt, man is not able to do the leaſt thing, that is good. He ſtands in need of it to begin, continue, and finiſh all the good he does, or rather which God does in him and with him by his grace.

The grace of Jeſus Chriſt is free; it is not due to us: if it were due to us it would be no more grace: It would be a debt, Rom. xi. 6. of itſelf it is ſo powerful and efficacious an aſſiſtance, that it ſurmounts the hardneſs of the moſt rebellious heart, without deſtroying our liberty.

There is no ſubject in divinity, upon which the Chriſtian Divines have written ſo largely, as upon the ſeveral particulars relating to the grace of God. It is a myſtery which the mind of man has been always deſirous to unfold; but notwithſtanding all its efforts, it is always obliged to acknowledge its inſufficiency. The difficulty conſiſts in reconciling the liberty of man with the operation of grace; or the concurrence of man with the aſſiſtance of the Almighty. And who is able to ſet juſt bounds between theſe two things? Who can pretend to know how far the privileges of grace extend over the heart of man, and what the force of that man's liberty is, who is prevented, enlightned, moved, and attracted by grace? Only this we can affirm, that the grace in the text, is the pardon we obtain of our ſins through the merits of Jeſus Chriſt.

CHAP. VII.

1 No law hath power over a man longer than he liveth. 4 But we are dead to the law. 7 Yet is not the law ſin, 12 but holy, juſt, good, 16 as I acknowledge, who am grieved becauſe I cannot keep it.

KNOW ye not, brethren (for I ſpeak to them that know the law) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth?

2 For the woman which hath an husband, is bound by the law to her husband ſo long as he liveth: but if the husband be dead, ſhe is looſed from the law of her husband.

3 So then if while her husband liveth, ſhe be married to another man, ſhe ſhall be called an adultereſs: but if her husband be dead, ſhe is free from that law; ſo that ſhe is no adultereſs, though ſhe be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, ye alſo are become dead to the law by the body of Chriſt; that ye ſhould be married to another, even to him who is raiſed from the dead, that we ſhould bring forth fruit unto God.

5 For when we were in the fleſh, the motions of ſins which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death.

6 But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter.

7 What ſhall we ſay then? Is the law ſin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known ſin but by the law: for I had not known luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.

8 But ſin taking occaſion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiſcence. For without the law ſin was dead.

9 For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died.

10 And the commandment which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death.

11 For ſin taking occaſion by commandmandment, deceived me, and by it ſlew me.

12 Wherefore the law is holy; and the commandment holy, and juſt, and good.

13 Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But ſin that it might appear ſin, working death in me by that which is good; that ſin by the commandment might become exceeding ſinful.

14 For we know that the law is ſpiritual: but I am carnal, ſold under ſin.

15 For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I.

16 If then I do that which I would not, I conſent unto the law, that it is good.

17 Now then, it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in me.

18 For I know, that in me (that is, in my fleſh) dwelleth no good thing: for to will is preſent with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not.

19 For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but ſin that dwelleth in me.

21 I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is preſent with me.

22 For I delight in the law of God, after the inward man.

23 But I ſee another law in my members, warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin, which is in my members.

24 O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!

25 I thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. So then, with the mind I my ſelf ſerve the law of God; but with the fleſh the law of ſin.

In this chapter the Apoſtle proves, that we are not under the law, as he had affirmed before, in ch. vi. 14. becauſe we are dead to it; which he illuſtrates by its oppoſite, i. e. the dominion the law has over a man while alive. —— This is generally propounded at ver. 1. and particularly exemplified in the law of marriage, which obliges during life; but is void by the death of one of the parties, ver. 2. amplified by both an affirmative and negative inference. Then

He propounds the concluſion or point firſt aimed at, i. e. that we are dead to the law, amplified by the means how it comes to paſs, i. e. by the body of Chriſt; the conſequent thereof, which is our marriage or union with Chriſt; the end of this marriage, i. e. fruitfulneſs to God, ver. 4. All which he enforces by the equity thereof, becauſe formerly we were fruitful in evil, ver. 5. and by the end of our deliverance from the law, expreſſed both affirmatively and negatively, ver. 6. Now,

Leſt any ſhould make an ill conſtruction of what had been ſaid at ver. 5. concerning the motions of ſin by the law, he proceeds to ſhew how the law cauſes ſin, not properly and directly, but only accidentally and occaſionally, through the corruption of nature. Where,

1. He confutes a falſe inference or ſuppoſition, as if the law in it ſelf were ſin; which is propounded and confuted by his own experience in the contrary effect it had in him, viz. to diſcover ſin that it may be avoided, and therefore does not of its own nature cauſe it. This is firſt generally aſſerted, and then particularly ſpecified in the caſe of the tenth commandment, ver. 7.

2. He ſhews the manner how the law cauſes ſin, i. e. only occaſionally; and therefore, it is not the fault of the law, but of our own corrupt natures, proved by the caſe or ſtate of ſin without the law, dead. This is firſt generally affirmed, at ver. 8. and then particularly proved by his own experience, how it was with him both before the cloſe application of the law to his conſcience, and afterwards, ver. 9.

3. He ſhews that this event was but accidental and contrary to the original deſign of the law, ver. 10.

4. He ſhews how ſin came to prevail over him, i. e. by its deceitful flatteries, with the conſequent thereof, ver. 11.

5. He lays down an inference or concluſion from the foregoing diſcourſe, concerning the holineſs of the law, ver. 12. amplified by ſhewing how the law cauſes death, (as he had before ſhewn how it cauſes ſin) viz. not directly and properly, but through the horrid nature of ſin, which was ſtirred up by the commandment, ver. 13.

6. He proves directly, that the fault is not in the law, but in himſelf, by the true proper nature and deſign of the law, and his contrary temper or diſpoſition, ver. 14. Whereupon,

He takes an opportunity to deſcribe the conflict betwixt the fleſh and the ſpirit, corruption and grace, in a regenerate man, which combat appears and manifeſts itſelf.

1. Between the practiſe and judgment.

2. Between the affections and practice, both negatively and poſitively, at ver. 15. amplified by an inference touching his conſent to the law, ver. 16. by ſhewing alſo the principle of this irregularity both negatively and poſitively, ver. 17. And finally by an acknowledgment of his utter impotence to do good by the help of nature only, even though he had a will to do good, ver. 18.

3. Between his will and practice, both as concerning good and evil, ver. 19. amplified by a repetition of the principle whence this difference ariſes; (1.) A corrupt principle in reference to the doing of evil, ver. 20. and in reference to the not doing of good, ver. 21. (2.) The gracious principle, ver. 22.

4. Between the law of the members and the law of the mind, with the iſſue, ver. 23. Then

He bewails the remainders of corruption in himſelf, and groans after full deliverance, ver. 24. amplified by a thankſgiving for his deliverance in part, at ver. 25.—— And then concludes by ſhewing the iſſue, and end of this whole conflict, ſincere obedience mingled with ſome failings, ver. ——25. All which will be more particularly underſtood by the diligent reading and conſidering the argument of the following Diſſertation.

A Diſſertation on reaſon and paſſion, in their original and preſent ſtate.

It is plain from this chapter written by the Apoſtle in the perſon of an unregenerated man, that there may be a ſtrife between the corrupt nature, and the motions of God's Spirit in a regenerate man. And conſequently, that there are two different laws or principles in human nature, which, though there ought to be a ſubordination obſerved, are always ſtriving for the maſtery with each other, and that, where our nature is not powerfully aſſiſted, the rebellious principle is too likely to prevail. For,

What man is he, that ſhall deny the perpetual conflict, which we all feel, as the Apoſtle here openly confeſſes of himſelf, that he felt betwixt his reaſon and his paſſions? And,

To paſs over other conſiderations concerning our being and compoſition, how ſome things are common to man with inanimate matter, as gravity, &c. How other things are common to him with vegetables and ſenſitive animals, as his production from ſeed, encreaſe, preſervation by proper matter, and final decay. How he has other properties common only to him and the ſenſitive tribe, as the reception of many external objects and things by his ſenſes, the perception of many affections of his body, with pain or pleaſure, &c. his obnoxiouſneſs to hurts, diſeaſes and the cauſes of death; the enjoyment of the bleſſings and comforts of this life, and beſides his capacity, to contribute to either his enjoyments, or his ſufferings. There are other faculties proper to him alone, as rationality, by the help of which he inveſtigates truth, or probability, and judges whether things are agreeable to them, or not; a liberty in himſelf to act or not to act, and therefore his acts may be morally good or evil; many inclinations and averſions, which prompt him to act this or that way: A ſenſe of great defects and limitations, in the uſe of his rational faculties and powers of action, upon many occaſions, as alſo the knowledge that his paſſions are many times apt to take wrong turns, to grow warm, irregular, and exceſſive, or in other words, man in many reſpects is fallible and infirm. And finally, every man, who underſtands the meaning of the word, deſires to be happy.

In which ſurvey of man, it is eaſy to obſerve, that, tho' he has naturally many affections, which are ſometimes exorbitant, which are properly called paſſions, yet reaſon is his proper diſtinguiſhing characteriſtic. Whence comes it then that our paſſions, blind as they are, ſhould yet hurry us away in direct oppoſition to the authority of our reaſon, inſomuch, that the condition of mankind has been eſteemed a moſt unreaſonable ſervitude, wherein we are tied up to one law, the law of God, and yet unfortunately under the power of another, the law of ſin. For, ſays the Apoſtle, with the mind I ſerve the law of God, but with the fleſh, the law of ſin. Therefore,

I ſhall endeavour to explain theſe words, in ſuch a manner, as to clear them from the imputation of thoſe, who would thence conclude, that God created man for no other end than to divert himſelf with his follies and inconſiſtencies, by ſhewing;

Firſt, What perfection of mind that was which God endued man with at the creation.

Secondly, I will enquire how it came to paſs, that man degenerated from his firſt condition, and wherein the nature of that degeneracy conſiſts.

Thirdly, I will conſider how far the goodneſs of God has put it in the power of mankind to recover their original loſs. And,

Firſt, Man was originally created in uprightneſs; formed after the image of God, who made him a little lower than the Angels, to crown him with glory and worſhip: But from hence,

We can't collect any more than that the human nature, was created as perfect as the very condition of that nature could admit; that he was enlightened in his formation by a degree of reaſon (which is of Divine Extraction) in ſuch a proportion, as was requiſite for a rational creature of ſuch a particular limited capacity; and that he had it in his power to ſecure to himſelf the poſſeſſion and continuance of all that happineſs in which he was placed, and for which he was deſigned. For,

Though man was created a reaſonable creature; he was alſo compounded of paſſions and appetites: And conſequently one great perfection of his nature conſiſted in this, that the inferior faculties were uniformly regular in obedience and ſubordination to the Supreme.

I know that ſome have ſaid, without any exception, That all paſſions are ſimply and in themſelves evil. This I deny, for as much as they are found to have been implanted in human nature for very wiſe and gracious purpoſes; as the ſprings of action, and the inlets of innocent pleaſures, which offer no violence, are no impediment to reaſon, but ſuffer it to exert the full extent of its power, whoſe proper employment ſeems ever to have been the management, regulation, and direction of thoſe motions, which the paſſions began in the mind, but want the ſkill to conduct, to the beſt ends. Theſe being more liable to be irritated and excited, are more proper to impel, while the more ſedate principle, reaſon, ſat as a pilot, at the helm, to keep man ſteady in his courſe, and to ſteer him with the greater ſecurity.—What irregularities, therefore, or diſorders, do we think ever could ariſe from the impulſe of the paſſions, as they were originally implanted in man; when they moved in him no otherwiſe than as the winds in the garden, wherein he was placed, never violent and tempeſtuous, but gently working in the moral world, as the other in the natural, preventing the mind from ſtagnating in reſt and inactivity?

Moreover, ſhall the wiſe Creator, who made all things for the uſe of man, be accuſed of imperfection, in omitting that neceſſary part of the human compoſition, which only was able to make a proper uſe of thoſe things.

If a man had been formed, like the Angels, ſpiritual and incorporeal, he would indeed have been incapable of having any perception of other than ſpiritual pleaſures: But as one part of him only came down from Heaven, and the other was formed out of the duſt of the earth; and as from the union of body and ſoul do reſult bodily inclinations and paſſions; the gratification of them muſt be ſo far from being deſtructive of the conſtitution of human nature, that as I have already noted, one part of man's happineſs muſt neceſſarily conſiſt therein. And,

As it is evident, that man was originally deſigned to be a temporary inhabitant of the earth; it was therefore a gracious proviſion in his Creator, to accommodate him with ſuch faculties, as, in his Divine Wiſdom, he knew were beſt calculated, to make his ſituation agreeable to him, and to ſweeten his journey through this life of affliction and ſorrow. Now,

In this way of reaſoning it appears, that man was created with the faculties of reaſon and neceſſary paſſions; that thoſe paſſions were ſo far from being ſimply and in themſelves evil, that they could never receive ſo full and perfect a gratification, as when they were obedient to the law, and ſubmitted themſelves to the direction of reaſon. And this is ſtill in general the caſe, though things are much altered for the worſe; for, I make no doubt, had man continued in his native perfection, all the pleaſurable enjoyments of his life would have been always co-incident with right reaſon, and agreeable to the practice of virtue. There would always ſubſiſt a perfect harmony between all his faculties; all would mutually conſpire to make his happineſs complete: His reaſon would conſtantly be vigorous, clear and ſerene; his paſſions moderate, contented, pleaſing: Reaſon would never have been found condemning paſſion for exceſs; nor paſſion ever murmuring at the authority of reaſon: There would have been no law in the members warring againſt the law of the mind: No variance betwixt duty and inclination; nor any thwarting and contradiction, betwixt underſtanding and ſenſe. But this perfection was loſt together with, as it was inſeparable from, the innocence of human nature, as I promiſed to ſhew under the ſecond head. For,

How perfect ſoever we may ſuppoſe human nature to have been, and how well ſoever accommodated to perpetuate all the happineſs its capacity could contain; yet it could not be, that it ſhould have been ſuch an abſolute degree of perfection, as that a diminution of it muſt have been a natural impoſſibility: Such a perfection is the ſole prerogative of God, that Infinite Being, who is the ſame yeſterday, and to-day, and for ever.

The Angels, whom we believe to be of a pure ſpiritual ſtate, have tranſgreſſed, and left their own habitation, and are reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, unto the judgment of the great day, Jude 6. Man therefore, who is lower than the Angels by nature, might alſo by tranſgreſſion fall from his ſtate of innocence. Conſequently,

Human reaſon was ſurprized, or rather, over-reached by the ſubtility of a crafty tempter, who having rebelled againſt God, their common Creator, and caſt into hell for his pride and rebellion; and knowing every avenue to the ſoul of man, againſt whom his malice is particularly bent, laid a moſt effectual ſcheme to ruin this new creature, for his ſtratagem took place, and the deſtruction of man's nature was accompliſhed under the ſpacious plea of carrying it to a Divine Perfection.

Thus man was enſnared, and could find no excuſe to extenuate his crime, much leſs to juſtify his conduct. It is true he was tempted; but no temptation could be pleaded in excuſe of a violation of the plain and poſitive command of God; yea, and ſuch a command as was guarded by a terrible denunciation, importing the conſequences of his tranſgreſſion, in order to imprint more deeply on his mind that important truth, which by the Divine Appointment, is founded in the nature of things, that ſin is the never-failing ſource of woe. And thus it happens, that we find when our reaſon is left to itſelf, it is an uncertain, weak, and dubious guide encumbred with difficulties, diſtracted with contrary opinions, frequently aſſenting to what is wrong, and when it preſumes to be the more ſelf-ſufficient, it then is more liable to miſtakes. And,

After all, where reaſon in this corrupt ſtate has made the greateſt improvements, and has been moſt ſucceſsful in its enquiries; where it has been by a tedious courſe of diſcipline directed to the right way, and would conduct us in it; how uncapable is it to influence the will ſo as to make us act where we think aright? We are even then cool to its advice; regardleſs of its admonitions and rebellious to its authority, even in ſuch caſes, where we can't plead that ſome ſtrong temptations have withdrawn us from our allegiance, much more when we are byaſſed and carried in an evil ſtream by the impetuoſity of our rapid paſſions, which riſe with ſo much clamour as to ſilence the ſtill voice of reaſon, whoſe guidance and controul they now are no longer under; for, the law in our members, warring againſt the law of our mind, has brought us into captivity to the law of ſin; the conflict is too unequal betwixt them; we are led captive of our luſts againſt the cleareſt conviction of our minds, and at the ſame time we condemn, and deplore, we ſtill purſue our own infelicity. I know, ſays the Apoſtle, that in me dwelleth no good thing, for to will is preſent with me, but how to perform that which is good, I know not, chap. vii. 18. And this, in truth, is the ſtate of the caſe. This is the wretched condition of humanity in its degeneracy and corruption. But,

The goodneſs of God is ſuch, that he hath in his wrath remembred mercy; and by means that could not have entred into the heart of man to conceive, has put it in our power to recover the original perfection of our nature in ſuch a meaſure, as to prepare us by the improvement of it here, for a more exalted degree of perfection and happineſs hereafter. Which brings me

To conſider how far the goodneſs of God has put it in the power of mankind to recover their original loſs.

The original rectitude and excellency of man's nature, has been before obſerved to ariſe in a great meaſure from the power of his reaſon, and the abſolute ſubjection of his paſſions thereto; and on the contrary, the degeneracy of it to conſiſt in the influence, that the paſſions have gained to enfeeble and pervert his reaſon; whatever therefore can ſupply us with the beſt means, to reduce them as far as poſſible to their ancient ſtate, muſt have a proportionable tendency to rectify the depravity of our nature; which is Chriſtianity. For,

If we ſearch into the records of antiquity, and exhauſt all the writings of the ancient philoſophers, we ſhall find the predominacy of paſſion with a witneſs, ſome of them having argued themſelves out of the belief of the very being of a God, rather than they would part with their darling vices. And the moſt zealous advocates for a deity, among the Heathens, ſuppoſed him to be no better than a more exalted kind of matter. So conſequently ſome ran into open immorality, and taught others ſo to do. The reſt of them had all ſome particular vices to patronize, except Socrates, who nevertheleſs rejected the ſufficience of natural light in the principles and duties of religion, by acknowledging, and greatly lamenting his own ignorance and uncertainty, concerning things of the higheſt and moſt univerſal importance, and ardently wiſhing for what we enjoy, and many neglect, the aſſiſtance of a Divine Revelation. Therefore,

Divine Revelation is the unerring rule, that muſt teach the ſimple and direct the wiſe. By this the ſtudious and the learned may enlarge their thoughts; elevate their contemplation; encreaſe their knowledge, and aſcertain their notions: By this, even the illiterate and mechanick may learn the true ſtate of the ſpiritual welfare, and the whole compaſs of their duty, which is the one thing needful, and therein the meaneſt Chriſtian has the advantage of the moſt able philoſopher. Becauſe the Scriptures enable us to form juſt conceptions of the nature and perfections of God: Inform us of the relations we bear to him, and of the ſervice he requires of us: Teach us that important leſſon to know ourſelves, in regard both to the dignity and infirmities of human nature: Inſtructs us in what our final happineſs conſiſts; by what means it is to be attained; how gracious God has dealt with mankind; and what remains to be done on the part of man. All theſe things are ſo diſtinctly revealed, and the obligation of our duty is ſo certain, and the rule of it ſo complete, that whatever reparation all neceſſary knowledge can make to human reaſon, or whatever forces that can aſſiſt it with all, to reſtore it to its ancient dominion over the paſſions, have been abundantly ſupplied by the law of grace through Jeſus Chriſt. But

What will all this knowledge avail a man, if he does not conform his actions to that knowledge? And how ſhall this be done without the grace of God? Reaſon, alas! Though never ſo well inſtructed, often finds itſelf too feeble and impotent for this great work. It does perhaps clearly enough apprehend and acknowledge the good that ought to be followed, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth in the context; but cannot always determine the will to its purſuit. And "let a man be never ſo well perſwaded of the advantages of virtue, that it is as neceſſary to a man, who has any great aims in this world, or hopes in the next, as food is neceſſary to life; yet, (ſays the great philoſopher Mr. Locke) till he hungers and thirſts after righteouſneſs; till he feels an uneaſineſs in the want of it, his will, will not be determined to any action in purſuit of this confeſſed great good; but any other uneaſineſs he feels in himſelf ſhall take place, and carry his will to other actions. Now,

This uneaſineſs which is ſo apt to be humoured at the expence of our reaſon, is created by a ſtimulation of irregular deſires. And therefore, it will not ſuffice to have the reaſon well and truly informed, unleſs there alſo be laid a reſtraint upon the ſenſual appetites, and by a due influence working upon the paſſions properly ſo called, there is a conviction wrought in the heart, as well as the judgment, and that can only be done by the law of grace, which is moſt prevalent, as much as poſſible, to withdraw the paſſions from the baſe and trifling objects which are here below to fix them principally upon ſuch, as it is our true and everlaſting intereſt to purſue. For, it not only operates upon our minds and conſciences, by enforcing the reaſonableneſs of our Chriſtian duty, but endeavours to engage us in the diſcharge thereof, by the ſure promiſe of a mighty reward, glory, honour, immortality, and eternal happineſs; and by the unreaſonableneſs of ſin and diſobedience, which will certainly bring indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil.

In ſhort, our Holy Religion does by a variety of motions adapted to the paſſions, as well as the reaſon of mankind endeavour to engage them all in the paths and cauſe of virtue, and determines the will by raiſing proportionable deſires or averſions in the mind. And ſo long as theſe deſires and averſions, thus raiſed and directed to their proper objects, are kept alive in our hearts, we ſhall have comparitively no appetite or reliſh for any thing, but what tends to our ſupreme happineſs, no vicious or depraved longings; but ſhall as certainly hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, as they that hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs, are ſure to be filled. Eſpecially,

If we follow thoſe unerring directions which the Chriſtian Goſpel lays down, for the regulation and ſubjection of our ſenſual appetites. So that

If our danger generally ariſes from our ſecurity, our religion preſcribes to us watchſulneſs and prayer; by the one, to ſecure us from ſurprize or deluſion, and by the other, to fix in our minds an habitual ſenſe of our duty, and to render ourſelves fit objects of that grace and aſſiſtance we implore.

If our danger ſhould ariſe from croſſes and temporal vexations; our religion preſcribes us patience, and aſſures us, that they fall out unto the furtherance of the Goſpel; that they are a trial of faith, by which many are purified and tried, who having been a little chaſtiſed, ſhall be greatly rewarded, becauſe God proves them, and if they perſevere with patience, will find them worthy for himſelf.

If proſperity, and an haughty mind, ſhould put us in danger of falling, our religion preſcribes the beſt of remedies, humility and repentance, the one to teach us a due ſenſe of our own unworthineſs, by putting us in mind of our own weakneſs and infirmities; bringing us to a right ſenſe of ourſelves and our dependance upon God, and leading us to a true ſtate and circumſtances of things; and the other we are taught to profit, by the good inſtructions which are founded upon the word of God, to awaken us from the lethargy of ſin, and to entertain ſober thoughts.

If our danger ariſes from an over-fond love of this world; our Holy Religion preſcribes mortification and ſelf-denial; for it is the part of diſcretion, not to give our ſelves leave to wander as far as the wideſt limits even of of lawful pleaſures will permit (for though all things are lawful, ſays the Apoſtle, they may not be convenient) but to reſtrain ourſelves ſometimes, even from innocent enjoyments, that we may be accuſtomed to command our ſelves, and may, by this kind of exerciſe, either prevent all irregular ſollicitations, or, at leaſt, be better enabled to withſtand them. But

The goodneſs and wiſdom of God knowing that we are not of ourſelves able to help ourſelves, has in compaſſion to our infirm nature, promiſed that his Holy Spirit ſhall always be ready to aſſiſt us with his Divine Grace, to enable us to perform what our weakneſs is not able of it ſelf to do.

This is the peculiar advantage of Chriſtianity. This is it which muſt make the knowledge of our duty uſeful, the practice eaſy, and the motives of it prevalent. Becauſe, it is this alone, which can ſtrengthen our reaſon, purify the corrupt part of our natures, refine and exalt our paſſions, and ſpiritualize our affections. This is it which finiſhes the Chriſtian; makes the commandments of God to be his delight, and ſweeter than honey unto his mouth; by which he arrives to the higheſt degree of perfection, that his nature is capable of in this life, which prepares him for his complete happineſs in the regions of bliſs.

Thus in general I have given you the ſtate of human nature, in the time of man's innocency, in his fall, and now in his regenerate ſtate, which apprehend, includes the whole Apoſtolical argument in this chapter. Yet, as there are ſome paſſages, which the curious reader would perchance deſire to be more particularly explained, I ſhall now add ſuch notes, as I apprehend may ſatisfy ſuch a requeſt. And therefore I begin with,

Ver. 1. —— As long as he liveth.] The original reads thus, ἐφ' ὅσον χρόνον ζῇ, where it muſt be obſerved, that the word, ζῇ, i. e. liveth, is not to be referred to ἀνθρώπου, man, but to νόμος, the law, in the preceding context: And therefore, we ought to read it thus, "as long as it liveth, and is in force." And that this latter, is the true meaning and reading of this Scripture, is clear from the following ſimilitude, wherein the Apoſtle compares the law to the deceaſed husband, and us to the ſurviving wife, which would no ways ſuit in the manner by which it is tranſlated in the text, as Grotius, Biſhop Fell, and Biſhop Hall, bare me witneſs.

Ver. 4. —— Dead to the law.] It appears by the context in ver. 2, 3. that the life or death of the perſon under ſubjection, is not the thing taken into conſideration: And, if it were, it would not tend to the inferring the deſigned concluſion. For the Jews could not be ſuppoſed to be dead, but the law, which had the power over them. And though the word ἐθαντώθητε, "Ye are put to death," may make that ſeem poſſible to be here meant; yet the contrary being ſo evident, by the whole drift of the diſcourſe, it is certain thoſe words, here rendred, Ye are put to death to the law, or become dead to the law, muſt be interpreted as a figurative ſpeech, to ſignify, The law is put to death to you, as it is expreſſed at ver. 6. "That being dead wherein ye were held." And here

Note, 1. That the Apoſtle follows both metaphors of the law being dead to us, and our being dead to the law, as ſynonymous phraſes, uſing one indifferently for the other, the ſenſe being the ſame.

2. That in theſe places, he takes the law (i. e. moral) as given by Moſes without the ſpirit, exacting perfect obedience, and giving us perfect knowledge of ſin, without enabling us at all to do the one, or avoid the other; it ſo being the very ſtrength of ſin, 1 Cor. xv. 56.

3. That therefore, he indifferently and equivalently uſeth the phraſes to be "dead to the law," and to ſin; to be under the law, and under ſin; they both, according to this acceptation of the law, living and expiring together. For, it is to be remarked, that the Apoſtle oppoſeth the law, as given by Moſes, without the ſpirit, and with a curſe to the non-performers, Gal. iii. 10. to the law, as given by Chriſt now, with the Spirit, and ability to perform it; ſee chap. viii. 2. and 2 Cor. iii. 6, &c. Moſes writing it on ſtones, the Spirit writing it in the heart; ſee Heb. viii. 10. the one killing, the other giving life; the matter of the law the ſame in both, but the manner diverſe: The law after the manner it was formerly given, being now expired and dead.

4. That to be dead to the law, is to be freed from the law ceremonial, and from the condemnation of the law moral, which we had no ability formerly to keep, being without grace, and ſo ſtood liable to the penalty thereof, till Chriſt delivered us; purchaſing pardon for all our former breaches, and grace for the future obſervance of his holy precepts; ſee ver. 12. By which our walking by the Spirit, and our being filled with charity, and the fruits thereof, and doing all things by the Spirit dwelling in us, which are commanded by the law, the writing of the law becomes void and uſeleſs to ſuch, not only in its condemning power, but in its commands and directing power; not that we are now without law, but that we have it ſuperabundantly written in our hearts.

——That ye ſhould be married to another.] i. e. To Chriſt; ſee 2 Cor. xi. 2. and Eph. v. 29.

Ver. 5.—When we were in the fleſh.] Here by the fleſh, we are to underſtand the judaical ſtate under the law, as the tenor of this whole chapter plainly and clearly directs, i. e. of the ſtate of men conſidered under the law; and we are particularly directed hereto by the oppoſition mentioned to ſubſiſt between being in the fleſh, and being delivered from the law. And it is thus ſtiled being in the fleſh, in oppoſition to being in the Spirit; ſee chap. viii. 9. As Chriſtianity is there called the law of the Spirit of life, ver. 2. and here the newneſs of the ſpirit, in oppoſition to the oldneſs of the letter, in ver. 6. i. e. the Moſaical law. And,

The reaſon of this oppoſition is plain from theſe particulars. The Moſaical precepts were ſeated in the fleſh, and conſiſted in waſhings, circumciſion, bodily reſts, &c. and ſo in like manner the threats and promiſes in that law were alſo carnal: Whereas the precepts of Chriſt ſink deeper into the mind and ſpirit, require the purity of that moſt noble part of man, and accordingly are ſupported with ſpiritual promiſes and terrors. Again, under the covenant of grace, we are aſſiſted by the Spirit of God, to enable our ſpirits to love and obey his commands through Jeſus Chriſt; but the law, having none of that Divine ſtrength added to it, may juſtly be called the being in the fleſh, in oppoſition to the Goſpel of Chriſt. To which may be added, That one eminent effect of the ſpirit's deſcending, was the commiſſioning the Apoſtles for their office of preaching to the Gentile world the remiſſion of ſins upon repentance; and, in oppoſition to that, the law allowing no place for repentance, for any preſumptuous ſin, but inflicting preſent puniſhment upon the offender, that ſtate may be properly ſtiled being in the fleſh

Ver. 7.—Is the law ſin? God forbid.] The Apoſtle denies that the law of Moſes is the cauſe of ſin. For in this Scripture he teaches us only, That he who commits a ſin, which he knows is forbidden both by the revealed will of God, as well as by the former law of nature, is guilty of a greater tranſgreſſion, than he who commits the ſame ſin, knowing only the law of nature. In which ſenſe indeed, the revealed law of God may be ſaid to be the occaſion of making men more guilty; not that the law, conſidered in itſelf, does this, but the wickedneſs of men, who break the law by doing that which they know is therein forbid. The Apoſtle inſtances or exemplifies his argument in covetouſneſs, "I had not known, ſays he, that luſt, or deſire had been a ſin, if the law, we have received by Moſes, had not ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet." That is, he who knows covetouſneſs is forbidden by the revealed law of God, is guilty of a greater evil or ſin, than he, who knows only the law of nature, and allows in himſelf the ſame covetous deſires. Whence Obſerve, that the laws of God extend much farther than human laws poſſibly can. Human laws do not denounce any penalty againſt him, who entertains ſinful luſts and deſires in his mind, becauſe our ſecret thoughts are hid from men: But they being as perfectly open to God, as our publick actions are known to men, he accounts him a tranſgreſſor, who indulges himſelf in thinking, and conſents to evil and wicked thoughts and deſires.

—I had not known ſin, but by the law.] This Scripture ſhould be well conſidered before the reader draws any concluſion from it. At firſt ſight it appears to be ſpoken by the Apoſtle of himſelf; but this is the rock to be avoided. For theſe words are certainly the perſonating of an impious objector, who ſpeaks and diſputes thus, and not of the Apoſtle himſelf. And this may be proved as well from the ſame kind of diction or ſpeech in almoſt all others, as more immediately from the character we read of him in the other parts of Holy Writ. Thus at ver. 1. we read, "I indeed once lived without the law," which can't with the leaſt appearance of truth be affirmed of this Apoſtle, who was born and brought up a Jew, and in a profound knowledge of the law of Moſes; but it muſt be the perſonating of a man firſt conſidered without, then with the law; ſee Marcus Eremita de Bapt. p. 921. and Theophylact. And ſo in like manner we are to underſtand that when he ſays, I had not known ſin, but by the law, he ſpeaks not of himſelf, but of ſome other perſon, by an allowable figure of ſpeech to blame, or note a fault in others: Becauſe then, by the putting it in this diſguiſe, and faſtning it on ones own perſon, it is more likely to be well taken, and well obſerved by thoſe to whom the application properly belongs; for it is true that a man can ſee a mote in his brother's eye, when he can't ſee the beam in his own eye.

Beſides, when Paul wrote this chapter he was reformed, regenerate perſon, whoſe character as deſcribed in Gal. v. 24. Rom. vi. 2. viii. 1. vi. 18. and in many other places can in no wiſe be reconciled to the paſſages in this chapter, at ver. 8, 9, 14, 20, 23, 25. if we ſuppoſe that the Apoſtle ſpeaks here of himſelf in the firſt perſon, and not of ſome unregenerate perſon: And indeed unleſs ſinning againſt conſcience be the only way of alleviating (and not aggravating) ſin, it is impoſſible, that the doing that ill he would not, and the not doing that good he would; ver. 19, 20. can be deemed a fit ingredient in the character of a regenerate man: And therefore can't in any reaſon be thought to be the Apoſtles deſcription of himſelf, or of any regenerate perſon, or good Chriſtian.

—I had not known luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.] The original word for luſt is ἐπιθυμία ſignifies properly coveting, and means the ſin forbidden by the tenth commandment, as the Apoſtle has alſo explained by the following words, Thou ſhalt not covet. But how the Apoſtle can truly ſay, That he had known it had been a ſin, if the law had not told him ſo, will be the whole difficulty to be accounted for, which I ſhall do in this manner.

Here it muſt alſo be premiſed that, as is noted above, the Apoſtle does not write in his own or any other regenerate perſon, but in one regenerate, in the perſon of a Jew, or any other man in general: And then it is not only true of this, but of all the other commandments (of which this one may be brought as a ſingle inſtance) that the knowledge of ſin is by the promulgation of the law, which forbids it. Yet there may alſo appear, upon enquiry, into the Jewiſh doctrine or Phariſaical inventions, ſome reaſon why the Apoſtle choſe this rather than any other commandment to inſtance his meaning, where let it be obſerved, That the Jews before, and in the days of Chriſt our Saviour, ſeeing that there was no puniſhment judicially appointed for thoughts or deſires, whether unclean, or covetous, had reſolved this to be no ſin; and conſequently that the tenth commandment was but a moral proverbial eſſay or counſel, and no precept of God, or of nature, affirming that, except in the caſe of the worſhip of falſe gods, no ſin is committed by the bare will, without ſome actual commiſſion conſequent thereto. For the truth of which aſſertion againſt the Jewiſh morals, I refer you to thoſe noted Jewiſh authors, Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and Joſephus, who all will confirm the ſame; well therefore might the Apoſtle ſay of any Jew brought up under ſuch maſter or teachers, That he had not believed coveting to be a ſin, had not the more exact conſideration of the direct words of the law aſſured him that it was ſo.

Ver. 8.——But ſin taking occaſion.] This is excellently diſtinguiſhed by the Apoſtle between the cauſe and occaſion of Sin. For, the law is not the cauſe; but only the occaſion: As wine is the occaſion not the cauſe of drunkenneſs, and beauty of luſt.

Ver. 11. For ſin taking occaſion, &c.] See the preceding note.

Ver. 12.—The law is holy; and the commandment holy, juſt, and good.] i. e. The law of God in itſelf, and in its own nature is holy, juſt, and good.

—Holy.] Becauſe it enjoins all acts of piety and worſhip towards God; as the adoration of his majeſty, imitation of his purity, reſignation to his providence, and obedience to his commands.

—Juſt.] Directing us in our duty to our fellow creature, in every capacity and relation wherein we ſtand, and obliges us to walk by that rule of equity, to do to others, as we would they ſhould do unto us.

—Good.] Both in reſpect to the man that keeps, as bringing him to his greateſt happineſs: And in reſpect of God that gave it, commanding nothing but what is influential upon our well being here and hereafter, for our good and the glory of God.

This is what I underſtand by holy, juſt, and good in this place; though ſome refer the epithet holy to the ceremonial law, juſt to the judicial law; and good to the moral; but the greateſt part, and the moſt learned of the commentators prefer the firſt expoſition.

Ver. 23.—Another law in my members, &c.] See the Diſſertation above on reaſon and paſſion.

CHAP. VIII.

1 They that are in Chriſt, and live according to the ſpirit, are free from condemnation. 5, 13 What harm cometh of the fleſh, 6, 14 and what good of the ſpirit: 17 and what of being Gods children, 19 whoſe glorious deliverance all things long for, 29 it was before hand decreed from God. 38 What can ſever us from his love.

THere is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit.

2 For the law of the Spirit of life, in Chriſt Jeſus, hath made me free from the law of ſin and death.

3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh, God ſending his own Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh:

4 That the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit.

5 For they that are after the fleſh, do mind the things of the fleſh: but they that are after the Spirit, the things of the Spirit.

6 For to be carnally minded, is death; but to be ſpiritually minded, is life and peace:

7 Becauſe the carnal mind is enmity againſt God: for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

8 So then they that are in the fleſh, cannot pleaſe God.

9 But ye are not in the fleſh, but in the Spirit, if ſo be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt, he is none of his.

10 And if Chriſt be in you, the body is dead becauſe of ſin; but the Spirit is life, becauſe of righteouſneſs.

11 But if the Spirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, dwell in you; he that raiſed up Chriſt from the dead, ſhall alſo quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

12 Therefore brethren, we are debters not to the fleſh, to live after the fleſh.

13 For if ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live.

14 For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God.

15 For ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

16 The Spirit it ſelf beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God.

17 And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joynt-heirs with Chriſt: if ſo be that we ſuffer with him, that we may be alſo glorified together.

18 For I reckon, that the ſufferings of this preſent time, are not worthy to be compared with the glory which ſhall be revealed in us.

19 For the earneſt expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God.

20 For the creature was made ſubject to vanity, not willingly, but by reaſon of him who hath ſubjected the ſame in hope:

21 Becauſe the creature it ſelf alſo ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

22 For we know that the whole creation groneth and travaileth in pain together until now:

23 And not only they, but our ſelves alſo, which have the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, even we our ſelves grone within our ſelves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

24 For we are ſaved by hope: But hope that is ſeen, is not hope: for what a man ſeeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25 But if we hope for what we ſee not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26 Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: but the Spirit it ſelf maketh interceſſion for us with gronings which cannot be uttered.

27 And he that ſearcheth the hearts, knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, becauſe he maketh interceſſion for the ſaints, according to the will of God.

28 And we know that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe.

29 For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt-born among many brethren.

30 Moreover, whom he did predeſtinate, them he alſo called: and whom he called, them he alſo juſtified: and whom he juſtified, them he alſo glorified.

31 What ſhall we then ſay to theſe things? If God be for us, who can be againſt us?

32 He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things?

33 Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that juſtifieth:

34 Who is he that condemneth? It is Chriſt that died, yea rather that is riſen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who alſo maketh interceſſion for us.

35 Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? ſhall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword?

36 (As it is written, For thy ſake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as ſheep for the ſlaughter)

37 Nay in all theſe things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us.

38 For I am perſwaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things preſent, nor things to come,

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord.

Here in this chapter, after the Apoſtle, in the former part of this Epiſtle, had deſcribed the deplorable ſtate of man in his corrupt nature, adds great matter of conſolation and triumph.

I. Of conſolation againſt the two great evils of ſin and ſuffering; wherein the matter of the conſolation, viz. That there is no condemnation, is propounded, in an inference from the former doctrine of juſtification by faith; amplified by a deſcription of the perſons to whom it belongs, who are deſcribed by their ſtate, (in Chriſt,) and both negatively and poſitively, by their converſation or courſe of life, ver. 1. and then confirmed, becauſe they are delivered from the law of ſin and death; wherein they deliver, and the deliverance it ſelf, ver. 2. is amplified and explained, by ſhewing, (1.) Negatively, that it is not wrought by the law, and (2.) Poſitively, By the incarnation and paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt; and thirdly, by the benefit we receive thereby, which is the condemnation of ſin, ver. 3. Then he explains the end of our deliverance, that we might have grace to fulfil the law of God by firſt propounding, and then amplifying it by the qualifications of the perſons to whom this privilege belongs, ver. 4. All which he proves, viz. that theſe only are the perſons who can ſincerely obey the law, and conſequently ſhall partake of the benefit of juſtification, (1.) By the contrary diſpoſition of carnal and ſpiritual perſons, ver. 5. and, (2.) By the contrary iſſue and event that will betide the one and the other, life to one, and death to the other, ver. 6. proved by their oppoſition to God, and to his law.

Here follows a concluſion, or conſequence from the foregoing diſcourſe, eſpecially from the former verſe, ver. 8. And then,

The Apoſtle applies this comfort of a juſtified ſtate to the Romans, illuſtrated by the oppoſite miſery of thoſe that have not the ſpirit, ver. 9. and by the happineſs of thoſe, who have Chriſt in them; in which we find, (1.) A ſuppoſition, (2.) A conceſſion, that death happens to believers, as well as others, (3.) A correction of that conceſſion, that nevertheleſs the believers are certain to be raiſed and to live with Chriſt for ever, ver. 10. which he amplifies or illuſtrates by the efficient cauſe of this reſurrection, the Spirit of Chriſt; and that he will raiſe up all the members he proves, becauſe he hath raiſed up the head, ver. 11. Where

He introduces an exhortation by way of inference from the fore-mentioned privileges, wherein we read of debtors, and alſo of creditors expreſſed negatively, not the fleſh; and there we likewiſe find the contrary implied, together with an exhortation, not to live after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit, ver. 12. inforced by the miſchief of the one, and benefit of the other, ſhewing that one ſhall die, and the other ſhall live —— This is firſt propoſed in ver. 13. and then, as to the latter branch proved, at the ſame time propounding the qualification and privilege in ver. 14. and then proving them by a reaſon expreſſed both negatively and affirmatively, by an effect of the Spirit in them to call God, Father; ver. 15. amplified by the ground thereof, the witneſs of the Spirit. Wherein the witneſſes, and the thing witneſſed, namely, that we are the children of God, is propounded at ver. 16. and amplified by ſhewing the dignity and privilege of ſuch children, both in regard of the dignity itſelf, which is to be heirs; the excellent nature of this inheritance, and the comfort it affords againſt all manner of adverſities, ver. 17. Then

The Apoſtle ſpeaks in courſe of the other conſolation, which is againſt the evils of ſuffering; for, as in the latter part of the 17th verſe, he had made a patient enduring of ſufferings to be a condition of our glory, ſo here he (1.) gives a reaſon why we ſhould not diſlike this condition (which is alſo a ground of comfort againſt afflictions) becauſe the good promiſed us far greater than the evil endured; wherein we find a compariſon of the ſufferings and glory, and the incomparable pre-eminence of the latter above the former, ver. 18. Whereupon he ſhews the excellence of this glory by an example, to move us to a patient expectation thereof. And (1.) we have the example recited, in which it is affirmed, that the creatures expect the revelation of the Sons of God, ver. 19. becauſe their preſent ſtate is diſordered. Where it is at the ſame time ſhewn, how it came into that ſtate; its hope of getting out from it, ver. 20. the ground of this hope, which is God's purpoſe of deliverance, ver. 21. and what ſenſe the creature has of its preſent condition, ver. 22. (2.) He applies the example to believers to direct them to wait patiently for their final happineſs; wherein we find the practice or diſpoſition of the children of God, compared with the inclination of the creatures, groaning and waiting, and the reaſons of this practice, becauſe we have the firſt-fruits of the ſpirit, ver. 23. and becauſe we are not in actual poſſeſſion, but only in hope. And here he deſcribes the preſent ſtate of the believer in hope, which he proves both from the nature of hope, and from the abſurdity of the contrary, ver. 24.

This application is followed with an exhortation to a patient waiting for this glory to come, enforced both from the nature of hope, ver. 25. and from the help of the Spirit, which is firſt only generally aſſerted, then he evinceth the neceſſity thereof. Thirdly, he declares in what manner the Spirit helps us; and laſtly, he ſhews the ſucceſs of this privilege, to be known and accepted, ver. 27. Then

He ſtarts another argument to comfort and encourage us under afflictions, taken from the profit it brings, which is firſt propounded; and in this propoſition are included both the privilege, and a deſcription of the perſons to whom it belongs; deſcribed, firſt, by their acts towards God, and by God's act or work upon them, ver. 28. and is then proved by God's predeſtinating them to a conformity to Chriſt, with the end and ground of it, ver. 29. and by the method and courſe he takes to bring them to glory, which is by ſeveral ſteps and degrees, with reſpect to his eternal purpoſe, ver. 30. And hence follows,

The general application of the premiſes, in the triumph of believers over ſin and the croſs, and all the enemies of their ſalvation. For, the Apoſtle, having muſtred an army of comforts and encouragements both againſt imbred corruption, and outward affliction, here takes the field, and dares even hell itſelf to the encounter. And he manages this part of his diſcourſe by ſhewing, firſt, the ground of our confidence, ver. 31. for that God will certainly give us all neceſſary good, proved by an argument from the greater to the leſs, ver. 32. Thereby arming us againſt the temptations that may ariſe from the want of good, and from the preſence of evil; in relation to which, ſays he, two things may be feared, (1.) Accuſation before the juſtice of God; againſt which he arms us by a conſideration of our juſtification by God, ver. 33. And (2.) Condemnation in the day of the Lord, againſt which he arms us by the conſideration of Chriſt's mediation between God and man; wherein we find a triumphant challenge grounded upon the ſaid mediation of Chriſt, diſtributed into theſe four parts thereof, his death, reſurrection, exaltation, and interceſſion, ver. 34. To which

He adds, that we ought never to be afraid of violence or death, becauſe they cannot deprive us of the love of Chriſt. And he propoſes this in a double interrogation; in the former by way of challenge, and in the latter by an enumeration of evils, ver. 35. Then he proves it by the example of the ſufferings of the Church of God in former times, that thoſe ſufferings were not a token of God's diſpleaſure, ver. 36. and by the iſſue of our troubles, which he declares to be abſolute victory, notwithſtanding the many and powerful attempts of our ſpiritual enemies, ſo long as we put our full truſt and confidence in God and Chriſt our Saviour, ver. 37, 38, 39.

Ver. 1. Now.] Under the law of grace, by which we are in Chriſt Jeſus.

——— No condemnation.] i. e. No ſin, or, as ſome think, no puniſhment due to ſin. The ſenſe therefore of theſe words, There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Chriſt Jeſus, runs thus, They who are ingrafted into Chriſt by baptiſm, and regenerate thereby, altho' as yet they in the fleſh ſerve the law of ſin, ch. iv. 25. have nevertheleſs no ſin in them, nor are they any longer ſubject to the puniſhment due to ſin ſo long, as they do not fall into actual tranſgreſſion, as the following words explain, ſo long as they walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit.

——— Who walk not after the fleſh.] In thoſe ſins and vices mentioned by the ſame Apoſtle in Galatians v. or, in a ſtate of unregeneration.

——— But after the Spirit.] According to the preſcription of the law of grace through Jeſus Chriſt, which law of God is written not in ſtone, but on our hearts by the Spirit of God. Therefore to walk after the Spirit, is to walk as the Spirit of God directs us, in Chriſt Jeſus; ſee ver. 2.

Ver. 2. —— The law of ſin and death.] i. e. The law of Moſes, by which ſin was made known to the world, and by ſin came death, for the wages of ſin is death, vi. 23.

Ver. 3. —— What the law could not do.] i. e. To give us freedom from ſin and death, becauſe, mankind was not yet put into a capacity to act by the Spirit, but were ſtill corrupt and carnal under the oppreſſion of the ſin of their firſt parents.

Ver. 3. —— In the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh.] Made in the form of man, to be ſubject to all the faculties and ſenſes of an human body, or made a mortal body, differing nothing from other men, but in innocence alone.

——— And for ſin.] i. e. By his ſacrifice for ſin.

Ver. 4. That the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us.] Or, that we might fulfil the righteouſneſs, or God's commandments preſcribed in the law of Moſes.

——— Who walk not, &c.] See the notes on ver. 1.

Ver. 5. For to be carnally minded, &c.] See the notes on ver. 1.

Ver. 8. —— They that are in the fleſh.] The word fleſh here is to be taken figuratively, ſignifying (not a natural body, but) a worldly, carnal life, and the being in a corrupt ſtate and condition.

——— Cannot pleaſe God.] So long as ſuch a one continues to be carnally minded, or, in a corrupt ſtate.

Ver. 9. —— The Spirit of God.] The ſame as is here alſo called the Spirit of Chriſt, the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter, who proceedeth both from the Father and the Son.

Ver. 13. —— If ye through the Spirit, &c.] Either the Spirit of God, who is the agent in our faith and good works, and ſo, as here particularly meant, in the work of our mortification; or, the ſpirit of man, who is paſſive, and willingly executes the good motions of the Spirit of God.

Ver. 15.—The ſpirit of bondage.] The law of Moſes; ſee Gal. v. 1. iv. 3, 24, &c. Heb. ii. 15. Becauſe this law did not exempt the Jews from the death which Adam's fall had brought upon them, but rather made that death abound, and them obnoxious to it upon many freſh accounts, as the Apoſtle teacheth here in chap. v. 20. and vii. 9, 10.

Ver. 15.—The ſpirit of adoption.] The law of grace, by which we are freed from the bondage of ſin, and are adopted children of God in Chriſt Jeſus our Saviour.

Ver. 16. The ſpirit itſelf beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, &c.] i. e. The Holy Ghoſt concurs with our minds and conſciences, when we perform the will of God, to inform us, that God receives us into his favour, for our complying with his will.

Ver. 24.—We are ſaved by hope.] i. e. We are at prepreſent ſupported by hope; or, all the ſalvation we have in our preſent ſtate, is in hope, not in hand; in expectation, not in poſſeſſion.

Ver. 26.—The ſpirit alſo helpeth our infirmities.] The Spirit of God enables thoſe that are willing to live according to the will of God.

Ver. 28.—All things.] Or diſpenſations of God's providence whatſoever, whether they be ordinary afflictions, or extraordinary trials, which do befal the children of God in this life, ſhall certainly be directed by his wiſdom, and over-ruled by his power and goodneſs, for the temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal good of his children and people, even of ſuch as ſerve him faithfully. But

What we are more particularly to underſtand here by all things, are the afflictions of the ſaints: Though it can't be amiſs to include all providential occurrences and diſpenſations, all ſtations and conditions whatever, which, be they in proſperity or adverſity, health or ſickneſs, liberty or captivity, life or death, God's glory and his childrens good, ſhall be certainly furthered and advanced by it.

——The called according to his purpoſe.] Which purpoſe of God, with reſpect to the ſalvation of mankind, ſeems to be his determining to ſave, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, all, who upon the preaching of the Goſpel, ſhould receive and embrace it, and comply with the terms, on which ſalvation is offered, living a ſober, righteous, and godly life. Theſe only God fore-knew, fore-approved, predeſtinated and called; and they following his call by living up to the terms of ſalvation, he will juſtify, pardon, and in due time make them happy with himſelf.

CHAP. IX.

1 Paul is ſorry for the Jews. 7 All the ſeed of Abraham were not the children of the promiſe. 18 God hath mercy on whom he will. 21 The potter may do with his clay what he liſt. 25 The calling of the Gentiles, and rejecting of the Jews were foretold. 32 The cauſe why ſo few Jews embraced the righteouſneſs of faith.

I Say the truth in Chriſt, I lye not, my conſcience alſo bearing me witneſs in the Holy Ghoſt,

2 That I have great heavineſs and continual ſorrow in my heart.

3 For I could wiſh that myſelf were accurſed from Chriſt, for my brethren, my kinſmen according to the fleſh:

4 Who are Iſraelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God, and the promiſes;

5 Whoſe are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the fleſh Chriſt came, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever. Amen.

6 Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect. For they are not all Iſrael, which are of Iſrael:

7 Neither becauſe they are the ſeed of Abraham, are they all children: but in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called:

8 That is, They which are the children of the fleſh, theſe are not the children of God: but the children of the promiſe are counted for the ſeed.

9 For this is the word of promiſe, At this time will I come, and Sara ſhall have a ſon.

10 And not only this, but when Rebecca alſo had conceived by one, even by our father Iſaac,

11 (For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpoſe of God according to election might ſtand, not of works, but of him that calleth)

12 It was ſaid unto her, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger.

13 As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated.

14 What ſhall we ſay then? Is there unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid.

15 For he ſaith to Moſes, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compaſſion on whom I will have compaſſion.

16 So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy.

17 For the ſcripture ſaith unto Pharaoh, Even for this ſame purpoſe have I raiſed thee up, that I might ſhew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.

18 Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will, he hardneth.

19 Thou wilt ſay then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath reſiſted his will?

20 Nay but, O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, Why haſt thou made thus?

21 Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the ſame lump to make one veſſel unto honour, and another unto diſhonour?

22 What if God, willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction:

23 And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the veſſels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory?

24 Even us whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but alſo of the Gentiles.

25 As he ſaith alſo in Oſee, I will call them my people, which were not my people: and her beloved, which was not beloved.

26 And it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, Ye are not my people; there ſhall they be called the children of the living God.

27 Eſaias alſo crieth concerning Iſrael, Though the number of the children of Iſrael be as the ſand of the ſea, a remnant ſhall be ſaved.

28 For he will finiſh the work, and cut it ſhort in righteouſneſs: becauſe a ſhort work will the Lord make upon the earth.

29 And as Eſaias ſaid before, Except the Lord of ſabaoth had left us a ſeed, we had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrha.

30 What ſhall we ſay then? That the Gentiles which followed not after righteouſneſs, have attained to righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs which is of faith:

31 But Iſrael, which followed after the law of righteouſneſs, hath not attained to the law of righteouſneſs.

32 Wherefore? Becauſe they ſought it, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law: for they ſtumbled at that ſtumbling-ſtone;

33 As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion a ſtumbling-ſtone, and rock of offence: and whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed.

This chapter contains a vindication of the doctrine of juſtification by faith, from ſome objections, which the Apoſtle apprehended the Jews might make againſt it: As,

Obj. If none are juſtified but by faith, then the Jews can't be juſtified; becauſe they don't believe in Chriſt; but that can't be, becauſe then the promiſes of God would be fruſtrated, which are all made to them, who are the ſeed of Abraham. To which he anſwers,

Anſw. That though the Jews be rejected for their unbelief, yet the promiſes ſtand firm to the ſpiritual ſeed of Abram. Upon which occaſion he falls into the doctrine of predeſtination, and the rejection of the Jews, and calling of the Gentiles; which, becauſe it was a very offenſive ſubject to the Jews; therefore he ſweetens it with a preface, ſhewing his exceeding grief for their condition, thereby to prepare their minds to the patient reading of the ſame. So then in this chapter are two parts;

1 A preface. which contains a ſolemn proteſtation of the truth of what he here affirms, ver. 1. And of his grief for the Jews rejection. He begins with a ſolemn affirmation, ver. 2. which he proves to be ſincere by an effect of his love towards them, viz. his wiſh to be accurſed for them; then by his relation to them, ver, 3. and by acknowledging their privileges. The whole amplified by a deſcription of Chriſt, and a doxology or aſcription of praiſe unto him, ver. 4, 5.

2 The diſcourſe itſelf, concerning the ſtability of the promiſes notwithſtanding the rejection of the Jews, and to reconcile theſe together, wherein we find a denial of their conſequence, that if the Jews are rejected, the promiſes fail, ver. 6.—and the reaſons of this denial; becauſe the promiſe is not made to all that are Iſraelites according to the fleſh, ver. 6. proved by a double inſtance, (1.) Of Abraham's children, propoſed, ver. 7. expounded, ver. 8. and confirmed by a teſtimony of Scripture, ver. 9 (2.) Of Iſaac's children by Rebecca; where (1.) their equality and likeneſs in reſpect of their parents, ver. 10. the time to which the following difference relates, and their manners, (2.) the cauſe of the difference between them, God's purpoſe according to election; amplified by the cauſe of the election, expreſſed both negatively and poſitively, ver. 11. (3.) The difference itſelf in reſpect of ſpiritual advantages, ver. 12, confirmed by a teſtimony of Scripture, ver. 13. Then we have an anſwer,

(1) To an objection againſt the foregoing doctrine; where the objection is propounded; if God makes ſuch a difference between them that are ſo alike, then he muſt be unjuſt. To which he anſwers by his uſual deteſtation, ver. 14. and by way of proof, both as to election and reprobation, ſaying, That in reference to election he is not unjuſt in chooſing any, becauſe it is an act of his ſovereign will and pleaſure, as appears by God's own words to Moſes, ver. 15. amplified by an inference concerning the cauſe of election, expreſs'd both negatively and poſitively, ver. 16. and that in reference to reprobation alſo, he is not unjuſt in rejecting others of equal condition with the elect; becauſe it is for the glory of his power and juſtice, as appears in the inſtance of Pharaoh, propounded in a teſtimony of Scripture, ver. 17. and amplified by the concluſion, in reference to both branches, That all is to be reſolved into the ſovereign will of God, ver. 18.

(2.) To a cavil againſt this laſt mentioned doctrine; where this cavil is propounded, ver. 19. and anſwered by a ſharp rebuke of the caviller's impertinence; amplified by a ſimilitude of the potter's power over his clay, ver. 20, 21. and by ſhewing God's holy ends in both theſe diſpenſations, ver. 22, 23. Becauſe the promiſe was made to the elect of all nations, to the believing Gentile as well as Jew, ver. 24. which he proves by two teſtimonies out of the Prophet Hoſea; wherein is deſcribed the ſtate of the Gentiles both before and after their calling, ver. 25, 26. And out of Iſaiah, that not all, but ſome of them only, yea very few of the Jews, ſhall be ſaved, and the greateſt part rejected, ver. 27—29. Then

He aſſigns the reaſon of a contrary diſpenſation, wherein we find a queſtion, and an anſwer in reference to the Gentiles, firſt, that they have attained righteouſneſs, proved by this reaſon, becauſe they ſought it by faith, ver. 30. and ſecondly, in reference to the Jews, That they have not attained righteouſneſs, ver. 31. proved by the reaſon; becauſe they ſought it not in Chriſt, but elſewhere, ver. 32. which is amplified by a teſtimony of the Iſaiah; concerning the infidelity of the Jews; which he illuſtrates by the contrary, which is the benefit of believing in him, ver. 33.

Ver. 3.——Accurſed.] i. e. Separated, provided that would attone for the ſins of my nation.

Ver. 4.—And the glory.] See 1 Sam. iv. 21.

——Covenants.] The obligations which God at ſundry times, and in divers manners, had made known to his people by his ſervants the Prophets, Heb. i. 1.

This brings me neceſſarily to conſider in what manner the world has been always regulated, and conſequently to treat of thoſe laws to which it has been always ſubject: Which I ſhall do in this manner, i. e. by

A diſſertation upon thoſe laws, which mankind has been always obliged to obey.

I remember that our Apoſtle ſays in the fourth chapter of this Epiſtle, that where there is no law, there is no tranſgreſſion, ver. 15. Which certainly includes that

I. Here has always been laws of one kind or other, for men to regulate their actions by; or there muſt have been a time when man lived in that pure ſtate of innocency, as not to be able to tranſgreſs, or ſin; which, I preſume no body will aſſert. And theſe laws have been more or fewer, and varied as to kind, according to the different circumſtances of perſons, time, and place. For that

II. The principal end of all laws is to direct men how to act, as to all affairs of moment; and that they may not err through ignorance of the nature of their actions; but being thereby informed of the difference of good and evil, may know the better how to chuſe the former, and refuſe the latter. Becauſe,

III. Mens obligations to obedience are to be meaſured by the wiſdom, juſtice, goodneſs, faithfulneſs, and other perfections of the perſon, whoſe laws they are required to obey. And conſequently,

IV. Where there is no law, expreſly or by conſequence commanding or prohibiting ſuch things, in ſuch caſes men are at liberty to chuſe, or to refuſe, to act or not to act, according as the intereſt, or pleaſure, or other circumſtances, or paſſions of ſuch men may incline them. Therefore,

I. I ſay there has always been laws, &c. For we find that in the ſtate of man's innocence God gave a law to our firſt parents, a prohibition, forbidding them to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, Gen. ii. 17. to which he adds this ſanction, That, in caſe they would venture to tranſgreſs, they might expect immediate death, or that of immortal, they ſhould become by ſuch a tranſgreſſion, frail and mortal creatures. Now,

If it was fit that man ſhould have a law to walk by then; certainly it muſt be thought more needful afterwards, when ſin had got ſuch footing in the world, by means of that primitive tranſgreſſion, that it was ever after very difficult, if not impoſſible, for any ſon of man to walk upright, but the very beſt were liable, if left unto themſelves, to frequent errors and miſtakes, in numberleſs reſpects. And

For this reaſon, we may very well ſuppoſe, ſuch care was taken by a gracious God, that men ſhould never be without ſome rules or other, more or leſs, whereby to ſteer their courſe, in obedience to his will; and that his laws were varied, either as to kind or number, in all ages of the world, according as the circumſtances of time and place and perſons varied. Nay, according as theſe circumſtances varied, ſo were the methods too, from time to time, by which his laws were given and promulgated.

As to his Church, and choſen people, when that was little, and its number ſmall, his laws were likewiſe few, and for ſeveral ages orally promulgated, that is, by word of mouth, either by himſelf immediately, or by ſome one or other of the Heavenly Hoſt, commiſſioned by him for that purpoſe. But when the Church grew ſo much bigger, and the number of his people was ſo very much encreaſed, as we find it was, from two in our firſt parents, to near a million in the ſeed of Jacob; then he ſent Moſes, as to increaſe the number of his laws, ſo to tranſmit them to poſterity in writing, that they might neither have ignorance, nor forgetfulneſs to plead, in excuſe of their tranſgreſſing any of them. And as, when the Church was in its infancy, God dealt with it as a child, by giving it ſuch laws, as well as but ſo many, as were ſuitable to its age and ſtature; ſo, as it multiplied in number, and increaſed in ſtrength, as it grew more and more towards the perfect ſtature of a man, he always dealt with it according to the different ſtages it went through, inſtructing it from time to time, in matters more and more ſublime, as it made nearer approaches to its manhood; till at laſt the time was fully come, for the appearance of the promiſed ſeed, who was to bring life and immortality to light. To which purpoſe, our Apoſtle, ſpeaking of the ſtate of the true Church under the law, ſays thus; The law was our ſchool-maſter, to bring us to Chriſt, Gal. iii. 24. As if he had ſaid, in other words; All that can be ſaid of the law is, That before Chriſt and the Goſpel came, we were by God put under that œconomy, kept under and diſciplined by it, as in a ſtate of candidates or expectants, until the time ſhould come for the revelation of the Goſpel: And ſo the law was only a guardian or inſtitutor of us, in time of minority, as it were, an imperfect rule, proportioned to an imperfect ſtate.

Nor was the Heathen world left wholly without law, though they had not that which was emphatically called, The law. The Heathens had the law of nature to walk by, which is the law of God, as being by him impreſſed upon the minds and conſciences of men; and which, tho' it were very ſhort of perfect, yet it was ſuch, whereby they knew moſt of the fundamental duties of religion, towards God, their neighbours and themſelves. That is, they were able, by the light of nature only, to diſcover, that there is a God, who by his providence ſuperintends all human affairs; that this God is to be worſhipped and ſerved in ſuch a manner, as is moſt ſuitable to his nature, according to their beſt conceptions of him; that from the many inſtances of his love and goodneſs to them, they ought to learn their duty, to be kind and juſt to one another; and the like. To which purpoſe is that of the Apoſtles, Barnabas and Paul, to the men of Lyſtra; Acts xiv. 17. Nevertheleſs, he left not himſelf without witneſs, that is, to the Gentiles, in that he did good, and gave them rain from Heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling their hearts with food and gladneſs. As if he had ſaid, While God ſuffered all nations of the Gentiles to walk in their own ways, yet he did not leave off to evidence himſelf ſufficiently unto them, by that great goodneſs of his in temporal things, ſuch as rain, &c. which were acts of his particular power and bounty, by thoſe means inviting, and endeavouring to draw them off from their impieties. So that, as there was no time, when there was no law; ſo there never was any people, but had ſome law or other, natural or poſitive, whereby they might come to a knowledge of their duty, and be directed in ſome good meaſure, how to regulate their actions. Which was the firſt particular to be illuſtrated.

II. The ſecond is, That the firſt and main deſign of all laws is, to direct men how to act, &c. For otherwiſe, if men had no laws to direct their practice, as they would know no difference of good and evil, ſo all their actions would be neither good, nor evil; which, as the caſe now ſtands with all men, is utterly impoſſible. It cannot be ſuppoſed, that our firſt parents eating of the tree of knowledge, would have been imputed to them as a ſin, if God had not forbidden it; for by the general permiſſion to eat of every tree, if God had not excepted that, they could not otherwiſe have known or apprehended any more evil in eating of that tree, than of any other in the garden. Not but that their eating of it might be evil in itſelf; but they could not ſo properly be ſaid to be guilty of the evil, becauſe they could not be ſuppoſed to know it. So that, though when a law concerning any good or evil, is publiſhed, and ſufficiently made known, mens ignorance of it is no plea, to excuſe them for tranſgreſſing it; yet, the nature of thoſe things, before the publication of ſuch law, may be very well ſuppoſed to be unknown. And, while men remain ſo wholly ignorant of their nature, they may omit the good, or do the evil, and neither be guilty of a ſin, nor liable to puniſhment, on that account. Therefore,

The firſt and main deſign of all laws, muſt be this; to direct men how to act, as to all things, of whoſe nature they were ſuppoſed to be ignorant before, and ſo, for want of the direction of ſuch laws, might ignorantly chuſe the evil, and refuſe the good. So that, what the Apoſtle ſays of the law of Moſes, is alſo true of all laws that were ever given to the ſons of men; They were given becauſe of tranſgreſſion, Gal. iii. 19. That is, for prevention of tranſgreſſion, to reſtrain men from ſin, and to ſhew them their guilt, if at any time they ſhould ſin; and to put them upon ſearching after a remedy, whereby they might eſcape their deſerved puniſhment. And much to the ſame purpoſe is that definition of ſin which John gives us; Whoſoever committeth ſin, tranſgreſſeth alſo the law: For ſin is the tranſgreſſion of the law, 1 Joh. iii. 4. For, if all ſin be the tranſgreſſion of ſome law, then it is plain, that without law there can be no tranſgreſſion, nor, conſequently, any ſenſe of guilt, nor fear of puniſhment, nor neceſſity of a remedy. But Paul, in this Epiſtle to the Romans, puts the matter paſt all doubt; for, ſays he, in — iii. 20. By the law is the knowledge, or, ἐπίγνωσις, the acknowledgment of ſin. And again, in another place, I had not known ſin, but by the law, — vii. 7. For, to inſtance in one for all, I had not known luſt, except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet. But, ſays he again, in another place, Sin is not imputed when there is no law, — v. 13. Which very well agrees with what he tells us in the place firſt cited, Where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion, — iv. 15.

It is true, indeed, he tells us, That ſin was in the world until, that is, before the law of Moſes, — v. 13. But the plain reaſon of that is, becauſe God had given man a law before, by which he had both a knowledge of ſin, and ſenſe of guilt, and dread of puniſhment. But ſin was not in the world, or, at leaſt not knowable by man, before ſuch time as God had given him a law: And he could not be ſuppoſed to know the nature of his actions, whether they were good or evil, but by his knowledge of the laws, by which ſuch actions were commanded, or forbidden, either expreſly, or by plain and neceſſary conſequence.

All good and evil, therefore, ſtrictly ſpeaking, as to men, ariſes from ſome law, by which an action is expreſly, or implicitly at leaſt, declared to be ſo. And though ſome actions may be good, and others evil, or may have a tendency to good or evil, in and of themſelves, that is, in their own nature; yet men could never know, nor be able to diſtinguiſh one from the other, neither by conſequence, could they be ſenſible of the good or evil of any of their actions, nor know when they did well or ill in any caſe, unleſs by ſome command or prohibition, that is, ſome antecedent law, on purpoſe made and given, whereby they might have knowledge of, and be encouraged to do good, and deterred from doing evil. So that, upon the whole, it is very plain, that one main end of laws, is to direct men how to act, in all affairs of moment; and that they may not err, through ignorance of the nature of their actions, but knowing the difference of good and evil, may know the better how to chuſe the former, and refuſe the latter. And therefore,

III. Thirdly, mens obligation to obedience, is to be meaſured by the wiſdom, &c.

This I mention, with reſpect to difference of quality, and other circumſtances of the perſons, who have a right to make laws for others to be governed by, and to require their obedience to them; and whoſe laws may ſometimes claſh with one another, ſo that both are not to be obeyed, but in obeying one, men muſt ſin againſt the other. Now in ſuch a caſe as this, which has not ſeldom happened, obedience muſt be paid to him, who is ſuppoſed to be more wiſe, and good, and juſt, and faithful; and who has the greater power over us, and the moſt abſolute and undoubted right to our obedience.

For inſtance, though ſubjects muſt obey ſuch men as are ſet over them, and have a lawful power to command, and require their obedience; yet, ſince the greateſt, and the beſt of men are fallible, and may be often led by prejudice or paſſion, or biaſſed by intereſt and deſign, they may command ſome things, to which the obedience of their ſubjects neither is, nor can be due; nay, as to which, obedience may be ſinful, as undoubtedly it is, when any human laws do claſh with the Divine, or are directly, or by neceſſary conſequence, againſt them. For God, as he is the ſource and fountain of all power, and has infinitely the greateſt, moſt abſolute, and moſt undoubted right to the obedience of all men; ſo he is ſo infinitely wiſe, and good, and juſt, and faithful, that he neither will, nor can, impoſe upon us any laws, nor require our obedience to any, but ſuch as it will be our greateſt wiſdom, and for our higheſt intereſt to obey, and as to which, our diſobedience will be of fatal and moſt dreadful conſequence unto us. In ſhort, God has, by an abſolute inherent right, the ſupreme authority and power of commanding, both in Heaven, and in earth; to whom all other powers are and muſt be ſubject, and whoſe laws both men and Angels muſt obey. And as he is by nature infinitely wiſe, and good, and juſt, and faithful; ſo are all the laws he makes, nor can they poſſibly be otherwiſe. And therefore, whatever human laws do claſh with, or contradict the laws of God, are not to be obeyed; becauſe, as the greateſt man on earth derives his power and authority from God, Rom. xiii. 1. ſo both he himſelf, and all the laws he makes, are controllable by him; and no earthly power whatſoever can command what God forbids, nor forbid what God commands; or, if he ſhould preſume to do ſo, he has no right to the obedience of his ſubjects in ſuch caſes.

So that, in all inſtances, when God's commands or prohibitions ſtand in competition with any human laws, mens obedience is wholly due unto the former, but not at all unto the latter. For we are to ſubmit to human laws and ordinances, only for the Lord's ſake, 1 Pet. ii. 13. That is, as the power that impoſes them, is ordained of God, ſo the man who has it, derives all his authority to rule and govern, from him alone; and therefore, he ought neither to command what God forbids, nor to forbid what God commands: Or, if he ſhould do ſo, in ſuch a caſe, his ſubjects are not only abſolved from their obedience, but it is highly ſinful, and extremely dangerous to obey him.

IV. In the laſt place, I ſhall briefly ſhew, That as to all ſuch matters, concerning which there is no law, either expreſly, or by conſequence, commanding, or prohibiting ſuch things; men in ſuch caſes are at liberty to chuſe, or to refuſe, to act, or not to act, according as their intereſt or pleaſure, or other circumſtances may incline them. For,

All the aſſurance men can have, of the indifference of any action, is from the ſilence of the laws; in which that action is neither expreſly, nor by conſequence, commanded, nor forbidden. And if the ſilence of the laws, with reſpect to any action, makes it a thing indifferent; then the doing, or not doing of it, muſt be indifferent too: That is, a man is neither guilty of a ſin, in doing ſuch an action; nor can he properly be ſaid to have ommitted any duty, in not doing of it. Nay, ſuppoſing the action to be good or evil in it ſelf; yet, as to man, it can be neither, till ſome law has declared it to be ſo, by requiring or forbidding it. For the Apoſtle tells us plainly, Where no law is, there is no tranſgreſſion, Rom. iv. 14. and, by conſequence, no obligation, either to do the thing, or not to do it. But then,

We muſt be well aſſured of the ſilence of the laws in ſuch a caſe; that ſuch an action is indeed indifferent, as neither commanded nor forbidden, before we venture on it: And, if the laws are not expreſs concering it; yet we muſt be careful to inform ourſelves, the beſt we can, whether the action be not, by juſt conſequence from ſome known law, commanded, or forbidden. For otherwiſe, we may be guilty of a ſin, one way or other, either by doing what we ſhould not, or omitting what we ought to do, in ſomething that we think to be indifferent, which upon due enquiry would appear to be far otherwiſe. Nay,

Though the laws are wholly ſilent, that is, if we cannot find that any law has either expreſly, or by conſequence, commanded, or forbidden ſuch an action; yet, if we have any doubt upon our minds concerning it, ſo long as ſuch a doubt remains, the thing is not indifferent; but, as to us who doubt, it is either good or evil, according as we think it, and we muſt either do it, or forbear the doing of it, until we are better ſatisfied. Beſides,

There are other conſiderations, by which, in many inſtances, we ſhall do well to be determined, though the laws are neither for the action, nor againſt it; ſuch as prudence, with reſpect to perſons, time and place; and convenience, whether to our ſelves or others; and ſeveral other circumſtances, which may render the action proper or improper to be done, though the doing, or not doing of it, may otherwiſe be neither good nor evil.

But when no law, Divine or human, has commanded or forbidden any action, and thereby made it good or evil; nor any doubt, or other conſideration, does render it convenient or inconvenient to be done: Then it is a matter abſolute indifference, and we may either do it, or leave it undone, according as we are inclined.

I continue to ſay, that all laws whereby men are obliged to do, or not to do, ſuch things may be reduced to theſe two particulars, natural and poſitive, i. e. ſuch as men may diſcover, together with their duty to obey them, by the light of nature only; or ſuch as are externally made known unto them, either by word of mouth or writing. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of the former, when he ſays, The Gentiles ſhewed the work of the law written in their hearts; that is, by doing all thoſe things by nature, which were written in the law of Moſes, though it was not revealed to them. Concerning which I ſhall obſerve,

I. Firſt, where men have no written law, whereby to regulate their actions, they may, however, be directed how to act, in moſt affairs of moment, by the light, or law of nature.

The law of nature, which is ſaid to be written in mens hearts, is that light which all men have by nature, whereby they are enabled, of themſelves, to diſcover, in proportion to the light they have, the nature of their actions, whether they be good or evil. It is that ἄγραπτος, ununwritten law, which the Gentiles had, and all men have by nature; which, though not ſo clear and certain as the written law, as being written only in the hearts of men, not on tables of ſtone, as the law of Moſes was, nor with pen and ink in a book, as the whole will of God now is, for every one to read and know his duty perfectly; yet, in proportion to its light and clearneſs, it had the ſame obliging, juſtifying, and condemning power, as the written law had formerly, or the written word of God now has; that is, the Gentiles then, were as much obliged to live and act according to the light they had, as we are now, or as the Jews were heretofore; and if they did, they had as great aſſurance of their future happineſs, as the witneſs of their conſciences could give them; but if they did not, they were immediately ſelf-condemned, and had ſufficient reaſon to expect a future ſtate of miſery. In ſhort, what Cicero affirms, Tuſcul. 3. was always true; ſunt ingeniis noſtris ſemina innata virtutum, quæ ſi adoleſcere liceret, ipſa nos ad beatam vitam perduceret, i. e. There are, ſays he, ſuch ſeeds of virtue in all men by nature, as, if cheriſhed and improved, will cauſe them to live well and happily. That is, there are in all men ſome innate principles of goodneſs, more or leſs, by which they are reſtrained from many ſins, and prompted to perform the duties contrary to them; by which means they are eaſy and at peace within themſelves, and keep in favour both with God, and all good men, and ſo are in the ready way to happineſs, both at preſent, and hereafter.

Some Jewiſh writers have affirmed, "That the precepts of the moral law were written in the heart of Adam;" and an ancient father of the Church, Tertullian contends, "That before the written law of Moſes, there was an unwritten law, which the fathers underſtood, and kept by nature, and by obedience to which, they were accounted righteous." But it ſeems much more probable, that God diſpenſed the knowledge of his will to them by word of mouth; for it cannot be ſuppoſed, that he would require them to find out their duty to him by the light of nature only, to whom he did ſo frequently vouchſafe his preſence, and with whom he ſo familiarly converſed: And the Sacred Writings make it evident, that he did ſo reveal his will to them, from time to time, according as the neceſſities, and other circumſtances of perſons, time and place required. So that they were in much better circumſtances than the reſt of mankind were, as having perfect knowledge of the will of God, immediately from God himſelf: They had his law by word of mouth, though they had it not in writing; and therefore could not be ſo much to ſeek for what they ought to do; or leave undone, as others were, or might be, who had no other light, than that of natural reaſon, to direct, inform, and guide them.

However, for the moſt part, I mean, as to moſt material duties of religion, towards God, themſelves, and one another, the Gentiles were not utterly to ſeek; but by the light of nature might diſcover ſuch things to be their duty, as God eſpecially requires of all men. My meaning is, That men who would conſider the natural tendency and conſequences of their actions, whether they were agreeable, or not, to their beſt conceptions of the Deity, might by unaſſiſted reaſon know, in moſt inſtances of moment, whether their behaviour were ſuch, as is pleaſing, or diſpleaſing to him. For, when men, by nature's light, have found a God, (ſee Rom. i. 20.) and conſidered him aright, ſo as to have juſt conceptions of his nature, they may eaſily imagine, and will have ſufficient reaſon to conclude, That ſuch as his nature is, ſuch muſt be his will, and that they ought to live and act in a due conformity to ſuch conceptions of him.

II. Secondly, the main difference, between the law of nature, and the written law, is not as to things commanded or forbidden; but only, as to the variety of ways and means, whereby God has revealed his will to men. For,

What the written law commands, in moſt reſpects, will appear to be our duty alſo by the law of nature; and what is forbidden by the former, will alſo appear to be contrary to our duty by the latter. And both theſe will appear, from the reaſonableneſs of ſuch commands and prohibitions; which may be eaſily diſcovered by nature's light alone: For if what God commands appears agreeable to right reaſon, if upon due conſideration of the thing itſelf, and weighing all its circumſtances, it appears to be reaſonable, juſt and good, then we cannot but conclude, that it is what we ſhould have been obliged to, though it had never been commanded: And if any thing that he forbids appears evil in itſelf, and hurtful in its conſequences, ſuppoſing our reaſon to be unbiaſſed and unprejudiced, we muſt conclude, that it would have been our duty to avoid that thing, though it had never been forbidden. It being utterly againſt all reaſon, to ſuppoſe, that God would expreſly command a thing that was not good, or prohibit any thing that was not evil; I mean, as to things of abſolute neceſſity to be done, or to be avoided by us: Nor is there any precept of the moral law, but which, if well and ſeriouſly conſidered, will appear to be the duty of all men, by nature's light, though there had never been a written law to make it ſo. For the writing of a law, concerning any matter, cannot ſo alter the nature of the thing, as to make that good, which in itſelf is evil; or that evil, which in itſelf is good: But ſuch as the thing is in itſelf, whether good, or evil, ſuch it always was, and always will be, unchangeable by any law that either has been heretofore, or hereafter may be made concerning it.

Therefore, the main difference between the law of nature, and the written law, is with reſpect to the variety of ways and means, whereby God has revealed his will to men. By which I mean, that God has given men a much more clear, expreſs, and certain declaration of his will, and ſo a much more perfect knowledge of it, in the written law, than they had, or could attain unto, by the law, or light of nature only. So that, however men might be miſtaken, or to ſeek, in ſeveral reſpects, before the written law was given; yet now they cannot be to ſeek, nor be miſtaken, as to any thing that's needful to be known or done by all men, in order to their happineſs.

The law of nature written in mens hearts, was both imperfect and obſcure; ſo that, though they might, by that alone, come to the knowledge of the will of God, in ſeveral reſpects, yet there were many things, as needful to be known and done, which they neither did, nor could diſcover by it. But now, the written law, which is emphatically ſtiled, the law of God, by reaſon of its clearneſs and perfection, has made a full diſcovery of his will, in all reſpects, and in ſo plain a manner, that he who runs may read his duty, and no man now can be miſtaken, or to ſeek, concerning what he ought to do, or not to do, unleſs he will himſelf. God has now ſet before us good and evil, in ſo clear a light, the light of revelation, that we cannot but diſcern the difference of one from the other, and know how to chuſe aright; and it muſt be wholly our own fault, if we miſs the former, and fall into the latter. Therefore, in ſhort, the written law of God does in no wiſe contradict the law of nature; but was given to confirm it, and to enhance mens obligations to it: And as it is a much more plain and perfect revelation of his will, than the law of nature was, or could be; ſo it requires a more ſtrict and perfect obedience and conformity to his will, as well as in many more reſpects, than the law of nature did, or could oblige men to. And yet, it is to be conſidered,

III. In the third place, That though mens knowledge of the will of God, by the light of nature only, be not ſo full, and clear, and certain, as that they may attain to by the written law; yet, their ignorance of ſome things, ariſing from the want of revelation, will not render them excuſable, if they wilfully neglect what they may know to be their duty by the law of nature. For,

It is highly juſt and reaſonable, that God ſhould require all men to apply themſelves, for information, to all ſuch means of knowledge as he has afforded them; and for what they can diſcover by thoſe means to be their duty, that they ſhould be careful, on all occaſions, to the utmoſt of their ſkill and power, to perform it. For though performance cannot be expected, when mens ignorance of their duty is unavoidable, through the want of proper means of information; yet, if they have the means, and do not labour to inform themſelves, their ignorance is their ſin; and being well informed, in proportion to the means they have to be ſo, their non-performance of their duty is ſtill a greater ſin: And, in a word; their knowledge of their duty, if they are not careful to perform it, will tend to the greater aggravation of their guilt, and undoubtedly increaſe their condemnation.

And thus, we may ſuppoſe, it was with thoſe, who had no other law, than that of nature, to direct them; to whom reaſon was their only guide; and who, therefore, could not have ſo clear and full, and certain knowledge of their duty, as we have now, by the ſo much clearer light of revelation. They were undoubtedly obliged to the performance of ſuch things, as they could diſcover, and did know to be their duty, by that little light they had; and were, without all queſtion, anſwerable, and liable to puniſhment, for their neglect of any of them. For though it be reaſonable to ſuppoſe, on one hand, that a gracious God might make allowance for the obſcurity and imperfection of natural knowledge, or ſuch as was attainable by nature's light, which was all the light they had to walk, and regulate their actions by, ſo it is no leſs reaſonable to ſuppoſe, on the other hand, that he expected they ſhould be obedient to his will, in proportion to the light they had: That is, that they ſhould carefully abſtain from all thoſe vices, and be always ready and inclined to practice all thoſe duties to God and one another, which they were able, by that light, to diſcover to be ſuch. And, that all men were, and are oblig'd to do ſo by the law of nature, though they had no written law of God to direct them how to act, will appear, by conſidering,

IV. In the laſt place, that every man's own conſcience will not fail to tell him, when he has done well or ill, according to the law of nature; that is, the after-ſenſe he has of any action, will make him either eaſy, or uneaſy in himſelf at preſent, and apprehenſive of ſome greater good or evil, which hereafter may befal him for it.

So the Apoſtle tells us of the Gentiles, in the place firſt quoted; "They ſhew'd the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another, Rom. ii. 15. As if he had ſaid, that obligation to puniſhment, which ordinarily ariſes from the law, theſe men demonſtrate themſelves to have, without the help of the written law: From whence alſo it is, that as conſcience, which, according to the nature of the word, is a man's knowing that he has done, or not done, what is by law commanded, is conſtantly witneſs either for, or againſt them, that they have done, or not done their duty; ſo the general notions and inſtincts of good and evil, that are in them by nature, without any light from the written law, do either accuſe them as tranſgreſſors of the law of God, or elſe plead for them, that they have not culpably done any thing againſt it.

So that, according to the Apoſtle's doctrine, the Gentiles had by nature a ſenſe of moral good and evil; and from the ſenſe they had of theſe, their conſciences were always ready witneſſes, either againſt them, or in their behalf, acquitting or condemning them, according as they had performed the good, or been guilty of the evil, in proportion to the light they had to regulate their actions by.

By mens thoughts accuſing or excuſing one another, the Apoſtle does not mean, that one thought accuſes, or excuſes another thought; but that mens general inbred notions of good and evil are always ready at hand, to ſhew them the nature of their actions, whether they be good or evil, and either to acquit, or elſe condemn them for them. And ſo according to mens natural notions, or their acquired knowledge of the good or evil of their actions, conſcience acts its part ſometimes as an advocate, and ſometimes as an accuſer, according as their actions are: And this it does according to ſome law, which has declared ſuch actions to be good or evil. Such was the law of nature to the Gentiles; and ſuch is God's written law to us: By the former they were either ſelf-excus'd, if they had done according, or ſelf-condemned, when they had acted contrary to it; and by this latter we are judicially, as well as ſelf-acquitted or condemn'd, according as our actions are agreeable, or not agreeable thereto. In ſhort, all men that ever were, or ever will be in the world, as well thoſe that had only the law of nature, as thoſe that have the written law of God to walk by, both had, and always will have conſcience, either for their accuſer, or their advocate, accuſing or excuſing them, according to the nature, and the merit of their actions; and ſo it both is at preſent, and will hereafter be a witneſs for us, or againſt us, to the procuring either of unſpeakable joy and comfort, or unſufferable torment and vexation to us. Now from the whole

It is evident, that, as it is expected of all men, that their behaviour ſhould be ſuitable to the advantages and helps they have for being, and for doing good, all men will receive a juſt reward from God, according to their good or evil lives, in proportion to the clearneſs and perfection of the light, or law they had, whereby to walk, and regulate their actions.

And this we ſhould eſpecially conſider, who have the written law of God for our Inſtructor, and in that, the cleareſt, moſt expreſs, and perfect declaration of his will, that we may know how, in all reſpects, to be obedient to it. For, if the Gentiles, who had not the written law, ſhall periſh for tranſgreſſing the law of nature; how can we think to eſcape, who have a ſo much clearer and more perfect law to walk by, if we venture to tranſgreſs, and are careleſs of our duty, amidſt all the ſaving means of knowledge, that a gracious God has, in ſo abundant meaſure, provided for us, and vouchſafed unto us? As I intend to ſhew in the notes on Hebrews xi. 1. in a particular Diſſertation on Revealed Religion, or Faith.

It is not ſufficient to ſay, I am the elect, or choſen of God; becauſe I am an Iſraelite according to the fleſh, unleſs I alſo do the works, and believe in the ſame God, and worſhip in the ſame manner, as Iſrael, our Patriarch did. This Scripture is well expounded by what the Apoſtle ſays before, in ch. ii. 28, 29. "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly; neither is that circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh: But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumciſion is that of the heart in the Spirit, and not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men but of God." And again, in ch. iv. 12, 13. "Who walk in the ſteps of the faith of our father Abraham; for the promiſe that he ſhould be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or his ſeed, through the law, but through the righteouſneſs of faith." And therefore it follows, at ver. 7. Neither becauſe they are the ſeed of Abraham, are they all children, &c.

Ver. 8.——The children of the fleſh, theſe are not the children of God.] By this the Apoſtle tells the Jews, That neither all thoſe, nor thoſe only, who were ſprung from the ſeed of Abraham according to the fleſh, were to be reputed the children of God abſolutely, or by excluding all others, but that all others of what nation or language ſoever, who ſhould believe as Abraham did in the promiſes of God, ſhould alſo be counted for the ſeed of Abraham; ſee the preceding note.

——Eſau have I hated.] i. e. God ſaith, I have rejected Eſau, neither will I beſtow all my particular bleſſings upon his poſterity. Therefore,

The meaning of this verſe, and the context is not, that God, by an abſolute and unconditional decree determined Jacob to happineſs, add Eſau to miſery, before either of them were born, or had done any good or evil; but that God, before they were born, had determined that Jacob, ſhould be the father of the Jewiſh Church, and that Chriſt, according to the fleſh, ſhould deſcend from his loins, not from the loins of Eſau: And this God might do, without any injuſtice to Eſau, who was, notwithſtanding, capable of eternal happineſs. Beſides,

It is evident, that the Apoſtle doth by no means ſpeak of the perſons of Jacob and Eſau, but of their nations, that ſhould ariſe from their poſterities. And thus Irenæus interprets this Prophecy to be not a Prophecy of the perſons, but of the two people or nations, riſing from thoſe perſons; as it appears, firſt, from the words of God to Rebecca, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people ſhall be ſeparated from thy bowels; and the one people ſhall be ſtronger than the other people, and the elder ſhall ſerve the younger; Gen. xxv. 23. Secondly, from this obſervation, that as to the perſons of Eſau and Jacob, it was never true, that the elder did ſerve the younger: But it was true in their poſterity, when in the days of king David, who, being of the ſeed of Jacob, made the Edomites, the poſterity of Eſau, tributaries to his crown; 2 Sam. viii. 14. And thirdly, Becauſe what is here mentioned, as a proof or confirmation of the Apoſtles doctrine of election and reprobation, is cited from the Prophet Malachi, who prophecied long after the death of Jacob and Eſau, and ſo could only ſpeak of their deſcendants the Iſraelites and Edomites, as he will appear to do expreſsly to any one that ſhall take the pains to conſult his Prophecy. So that

I conclude, that theſe words, Eſau have I hated, can in no wiſe be interpreted to relate to any abſolute eternal decree of God, whereby Eſau was made incapable of everlaſting life; but only to the proſperity of them and their ſeed for ever in this world. And now,

I cannot forbear obſerving, that it is an unworthy thought of the greateſt, beſt and moſt perfect being, to ſuppoſe, that he made any of his creatures merely to glorify his juſtice, or with a deſign that they ſhould be everlaſtingly miſerable. And let me entreat every pious reader neither to make difficulties, where there are none, nor to interpret a few difficult texts in a ſenſe, which contradicts many plain ones, and faſtens unjuſt imputations on the Creator of the world, who having finiſhed the work of the univerſal creation, ſaw that all things created were very good. Shall we then impeach him openly of falſhood, and ſay that he created ſome things very evil? For truly, that is the caſe of thoſe, who ſay that God has created any one to predeſtinate damnation.

Ver. 14.——Unrighteouſneſs.] Or, injuſtice; ſee Deut. xxxii. 4. 2 Chron. xix. 7. Job xxxiv. 10.

Ver. 15.——He ſaith to Moſes.] In Exod. xxxiii. 19.

——I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, &c.] We are not, as ſome have inconſiderately done, to collect from the ſound of theſe words, that God is partial, and without juſtice; God forbid: But that God's grace, mercy, and compaſſion, is the cauſe of our happineſs. So in that he doth this, to whom he will; it ſheweth God's freedom in communicating his grace where he pleaſeth, without wrong to any perſon. For,

As the occaſion of this Divine Declaration to Moſes, was his petition to God in behalf of his people Iſrael, that God would be preſent with them, &c. So God, having anſwered Moſes according to his deſire, did nevertheleſs ſubjoin, I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will ſhew mercy on whom I will ſhew mercy. To ſignify, that though he vouchſafed to grant his requeſt, and had choſen the Iſraelites before all people, yet that action was not to be aſcribed to any merit of their own, which could oblige him to comply with their requeſt, but a pure act of his own will, according to his election of grace, excluding all others, and man's own will and works, wherefore Paul draws this inference in the next verſe.

Ver. 16. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy.] Which is well interpreted by thoſe words of the ancient Hebrew author, R. Menachem, treating of this mercy, which God ſhewed to Moſes, &c. in Exod. xxxiii. ſaying, "And he (i. e. Moſes) ſaid, O Lord of the world, whoſe is that great treaſure? He (God) anſwered, whoſo hath good works, to him will I give his wages; and to whoſo hath none, I will do, and give unto him freely: As it is written, I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, &c. which accordeth exactly with that doctrine of our Apoſtle Paul, To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt; but to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that juſtifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteouſneſs, Rom. iv. 4, 5. Therefore,

The Apoſtle meaneth, ye ſee from what God ſaid to Moſes, this mercy or grace, is not to be obtained by the moſt paſſionate wiſhes of a faithful Abraham, nor by the moſt fervent deſires of an Eſau, (Heb. xii. 17.) nor by the greateſt zeal we employ in the means of our own invention; but we muſt acknowledge it to be a bleſſing, which depends merely upon the Divine Goodneſs; and therefore, we muſt ſeek it according to his pleaſure, in ſuch ways as he appoints, and not in thoſe, which ſeem to us moſt proper to obtain it. So that one may have a zeal for God, and follow after the law, to obtain righteouſneſs, and yet may not obtain the bleſſing of juſtification promiſed to the ſeed of Abraham; becauſe it is not ſought by the method or means preſcribed by God, that is, by faith in the Meſſiah, which is the only way in which God hath declated he will confer it.

Ver. 17. The Scripture.] Exodus ix. 16.

—— Saith unto Pharaoh.] The king of Egypt, who refuſed at firſt to let the children of Iſrael go to ſerve the Lord, and at laſt, having permitted them to depart, and purſuing them to bring them back, was drowned with all his hoſt in the Red-ſea, through which the Iſraelites had paſſed dry-ſhod.

—— I raiſed thee up, that I might ſhew my power in thee, &c.] By which tranſlation of the original, one would be ready to imagine, that God had created Pharaoh on purpoſe, to be a mere example of his ſeverity and vengeance, but this is a fault in the tranſlation, which ſhould have been according to the Hebrew of Moſes, and the Greek of the Apoſtle, for this cauſe have I kept thee alive, in the midſt of thine iniquities, that thou ſhouldſt be a means of conveying to all nations and ages a memorable example of my power, and that through thy obſtinate and impertinent heart, which I ſhall puniſh with many plagues, and deſtroy thee at laſt in a wonderful manner, all the earth ſhall become ſenſible, that I am the Lord, in whom they live, move, and have their being; ſee Exod. ix. and Dr. Hammond, and Dr. Whitby, at large upon this text.

Ver. 18. —— And whom he will, he hardneth.] i. e. Saith Auſtin, on whom he will not have mercy, he hath no mercy. Which is eaſy to be underſtood by comparing this text, with the preceding notes.

Ver. 22. —Willing to ſhew his wrath.] In this world.

—— His power known.] To men by viſible tokens, among the inhabitants of the earth.

—— Endured with much long-ſuffering.] Theſe words are an excellent expoſition of the context from ver. 11. and mightily confirm our Annotations above, concerning Pharaoh. For, had God created any one on purpoſe, to ſhew his judgment and ſeverity upon him, the Apoſtle could have ſaid, endured with much long-ſuffering, but that God willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known, made or created ſuch veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction. This would have effectually proved the doctrine of abſolute predeſtination, whereas by the text we are able in oppoſition thereto, to prove man's free-will; for, if man was not a free agent, it would be a very great impropriety of ſpeech, not to ſay nonſenſe; for the Apoſtle to ſay, that God endured with much long-ſuffering, when, according to the predeſtinarian ſcheme, man is not able to do any thing but what he is compelled to do by the power of God.

—— Veſſels of wrath.] Such as Pharaoh, and others, whom God puniſheth in a ſignal manner in this life, for the example of others; ſee 1 Theſſ. v. 9. and 1 Pet. ii. 8.

Ver. 23. —— Veſſels of mercy.] In oppoſition to veſſels of wrath; i. e. Such who, by their faith and good works fulfil the will of God, and by the gift of God obtain eternal life, as a reward of their obedience.

Ver. 24 Even of us.] Chriſtians, who are a mixture both of Jews and Gentiles, having our hope towards God through Jeſus Chriſt.

—— Not of the Jews only, but alſo of the Gentiles.] Here we muſt look back to the latter part of the preceding verſe, which he had prepared afore unto glory, through the Goſpel, which glory is not of (or confined unto) the Jews only, as was the law of Moſes, but alſo of (is extended to) the Gentiles, according to that Prophecy of Oſee, ii. 23. compared with 1 Pet. ii. 10. and Hoſea, i. 10. and Iſaiah x. 22, 23. xxxi, 32.

Ver. 30, 31, 32. What ſhall we ſay then? That the Gentiles which followed not after righteouſneſs, have attained righteouſneſs, even the righteouſneſs which is of faith. But Iſrael which followed after the law of righteouſneſs, hath not attained to the law of righteouſneſs: Wherefore? Becauſe they ſought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of (i. e. the ceremonial) law.] This is the baſis of the Apoſtolical argument, concerning the calling of the Gentiles, and an anſwer to all the cavillings of the Jews, who reſted purely on the law for juſtification, and would have excluded the Gentiles, who did not comply with their ceremonies, after their converſion to Chriſtianity, from the hopes of ſalvation. Therefore, I ſhall be more particular on this head, and ſhew you what the Jewiſh nation of a legal righteouſneſs was, which the Apoſtle condemns here, and what the Evangelical righteouſneſs, or the righteouſneſs of faith is, which he labours to eſtabliſh in oppoſition to the Jews, and which alone the Gentile converts were willing to practiſe.

A Diſſertation on legal righteouſneſs, and the righteouſneſs of faith.

That which the Apoſtle here blames the Jews for, ſeemeth to be nothing elſe but an abridgment of all that he, in other places, diſputes againſt them for; which is not a queſtion merely and barely concerning the formal notion of juſtification, as perchance ſome have thought, namely, whether the formal notion of it reſpects only faith, or works in the perſons juſtified, no: He handles a point of greater conſequence, than after the wiſdom of this world to take up all his thoughts and time, and our attention, with a mere ſubtil ſchool-controverſy. But he treats of the whole way to life and happineſs, and the proper means of reſtoring mankind to perfection and union with the Deity, which the Jews expected by virtue of that ſyſtem, and roll of the laws, which were delivered upon mount Sinai, augmented and enlarged by the Gemara of their own traditions. Therefore,

The propereſt way to find out the Jewiſh doctrine in this great point, we muſt proceed to enquire into the writings of their moſt approved ancient authors, that ſo, finding out their conſtant received opinions, concerning their law and the works thereof, we may the better and more fully underſtand what Paul, and the other Apoſtles aim at, in their diſputes againſt them Now,

The Jewiſh notion of the law in general is this, "That in the model of life contained in that book of laws, commonly diſtinguiſhed into moral, judicial, and ceremonial, was compriſed the whole method of raiſing man to his perfection; and that they having only this book of laws revealed to converſe with, needed nothing elſe to procure eternal life, perfection, and happineſs; as if this had been the only means God intended for the ſaving of men and making them happy, to ſet before them in an external way a volume of laws, ſtatutes and ordinances, and ſo to leave them to work out, and to purchaſe to themſelves eternal life, in the obſervance of them."

In which general notion we muſt obſerve two particulars. For,

1. Firſt, as a foundation of all the reſt, they laid down this as a common principle. "That mankind has ſuch an abſolute and perfect free-will, and ſuch a ſufficient power from within himſelf, to determine himſelf to virtue and goodneſs, as that he only needed ſome law, as the matter or object to exerciſe their innate power about; and therefore needed not that God ſhould do any thing more for him than merely to acquaint him with his Divine Will and pleaſure."

This is very fully and dogmatically affirmed by many of the ancient Jewiſh writers, amongſt whom Maimonides declares, that this was one article of the Jewiſh faith, and a main part of the foundation upon which their law was eſtabliſhed; for, ſays he, in his Treatiſe of Repentance, ch. v. "Man from himſelf, by his own proper knowledge and power, knows good and evil, and does what pleaſes him in an uncontrollable way, ſo as none can hinder him as to the doing of either good or evil." And ſpeaking of the repenting Church, ch. iii. 40. he ſays, "Let us ſearch and try our ways, and turn unto the Lord, ſeeing that we, who are endued with the power of free-will have moſt wittingly and freely committed all our tranſgreſſions, it is meet and becoming that we ſhould convert ourſelves by repentance and forſake all our iniquities, for as much as this alſo is in our power: This is the importance of thoſe words, Let us ſearch and try our ways and turn unto the Lord. And this is a great fundamental, the very pillar of the law and precept, according to what is written; Deut. xxx. See I have ſet before thee this day life and death, good and evil. Thus

You ſee the doctrine of the Jews taught by Maimonides, who was well verſed in all their moſt ancient learning, and much eſteemed by his nation. He, as I ſaid before, is pleaſed to reckon this as a main principle and foundation upon which their law ſtood, as indeed it muſt have been, if life and perfection might be acquired by virtue of thoſe legal precepts, which had only an external adminiſtration, being ſet before their external ſenſes, and publiſhed in their ears, as the ſtatute laws of any other nation is commonly made known.

To this purpoſe alſo we read in R. Bechai, who was of no ſmall learning both in the Talmudick and cabaliſtical doctrine of the Jews, "That man derived the power of free-will from the tree of knowledge, of good and evil: And that not till then, he became endued with this power of determining themſelves to good or evil." Gloſs. on Gen. iii. 7. So that according to the mind of our author, the firſt original and pedigree of free-will is not to be derived from our creation, but from the tranſgreſſion of our firſt parents, when they eat the forbidden fruit: Becauſe, before that time he was all intellect and wholly ſpiritual, being from within only determined to that which was good. And therefore another Jewiſh author, Nachmanides, in his Comment upon Gen. xxx. 13. infers from this principle, That, as they expected their nation would be reſtored to the ſpiritual ſtate, they conceived man was in before the fall, at the time when the Meſſiah ſhould come, in thoſe days of the Meſſiah there ſhall neither be merit nor demerit, becauſe there ſhall be no free-will, which is the alone mother and nurſe of both of them. So that it plainly appears, that the Jews expected a more triumphant and illuſtrious kind of happineſs victoriouſly to be obtained by the merit of their own works, than that beggerly kind of happineſs (as they ſeem to eſteem it) which cometh like an alms from Divine Bounty. Accordingly, to uſe their own words, they affirm, that happineſs by way of reward is far greater, and much more magnificent than that which is obtained by way of mercy.

I. The ſecond particular on which the Jewiſh nation of a legal righteouſneſs is grounded, is this, "That the law delivered to the Jews by Moſes from God upon Mount Sinai, was a ſufficient diſpenſation from God, and all that was neceſſary for him to do for the advancement of them to a ſtate of perfection and bleſſedneſs; and that the proper hope and end of their law, was nothing but to afford them ſeveral ways and means of merit." To which purpoſe the Miſhnah declares, That the precepts of the law were ſo many in number, only that they might ſingle out where they pleaſed, and in exerciſing themſelves therein procure eternal life; ſuppoſing a reward due to the performance of every precept, which reward they thought was increaſed, according to the ſecret eſteem which God himſelf hath of any of the 613 precepts, as it is ſuggeſted in the Miſhnah, in the book Pirke Havoth, in the words of the famous R. Jehuda, Be careful to obſerve the leſſer precepts, as well as the greater, becauſe thou knoweſt not the reward that ſhall be given to the obſervation of the precepts.

This doctrine brought in amongſt the Jews, a diſtinction of three ſorts of men; 1. the perfectly righteous; 2. the perfectly wicked; 3. and a middle ſort of men betwixt thoſe two.—The perfectly righteous were they, who were accounted ſo good as to have no tranſgreſſion or demerits, which might be counted fit to be put into the balance againſt their merits; theſe were called ſimply righteous, whoſe merits outweighed their demerits. The perfectly wicked, on the contrary, were ſuch as had no merits at all; and thoſe ſimply wicked, whoſe demerits made the heavier ſcale. The middle ſort were ſuch as their good deeds and evil deeds equally ballanced one another. But before I have done with this diſtinction,

Let it be obſerved, that they ſuppoſed there might be many of the firſt ſort of men, viz. the perfectly righteous. Of which ſort the Phariſees ſeem to have been in their own eſteem, in our Saviour's time. And according to this notion our Saviour may ſeem to have ſhaped his anſwer to that young man in the Goſpel, who asked him, "What ſhall I do to inherit eternal life?' To which our Saviour anſwers, keep the commandments: Which our Saviour propounds to him in ſo great a latitude, as thereby to take him off from his ſelf-conceit, and that he might be convinced upon reflexion on himſelf, that he had fallen ſhort of eternal life, in failing of a due performance of the Divine Law. But he inſiſting upon his own merit in this reſpect, enquires of our Saviour, whether there be yet any thing wanting to make him one perfectly righteous. To this our Saviour replies, If thou wilt be perfect, go and ſell that thou haſt, &c. Matt. xix. 21. The meaning of which reply may, as I conceive, be this, to convince him of his imperfect obedience to, and compliance with, the law of God, from his over-eager love of this world. But as for thoſe that were in the middle rank of men, the Jewiſh doctors had divers rules, as, 1. In caſe a man's evil works and good were equal, the addition of one either way might determine them to eternal life or miſery. 2. That in caſe a man's evil works ſhould preponderate and weigh down his good, yet he may caſt the ſcale by repentance, if he will; or in the other world by chaſtiſements and puniſhments he may make expiation for them. Theſe and the like ways they have found out, leſt any of their fraternity ſhould miſcarry. To all which we muſt take in this caution which they are pleaſed to deliver us, viz. That mens works have their different weight; ſome good works being ſo weighty, that they may weigh in the balance againſt many evil works; and ſo on the contrary.

All which we ſhall find largely ſet down by R. Albo. l. de fundamentis fidei, and partly by R. Saadia: But eſpecially by Maimonides in his Treatiſe of Repentance, chap. 3. who alſo tells us of other expedients, provided by their law for the ſecuring of merit and happineſs, which I ſhall not here mention. And indeed they have found out ſo many artifices to entail a legal righteouſneſs and eternal happineſs upon all the Iſraelites, that (if it be poſſible) none might be left out of Heaven: As may partly appear by that queſtion captiouſly propoſed to our Saviour, Maſter, are there few that ſhall be ſaved? Whereby they expected to enſnare him, they themſelves holding a general ſalvation of all the Jews by virtue of the law, however their wickedneſs might abound. Which we find expreſly ſet down by Maimonides in the fore-named place, All wicked ones whoſe evil deeds exceed their good deeds, ſhall be judged according to the meaſure of their evil deeds ſo exceeding; and afterwards they ſhall have a portion in the world to come; for that all Iſraelites have a portion in the world to come, and this notwithſtanding their ſins, Now that maxim of theirs, All Iſraelites have a portion in the world to come, is taken out of the Miſhnah l. Sanhedr. c. 11. where it is put down as the moſt authentick opinion of the Jewiſh Doctors; only ſome few there are there recited who are excepted from this happineſs; otherwiſe, their greateſt malefactors are not excepted from it: For ſo Obadias de Bartenora, unfoldeth their meaning, ſaith, even ſuch as are judged by the great Synedrim worthy of death for their wickedneſs, theſe have a portion in the world to come. Hence,

We may obſerve what a lean and ſpiritleſs religion this of the Jews was, and how it was nothing elſe but a ſouleleſs and liveleſs form of external performances, which did little or nothing at all reach the inward man, being nothing but a mere bodily kind of drudgery and ſervility: And therefore our Saviour when he models out religion to them, Matth. v. he points them out to ſomething fuller of inward life and ſpirit, and ſuch a one as might make them perfect, as their Father in Heaven is perfect. Such dull heavy-ſpirited principles as this Talmudical doctrine, we have quoted affordeth us, is, probably began to poſſeſs the chair in Antigonus's time, who therefore put in this caution againſt part of it, "That God was not to be ſerved ſo much upon the account of merit and for hope of wages, as out of love; though his diſciples Sadoc and Baithus, the founders of the ſect of the Sadducees, ſtraining that ſober principle too far, might more ſtrengthen that mercenary belief amongſt the other Doctors which they had before entertained.

But before I leave this argument, it may not be amiſs to examine alſo what the Cabbaliſtical Jews thought concerning this matter in hand; which in ſum is this, "That the law delivered upon mount Sinai was a device God had to knit and unite the Jews and the Shechinah or Divine Preſence together." Therefore they are pleaſed to ſtile it in the Book of Zohar (which is one of the ancienteſt monuments we have of the Jewiſh learning) the Treaſures of Life. And as if the living God could be united to the ſouls of men by ſuch a dead letter as this was, (as it is ſtiled by the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. iii.) they are pleaſed to make this external adminiſtration the great Vinculum Dei & hominis. And to this purpoſe R. Simeon ben Jochai (the compiler of the fore-quoted book, which is a myſtical Comment upon the Pentateuch) diſcourſeth upon thoſe words, Deut. xxx. 30. He is thy life, and the length of thy days, upon which he grounds this obſervation, The Shechinah or Divine Preſence is no where eſtabliſhed but by the mediation of the law; and a little after, he thus magnifies the ſtudy of the law, Whoſoever doth exerciſe himſelf in the law, doth merit the poſſeſſion of the upper inheritance which is in the Holy Kingdom above; and doth alſo merit the poſſeſſion of an inheritance here below in this world. Where by the way we may take notice that the ancient Jews looked upon the inheritances of the land of Canaan as being typical and ſignificative of an higher inheritance in the Kingdom of Heaven; both which they ſuppoſed to be the due rewards of mens works: And therefore they talk ſo much in the ſame place of Guardian-angels which are continually paſſing to and fro between Heaven and earth, as the heralds and meſſengers of mens good works to God in Heaven. And further upon thoſe words in Levit. xviii. 5. "Ye ſhall keep my ſtatutes and judgments; which if a man do, he ſhall live in them, he tells us, That the portion of Iſrael is meritorious, becauſe that the Holy Bleſſed One delighteth in them above all the idolatrous nations; and out of his favour and goodneſs to them, gave them the laws of truth, and planted amongſt them the tree of life; and the Shechinah was with them. Now what doth all this ſignify? Thus much, that ſince the Iſraelites are ſigned with the Holy Seal in their fleſh, they are thereby acknowledged for the Sons of God: As on the contrary, they that are not ſealed with this mark in their fleſh, are not the ſons of God, but are the children of uncleanneſs: Wherefore it is not lawful to contract familiarity with them, or to teach them the words of the law." Which afterwards is urged further by another of their maſters, "Whoſoever inſtructeth any uncircumciſed perſon though but in the leaſt precepts of the law, doth the ſame as if he ſhould deſtroy the world, and deny the name of the Holy Bleſſed One."

All which plainly amounts to thus much (as we had before out of the Talmudiſts,) That the law was given unto the Iſraelites for this purpoſe, "To enrich them with good works, and to augment their merits, and ſo to eſtabliſh the foundations of life and bleſſedneſs amongſt them; and to make it a medium of the union betwixt God and men, as R. Eliezer in the ſame book ſpeaketh of the near union between theſe three, The Holy Bleſſed One, the Law, and Iſrael."

There is one paſſage more in our fore-named author, R. Simeon ben Jochai, at the end of Paraſhah Jethro, which (though it be more myſtical than the reſt, yet) may be well worth our obſerving, as more fully hinting the perfection of the law, and ſetting that forth as an abſolute and complete medium of rendring a man perfect; upon which R. Joſ. Albo, in his third Book de Fundamentis hath ſpent two or three chapters. Thus, therefore, as if the law was the great magazine and ſtore-houſe of perfection, our foreſaid author there telleth us, "That when the Iſraelites ſtood upon mount Sinai, they ſaw God eye to eye, or face to face, and underſtood all ſecrets of the law, and all the arcana ſuperna & inferna, &c. and then he adds, That the ſame day in which the Iſraelites ſtood upon mount Sinai, all uncleanneſs paſſed away from them, and all their bodies did ſhine in brightneſs like to the Angels of Heaven when they put on their bright ſhining robes, to fit themſelves for the embaſſy upon which they are ſent by God their Lord. And a little after, thus; And when their uncleanneſs paſſed away from them, the bodies of the Iſraelites became ſhining and clear without any defilement; and their bodies did ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament. And thus concludeth all, When the Iſraelites received the law upon mount Sinai, the world was then perfum'd with a moſt aromatick ſmell, and Heaven and earth were eſtabliſhed, and the Holy Bleſſed One was known above and below, and he aſcended in his glory above all things."

By all which myſtical and allegorical expreſſions our author ſeems to aim at this main ſcope, viz. To ſet forth the law as that which of itſelf was ſufficient, without any other diſpenſation from God, for the perfecting of thoſe to whom it was diſpenſed; and to make them inheritors of all righteouſneſs here, and glory hereafter, which they were wont to ſet forth in that tranſcendent ſtate of perfection which the Iſraelites were in at the receiving of the law; whence they are alſo accuſtomed to boaſt that in ſtatione montis Sinai Iſraelite erant ſicut Angeli miniſterii. And

Thus we have endeavoured to make good that which we firſt propounded, namely, to ſhew, that the grand opinion of the Jews concerning the way to life and happineſs was, "That the law of God externally diſpenſed, and only furniſhed out to them in tables of ſtone, and a parchment-roll, conjoined with the power of their own free-will, was ſufficient both to procure them acceptance with God, and to acquire merit enough to carry them with crowded ſails into the harbour of eternal reſt and bleſſedneſs." So that

By this time we may be convinced that thoſe diſputes which Paul, and ſome other Apoſtles had, and maintain'd againſt the Jews touching the law and faith, were not merely about that one queſtion, Whether juſtification formally and preciſely reſpects faith alone, but of a much greater extent and concern.

Having finiſhed our firſt enquiry, I ſhall now proceed to the ſecond, which was this, "What the Evangelical Righteouſneſs, or Righteouſneſs of Faith is, which the Apoſtle ſets up againſt that of the law, and in what notion the law is conſidered by the Apoſtle;" which in ſum was, That the law was the miniſter of death, and in itſelf an external and liveleſs thing; neither could it procure or beget that Divine Life and ſpiritual form of godlineſs in the ſouls of men, which God expects from all the heirs of glory, nor that glory which is only conſequent upon a true Divine Life. Whereas, on the other ſide, the Goſpel is ſet forth as a mighty efflux and examination of life and ſpirit freely iſſuing forth from an Omnipotent Source of grace and love, as that true God-like vital influence whereby the Divinity derives itſelf into the ſouls of men, enlivening and transforming them into its own likeneſs, and ſtrongly imprinting upon them a copy of its own beauty and goodneſs: Like the ſpermatical virtue of the Heavens, which ſpreads itſelf freely upon this lower world, and ſubtily inſinuating itſelf into this benummed feeble earthly matter, begets life and motion in it. Briefly, It is that whereby God comes to dwell in us, and we in him.

But that we may the more diſtinctly unfold the difference between that righteouſneſs which is of the law, and that which is of faith, and ſo the better ſhew how the Apoſtle undermines that fabrick of happineſs which the Jews had built up for themſelves; we ſhall obſerve

Firſt in general, That the main thing which the Apoſtle endeavours to beat down was, that proud and arrogant conceit which they had of merit, and to advance againſt it the notion of the Divine grace and bounty, as the only fountain of all righteouſneſs and happineſs. For, indeed, that which all thoſe Jewiſh notions, which we have before taken notice of, aim principally at, was the advancing of the weakened powers of nature into ſuch an height of perfection as might render them capable of meritting at God's hands: And that perfection which they ſpeak ſo much of (as is clear from what hath been ſaid) was nothing elſe but a mere ſublimation of their own natural powers and principles, performed by the ſtrength of their own fancies. And therefore, theſe contractors with Heaven, were ſo pleaſed to look upon eternal life as a fair purchaſe, which they might make for themſelves at their own charge; as if the ſpring and riſe of all were in themſelves: Their eyes were ſo much dazzled with thoſe fooliſh fires of merit and reward kindled in their own fancies, that they could not ſee that light of Divine Grace and bounty which ſhone about them.

And this ſwelling pride of theirs (if I miſtake not) is that which Paul principally endeavours to chaſtiſe in advancing faith ſo much as he doth in oppoſition to the works of the law. For which purpoſe he ſpends the firſt and ſecond chapters of this Epiſtle to the Romans in drawing up a charge of ſuch a nature both againſt Gentiles and Jews, but principally againſt the Jews, who were the grand juſtitiaries, that might make them bethink themſelves of imploring mercy, and of laying aſide all plea of law and juſtice; and ſo chap. iii. 27. he ſhuts up all with a ſevere check to ſuch preſumptuous arrogance, ποῦ οὖν ἡ καύχησις, Where then is boaſting? This ſeems then to be the main end which Paul every where aims at in oppoſing faith to the works of the law, namely, to eſtabliſh the foundation of righteouſneſs and happineſs upon the free mercy and grace of God: The glorifying and magnifying of which in the real manifeſtations of it he publiſheth upon all occaſions, as the deſign and plot of the Goſpel-adminiſtration; ſeeing it is impoſſible for men by any works which they can perform to ſatisfy God's juſtice for thoſe ſins, which they have committed againſt him, or truly to comply with his Divine Will, without his Divine Aſſiſtance. So that the method of reconciling men to God, and reducing of ſtraying ſouls back again to him, was to be attributed wholly to another original than that which the Jews imagined. But,

Secondly, That righteouſneſs of faith which the Apoſtle ſets up againſt the law, and compares with it, is indeed in its own nature a vital and ſpiritual adminiſtration, wherein God converſeth with man; whereas the law was merely an external or dead thing in itſelf, not able to beget any true Divine Life in the ſouls of men. All that legal righteouſneſs which the Jews ſo much boaſted of, was but from the earth, earthly; conſiſting merely in external performances, and ſo falling extremely ſhort of that internal and God-like frame of ſpirit which is neceſſary for a true conjunction and union of the ſouls of men with God, and making of them capable of true bleſſedneſs.

But that we may the more diſtinctly handle this argument, we ſhall endeavour to unfold the true difference between the law and the Goſpel, as it ſeems evidently to be laid down every where by Paul in his Epiſtles: And the difference between them is clearly this, viz. that the law was merely an external thing, conſiſting in ſuch precepts which had only an outward adminiſtration; but the Goſpel is an internal thing, a vital form and principle ſeating itſelf in the minds and ſpirits of men. And this is the moſt proper and formal difference between the law and Goſpel, that the one is conſidered only as an external adminiſtration; and the other as an internal. And therefore,

The Apoſtle, 2 Cor. iii. 6, 7. calls the law, διακονίαν γράμματος and θανάτου, the miniſtration of the letter and of death, it being in itſelf but a dead letter; as all that which is without a man's ſoul muſt needs be. But on the other ſide,

He calls the Goſpel (becauſe of the intrinſical and vital adminiſtration thereof in living impreſſions upon the ſouls of men) διακονίαν πνεύματος, the miniſtration of the ſpirit, and διακονίαν τῆς δικαιοσύνης, the miniſtration of righteouſneſs. By which he cannot mean the hiſtory of the Goſpel, or thoſe things propounded to us to believe, for this would make the Goſpel itſelf as much an external thing as the law was, and according to the external adminiſtration as much a killing or dead letter, as the law was: And ſo we ſee the preaching of Chriſt crucified was to the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and to the Greeks fooliſhneſs. But indeed he means a vital efflux from God upon the ſouls of men, whereby they are made partakers of life and ſtrength from him: And therefore, (ver. 7.) he thus exegetically expounds his own meaning of that ſhort deſcription of the law, namely, that it was διακονία τοῦ θανάτου ἐν γράμμασιν, ἐντετυπωμένη ἐν λίθοις: Which, I think, may be fitly thus tranſlated, it was a dead (or liveleſs adminiſtration) for ſo ſometimes by an Hebraiſm the genitive caſe in government put for the adjective) or elſe an adminiſtration of death exhibited in letters, and engraven on tables of ſtone: And therefore he tells us (ver. 6.) what the effect of it was in thoſe words, Τὸ γράμμα ἀποκτείνει, the letter killeth, as indeed all external precepts which have not a proper vital radication in the ſouls of men, whereby they are able to ſecure them from the tranſgreſſion of them, muſt needs do. Now to this dead or killing letter, he oppoſes (ver. 8) a quickning ſpirit, or the διακονία τοῦ πνεύματος, the miniſtration of the ſpirit, which afterwards (ver. 9.) he expounds by διακονία τῆς δικαιοσύνης, the miniſtration of righteouſneſs, that is, the Evangelical adminiſtration. So that the Goſpel or Evangelical adminiſtration, muſt be an internal impreſſion, a vivacious and energetical ſpirit and principle of righteouſneſs in the ſouls of men, whereby they are inwardly enabled to expreſs a real conformity thereto. Upon this ground the Apoſtle further purſues the effects of both theſe from the 14th verſe to the end.

By all which the Apoſtle means to ſet forth to us, how vaſt a difference there is between the external manifeſtations of God in a law of commandments, and thoſe internal appearances of God whereby he diſcovers the mighty power of his goodneſs to the ſouls of men.

Though the hiſtory and outward communication of the Goſpel to us, is to be always acknowledged as a ſpecial mercy and advantage, and certainly no leſs privilege to Chriſtians, than it was to the Jews to be the depoſitaries of the oracles of God; Rom. iii. 1. yet it is plain that the Apoſtle, where he compares the law and the Goſpel, and in other places, doth by the Goſpel mean ſomething, which is more than a piece of book-learning, or an hiſtorical narration of the free love of God in the ſeveral contrivances of it for the redemption of mankind. For, if this were all that is meant properly by the Goſpel, I ſee no reaſon why it ſhould not be counted as weak and impotent a thing, as dead a letter as the law was, (as we intimated before;) and ſo there would be no ſuch vaſt difference between them as the Apoſtle aſſerts there is; the one being properly an external declaration of God's will, the other an internal manifeſtation of Divine life upon mens ſouls; and therefore, Gal. iii. 21. he ſo diſtinguiſheth between this double diſpenſation of God, that this Evangelical diſpenſation is a vital and quickening thing, able to beget a ſoul and form of Divine goodneſs upon the ſouls of men; which, becauſe the law could not do, it was laid aſide, as being inſufficient to reſtore man to the favour of God, or to make him partaker of his righteouſneſs. If there had been a law which could have given life, ὄντως ἂν ἐκ νόμου ἦν ἡ δικαιοσύνη, verily righteouſneſs ſhould have been by the law; where by δικαιοσύνη, he ſeems to mean the ſame thing which he meant by it when in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, he calls the œconomy of the Goſpel διακονίαν δικαιοσύνης, the miniſtration of righteouſneſs, or as וכירה, is taken among the Jewiſh writers for acceptance with God, and that internal form of righteouſneſs that qualifies the ſoul for eternal life; and ſo he takes it in a far more large and ample ſenſe than that external righteouſneſs of juſtification is: And indeed it ſeems to expreſs the juſt ſtate of thoſe who are renewed by the Spirit of God, and made partakers of that Divine life which is emphatically called the ſeed of God. For this δικαιοσύνη righteouſneſs, which he here ſpeaks of, is the proper reſult of an enlivening and quickning law, which is this new law of the Goſpel, in oppoſition to that old law which was adminiſtred only in writing; and therefore, this new law is called in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, chap. viii. 6, &c. κρείττων διαθήκη, the better covenant, whereas, the old was faulty. In which place this is put down as the formal difference between the legal and Evangelical adminiſtration, or the old and new covenant, that the old covenant was only externally promulged and wrapt up as it were in ink and parchment, or, at beſt, engraven upon tables of ſtone; whereas this new covenant is ſet forth in living characters imprinted upon the vital powers of mens ſouls, as we have ver. 10, 11. This is the covenant that I will make, &c. I will put my laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts: And therefore the old covenant is ver. 7. ſaid not to be ἄμεμπτος an unblameable or faultleſs thing, becauſe it was not able to keep off tranſgreſſions, or hinder the violation of it ſelf, no more than an inſcription upon ſome pillar or monument is able to inſpire life into thoſe that read it and converſe with it; the old law or covenant being in this reſpect no other than all other civil conſtitutions are, which receive their efficacy merely from the willing compliance of mens minds with them, ſo that they muſt be enlivened by the ſubject that receives them, being dead things in themſelves. But the Evangelical or new law is ſuch a thing as is an efflux of life and power from God himſelf the original thereof, and produceth life wherefoever it comes. And to this double diſpenſation, viz. of law and Goſpel, doth Paul clearly refer, 2 Cor. iii. 3. You are the Epiſtle of Chriſt, miniſtred by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God, not in tables of ſtone; which laſt words are a plain gloſs upon that worldly kind of adminiſtring the law in a mere external way, to which he oppoſeth the Goſpel. And this argument he further purſues in the ſeventh and eighth chapters of this Epiſtle to the Romans, in which laſt chap. v. 2. he ſtiles the Goſpel, νόμον τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς ζωῆς, the law of the ſpirit of life, which was able to deſtroy the power of ſin, and to introduce ſuch a ſpiritual and heavenly frame of ſoul into men, as whereby they might be enabled to expreſs a chearful compliance with the law of God, and demonſtrate a true heavenly converſation and God-like life in this world. And

It peculiarly belongs to God to write the laws of goodneſs in the tables of mens hearts. All the outward teachings of men are but dead things in themſelves. But God's imprinting his mind and will upon mens hearts is properly that which is called the teaching of God, and then they become living laws written in the living tables of mens hearts fitted to receive and retain Divine impreſſions. And,

That we may come a little nearer to theſe words upon which all this preſent diſcourſe is built, this ſeems to be the ſcope of his argument in this place, where this νόμος δικαιοσύνης, law of righteouſneſs, may fairly be paralleled with that which before he called νόμον πνεύματος, the law of the ſpirit, and which he therefore calls δικαιοσύνην πίστεως, the righteouſneſs of faith, becauſe it is received from God in a way of believing. For I cannot eaſily think that he ſhould mean nothing elſe in this place, but merely the righteouſneſs of juſtification, as ſome would perſwade us, but rather that his ſenſe is much more comprehenſive, ſo as to include the ſtate of Goſpel-diſpenſation, which includes not only pardon of ſins, but an inward ſpirit of love, power, and of a ſound mind, as he expreſſeth it, 2 Tim. i. 7. And this he thus oppoſeth to the law, Rom. x. 6, &c. But the righteouſneſs of faith ſpeaketh on this wiſe; Say not in thy heart, Who ſhall aſcend into Heaven? &c. or, Who ſhall deſcend into the deep? But what ſaith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that is, the word of faith which we preach. In which words Cunæus in his De Repub. Hebr. would have us to underſtand ſome Cabbala or Tradition amongſt the Jews for this meaning of that place, Deut. xxx. 12. from which theſe words are borrowed, which as they there ſtand, ſeem not to carry that Evangelical ſenſe which here Paul expounds them into; though yet Cunæus hath not given us any reaſon for this his opinion. But indeed the Jewiſh writers generally, who were acquainted with the principles of the Cabbala, commenting upon that place, do wholly refer it to the times of the Meſſiah, making it parallel with that place of Jeremy which defines the new covenant to be a writing of the law of God in mens hearts. And thus that life and ſalvation that reſults from the righteouſneſs of faith is all, as faith it ſelf is, deriving from God gratuitouſly diſpenſing himſelf to the minds of men: Whereas if life could have been by the law, its original and principal muſt have been reſolved into men themſelves who muſt have acted that dead matter without them, and have produced that virtue and energy in it, by their exerciſing themſelves therein, which of it ſelf it had not; as the obſervance of any law enables that law it ſelf to diſpenſe that reward which is due to the obſervance of it: And therefore the righteouſneſs of the law was ſo defined, that he that did thoſe things ſhould live in them. And thus the New Teſtament every where ſeems to preſent to us this two fold diſpenſation or œconomy, the one conſiſting in an external and written law of precepts, the other in inward life and power. Which Auſtin hath well purſued in his book de Litera & Spiritu, from whom Aquinas (who endeavours to tread in his foot-ſteps) ſeems to have taken firſt of all an occaſion of moving that queſtion, Utrum Lex nova ſit lex ſcripta, vel lex indita; and thus reſolves it, that the new law or Goſpel is not properly lex ſcripta, as the old was, but lex indita: And that the old law is foris ſcripta, the other intus ſcripta, written in the tables of the heart. Now,

From all this we may eaſily apprehend how much the righteouſneſs of the Goſpel tranſcends that of the law, in that it hath indeed a true command over the inward man which it acts and informs; whereas the law by all its menaces and puniſhments could only compel men to an external obſervance of it in the outward man; as the ſchoolmen have well obſerved, Lex vetus ligat manum, Lex nova ligat animum.

And herein Paul every where magnifies this Diſpenſation of the free mercy and grace of God, as being the only ſovereign remedy againſt all the inward radicated maladies of ſin and corruption, and the univerſal reſtorative of decayed and impotent nature. So he tells us Rom. 6. Sin ſhall not have dominion, becauſe we are uot under the law, but under grace. And this is that which made him ſo much extol his acquaintance with Chriſt in the Diſpenſation of grace, and to deſpiſe all things as loſs, Philip. 3. where among his other Jewiſh privileges having reckoned up his blameleſs in all points touching the law, he undervalues them all, and counts all but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus. In which place the Apoſtle doth not mean to diſparage a real inward righteouſneſs and the ſtrict obſervance of the law; but his meaning is to ſhew how poor and worthleſs a thing all outward obſervances of the law are in compariſon of a true internal conformity to Chriſt in the renovation of the mind and ſoul according to his image and likeneſs; as is manifeſt from v. 9, 10, &c. in which he thus delivers his own meaning of that knowledge of Chriſt which he ſo much extolled, very emphatically, "that I may be found in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith. Where by the way we may further take notice what this righteouſneſs of faith and the righteouſneſs of God (which we have already ſpoke much of) is according to his own true meaning, as he expounds himſelf, viz. a Chriſt-like nature in a man's ſoul, or Chriſt appearing in the minds of men by the mighty power of his Divine Spirit, and thereby deriving a true participation of himſelf to them; ſo we have it, v. 10. That I may know the power of his reſurrection, and the fellowſhip of his ſufferings being made conformable unto his death. And thus Chriſt and Moſes are oppoſed, as Chriſt is the diſpenſer of grace and truth, of God's free and gratuitous bounty, of life and ſubſtance; whereas Moſes was but the miniſter of the law, of rites and ſhadows.

But it may, perhaps, be queſtioned whether the ſame internal diſpenſation of God was not as well under the law, as ſince our Saviour's coming, and ſo conſequently that the Jews were equally partakers thereof; and ſo it could be no new thing to them.

To all which I might reply, That this diſpenſation of grace was then a more myſtical thing, and not ſo manifeſted to the world as it hath been ſince our Saviour's coming. Secondly, This diſpenſation of free grace was not that which properly belonged to the nation of the Jews, but only a type and ſhadow of it.

For the fuller underſtanding of which and all that hath been ſpoken, we muſt know, That before our Saviour's coming, the great myſteries of Religion being wrapt up in hieroglyphicks and ſymbolical rites, (the unfolding of all which was reſerved for him who is the great Interpreter of Heaven, and Maſter of Truth) God was pleaſed to draw forth a ſcheme or copy of all that Divine oeconomy and method of his commerce with mankind, and to make a draught of the whole artifice thereof in external matter; and therefore he ſingled out a company and ſociety of men of the ſame common extraction, marked out from all other ſorts of men by a character of genealogical ſanctity (for ſo circumciſion was) collected and united together by a band of brotherhood; and this he ſet up as an emblem of a Divine and Holy ſeed or ſociety of men which are all by way of ſpiritual generation deſcended from himſelf. And hence it is that the Jews (the whole Jewiſh nation univerſally conſidered) who were but a mere repreſentative of this ſpiritual fraternity and congregation, are called the holy ſeed, or the holy people. Then afterwards amongſt theſe he erects a government and politie, and rules over them in the way and manner of a political prince, as hath been long ſince well obſerved by Joſephus, who therefore properly calls the Jewiſh government θεοκρατίαν, a theocracy, or the government of God himſelf. And Thus in a ſcheme or figure he ſhadows forth that ſpiritual kingdom and government which he would eſtabliſh amongſt that Divine Society of men, in reference to which we have ſo much mention made of the kingdom of Heaven in the Goſpel, which is not generally and ſolely meant of the ſtate of glory, much leſs of any outward Church-rites, but mainly of that idea and exemplar of which the Jewiſh Theocracy was an imitation. Laſtly, as a political prince, God draws forth a body of laws, as the political conſtitution and rules of this government which he had ſet up, chuſing Mount Sinai for the theatre whereon he would promulge thoſe laws by which all his ſubjects ſhould be governed. And ſo I doubt not but that preface by which the law is uſhered in, Exod. xx. which ſpeaks of God's mercy in delivering them from the Egyptian thraldom, may very well be allegorized and myſtically expounded.

pounded. And all this was to ſignify and ſet forth that law which was to go forth from Mount Sion, the promulgation whereof was to be in a vital and ſpiritual way among the ſubjects of this ſpiritual kingdom. To all which we may add thoſe temporal inheritances which he diſtributed to the Jewiſh families, in imitation of that eternal bleſſedneſs and thoſe immortal inheritances which he ſhares out amongſt his ſpiritual ſons and ſubjects in Heaven. And this I the rather add, becauſe here the Jews are much perplexed about untying this knot, namely, what the reaſon ſhould be that their law ſpeaks ſo ſparingly of any eternal reward, but runs out generally in promiſes of mundane and earthly bleſſings in the land of Canaan. But by this we may ſee the true reaſon of that which the Apoſtle ſpeaks concerning them, 2 Cor. iii. 14. "Until this day, τὸ αὐτὸ κάλυμμα the ſame vail in the reading of the Old Teſtament remaineth untaken away." That vail which was on Moſes's face, was an emblem of all this great myſtery; and this vail was upon the face of the Jews in their reading the Old Teſtament; they dwelling ſo much in a carnal converſe with theſe ſacramental ſymbols which were offerod to them in the reading of the law, that they could not ſee through them into the thing ſignified thereby, and ſo embraced ſhadows inſtead of ſubſtance, and made account to build up happineſs and Heaven upon that earthly law to which properly the land of Canaan was annexed: Whereas, indeed, this law ſhould have been their ſchool-maſter to have led them to Chriſt whoſe law it prefigured; which that it might do the more effectually, God had annexed to the breach of any one part of it ſuch ſevere curſes, that they might from thence perceive how much need they had of ſome further diſpenſation. And therefore,

This ſtate of theirs is ſet forth by a ſtate of bondage, or, πνεῦμα δουλείας. For all external precepts carry perpetually an aſpect of auſterity and rigour to thoſe minds that are not informed by the internal ſweetneſs of them. And this is it only which makes the Goſpel or the new law to be a free, noble and generous thing, becauſe it is ſeated in the ſouls of men; and therefore Aquinas out of Auſtin hath well obſerved another difference between the law and Goſpel, Brevis differentia inter legem & Evangelium eſt Timor & Amor. This I the rather obſerve, becauſe the true meaning of that ſpirit of bondage which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of is frequently miſtaken.

We might further (if need were) for a confirmation of this which we have ſpoken concerning the typicalneſs of the whole Jewiſh œconomy appeal to the third and fourth chapters of the Epiſtle to the Galatians, which cannot well be underſtood without this notion, where we have the Jewiſh Church, as a type of the true Evangelical Church, brought in as a child in its minority in ſervitude under tutors and governors, ſhut up under the law till the time of that emphatical revelation of the great myſtery of God ſhould come, till the day ſhould break, and all the ſhadows of the night flee away.

That I may return from this digreſſion to the argument we before purſued, this briefly may be added, that under the old covenant and in the time of the law, there were among the Jews ſome that were Evangelized, that were re, non nomine Chriſtiani; as under the Goſpel there are many that do Judaize, are of as legal and ſervile ſpirits as the Jews, children of the bond-woman, reſting in mere external obſervances of religion, in an outward ſeeming purity, in a form of godlineſs, as did the ſcribes and Phariſees of old.

From what hath hitherto been diſcourſed, I hope the difference between both covenants clearly appears, and that the Goſpel was not brought in only to publiſh a new platform and model of religion; it was not brought in only to refine ſome notions of truth, that might formerly ſeem diſcoloured and disfigured by a multitude of legal rites and ceremonies; it was not to caſt our opinions concerning the way of life and happineſs only into a new mould and ſhape in a pedagogical kind of way: It is not ſo much a ſyſtem and body of ſaving Divinity, but the ſpirit and vital influx of it ſpreading itſelf over all the powers of mens ſouls, and quickning them into a Divine Life: It is not ſo properly a doctrine that is wrapt up in ink and paper, as it is a living impreſſion made upon the ſoul and ſpirit. We may in a true ſenſe be as legal as ever the Jews were, if we converſe with the Goſpel as a thing only without us; and be as far ſhort of the righteouſneſs of God as they were, if we make the righteouſneſs which is of Chriſt by faith to ſerve us only as an outward covering, and endeavour not after an internal tranſformation of our minds and ſouls into it. The Goſpel does not ſo much conſiſt in words, as in true piety: Neither doth Evangelical Diſpenſation, therefore, pleaſe God much more than the legal did, becauſe, as a finer contrivance of his infinite underſtanding, it more clearly diſcovers the way of ſalvation to the minds of men; but chiefly becauſe it is a more powerful efflux of his Divine Goodneſs upon them, as being the true ſeed of a happy immortality continually thriving and growing on to perfection. I ſhall add further,

The Goſpel does not, therefore, hold forth ſuch a tranſcendent privilege and advantage above what the law did, only becauſe it acquaints us that Chriſt our true high-prieſt is aſcended up into the Holy of holies, and there inſtead of the blood of bulls and goats, hath ſprinkled the ark and mercy-ſeat above with his own blood: But alſo becauſe it conveys that blood of ſprinkling into our defiled conſciences, to purge them from dead works. Far be it from me to diſparage in the leaſt the merit of Chriſt's blood, his becoming obedient unto death, whereby we are juſtified. But I doubt ſometimes ſome of our doctrines and notions about juſtification may puff us up in far higher and goodlier conceits of our ſelves than God hath of us; and that we profanely make the unſpotted righteouſneſs of Chriſt to ſerve only as a covering to wrap up our foul deformities and filthy vices in; and when we have done, think our ſelves in as good credit and repute with God, as we are with our ſelves, and that we are become Heaven's darlings as much as we are our own. I doubt not but the merit and obedience of our Saviour will obtain favour for us in the ſight, and at the mercy-ſeat of God, and moſt powerfully move down the kind and gracious influences of Heaven upon us. But yet, I think we may be ſometimes too laviſh and wanton in our own imaginations, in vainly conceiting a greater change in the eſteem, which God hath of us than becomes us, and too little reckon upon the real and vital immanations of his favour upon us. Therefore,

For the further clearing and illuſtrating of what has been ſaid, I refer you to what I have already noted upon Juſtification by Faith in the third chapter of this Epiſtle, which being moſtly critical, I ſhall here ſubjoin a more practical Diſſertation on our Juſtification or acceptance with God, as being more ſuitable to, becauſe neceſſary to enforce the argument in the Premiſes.

A Diſſertation on Juſtification.

For the better underſtanding of the Chriſtian Doctrine of Juſtification, and our acceptance with God through the Righteouſneſs which is by faith, I ſhall lay down two propoſitions, 1ſt, That the Divine Judgment and Eſtimation of every thing is according to the truth of the thing; and God's acceptance or refuſal of things is ſuitable to his judgment.

2dly, That God's juſtifying of ſinners in pardoning their ſins carries in it a neceſſary reference to the ſanctifying of their natures.

1. As to the firſt of theſe propoſitions, Peter bears us witneſs, that God is no reſpecter of perſons; but that every one that worketh righteouſneſs is accepted of him; Acts x. And it can't be forgot, how God aſſured Cain that he was entirely impartial; for, when that murderer, entertained unworthy and ungrounded ſuſpitions of his Creator's partiality, God upbraided him with his unbelief and ſaid, If thou doeſt well, (as thy brother has done) ſhalt not thou be accepted, (as well as he)? It is certain from infinite examples, that wherever God finds any ſtamps and impreſſions of goodneſs, he likes and approves them, very well knowing them to be, what they indeed are, nothing elſe but his own image and ſuperſcription. And Wherever he ſees this image of his Divinity ſhining in the ſouls of men, and a conformity of life to that eternal idea of goodneſs, which is himſelf, he loves it, as Chriſt did the young man in the Goſpel, and takes a real pleaſure in it, as a thing which is from himſelf. And, as his own unbounded exiſtence and goodneſs is the primary and original object of his immenſe and Almighty Love; ſo alſo every thing that partakes of him, partakes proportionably of his love; all imitations of him, and participations of his love and goodneſs are perpetually adequate and commenſurate one to the other. So by how much the more any one is acceptable to God, by ſo much more he comes nearer to reſemble his Creator. And as the Divine Pleaſure, or Good Will, thus dearly and tenderly entertains all thoſe which bear a ſimilitude of true goodneſs upon them; ſo it always abandons from its embraces all evil, which never doth, nor can mix itſelf with it. The Holy Spirit can never ſuffer any unhallowed or defiled thing to enter into it, or unite itſelf with it. Therefore, in a ſober ſenſe, I hope I may truly ſay, There is no perfector through-reconciliation wrought between God and the ſouls of men, while any defiled and impure thing dwells within the ſoul, which cannot truly cloſe with God, nor God with that. The Divine Love according to thoſe degrees by which it works upon the ſouls of men in transforming them into its own likeneſs, by the ſame it renders them more acceptable to itſelf, mingleth itſelf with, and uniteth itſelf to them: As the Spirit of any thing mixeth itſelf more or leſs with any matter it acts upon, according as it works itſelf into it, and ſo makes a way and paſſage open for itſelf.

Upon this account I ſuppoſe it may be that James attributes a kind of juſtification to good works, which unqueſtionably are things that God approves and accepts, and all thoſe in whom he finds them, as ſeeing there a true conformity to his own goodneſs and holineſs, (ſee our notes on chap. iii. ver. 28). . Whereas on the other ſide he diſparageth that barren, ſluggiſh and drowſy belief, that a lazy lethargy in religion began in his times to hug ſo dearly, in reference to acceptation with God. I ſuppoſe, I may fairly thus gloſs at his whole diſcourſe upon this argument: God reſpects not a bold, confident and audacious faith, that is big with nothing but its own preſumptions. It is not becauſe our brains ſwim with a ſtrong conceit of God's eternal love to us, or becauſe we grow big and ſwell into a mighty bulk with airy fancies and preſumptions of our acceptance with God, that makes us ere the more acceptable to him: It is not all our ſtrong dreams of being in favour with Heaven that fills our hungry ſouls a-bit the more with it: It is not a pertinacious imagination of our names being enrolled in the book of life; or of the debt-books of Heaven being croſſed; or of Chriſt being ours, while we find him not living within us; or of the waſhing away of our ſins in his blood, while the foul and filthy ſtains thereof are deeply ſunk in our own ſouls; it is not, I ſay, a pertinacious imagination of any of theſe that can make us in any wiſe the better: And a mere conceit or opinion, as it makes us never the better in reality within ourſelves; ſo it cannot render us in the leaſt the more acceptable to God who judges of all things as they are. No, it muſt be a true compliance with the Divine Will, which muſt render us ſuch as the Divinity may take pleaſure in. In Chriſt Jeſus neither circumciſion nor uncircumciſion availeth any thing (nor any fancy built upon any other external privilege) but the keeping of the commandments of God, 1 Cor. vii. 9. No, but if any man does the will of God, him will both the Father and the Son love; they will come in to him and make their abode with him, 1 John xiv. This is the ſcope and mark which a true Heaven-born faith aims at; and when it hath attained this end, then is it indeed perfect and compleat in its laſt accompliſhment. And by how much the more ardency and intention faith levels at this mark of inward goodneſs and Divine activity, by ſo much the more perfect and ſincere it is. This is that which God juſtifies, it being juſt and correſpondent to his own good pleaſure; and in whomſoever he finds this, both it and they are accepted of him. And ſo I come to the ſecond particular.

II. God's juſtifying of ſinners in pardoning and remitting their ſins, carries in it a neceſſary reference to the ſanctifying of their natures; without which juſtification would rather be a glorious name, than a real privilege to the ſouls of men. While men continue in their wickedneſs, they do but vainly dream of a device to tie the hands of an Almighty vengeance from ſeizing on them: No, their own ſins, like ſo many armed giants, would firſt or laſt ſet upon them, and rend them with inward torment. There needs no angry cherub with a flaming ſword drawn out every way to keep their unhallowed hands off from the tree of life: No, their own prodigious luſts, like ſo many arrows in their ſides, would chaſe them, their own helliſh natures would ſink them low enough into eternal death, and chain them up faſt enough in fetters of darkneſs among the filthy fiends of hell. Sin will always be miſerable; and the ſinner at laſt, when the empty bladders of all thoſe hopes and expectations of an airy worldly happineſs, that did hear bear him up in this life, ſhall be cut, will find it like a talent of lead weighing him down into the bottomleſs gulf of miſery. If all were clear towards Heaven, we ſhould find ſin raiſing up ſtorms in our own ſouls. We cannot carry fire in our own boſoms, and yet not be burnt. Though we could ſuppoſe the greateſt ſerenity without us, if we could ſuppoſe ourſelves never ſo much to be at truce with Heaven, and all Divine Diſpleaſure laid aſleep; yet would our own ſins, if they continue unmortified, firſt or laſt make an Ætna, or Veſuvius, (a burning mountain) within us. Nay, thoſe ſunbeams of eternal truth, that by us are detained in unrighteouſneſs, would at laſt in thoſe helliſh vaults of vice and darkneſs that are within us, kindle into an unquenchable fire. It would be of ſmall benefit to us, that Chriſt hath triumphed over the principalities and powers of darkneſs without us, while hell and death, ſtrongly immured in a fort of our own ſins and corruptions, ſhould tyrannize within us: That his blood ſhould ſpeak peace in Heaven, if in the mean while our own luſts were perpetually warring and fighting in and againſt our own ſouls: That he hath taken off our guilt and cancelled that handwriting that was againſt us, which bound us over to eternal condemnation; if, for all this, we continue faſt ſealed up in the helliſh dungeon of our own filthy luſts. Indeed we could not expect any relief from Heaven out of that miſery under which we lie, were not God's diſpleaſure againſt us firſt pacified and our ſins remitted: But ſhould the Divine Clemency ſtoop no lower to us, than to a mere pardon of our ſins and an abſtract juſtification, we ſhould never riſe out of that miſery under which we lie. This is the ſignal and tranſcendent benefit of our free juſtification through the blood of Chriſt, that God's offence juſtly conceived againſt us for our ſins (which would have been an eternal bar and reſtraint to the efflux of his grace upon us) being taken off, the Divine Grace and bounty may freely flow forth upon us. The fountain of the Divine Grace and love is now unlocked and opened, which our ſins had ſhut up; and now the ſtreams of holineſs and true goodneſs from thence freely flow forth into all gaſping ſouls that thirſt after them. The warm ſun of the Divine Love, whenever it breaks through and ſcatters the thick cloud of our iniquities that had formerly ſeparated between God and us, it immediately breaks forth upon us with healing in its wings; it exerciſeth the mighty force of its own light and heat upon our dark and benummed ſouls, begetting in them a lively ſenſe of God, and kindling into ſparks of Divine Goodneſs within us. This love, when once it hath chaſed away the thick miſt of our ſins, it will be as ſtrong as death upon us, as potent as the grave, many waters will not quench it, nor the floods drown it. If we ſhut not the windows of our ſouls againſt it, it will at laſt enlighten all thoſe regions of darkneſs that are within us, and lead our ſouls to the light of life, bleſſedneſs and immortality. God pardons mens ſins out of an eternal deſign of deſtroying them; and whenever the ſentence of death is taken off from a ſinner, it is at the ſame time denounced againſt his ſins. God does not bid us be warmed and be filled, and deny us thoſe neceſſaries which our ſtarving and hungry ſouls call for. Chriſt having made peace through the blood of his croſs, the Heavens ſhall be no more as iron above us; but we ſhall freely receive the vital dew, thoſe influences from above, which ſouls truly ſenſible of their own miſery and imperfection inceſſantly gaſp after; that righteouſneſs of God, which drops from above, from the unſealed ſpring of free goodneſs, which makes glad the city of God. This is that free love and grace, which the ſouls of good men ſo much triumph in: This is that juſtification, which begets in us the lively hopes of an happy immortality in the preſent anticipations thereof, which ſpring forth from it in this life. And all this is that, which we call ſometimes the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, at other times, the righteouſneſs of God; and in this Scripture, we have now interpreted, the righteouſneſs, which is of faith. In Heaven it is a not-imputing of ſin; and in the ſouls of men it is a reconciliation of rebellious natures to truth and goodneſs. In Heaven it is the lifting up the light of God's countenance upon us, which begets a joyous entertainment in the ſouls of men, holy and dear reflections and reciprocations of love towards God, who ſo graciouſly poureth his bleſſings upon us. Thus the Divine Love begets in us a reflex love towards God, which like that ἔρως and ἀντέρως of the ancients, live and thrive together. And, Queſt. Now I ſhould have done, only that I find it neceſſary to anſwer this query, How the Goſpel-righteouſneſs is conveyed to us by faith?

Anſwer. Faith is that powerful attractive which, by a ſtrong and Divine Sympathy, draws down the virtue of Heaven into the ſouls of men, which ſtrongly and forcibly moves the ſouls of good men into a conjunction with that Divine Goodneſs by which it lives and grows: This is that Divine Impreſs, that invincibly draws and ſucks them in by degrees into the Divinity, and ſo unites them more and more to the centre of life and love. It is ſomething in the hearts of men which, feeling by an occult and inward ſenſation, the mighty inſinuations of the Divine Goodneſs, immediately complies with it, and with the greateſt ardency that may be, is perpetually riſing up into conjunction with it; and being firſt begotten and enlivened by the warm beams of that goodneſs, it always breathes and gaſps after it for its conſtant growth and nouriſhment. It is then fulleſt of life and vivacity, when it partakes moſt freely of it; and perpetually languiſheth, when it is in any meaſure deprived of that ſweet and pure nouriſhment it derives from it.

But that we may the more clearly unfold this buſineſs, How Goſpel-righteouſneſs comes to be communicated through faith, we ſhall lay it forth in two particulars.

1. Firſt, The Goſpel lays a ſtrong foundation of a chearful dependance upon the grace and love of God, and affiance in it. We have the greateſt ſecurity and aſſurance that may be given us of God's readineſs to relieve ſuch forlorn and deſolate creatures as we are: That there are no ſuch dreadful fates in Heaven as are continually thirſting after the blood of ſinners, inſatiably greedy after their prey, never ſatisfied till they have devoured the ſouls of men. Leſt we ſhould by ſuch dreadful apprehenſions be driven from God, we are told of the blood of ſprinkling that ſpeaks better things for us; of a mighty favourite ſoliciting our cauſe with perpetual interceſſions in the court of Heaven; of a new and living way to the throne of grace and to the Holy of Holies, which our Saviour hath conſecrated through his fleſh: We are told of a great and mighty Saviour able to ſave to the utmoſt all that come to God by him: We hear of the moſt compaſſionate and tender promiſes that may be from the truth itſelf, that whoſoever comes to him he will in no wiſe caſt out; that they that believe on him, out of them ſhould flow ſtreams of living water: We hear of the moſt gracious invitations that Heaven can make to all weary and heavy-laden ſinners to come to Chriſt, that they may find reſt: The great ſecrets of Heaven, and the arcana of divine counſels are revealed, whereby we are acquainted that glory to God in the higheſt, peace on earth, good will towards men, are ſweetly joined together in Heaven's harmony, and happily combined together in the compoſure of its hymns: That the glory of the Deity and ſalvation of men, are not allayed by their union one with another, but both exalted together in the moſt tranſcendent way; that Divine Love and bounty are the ſupreme rulers in Heaven and earth, ϗ φθόνος ἔξω ἵςαται τȣ Χόρȣ, there is no ſuch thing as ſowre deſpight and envy lodged in the boſom of that ever-bleſſed Being above, whoſe name is LOVE, and all whoſe diſpenſations to the ſons of men are but the diſpreadings and diſtended radiations of his love, as freely flowing forth from it through the whole orb and ſphere of its creation, as the bright light from the ſun in the firmament, of whoſe benign influences we are then only deprived, when we hide and withdraw ourſelves from them. We are taught that the mild and gentle breathings of the Divine Spirit, are moving up and down in the world to produce life, and to revive and quicken the ſouls of men into a feeling ſenſe of a bleſſed immortality. This is that mighty Spirit that will, if we comply with it, teach us all things, even the hidden things of God; mortify all the luſts of rebellious fleſh, and ſeal us up to the day of redemption. We are taught that with all holy boldneſs we may in all places lift up holy hands to God, without wrath or doubting, without any ſowre thoughts of God, or fretful jealouſies, or harſh ſurmiſes. We can never diſtruſt enough in our ſelves, nor ever truſt too much in God. This is the great plerophory, or that full confidence which the Goſpel every where ſeems to promote: And ſhould I run through all the arguments and ſolicitations that are laid down, to provoke us to an entertainment hereof, I ſhould then run quite through it from one end to another: It containing almoſt nothing elſe in the whole complex and body of it but ſtrong and forcible motives to all ingenuous addreſſes to God, and the moſt effectual encouragement that may be to all chearful dependance on him, and confident expectation of all aſſiſtance from him, to carry on our poor endeavours to the atchievement of bleſſedneſs, and that in the moſt plain and ſimple way that may be, ſine fraude & fuco, "without any double mind or mental reſervation;" Heaven is not acquainted ſo feelingly with our wicked arts and devices. But it is very ſtrange that where God writes life ſo plainly in fair capital letters, we are ſo often apt to read death; that when he tells us over and over, that hell and deſtruction ariſe from our ſelves, that they are the workmanſhip of our own hands, we will needs underſtand their pedigree to be from Heaven, and that they were conceived in the womb of life and bleſſedneſs. No, but the Goſpel tells us we are not come to mounts of burning, nor unto blackneſs and darkneſs, and tempeſt, &c. Heb. xii. 18. Certainly a lively faith in this love of God, and a ſober converſe with his goodneſs by a cordial entertainment and thorough perſwaſion of it, would warm our benummed minds, and thaw our hearts frozen with ſelf-love; it would make us melt and diſſolve out of all ſelf-conſiſtency, and by a free and noble ſympathy with the Divine Love to yield up our ſelves to it, and dilate and ſpread our ſelves more fully in it. This would baniſh away all atheiſm and ireful ſlaviſh ſuperſtition; it would caſt down every high thought and proud imagination that ſwells within us and exalts itſelf againſt this ſoveraign Deity; it would free us from all thoſe poor, ſorry, pinching and particular loves that here inthral the ſouls of men to vanity and baſeneſs; it would lead us into the true liberty of the ſons of God, filling our hearts once enlarged with the ſenſe of it with a more generous and univerſal love, as unlimited and unbounded as true goodneſs itſelf is. Thus Moſes-like converſing with God in the mount, and there beholding his glory ſhining thus out upon us in the face of Chriſt, we ſhould be deriving a copy of that eternal beauty upon our own ſouls, and our thirſty and hungry ſpirits would be perpetually ſucking in a true participation and image of his glory. A true Divine Love would wing our ſouls, and make them take their flight ſwiftly towards Heaven and immortality. Could we once be throughly poſſeſſed and maſtered with a full confidence of the Divine Love, and God's readineſs to aſſiſt ſuch feeble, languiſhing creatures as we are, in our aſſays after Heaven and bleſſedneſs, we ſhould then, finding ourſelves born up by an eternal and almighty ſtrength, dare to adventure courageouſly and confidently upon the higheſt deſigns of happineſs, to aſſail the kingdom of Heaven with a holy gallantry and violence, to purſue a courſe of well-doing without wearineſs; knowing that our labour ſhall not be in vain in the Lord, and that we ſhall receive our reward, if we faint not: We ſhould work out our ſalvation in the moſt induſtrious manner, truſting in God as one ready to inſtil ſtrength and power into all the vital faculties of our ſouls: We ſhould preſs towards the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus, that we may apprehend that for which alſo we are apprehended of Chriſt Jeſus. If we ſuffer not our ſelves to be robbed of this confidence and hope in God, as ready to accompliſh the deſires of thoſe that ſeek after him, we may then walk on ſtrongly in the way to Heaven and not be weary; we may run and not faint. And the more the ſouls of men grow in this bliſsful perſwaſion, the more they ſhall mount up like eagles into a clear heaven, finding themſelves riſing higher and higher above all thoſe filthy miſts, thoſe clouds and tempeſts of a ſlaviſh fear, deſpair, fretfulneſs againſt God, pale jealouſies, wrathful and embittered thoughts of him, or any ſtrugglings or conteſts to get from within the verge of his power and omniſciency, ficiency, which would mantle up their ſouls in black and horrid night.

I mean not all this while by this holy boldneſs and confidence, and preſence of mind in a believer's converſe with the Deity, that high pitch of aſſurance that here puts the ſouls of good men into an actual poſſeſſion of bliſs, and re-eſtates and re-eſtabliſhes them in paradiſe: No, that more general acquaintance which we may have with God's philanthropy and bounty, ready to relieve with the bowels of his tender compaſſions all thoſe ſtarving ſouls that call upon him, (for ſurely he will never do leſs for fainting and drooping ſouls than he doth for the young ravens that cry unto him) that converſe which we are provoked by the Goſpel to maintain with God's unconfined love, if we underſtand it aright, will awaken us out of our drowſy lethargy, and make us ask of him the way to Sion with our faces thitherward: This will be digging up freſh fountains for us while we go through the valley of Baca, whereby refreſhing our weary ſouls we ſhall go on from ſtrength to ſtrength until we ſee the face of our loving, and ever-to-be-loved, God in Sion. And ſo I come to the next particular, wherein we ſhall further unfold how this God-like righteouſneſs, we have ſpoken of, is conveighed to us by faith: And that is this,

II. "A true Goſpel-faith is no lazy or languid thing, but a ſtrong ardent breathing for and thirſting after Divine Grace and righteouſneſs:" It doth not only purſue an ambitious project of raiſing the ſoul immaturely to the condition of a darling favourite with Heaven, while it is unripe for it, by procuring a mere empty pardon of ſin; it deſires not only to ſtand upon clear terms with Heaven, by procuring the croſſing of all the debt-books of our ſins there; but it rather purſues after an internal participation of the Divine Nature. We often hear of a ſaving faith; and that, where it is, is not content to wait for ſalvation till the world to come; it is not patient of being an expectant in a probationerſhip for it, until this earthly body reſigns up all its wordly intereſt, that ſo the ſoul might then come into its room: No, but it is here perpetually gaſping after it, and effecting of it in a way of ſerious mortification and ſelf-denial: It enlarges and dilates it ſelf as much as may be according to the vaſt dimenſions of the Divine Love, that it may comprehend the height and depth, the length and breadth thereof, and fill the ſoul where it is ſeated, with all the fullneſs of God; it breeds a ſtrong and unſatiable appetite where it comes after true goodneſs. Were I to deſcribe it, I ſhould do it no otherwiſe than in the language of the Apoſtle: It is that whereby we live in Chriſt, and whereby he lives in us; or in the dialect of our Saviour himſelf, Something ſo powerfully ſucking in the precious influences of the Divine Spirit, that the ſoul where it is, is continually flowing with living waters iſſuing out of it ſelf; John vii. 38. A truly-believing ſoul by an ingenuous affiance in God, and an eager thirſt after him, is always ſucking from the full breaſts of the Divine Love; thence it will not part, for there, and there only, is its life and nouriſhment; it ſtarves and faints away with grief and hunger, whenſoever it is pull'd away from thence; it is perpetually hanging upon the arms of immortal goodneſs, for there it finds its great ſtrength lies; and as much as may be, arms it ſelf with the mighty power of God, by which it goes forth like a giant refreſhed with wine to run that race of grace and holineſs that leads to the true elyſium of glory, and that heavenly Canaan which is above. And whenſoever it finds it ſelf enfeebled in its difficult conflict with thoſe fierce and furious corruptions, thoſe tall ſons of Anak, which ariſing from our earthly and ſenſual affections, do here encounter it in the wilderneſs of this world; then turning it ſelf to God, and putting it ſelf under the conduct of the Angel of his Preſence, it finds it ſelf preſently out of weakneſs to become ſtrong, enabled from above to put to flight thoſe mighty armies of the aliens. True faith, (if you would know its riſe and pedigree) it is begotten of the Divine Bounty and fulneſs manifeſting it ſelf to the ſpirits of men, and it is conceived and brought forth by a deep and humble ſenſe of ſelf-indigency and poverty. Faith ariſes out of ſelf-examination, ſeating and placing it ſelf in view of the Divine Plenitude and All-ſufficiency; and thus (that I may borrow thoſe words of Paul) "we received the ſentence of death in our ſelves, that we ſhould not truſt in our ſelves but in him." The more this ſenſual, brutiſh, and ſelf-central life thrives and proſper, the more Divine Faith languiſheth; and the more that decays, and all ſelf-feeling, ſelf-love, and ſelf-ſufficiency pine away, the more is true faith fed and nouriſhed, it grows more vigorous; and as carnal life waſtes and conſumes, ſo the more does faith ſuck in a true Divine and ſpiritual life from the true Αὐτοζωὴ who hath life in himſelf, and freely beſtows it to all thoſe that heartily ſeek for it. When the Divinity united it ſelf to human nature in the perſon of our Saviour, he then gave mankind a pledge and earneſt of what he would further do therein, in aſſuring of it into as near a conjunction as might be with himſelf, and in diſpenſing and communicating himſelf to man in a way as far correſpondent and agreeable as might be to that firſt copy. And therefore we are told of "Chriſt being formed in us, and the ſpirit of Chriſt dwelling in us; of our being made conformable to him, of having fellowſhip with him, of being as he was in this world, of living in him and his living in us, of dying, and riſing again, and aſcending with him into Heaven," and the like: Becauſe, indeed, the ſame ſpirit that dwelt in him, derives it ſelf in its mighty virtue and energy through all believing ſouls, ſhaping them more and more into a juſt reſemblance and conformity to him as the firſt copy and pattern: Whence it is, that we have ſo many ways of unfolding the union between Chriſt and all believers ſet forth in the Goſpel. And all this is done for us by degrees through the efficacy of the eternal ſpirit, when by a true faith we deny our ſelves and our own will, ſubmit our ſelves in a deep ſenſe of our own folly and weakneſs to his wiſdom and power, comply with his will, and by a holy affiance in him ſubordinate our ſelves to his pleaſure; for theſe are the vital acts of a Goſpel-faith. And

According to this which hath been ſaid, I ſuppoſe we may fairly gloſs upon Paul's diſcourſes, which ſo much prefer faith before works. We muſt not think in a giant-like pride to ſcale the walls of Heaven by our own works, and by force thereof to take the ſtrong fort of bleſſedneſs, and wreſt the crown of glory out of God's hands, whether he will or no. We muſt not think to commence a ſuit in Heaven for happineſs upon ſuch a poor and weak plea as our own external compliance with the old law, is. We muſt not think to deal with God in the method of commutative juſtice, and to challenge eternal life as the juſt reward of our great merits, and the hire due to us for our labour and toil we have took in God's vineyard. No, God reſiſts the proud, but gives grace to the humble: It muſt be an humble and ſelf-denying addreſs of a ſoul diſſolved into a deep and piercing ſenſe of its own unworthineſs and unprofitableneſs, that can be capable of the Divine Bounty: He fills the hungry with good things, but the rich he ſends empty away. They are the hungry and thirſty ſouls, always gaſping after the living ſprings of Divine Grace, as the parched ground in the deſert doth for the dew of Heaven, ready to drink them in by a conſtant dependance upon God; ſouls that by a living, watchful and diligent faith ſpreading forth themſelves in all obſequious reverence and love of him, wait upon him as the eyes of an handmaid wait on the hand of her miſtreſs: Theſe are they that he delights to ſatiate with his goodneſs. Thoſe that being maſter'd by a ſtrong ſenſe of their own indigency, their pinching and preſſing poverty, and his all-ſufficient fulneſs, truſt in him as an Almighty Saviour, and in the moſt ardent manner purſue after that perfection which his grace is leading them to; thoſe that cannot ſatisfy themſelves in a bare performance of ſome external acts of righteouſneſs, or an external obſervance of a law without them, but with the moſt greedy and fervent ambition purſue after ſuch an acquaintance with his Divine Spirit, as may breathe an inward life through all the powers of their ſouls, and beget in them a vital form and ſoul of Divine Goodneſs; theſe are the ſpiritual ſeed of faithful Abraham, the ſons of the free-woman and heirs of the promiſes, to whom all are made, Yea and Amen in Chriſt Jeſus; theſe are they which ſhall abide in the houſe for ever, when the ſons of the bondwoman, thoſe that are only Arabian proſelytes, ſhall be caſt out.

CHAP. X.

5 The Scripture ſheweth the difference betwixt the righteouſneſs of the law, and this of faith, 11 and that all, both Jew and Gentile that believe, ſhall not be confounded, 18 and that the Gentiles ſhall receive the word and believe. 19 Iſrael was not ignorant of theſe things.

BRethren, my hearts deſire and prayer to God for Iſrael is, that they might be ſaved.

2 For I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.

3 For they being ignorant of Gods righteouſneſs, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted themſelves unto the righteouſneſs of God.

4 For Chriſt is the end of the law for righteouſneſs to every one that believeth.

5 For Moſes deſcribeth the righteouſneſs which is of the law, That the man which doth thoſe things, ſhall live by them.

6 But the righteouſneſs which is of faith, ſpeaketh on this wiſe, Say not in thine heart, Who ſhall aſcend into heaven? (that is to bring Chriſt down from above)

7 Or, Who ſhall deſcend into the deep? (that is to bring up Chriſt again from the dead)

8 But what ſaith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is the word of faith which we preach,

9 That if thou ſhalt confeſs with thy mouth the Lord Jeſus, and ſhalt believe in thine heart, that God hath raiſed him from the dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved.

10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteouſneſs, and with the mouth confeſſion is made unto ſalvation.

11 For the ſcripture ſaith, Whoſoever believeth on him, ſhall not be aſhamed.

12 For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the ſame Lord over all, is rich unto all that call upon him.

13 For whoſoever ſhall call upon the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved.

14 How then ſhall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how ſhall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how ſhall they hear without a preacher?

15 And how ſhall they preach, except they be ſent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the goſpel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!

16 But they have not all obeyed the goſpel. For Eſaias ſaith, Lord, who hath believed our report?

17 So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

18 But I ſay, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their ſound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.

19 But I ſay, Did not Iſrael know? Firſt Moſes ſaith, I will provoke you to jealouſy by them that are no people, and by a fooliſh nation I will anger you.

20 But Eſaias is very bold, and ſaith, I was found of them that ſought me not; I was made manifeſt unto them that asked not after me.

21 But to Iſrael he ſaith, All day long I have ſtretched forth my hands unto a diſobedient and gainſaying people.

Paul having, in the concluſion of the former chapter, aſſerted the rejection of the Jews for their ſeeking righteouſneſs by works without faith, or not by faith, now in this chapter he enlarges upon this reaſon, beginning with

I. A Preface, which contains a profeſſion of his hearty deſire of their ſalvation; ver. 1. A conceſſion of their zeal; and a correction of his conceſſion, ſhewing the faultineſs thereof, that it was but a blind zeal: This is propounded at ver. 2. and is proved by their ignorance of God's righteouſneſs; as appears by the effects, which are pride and contempt of, and a rejection of the righteouſneſs of God. Their pride appears from their adhering to their own righteouſneſs: And their contempt, is proved from their rejection of Chriſt; ver. 3. Wherein the deſign of the law is ſhewn to be, to ſend men to Chriſt for righteouſneſs; and that only believers ſhall receive benefit therefrom; ver. 4. Proved by

II. A deſcription of the righteouſneſs of the law, and of faith. (1.) Of the righteouſneſs of the law which muſt be perfect and exact, (and therefore is impoſſible) ver. 5. (2.) Of the righteouſneſs of faith; deſcribed, both negatively, ſhewing that it doth not require impoſſibilities; ver. 6, 7. and poſitively, ſhewing that it is poſſible for us by the aſſiſtance of the Goſpel-grace to perform what is required in order to life and ſalvation, ver. 8. And again, by the terms and conditions thereof, which are confeſſion and faith, propounded in ver. 9, 10. and confirmed by Scripture-evidence, ver. 11. and by an equal extent of Goſpel-grace to all nations, amplified by the means thereof, which is the calling on God; ver. 12. Whereupon he draws

III. An inference concerning the neceſſity that the Gentiles ſhould enjoy the means of grace, and have the Goſpel publiſhed to them. This inference contains, firſt, an excellent gradation, ſhewing that they who would be ſaved muſt call upon God; ver. 13. That they who would call upon him effectually, muſt believe in him. That they who would believe in him, muſt be taught; ver. 14. And finally, that they who pretend to teach muſt be ſent. Proved by the teſtimony of Iſaiah concerning the eſteem that ought to be made of ſuch perſons, and the welcome entertainment, that ſhould be given them for their meſſage ſake; ver. 15. amplified by the little fruit the preachers of the Goſpel find of their labours among the generality; in a complaint of Iſaiah; ver. 16. Then follows the concluſion concerning the way of the Gentiles attaining to faith, viz. by preaching; and (therefore it was neceſſary) ver. 17. amplified by anſwering ſeveral queſtions. (1.) Concerning the univerſal publication of the Goſpel to all nations, ver. 18. And, (2.) Concerning the Jews ignorance of this point; where he ſhews that they might have know it; it being foretold by Moſes; ver. 19. And Iſaiah, concerning both the calling of the Gentiles; ver. 20. and the rejection of the Jews; ver. 21.

Ver. 1. Brethren.] So Paul addreſſed himſelf to thoſe Chriſtians, who had been originally Jews, and at the preaching of the Goſpel had embraced Chriſtianity, and were now at variance with thoſe converts to Chriſtianity, who had been originally Gentiles, in ſo much that they refuſed their communion and excluded them from the hopes of ſalvation, except that together with the faith of the Goſpel they ſhould alſo join the rites or works, which they had received from Moſes under the old law. Therefore the Apoſtle calls theſe men brethren, not becauſe they were Iſraelites, but becauſe they were his brethren by adoption in the regeneration of the Goſpel.

—For Iſrael.] Thoſe Jews of the ſtock of Abraham, who had not yet embraced the means of ſalvation or the faith of Chriſt.

Ver. 2. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.] Theſe are Paul's words which he ſpake to thoſe unbelieving Jews that were ſo tenacious of the traditions of their fathers, and ſo utterly averſe to any reformation of religion: That though it appeared by undeniable evidence, that Chriſt Jeſus was by God ſent into the world for that purpoſe, yet did they to the laſt ſtand out in their oppoſition of him and his Goſpel, even to the final rejection of their nation.

To theſe people doth Paul in this chapter expreſs a great compaſſion, heartily wiſhing and praying for their converſion. Brethren (ſaith he in the firſt verſe) my hearty deſire and prayer to God for Iſrael is, that they may be ſaved. That is, that they may come to the knowledge of the truth in Chriſt Jeſus, and by that means obtain everlaſting ſalvation. And one reaſon why he was thus concerned for them, he gives in the words following; which are the words I have read unto you: For I bear them record (ſaith he) that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. It was a great motive to him to be concerned for their happineſs, that they were zealous for religion: Though he knew at the ſame time, that the religion they were then ſo zealous of, was not the right religion, nor did the zeal they ſhewed for it proceed from right principles. Hence I obſerve, that —Zeal of God.] Taken in general, is zeal, or compaſſionate and hearty concernment for religion, which the Apoſtle here finds no fault with. So that we hence collect alſo, that the Apoſtle approves an hearty and compaſſionate zeal, as a commendable thing. For you ſee he repreſents it as a piece of virtue in his countrymen, and ſpeaks it to their commendation, that they had a zeal of God. I bear them record (ſaith he) that they have a zeal of God. As much as to ſay, that he owned they had that good quality; and they were to be commended for it; and for that reaſon he wiſheth them well and affectionately prayeth for them.

That which I would from hence take occaſion to put you in mind of is this, That indifference and unconcernedneſs for religion, is not to have a place among any one's virtues and good qualities; it is rather a very great fault; howſoever it may ſometimes paſs for an inſtance of wiſdom and prudence.

If indeed men had no paſſions, or had ſo mortified their paſſions, that they were rarely earneſt or zealous about any thing, their unconcernedneſs for religion, and the things of God might be the leſs reproveable. But when zeal and paſſion is more or leſs wrought into every man's temper. And the calmeſt men may be obſerved on ſundry occaſions not to be without it. It is an inexcuſable fault to have no paſſion, no zeal for God and his cauſe. Yet,

We muſt not abuſe this zeal; we muſt remember that this ſame Apoſtle commands us to Let our moderation be known to all men. And in this behaviour of Paul to the unbelieving Iſraelites, he doth not bitterly cenſure them. He is not fierce nor furious againſt them. He doth not excite any perſon to uſe force or violence to them: But he rather pities them. He makes their zeal that they had of God an inducement the more heartily to pray for them, that God would direct them in the right way that leads to ſalvation. Tho' he is far from approving their blind zeal in ſo obſtinately oppoſing the righteouſneſs of God, that is, that method which God had preſcribed, for the attaining of righteouſneſs by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, and ſetting up a righteouſneſs of their own, which conſiſted chiefly in obſerving the ceremonials of Moſes's law, and the traditions of their fathers, as it follows in the next verſe: Yet he thinks them the more pitiable and the more excuſable in that this their oppoſition proceeded from their zeal of God, tho' it was a miſinform'd irregular zeal.

This practice and carriage of the Apoſtle towards theſe ignorant zealots ought to be a rule for us to walk by in the like caſes. If men be of a different way from us as to religion; if they hold other opinions, or though they be of another communion from us; and though we are ſure they are miſtaken; nay, and dangerouſly miſtaken too; yet, if they have a zeal of God, if they be ſerious and ſincere in their way, if their errors in religion be the pure reſults of a miſinform'd conſcience; let us, as the Apoſtle here did, take occaſion from hence to pity them, and to put up hearty prayers to God for them, and to endeavour all we can by gentle methods to reduce them to the right way: But by no means to expreſs contempt or hatred of them, or to treat them with violence and outrage. So far as their zeal is for God. So far let us ſhew tenderneſs and compaſſion to them; and if their zeal be in ſuch inſtances as are really commendable, let us in ſuch inſtances not only bear with them, but propoſe them for our examples. This, I ſay, was the Apoſtles practice, and I think, it is ſo agreeable to the temper of our great Lord and Maſter Chriſt, that it will become us in like caſes to act accordingly. And,

It is eaſy from hence to obſerve, that the Atheiſt, the Epicurean, the immoral man, the vicious perſon, and ſuch as are only greedy after power, and make religion a means to ſkreen their wicked deſigns by, through which they may obtain worldly dominion, have no plea from this Scripture, for to demand any toleration among us: For, as it recommends charity to the truly ſincere, in the conſcientious worſhip of a good and merciful God; ſo, in the ſame terms, it condemns all thoſe, who make it their buſineſs in their converſation to expoſe all religion, and to bring it into contempt; who ridicule the profeſſors of it as a company of eaſy credulous men, and make no conſcience of baſpheming God and all things ſacred, upon every occaſion of exerciſing their fooliſh wit. Who under a pretence of religion teach, or encourage, or promote any ſort of vice or immorality, or whoſe principles do neceſſarily lead to debauch mens manners in the plain matters of ſobriety, chaſtity, truth, or juſtice, &c. And finally whoſe zeal is for their own ſecular advantages, and not a zeal of God. From

Theſe obſervations it will be eaſy to gather to our ſelves, a true rule for the governing our zeal in matters of religion, and likewiſe for the judging in others, what zeal is commendable, and what not. For,

Let our zeal be never ſo great for God, yet if it be not a zeal according to knowledge, it is not the right Chriſtian zeal. And though we ſee others never ſo fervent and vehement in purſuing a religious cauſe, and that too, out of conſcience; yet if this zeal of theirs be not according to knowledge, it is a zeal that juſtly deſerves to be reproved. And though both we and they may for our ſincerity in God's cauſe, expect ſome allowances, both from God and man, yet neither they nor we can juſtify it, either to God or man, that we are thus fooliſhly and ignorantly zealous.

I wiſh this mark of right zeal, that it ought to be according to knowledge, were more conſidered. For it ſeems not often to be thought on by thoſe that are moſt zealous in their way, of what perſwaſion ſoever they be. This ſame buſineſs of knowledge, is a thing that is moſt commonly forgot to be taken in as an ingredient or companion of zeal, in moſt ſort of profeſſors. For as the world goes, thoſe men are generally found to be the greateſt zealots, who are moſt notoriouſly ignorant. Whereas true zeal ſhould not only proceed from true knowledge, but ſhould alſo be always accompanied with it, and governed by it.

But what is it to have a zeal according to knowledge? What doth this character of juſtifiable right zeal contain in it? I anſwer, it muſt at leaſt contain in it theſe five following things.

Firſt, To have a zeal according to knowledge, doth import, that we be not miſtaken, as to the matter of our zeal, that it be a good cauſe, that we are zealous about.

And ſince it is zeal for God that we are here ſpeaking of, it muſt be ſomething wherein our duty is concerned, that muſt be the object of our zeal.

So that a right zeal of God implies, that we do ſo well inform ourſelves of the nature of our religion, as not to pretend a religious zeal for any thing that is not a part of our religion. If our zeal for God be as it ſhould be, it muſt certainly expreſs it ſelf in matters that are good; about ſuch objects as God hath made to be our duty. It is good (ſaith Paul) to be always zealouſly affected in a good matter. But if we miſtake in our cauſe, if we take that for good which is evil, or that for evil which is good, here our zeal is not according to knowledge.

Secondly, As the object of our zeal muſt be according to knowledge, ſo alſo the principle from whence our zeal proceeds, muſt be according to knowledge alſo. That is to ſay, we muſt have ſolid and rational grounds to proceed upon in our concernment for any thing; ſuch as will not only ſatisfy ourſelves, but all others that are unbiaſſed: In a word, ſuch as we can juſtify to all the world.

If it be every man's duty (as Peter tells us it is) to be ready to give an anſwer to every one that asketh him a reaſon of the hope that is in him: Then I am ſure, it is much more every man's duty, to be able to give a reaſon of the zeal that is in him. Becauſe this buſineſs of a man's zeal doth more affect the publick, and is of greater concernment to it, than what a man's private faith or hope is.

But yet how little is this conſidered by many zealous men among us. Some are zealous for a point to ſerve an intereſt or a faction. But this is not to be owned as the ground and reaſon of their zeal; for indeed if it ſhould, it would not be allowed of. Others are zealous for no other reaſon but becauſe they find their teachers, or thoſe they moſt converſe with, are ſo. They follow the common cry, and examine no more of the matter. Others, indeed, have a principle of zeal beyond all this. For they are moved from within, to ſtand up for this or the other cauſe; they have impulſes upon their minds which they cannot reſiſt: But that in truth is no more a juſtifiable ground of any man's, zeal, than either of the former. For if theſe motions and impulſes that they ſpeak of be from God; there will certainly be conveyed along with them, ſuch reaſons and arguments for the thing that they are to be zealous about, as will, if they be declared, ſatisfy and convince all other reaſonable men, as well as themſelves. For it is a ridiculous thing to imagine, that God at this day doth move or impel men in any other way than what is agreeable to the reaſon of mankind, and the rule of his Holy Word. And if the man's zeal can be juſtified by either of theſe, there is no need of vouching inſpirations for it.

Thirdly, As the zeal which is according to knowledge hath a good matter for its object, and proceeds from a a right principle: So it is alſo regular as to the meaſures of it. He that hath it, is careful that it do not exceed its due bounds, as the ignorant zeal often doth; but he diſtinguiſheth between the ſeveral objects he is zealous for, and allows every one of them, juſt ſo great a concernment as the thing is worth, and no more. If the thing be but a ſmall matter, he is but in a ſmall meaſure concerned for it. If it be of greater moment, he believes he may be allowed to be the more earneſt about it. But he looks upon it as a raſh and fooliſh thing, and an effect of great ignorance or weakneſs, to be hot and eager for all things alike. We ſhould account him not many degrees removed from a child or an ideot, that upon the cut of a finger ſhould as paſſionately complain and cry out for help, as if he had broken a limb. Why, juſt the ſame folly and childiſhneſs it is, to make a mighty buſtle about ſmall matters which are of no conſequence, in which neither religion, nor the publick peace, are much concerned; as if indeed our lives and ſouls were in danger. It therefore becomes all prudent and ſober men to take care, that their zeal do not ſpend itſelf in little things; that they be not too paſſionate and earneſt, and vehement for things that are not worth much contending for. If we lay a greater weight upon a cauſe than it will bear, and ſhew as much warmth and paſſion for ſmall matters, as if the fundamentals of our faith were at ſtake, we are zealous indeed, but not according to knowledge.

Fourthly, The zeal that is according to knowledge, is always attended with hearty charity. It is not that bitter zeal which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, which is accompanied with hatred and envy, and perverſe diſputings: But it is kind, and ſociable, and meek, even to gainſayers. It is that wiſdom which is from above, that is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſy to be intreated. It is a zeal that loves God and his truth heartily, and would do all that is poſſible to bring honour and advancement to them: But at the ſame time it loveth all men. And therefore in all things where it expreſſes itſelf, it purely conſults the merits of the cauſe before it, but lets the perſons of men alone. It is a certain argument of an ignorant and ungoverned zeal, when a man leaves his cauſe and his concernment for God's glory, and turns his heat upon thoſe that he has to deal with; when he is peeviſh and angry with men that differ from him: When he is not contented to oppoſe arguments to arguments, and to endeavour to gain his point by calm reaſoning; but he flies out into rage and fury; and when he is once tranſported herewith, he cares not what undecent bitter reflections he makes upon all thoſe that have the fortune to be of a different ſide. But in theſe caſes men would do well to remember, that the wrath of man worketh not the righteouſneſs of God, as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it. All this kind of behaviour ſavours of the wiſdom of this world, which is earthly, and ſenſual, and deviliſh.

Fifthly, and laſtly, another inſeparable property of zeal according to knowledge is, That it muſt purſue lawful ends by lawful means; muſt never do an ill thing for the carrying the beſt cauſe. This Paul hath laid down as a rule, to be eternally obſerved among Chriſtians, when in the third of the Romans, he declares, that their damnation is juſt, who ſay, let us do evil that good may come. Be therefore our point never ſo good, or never ſo weighty, yet if we uſe any diſhoneſt, unlawful arts, for the gaining of it; that is to ſay, If we do any thing which is either in itſelf evil, and appears to be ſo by the natural notices of mankind, or which the laws of our holy religion do forbid; I ſay in all ſuch inſtances we are tranſgreſſors. And though our cauſe be very good, and our ends very allowable; yet ſince the means by which we would accompliſh thoſe ends are unwarrantable, the whole action, though proceeding from never ſo much zeal for God, is very bad. For true zeal, as it always ſuppoſeth a right information of judgment, as to the matter of it ſo likewiſe it ſuppoſeth, that a man ſhould act in honeſt ways, and endeavour to attain his ends by lawful means.

CHAP. XI.

1 God hath not caſt off all Iſrael. 7 Some were elected, though the reſt were hardned. 16 There is hope of their converſion. 18 The Gentiles may not inſult upon them: 26 For there is a promiſe of their ſalvation. 33 Gods judgments are unſearchable.

I Say then, Hath God caſt away his people? God forbid. For I alſo am an Iſraelite of the ſeed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.

2 God hath not caſt away his people which he foreknew. Wot ye not what the ſcripture ſaith of Elias? how he maketh interceſſion to God againſt Iſrael, ſaying,

3 Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they ſeek my life.

4 But what ſaith the anſwer of God unto him? I have reſerved to myſelf ſeven thouſand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

5 Even ſo then at this preſent time alſo there is a remnant according to the election of grace.

6 And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwiſe grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwiſe work is no more work.

7 What then? Iſrael hath not obtained that which he ſeeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the reſt were blinded:

8 According as it is written, God hath given them the ſpirit of ſlumber, eyes that they ſhould not ſee, and ears that they ſhould not hear, unto this day.

9 And David ſaith, Let their table be made a ſnare, and a trap, and a ſtumbling-block, and a recompenſe unto them.

10 Let their eyes be darkned, that they may not ſee, and bow down their back alway.

11 I ſay then, Have they ſtumbled that they ſhould fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall ſalvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealouſy.

12 Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminiſhing of them the riches of the Gentiles: how much more their fulneſs?

13 For I ſpeak to you, Gentiles, in as much as I am the apoſtle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office.

14 If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my fleſh, and might ſave ſome of them.

15 For if the caſting away of them be the reconciling of the world; what ſhall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?

16 For if the firſt-fruit be holy, the lump is alſo holy: and if the root be holy, ſo are the branches.

17 And if ſome of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive-tree, wert graffed in amongſt them, and with them partakeſt of the root and fatneſs of the olive-tree;

18 Boaſt not againſt the branches: but if thou boaſt, thou beareſt not the root, but the root thee.

19 Thou wilt ſay then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in.

20 Well; becauſe of unbelief they were broken off, and thou ſtandeſt by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear.

21 For if God ſpared not the natural branches, take heed leſt he alſo ſpare not thee.

22 Behold therefore the goodneſs, and ſeverity of God: on them which fell, ſeverity; but towards thee, goodneſs: if thou continue in his goodneſs: otherwiſe thou alſo ſhalt be cut off.

23 And they alſo, if they bide not ſtill in unbelief, ſhall be graffed in: for God is able to graff them in again.

24 For if thou wert cut out of the olive-tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive-tree; how much more ſhall theſe which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive-tree?

25 For I would not, brethren, that ye ſhould be ignorant of this myſtery (leſt ye ſhould be wiſe in your own conceits) that blindneſs in part is happened to Iſrael, until the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in.

26 And ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: as it is written, There ſhall come out of Sion the deliverer, and ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob.

27 For this is my covenant unto them, when I ſhall take away their ſins.

28 As concerning the Goſpel, they are enemies for your ſake: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers ſakes.

29 For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance.

30 For as ye in times paſt have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief:

31 Even ſo have theſe alſo now not believed, that through your mercy they alſo may obtain mercy.

32 For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.

32 O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out!

34 For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counſeller?

35 Or who hath firſt given to him, and it ſhall be recompenſed unto him again?

36 For of him, and through him, and to him are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

In this chapter Paul anſwereth another objection of the Jews; that if juſtification be by faith in Chriſt, on whom the Jews believe not, and therefore are rejected, then God hath caſt away his people: But that he will never do. To this he anſwers, That their rejection is neither total nor final. And his ſcope is partly to comfort the believing Jews, that they ſhould not utterly deſpair, and partly to admoniſh the believing Gentiles not to be proud of their ſtanding, nor to inſult over the Jews, but to entertain charitable thoughts one of another.

This chapter conſiſts of two principal parts, the firſt contains the principal matter, ver. 1,—32. The ſecond is the concluſion, ver. 33,—36.

1. The principal matter is two-fold, and declares,

(1) That the rejection of the Jews is not total: Propounding the objection by way of queſtion. And the anſwer is returned (1) By way of deteſtation, (2.) By ſhewing that it is not total, by the inſtance of himſelf, ver. 1. (3.) By diſtinguiſhing God's people into ſuch as ſhall never be caſt away, whom he calls the foreknown, and into others, who are not foreknown, ver. 2.—(4.) By inſtancing many that belonged to God, in Elias's days, when that Prophet thought they had all forſaken him, and conſequently that he had forſaken them. And here we meet with an introduction or preface; wherein the Apoſtle convinces them by their own knowledge. Then he recites Elias's complaint to God, Firſt, In general terms, ver.—2. and then more particularly, which he aggravates by his own miſerable condition, ver. 3. and ſubjoins God's anſwer to the Prophet's complaint, ver. 4. applying this example to the caſe in hand; which application is propounded and amplified by the cauſe of this reſervation, God's election, ver. 5. and again by an inference; that if election and reſervation be of grace than not of works, as they thought. Which he proves by the nature of grace and works, which are contrary and deſtroy each other, ver. 6. And (5.) By a ſolid determination and reſolution of the queſtion, that though the body of the Jewiſh nation, being unbelievers and non-elect, don't obtain righteouſneſs and life, yet the elect among them do; amplified by the cauſe of their not obtaining, viz. their blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, Firſt affirmed at ver. 7. and proved by the double teſtimony of Iſaiah, or Eſay and David, ver. 8. containing an imprecation, curſing their good things, ver. 9. and wiſhing evil things to come on them, ver. 10. Then follows the ſecond part of the principal matter, namely,

(2.) That their rejection is not final; becauſe the generality and body of the nation ſhall be called and brought home to Chriſt before the end of the world; wherein we find (1.) A confirmation of this poſition by ſeveral arguments drawn from God's end or purpoſe in rejecting them at preſent, propounded negatively, in a queſtion and anſwer; and affirmatively, as an occaſion of the calling of the Gentiles; amplified by the end of this diſpenſation, to provoke the Jews to emulation, ver. 11. Then from the benefit that ſhall redound to the world of Gentiles by their calling; laid down in a compariſon of unequals; that if their caſting off be profitable; much more will their calling home, ver. 12. From Paul's end in preaching to the Gentiles, to win them to Chriſt, that thereby he might provoke the Jews to embrace him alſo, and ſo to be ſaved, and therefore he does not look upon their ſtate, as deſperate, ver. 13, 14. Then from the great benefit, that ſhall redound to the world thereby (repeated again from ver. 12. in other expreſſions, to ſhew the obſervableneſs of this argument) ver. 15. and finally, from their relation to the covenant made with their fathers, which extends to all their poſterity, and includes the whole crop, as well as the firſt-fruits, and all the branches, as well as the root; ver. 16. Then we come to

(2.) An admonition to the Gentiles, not to deſpiſe or inſult over the Jews; wherein he puts the ſuppoſition or caſe, concerning ſome of the Jews, broken off; and then concerning the Gentiles, ſhewing their former ſtate wild, and their preſent ſtate grafted, amplified by the effect; partaking, &c. all in an elegant ſimilitude, ver. 17. Then he adds a caution, or admonition, inferred from the foregoing ſuppoſition, not to inſult over the Jews, urged by reaſon; becauſe they are the root, thou but a branch: For, though they are but branches in reſpect of the covenant, yet they are the root in reſpect of thee, the covenant being not firſt given to thee, but to them; and from them to thee, ver. 18. Which brings him to conſider an inſolent objection of a proud inſulting Gentile, laid down in ver. 19. To which he anſwers by a conceſſion, than by an aſſignment of the true cauſe of their broken off, not becauſe thou mighteſt be grafted in, but becauſe of their unbelief; illuſtrated by its oppoſite, the true cauſe of thy ſtanding; and thirdly, by both a negative and poſitive admonition, ver. 20. enforced by a reaſon taken from God's ſeverity to the natural branches, where he argues, that God will much leſs ſpare the foreign ones, ver. 21. and concluded by an inference from the foregoing reaſon, containing an exhortation to the conſideration of theſe different diſpenſations; amplified by a double condition, (1.) relating to the Gentiles, ſhewing the condition of their continuance in God's favour; walking worthy of that privilege, and the miſchief of the contrary, ver. 22. (2.) relating to the Jews; that if they forſake their unbelief, they ſhall be received again by God. And,

Thus he relapſes into his former argument concerning the rejection of the Jews, that it is not final, but that there ſhall be a general call of them before the end of the world, concerning which he ſhews, That it is both poſſible, probable and certain. Poſſible, becauſe it is in the power of God, ver. 23. probable, this he proves by an argument taken from the leſs likely to the more likely, ver. 24. certain, becauſe God had revealed the ſame to him. Wherein we find,

(1.) A preface; ſhewing the Apoſtle's deſire, that they ſhould be acquainted with this myſtery; amplified by the uſe they ſhould make of this knowledge, to prevent ſelf-conceit.

(2.) The myſtery itſelf; wherein the Jews are deſcribed to be blind in their preſent ſtate, and the time their blindneſs ſhall continue, is ſet forth, ver. 25. And then he declareth what ſhall become of them afterwards; that there ſhall be a general calling of them, confirmed by Scripture-teſtimony, foretelling their turning to God, and his pardoning their ſins; ver. 26, 27. and then by reaſon; becauſe elected and beloved, propounded at ver. 28. and confirmed by God's immutability, ver. 29. where he mentions the like dealing of God with the Gentiles; propounded, ver. 30. applied, ver. 31. and again confirmed, by God's end, in his like dealings both with Jews and Gentiles; viz. the general good of all, ver. 32.

II. The concluſion of the things delivered in theſe three laſt chapters; wherein, having ſpoken of many difficult points, as election, reprobation, rejection of the Jews, calling of the Gentiles, recalling of the Jews; having anſwered many queſtions, prevented many cavils, ſatisfied many doubts, he at laſt makes a ſtop, and reflecting upon the various dealings of God with nations and particular perſons, he falls into a pathetical kind of rapturous admiration at the infinite wiſdom of God, and the unſearchableneſs of his ways. This is propounded, at ver. 33. and confirmed by an argument taken from man's deficiency in point of knowledge, ver. 34. and in point of juſtice; that no man can challenge any thing from God, as due to him, and therefore ought not to queſtion his doings, ver. 35, 36. where he concludes with a doxology or acknowledgment of his glorious perfections.

Ver. 1. —— I am an Iſraelite of the ſeed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.] The Jews, as they were the moſt remarkable people upon earth in many reſpects, ſo particularly in this; that they preſerved the pedigrees of their ſeveral tribes and families, with a more ſcrupulous and religious exactneſs, than any other nation in the world.

This care was infuſed into them, and many ways cultivated by God himſelf, in order to aſcertain the deſcent of the Meſſiah when he came, and to prove, that he was as the Prophets had foretold he ſhould be, of the tribe of Judah, and of the lineage of David.

That tribe indeed was moſt concerned on this account, to preſerve their genealogy entire. However, other tribes there were, for inſtance, (Ephraim); which, though not entitled to this diſtinguiſhing honour, yet ſet up their pretences to it, and all of them, even without ſuch a particular claim, had great reaſon to glory in their common deſcent from Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, the peculiar favourites of Heaven, to whom the promiſe of the Bleſſed Seed was ſeverally made. All of them, therefore, ſtudiouſly cheriſhed the memory of their honourable extraction, and carefully preſerved the evidences of it.

The example of Paul is a proof that their zeal in this caſe, was laudable. For even he himſelf, who was the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, in thoſe very Epiſtles which he wrote to the Gentile converts, (particularly to thoſe of Rome, the proudeſt part of the Heathen world, and who had entertained the moſt contemptuous opinion of the Jews) fails not to magnify the great privilege of his birth, and highly to value himſelf upon it. Twice we find him not only boaſting of his parentage as an Iſraelite, at large, but particularizing his deſcent from the tribe of Benjamin, as in this Scripture, and in Phil. iii. 5. He often and amply declares the great advantage, Rom. iii. 12. which belonged to the ſeed of Abraham, as ſuch, to whom as he ſpeaks, chap. ix. 4, 5. pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God, and the promiſes, whoſe are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the fleſh, Chriſt came. And though, as concerning the Goſpel, they were, he ſays, — xi. 28. now enemies, through unbelief, yet ſtill he affirms, that as touching the election, or as the elect people of God, they are beloved for the father's, ſake. And on this foundation he builds an argument of great importance, for the general converſion of the Jews to the faith of Chriſt, when once the fulneſs of the Gentiles was come in. Then he ſays, God would provoke the Jews to emulation, ſo that they ſeeing the univerſal reception of the Goſpel by the Heathens, ſhould be induced at length, to believe in Chriſt as Abraham did, and following his faith, ſhould likewiſe ſhare his reward.

For, as the whole lump, or maſs of corn under the law (to which the Apoſtle alludes) was hallowed by the heave-offering of the firſt-fruits dedicated to God; as the branches partake of the vigour and virtues of the root from which they ſpring; ſo the great body of the Jews are accepted in Abraham, and ſanctified by their deſcent from him. They cannot, therefore, be finally rejected; but ſhall, in God's good time, be admitted to partake of all the privileges and benefits, which belong to that Sacred Alliance. And,

This they ſhall attain to, partly by virtue of the promiſe made by God, when he entred into covenant with Abraham, and partly alſo, in virtue of thoſe principles of piety and goodneſs, which they derived from their anceſtors, and from the Holy Law of God, committed to their cuſtody; principles, which, though they might be obſcured and buried for a time, yet would afterwards ſpring up, and bring forth fruit; qualifying the heirs of promiſe for thoſe bleſſings to which God hath ordained them.

All this I apprehend to be within the intention of the Apoſtle's diſcourſe. For, the holineſs, he ſpeaks of, may be taken in a two-fold ſenſe; either for that external and relative holineſs which belongs to perſons, or things, offered to God, and appropriated particularly to his honour and ſervice; or, for thoſe internal graces and qualities of mind, which ſanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. And Paul ſeems to point at them both in the words before us; and hath therefore purpoſely, if I miſtake not, illuſtrated his argument by two ſuch inſtances, as refer diſtinctly to each of them: For, the holineſs of the firſt-fruits, and the lump, is an holineſs merely of inſtitution, outward and nominal. Whereas, by the holineſs of the root, and the branches, is to be underſtood an holineſs of nature, inherent and real. So that the Apoſtles meaning in this paſſage, may after this manner be more clearly repreſented, and fully expreſſed; "that the holineſs of the Patriarchs ſhould in both ſenſes of that word, extend itſelf to their progeny, and ſhould one day viſibly reſt on all the tribes of Iſrael, who, as by virtue of their relation to Abraham, they were ſtill nearly related to God, and particularly dear to him; ſo ſhould they likewiſe inherit, and, in God's appointed time, exert the faith and virtues of Abraham; and, by that means, render themſelves every way objects of the Divine Favour and Benediction."

Ver. 21. —— Leſt he alſo ſpare not thee.] Who art a Gentile, and only grafted on the ſtock of Abraham, by the covenant of grace.

Ver. 22. —— If thou continue in his goodneſs.] Or, in that faith to which he hath been ſo gracious to call thee, out of darkneſs and ignorance, into the light and knowledge of his worſhip, through Jeſus Chriſt.

—— Thou alſo ſhalt be cut off.] Or, not attain the glorious reſurrection at the laſt day, if thou doſt not perſevere in that faith, which thou haſt embraced.

Ver. 23. Graffed in.] On the ſtock of Chriſt, by the new covenant of grace.

Ver. 26. —— As it is written, there, &c.] See Iſaiah lix. 20. xxvii. 9. Jer. xxxi. 31, &c. and Pſ. xiv. 7. compared with Heb. viii. 8. and x. 16.

Ver. 29. —Are without repentance.] i. e. Before repentance; for God firſt gives us the light of his knowledge, and then by his ſpirit calls us to repentance, and thus it was God dealt with the Gentiles; ſee the next verſe.

Ver. 31. —— Your mercy.] Or, the mercy which God hath ſhewn to you Gentiles, in giving you the knowledge of his truth, and calling you to a ſtate of ſalvation.

Ver. 33. O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God!] In this text we read of the two great attributes of the Deity, knowledge and wiſdom; of both of which, I ſhall diſcourſe in ſeparate Diſſertations.

A Diſſertation on the knowledge of God.

The very notion of a God comprehends his infinity; and if his nature be infinite, ſo muſt his knowledge be alſo. For, he muſt have all perfections, and in the utmoſt degree of perfection; of which an infinite, and moſt abſolute perfect Being, or nature is capable, and conſequently, that perfection of the Deity, which is ſtiled his knowledge, muſt be infinite and boundleſs, as extending at one inſtant of time to all things, that have ever been, or are, or ever can be knowable, by any of the moſt perfect Being. Hence,

He is called a God of knowledges, in the plural number, as the original expreſſes it; becauſe of his knowing all things, 1 Sam. ii. 3. compared with Pſ. cxlvii. 5. and 1 John iii. 20. But to be more particular,

I. Let it be obſerved firſt, That God knows himſelf, and all his own Divine Perfections, after the moſt abſolute and perfect manner; and is moſt perfectly bleſſed and happy in the contemplation of himſelf, and of his own infinite perfections. To this purpoſe the Apoſtle tells us, The Spirit ſearcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For, what man knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of a man which is in him? Even ſo, the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God, 1 Cor. ii. 10, 11. As if he had ſaid, "the Spirit of God, which is God himſelf, knows all the ſecrets of God, as perfectly, as our own ſpirit knows our ſecrets. For as among men, the thoughts, and great concernments, and deſigns of a man, though none elſe knows them, yet his own ſpirit does; ſo, though no other Being knows the deep things of God, yet the Spirit, which is one with God, is intimately acquainted with them." Now,

This knowledge which God has of himſelf, is ſuch as no other being can have of him: For it is abſolutely perfect, ſo that there is nothing that is proper and eſſential to the Deity, but what he fully knows, and clearly ſees, and is moſt perfectly acquainted with, in all reſpects. Whereas, we know no more of God than we are taught concerning him; and that too, only as he has been pleaſed to manifeſt himſelf unto us, and only ſo, as our imperfect underſtanding is able to conceive an abſolutely perfect being. We can only know him, now, in part, and ſee him only darkly, as in a glaſs; but we cannot find him to perfection in this ſtate, if we ever ſhall be capable of doing it. Briefly, whatever knowledge we have now of God, is only in proportion to our mean capacities; nor have we ſo much, or ſo little knowledge rather, from our ſelves, but have received it all from him, who knows himſelf moſt perfectly, and of his goodneſs to us, has been pleaſed ſo to reveal himſelf unto us, and vouchſafed us ſo much knowledge of his nature and perfections, as well as of his will, as we are capable of, and is truly neceſſary for, and uſeful to us. But,

II. As God thus knows himſelf, ſo he is no leſs perfectly acquainted with all other beings whatſoever. For as all things were created by him, ſo, conſequently nothing can be hidden from him. So the Apoſtle tells us, there is no creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do, Heb. iv. 13.

Now the knowledge which God hath of all creatures, ſmall and great, extends not only to their eſſence, or nature; but alſo to their reſpective qualities, whether good, or evil.

Firſt, To their eſſence or nature. Thus the Pſalmiſt tells us of him; he telleth the number of the ſtars: He calleth them all by their names, Pſal. cxlvii. 4. as if he had ſaid; "Such is the greatneſs of God's knowledge, that the ſtars of Heaven, which are ſo impoſſible to be numbred by us, that they are compared and joined with the ſand which is upon the ſea-ſhore for multitude, (Gen. xv. 5. xxii. 17.) are not only numbred, but particularly known by him, what powers, qualities, and influences there are in every one of them; and as they were all by a word, or expreſſion of his will, at firſt created, ſo are they perfectly at his command, and at the leaſt beck or call of his, as ſoldiers at the directions of their general, the whole hoſt of them immediately obeys, and does whatever he pleaſes." And as the ſtars of Heaven, ſo our Saviour has aſſured us, the very hairs of our head are all numbred by him, Matt. x. 30. That is, he has the knowledge, and, by conſequence, the care and over-ruling of the leaſt things that belong to us. And,

Secondly, As to the good qualities wherewith any creature is endued, we have ſeveral inſtances of the extent of Divine Knowledge in Sacred Writ. Thus God expreſſed himſelf concerning Abraham, the father of the faithful; Gen. xviii. 19. I know him, that he will command his children and his houſhold after him, and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord, to do juſtice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath ſpoken of him. And thus concerning Moſes; my ſervant Moſes is not ſo, who is faithful in all mine houſe, Numb. xii. 7. And ſo we read, concerning David, That the Lord ſaid to Samuel, as ſoon as he appeared, Ariſe, anoint him; for this is he, 1 Sam. xvi. 12. that is, he whom he had ordained to be king, and who he knew would ſerve him, and rule his people faithfully. And ſo, Laſtly, of the ſon of Jeroboam; 1 Kings xiv. 13. all Iſrael ſhall mourn for him, and bury him: For he only of Jeroboam ſhall come to the grave, becauſe in him there is found ſome good thing toward the Lord God of Iſrael, in the houſe of Jeroboam. Thus, I ſay, God knows perfectly, who of the ſons of men are well inclined towards him, and what good qualities they are endued with.

And the ſame Sacred Writings furniſh us with ſeveral inſtances of his knowledge as to the other ſort. Thus we read, concerning the people of Iſrael; I know their imagination, ſays God, which they go about, or do, even now before I have brought them into the land which I ſware, Deut. xxxi. 21. And to the ſame purpoſe elſewhere, I knew, that is, before-hand, that thou art obſtinate, and thy neck is an iron ſinew, and thy brow braſs, Iſa. xlviii. 4. And again, I knew that thou wouldſt deal very treacherouſly, and waſt called a tranſgreſſor from the womb, ver. 8. And the ſame knowledge is likewiſe attributed to our Bleſſed Saviour, as God; in that the Evangeliſt tells us, Jeſus did not commit himſelf unto them, becauſe he knew all men; and needed not that any ſhould teſtify of man; for he knew what was in man, John ii. 24, 25.

Thirdly, God is well acquainted with mens actions, how ſecretly ſoever contrived, or tranſacted by them. To which purpoſe is what the Pſalmiſt ſays concerning him; he that planted the ear, ſhall he not hear? He that founded the eye, ſhall he not ſee? He that teacheth man knowledge, ſhall he not know? Pſal. xciv. 9, 10. As if he had ſaid, by way of affirmation, thus; "Certainly, the Creator of eyes and ears, he by whoſe only power it is, that any creature is endued with thoſe faculties of ſeeing and hearing, cannot be imagined to want himſelf, or not to poſſeſs in a more eminent manner and degree, what he out of his own fulneſs has derived in ſome lower degree to others. It were hard to think, that the ſole Omnipotent Creator ſhould want any power or excellence, which he alone has imparted to his creatures. And therefore, there can be no queſtion of his moſt exact ſeeing, and knowing all that is here done by men." And to the ſame purpoſe is that of the Prophet; am I a God at hand, ſaith the Lord, and not a God afar off? Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him? ſaith the Lord, Jer. xxiii. 23, 24. As if he had ſaid, this cannot be; becauſe, as he tells us in the following words, he fills both Heaven and earth. And on this account, our Saviour has adviſed us, Matt. vi. 4, 6, 18. to give alms, and faſt, and pray in ſecret; becauſe our Heavenly Father ſees in ſecret, that is, he knows, and is perfectly acquainted with our moſt ſecret actions, and will not fail to reward them openly. And ſo the Apoſtle has aſſured us, That at the laſt day God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men, Rom. ii. 16. That is, he will aſſuredly reward men according to their actions in this life, how ſecretly ſoever they are tranſacted, becauſe nothing can be hid from his ſight, or concealed from his knowledge.

Fourthly, God ſearches, and is intimately familiar to, and throughly acquainted with the moſt ſecret thoughts and imaginations of mens hearts. Thus the Pſalmiſt tells us; he faſhioneth their hearts alike; he conſidereth all their thoughts, Pſal. xxxiii. 15. that is, as he created mens ſouls, as well as their bodies; ſo he is certainly able to diſcern particularly all the thoughts and operations of their hearts, as well as all their outward actions. Hence he is ſtiled, in ſeveral places of Scripture, the ſearcher of the hearts, and reins, Jer. xvii. 9, 10. 1 Sam. xvi. 7. Prov. xvi. 2. chap. xxiv. 12. The future righteous retributions of eternal happineſs to the good and virtuous, and of never-ending miſery to the wicked, do both depend, and are both founded on God's knowledge of the actions, words, and thoughts of men. In ſhort, it was the confeſſion of the wiſe king Solomon in his prayer at the dedication of the temple; Thou, even thou only knoweſt the hearts of all the children of men, 1 Kings viii. 39. And it was likewiſe part of the Apoſtles prayer, at their election of one to take part in the Apoſtleſhip, in the room of Judas; Thou Lord, which knoweſt the hearts of all men, ſhew whether of theſe two thou haſt choſen, Acts i. 24. So that all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him, with whom we have to do.

Fifthly, Neither is God's knowledge limited to any time, but all times and ſeaſons are alike to him, and he knows perfectly, and all at once, whatever has been done in any time that's paſt, and whatever ſhall be done at any time hereafter, as well as what is done at preſent. Or we muſt deny that an all-ſeeing and moſt watchful providence does ſuperintend and govern, and direct all things; and muſt alſo doubt of the exiſtence of a God; becauſe no being can be God, who has not all Divine Perfections, of which omniſcience, or the perfect knowledge of whatever is, muſt needs be one. And therefore, if no being is omniſcient, then it will follow, that there is no God; becauſe there is no being that has all Divine Perfections. In ſhort, ſuppoſing God to be ignorant of ſome things, why may we not as well ſuppoſe him to be ignorant of all things, that concern this lower world eſpecially? And if one thing be concealed from him, that is, ſuppoſing there be any thing that he either cannot, or does not actually know; how can we be aſſured that he knows, and is acquainted with any thing that is tranſacted in the world? The Pſalmiſt mentions it, indeed, as a ſtrong temptation to the godly, to call in queſtion the omniſcience of God, when they ſee the great proſperity, and thriving condition of the wicked, Pſal. lxxiii. 10, 11. But he tells us in another place, Pſal. xliv. 20, 21. if we have forgotten the name of our God, or ſtretched out our hands to a ſtrange god; ſhall not God ſearch this out? For he knoweth the ſecrets of the heart. And ſurely, if he knows the ſecrets of mens hearts, nothing elſe can be hid from him. And with reſpect to wicked men particularly; wherefore, ſays he, do the wicked contemn God? He hath ſaid in his heart, thou wilt not require it. But thou haſt ſeen it, for thou beholdeſt miſchief and ſpight, to requite it with thy hand, Pſal. x. 13, 14. In a word, the omnipreſence of God does of neceſſity infer his omniſcience alſo: For if he be preſent every where at once, as living, active, ſearching ſpirit; then he muſt know every thing in every place, how ſecret or concealed ſoever from the ſight and knowledge of all other beings. And,

Sixthly, As he thus knows all things preſent; ſo he cannot but remember all things paſt: For knowledge and remembrance in the Deity are one; at leaſt, one cannot be without the other; that is, he cannot properly be ſaid to know, what he does not remember: And if any thing has been, in any time that's paſt, what he does not remember, and if he don't remember it, he does not know it; then how can we ſuppoſe him capable of doing right and juſtice unto all men at the day of judgment? For the thoughts, and words, and actions of men, which are then to be accounted for, and judg'd, will be ſuch as are all paſt; and therefore, if they are not remember'd, they cannot be judg'd. To this purpoſe is that paſſage, Rev. xx. 12——15. Where, by the books ſpoken of, nothing elſe is meant, but God's knowledge and remembrance of all the paſt thoughts, and words and actions of men, according to which they are to be judg'd, and rewarded or puniſh'd by him to all eternity. And if there ſhall be ſuch a future judgment paſs'd on all men, it is neceſſary that God, who is to be the judge, ſhou'd know, and perfectly remember, all their thoughts, and words, and actions, in this life, that he may paſs a righteous judgment on them; which, otherwiſe, he cannot be ſuppos'd to be capable of doing: And he that is not capable of judging righteouſly, from a moſt perfect knowledge and remembrance of all matters to be judg'd, neither is, nor can be God. Therefore, when God is ſaid, in Scripture, to forget, or not remember, this only ſignifies his withdrawing of his grace and favour and protection from the people, or the perſon he is ſaid ſo to forget; and not that he really forgets them, for he will judge them notwithſtanding, according to their doings. And ſo, when he is ſaid, in other places, to remember any people, or any perſon; this does not ſignify that he had at all forgotten them before, but only that he keeps in mind his promiſe to them, in order to perform it to them.

Laſtly, God knows as well what is to come, as what is paſt; and that is call'd, his preſcience, or foreknowledge of whatever ſhall be, whether neceſſary, as decreed by him to be, or contingent, as being under no neceſſity by any ſuch decree, but altogether free, ſo that either it may, or may not be. And this is plain, from the many predictions of future events, of matters and things that were purely contingent, and no way neceſſary, as depending on the wills and inclinations of free-agents. For, unleſs he before-hand knew infallibly that ſuch things wou'd happen, it were utterly impoſſible for him ſo plainly to foretel them, as the Sacred Writings do abundantly aſſure us that he did, by multitudes of inſtances, which I think it needleſs to recite. From whence Tertullian, ſomewhere, well obſerves; Præſcientia tot habet Teſtes, quot fecit prophetas; that God has ſo many witneſſes of his præſcience, or fore-knowledge, as there have been men by him endued with the gift of Prophecy, or foretelling future events. Thus God diſtinguiſhes himſelf from thoſe that have been call'd, but were not God's; Iſa. xlvi. 9, 10, 11. xli. 22, 23.

A Diſſertation on the Wiſdom of God.

In the preceding Diſſertation, having treated of the Divine Knowledge of God at large, I now intend to ſhew you how God applies the fitteſt means to every end he knows, which is called Divine Wiſdom.

I. This attribute is alſo infinite, even as the Divine Nature and Knowledge is infinite. For, if he be infinitely knowing, he muſt alſo be infinitely wiſe, as to the ordering and diſpoſal of all things, ſo to underſtand their natures, qualities and powers, and by conſequence, the fitneſs of them to whatever end he doth deſign them for. As he knows moſt perfectly what end he hath in view, in every thing he doth, or ſuffers to be done, whatever that end be; ſo he as perfectly knows the ways and means, by which he will promote and bring about that end both as to the number and nature of them, and likewiſe which of them are moſt fit and proper for it, and moſt likely to promote, and to effect it.

Thus for inſtance, ſuppoſe the end propoſed be the manifeſtation and illuſtration of his own glory, which is, indeed, the primary end of all his diſpenſations; he not only knows and underſtands moſt perfectly, the various ways and means, whereby this end may be promoted and effected; but likewiſe which of them all are fitteſt, and moſt proper to it, and moſt likely to effect it. Therefore,

Divines have thus defined the wiſdom of the Deity: That it is that perfection, by which God knows and has a perfect underſtanding of the ways and means, whereby to bring about whatever end he has propoſed unto himſelf, and ſo to manifeſt his glory; and whereby he likewiſe knows infallibly what is fit for him to do, or ſuffer to be done, in order thereunto. Now,

To explain this matter in reſpect to men; That God may be glorified in them, which is the firſt, if not the only end for which they have their being; as to this end he knows the right he has to their obedience, and power to exact it of them, ſo he knows as well what obedience they are capable of performing, and conſequently what law is fit to be preſcribed unto them, and upon what ſanctions, that is, with what rewards and puniſhments, to eſtabliſh and enforce it; that men may either purſue the reward by their obedience to the law preſcrib'd, or for their diſobedience be juſtly liable to the puniſhment denounc'd againſt it by that law.

So that, in this the greatneſs of God's wiſdom is very manifeſt, that he knows the nature of man, together with the faculties and power of that nature, ſo perfectly, as to be able to preſcribe a law exactly adequate and ſuited thereunto; and to eſtabliſh and enforce that law with ſuch rewards and puniſhments as the human nature is fitted for, and capable of enjoying, or enduring; and ſo to provide for the effectual ſetting forth of his own glory, either by mens obedience and happineſs, or by the eternal puniſhment of their diſobedience. For ſince all men have their being for his glory, he will be glorified one way or other in them; if not by their ſalvation, by their final ruin and deſtruction.

'Tis true of the Divine Wiſdom, what has been before affirmed of the Divine Knowledge; That it is infinite, and infallible; extending to all ſorts of means, that are proper and applicable to any end. And herein, chiefly, lies the difference of the Divine, from whatever wiſdom any other Beings are endu'd with; That the former is infinite, unſearchable, and abſolutely perfect, as the Divine Nature, and all perfections of it are: Whereas the latter is infinite and imperfect, only in ſuch proportion, meaſure, and extent, as is ſuitable to the nature and capacities of created, finite and imperfect beings. For ſuch as the nature of any being is, ſuch are all excellencies and perfections belonging to it; ſo that, in an infinite Being, or natdre, all perfections muſt be infinite; but in a finite nature, all perfections, if it be proper ſo to ſtile them, muſt be finite: And both ſorts cannot but be ſo, according as the nature is to which they do belong.

And this difference holy Job affirms, when, firſt, with reſpect to God, he tells us, " With the ancient is wiſdom; and in length of days underſtanding. With him is wiſdom and ſtrength: He hath counſel and underſtanding," Job. xii. 12, 13. Not that he only has all theſe; for other beings have them likewiſe, in proportion to their ſeveral natures and capacities: But God has all theſe ſo, that is, in ſuch perfection, as no other being has, or poſſibly can have them. And then, ſays he again, " With him is ſtrength and wiſdom: —— He leadeth counſellors away ſpoiled, and maketh the judges fools," ver. 16, 17. That is, in compariſon with him, the wiſeſt and moſt knowing of the ſons of men are very ignorant and fooliſh. Therefore, the Apoſtle had great reaſon to cry out, as once he did, " Where is the wiſe? Where is the ſcribe? Where is the diſputer of this world? Hath not God made fooliſh the wiſdom of this world?" 1 Cor. i. 20. Yes, the Apoſtle ſhews he has effectually done ſo, by deſtroying the wiſdom of the wiſe, and bringing to nothing the underſtanding of the prudent; ver. 19. And this according to that ancient prophecy: " Behold, I will proceed to do a marvellous work among this people, even a marvellous work, and a wonder: for the wiſdom of their wiſe men ſhall periſh, and the underſtanding of their prudent men ſhall be hid," Iſa. xxix. 14. The meaning of which is, That God would diſpoſe of things, and make uſe of means to bring about the ends he had propoſed, quite contrary to the expectation of the wiſe men of the world. So that Paul tells us in 1 Cor. iii. 19, 20. " The wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God: for it is written, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs. And again, the Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wiſe, that they are vain." As if he had ſaid, with regard to what went before, " God is wont to take off and preſerve the plain ſimple perſon that avowedly adheres to him, and out-wit the ſubtle deſigner; and it will ſoon befal thoſe pretenders to wiſdom, according to that of Job, who ſpeaks to this effect, (Job. v. 13.) " That they who think to be wiſer than other men, are by ſo much verier fools than others, and ſo are diſcerned to be." And ſo as the Pſalmiſt teaches, Pſ. xlix. 11." All the ſubtle contrivances of crafty worldly-minded men, prove vain and unproſperous."

And now, the reaſon of this mighty difference between Divine and human wiſdom, is, that men, whatever their deſigns may be, or how well and cunningly ſoever laid, are generally to ſeek for fit and proper means to bring their purpoſes about; but with God it is not ſo, for he knows perfectly whatever means are fit and proper to any end he has in view, and likewiſe how to apply thoſe means effectually, which he knows to be the moſt proper to that end.

II. Which brings me in the ſecond place, to conſider the Divine Wiſdom, with reſpect to the abſolute perfections of it; as it diſtinguiſhes infallibly the more proper means, from thoſe that are leſs proper, and always makes choice of, and applies ſuch means to every end, as are moſt fit and proper to that end.

'Tis true, God ſometimes acts immediately by his own Almighty Power, without the uſe of any means, becauſe he does not need them; for as he does whatever pleaſes him, ſo he can do what he pleaſes, and bring about whatever end he has in view, without the uſe or intervention of any means whatever. Thus he created all things by his word, or the bare expreſſion of his will that they ſhould be created, without having any matter to work upon, or making uſe of any means, beſides his own Almighty Power, in order to produce them. But he does not always thus exert his power, but generally acts by certain ſecond cauſes, as means to bring his purpoſe to effect; which he directs, and manages at ſuch a rate, that they are often ſeen to execute his will, even by acting, ſeemingly at leaſt, beyond, and ſometimes contrary to their natural powers and propenſions: So that, they do his will effectually, and bring to paſs what he deſigns they ſhould, even ſometimes, when they ſeem to act from a deſign of their own forming, which is repugnant thereunto. But theſe are extraordinary inſtances, in which, for ſome wiſe purpoſes, God is pleaſed to manifeſt to men the greatneſs of his power, and convince them of that abſolute dominion over all creatures, which of right belongs unto him, as the great and ſole Creator of them all. But in the ordinary methods of his providence, he brings about his ends, by means that are by nature fitted to effect them; as rain, to moiſten the earth, and make it fruitful; the warmth and ripening influence of the ſun, to maturate, and bring its fruits unto perfection; and the like. And of this ſort is the general proviſion he has made, for the production, growth and maturation of all beings in this lower world; and this is therefore ſtiled, The ordinary courſe of nature.

Now in this is ſeen the great, and even Almighty Wiſdom of the Deity; That the common means he has ordained to every common end, do never fail to bring about that end to which they were at firſt ordained. The rain, for inſtance, never dries the earth, but always makes it moiſt; and ſo the ſun does never make it cold, but always warms it; and both concur to make it fruitful, and to maturate and ripen all its fruits. They are both ſo fitted for theſe purpoſes, by him who firſt created and appointed them, that it is impoſſible they ſhould do otherwiſe; unleſs the ſame Almighty Power change, and make them of another nature, as it cannot be denied he may do, if it pleaſes him to do ſo.

And as his wiſdom is thus viſible, in providing and ordaining means ſo proper, and ſo conſtantly effectual, to all the common ends of nature; ſo it is yet much more conſpicuous, in his making choice of, and applying fit and proper means to every extraordinary end and purpoſe of his providence. That the ſame cauſes, in the ordinary ſettled courſe of nature, ſhould conſtantly produce the ſame effects, is an argument and proof of very great wiſdom concerned in the contrivance and appointment of them to thoſe ends: But the choice and application of fit and proper means, to bring about ſuch ends as all the force of nature is not able to effect, is ſtill a farther demonſtration of the greatneſs, and ſurpaſſing excellency of that wiſdom, which is ſo very manifeſt in the appointment of them to thoſe ends, as well as of that Almighty Power, without which they could not be effected. For, not only an Almighty Power is neceſſary, to the production of ſuch wonderful effects, by the uſe and application of ſuch means, or ſecond cauſes; but alſo an Almighty Wiſdom, to contrive, and rightly to apply ſuch means, as are moſt fit and proper to produce them.

Now in order, firſt, to the contrivance and appointment, and then, to the application of ſuch means, as are moſt fit and proper to produce ſuch wonderful effects, it is no leſs neceſſary that he know infallibly before-hand, and be able to diſtinguiſh perfectly, the more proper, from thoſe means that are leſs proper to any end; than that he have ſufficient power to bring about that end, by the application of ſuch means: For as, if he were defective in the latter, he could not be Almighty; ſo, if he were deficient in the former, he could neither be all-knowing, nor all-wiſe: That is, he could neither have Infinite Power, nor Infinite Wiſdom, nor Infinite Knowledge; and if he wanted either of theſe, or any other Infinite Perfection, he could not poſſibly be God. Therefore, as the Almighty Power of God is manifeſt, in the productions of ſuch effects, as ſurpaſs the utmoſt force and power of nature; ſo the abſolute perfection of his wiſdom is no leſs evident and conſpicuous, in the contrivance, and effectual application of ſuch means, as he knows to be moſt proper, apt, and fit, for the production of them. And therefore, the Apoſtle here, with reſpect to one amazing diſpenſation of his Providence, to wit, the deſertion of the Jews, in order to the calling of the Gentiles, thus cries out; O the depth of the riches both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counſellor? As if he had ſaid; “ O the depth of the abundant goodneſs of God, in bearing the contumacy of the Gentiles firſt, and then of the Jews; and of his wiſdom likewiſe, in making rhe deſertion of the Jews a means of calling the Gentiles; and of his knowledge alſo, in knowing how to work upon the obſtinate Jews, to wit, by envy and emulation toward the Gentiles, as alſo by thoſe heavy calamities, which according to the prediction of our Saviour fell upon them! How unſearchable are his determinations, and how admirable his ways of bringing them to paſs! According to what the Prophet teaches us; Iſa. xl. 15. That his ways are in wiſdom ſo much above ours, that no thoughts of ours are fit in any degree to be taken into counſel with him. And it is impoſſible that all the men upon the earth cou'd have foreſeen theſe methods, or ever have thought of adviſing them.

In ſhort; the wiſdom by which God governs the world, and orders and diſpoſes all the things in it, muſt be infinite, as his nature is; and therefore able perfectly to know, and effectually to apply, what means are fitteſt, and moſt proper to whatever end he has in view, in his government, and direction, and diſpoſal of all things: Or elſe he has not all Divine Perfections; and then he is not, neither can be God. And ſo much may ſuffice for the ſecond conſideration of the Divine Wiſdom; namely, with reſpect to the abſolute perfection of it, as it diſtinguiſhes infallibly the more proper means, from thoſe that are leſs proper, and always makes choice of, and applies ſuch means to every end, as are moſt fit and proper to that end. Now, therefore, I proceed to conſider it, briefly,

III. In the laſt place, with reſpect to other beings, as it is the ſource of all the wiſdom, with which all other beings are endued.

If, as the Apoſtle, (Jam. i. 17) tells us, “ every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and comes down from the Father of lights;” then all the wiſdom we are maſters of, is of him likewiſe. As we owe our being to his Power, and our particular kind of being to his Goodneſs; ſo we are no leſs indebted to his Bounty for all the faculties we are endued with, which do any way contribute and conduce to the perfection of our being: Of all which faculties, that of the underſtanding is the chief: as it is that, whereby we are moſt eminently diſtinguiſh'd from all inferior beings; that whereby we reaſon about the nature and tendency of things; and that, in which is ſeated all our knowledge of the difference of good and evil, and our wiſdom to make choice of what is beſt, in order to our preſent and eternal happineſs.

Now, as I have obſerved before of knowledge, ſo I muſt here obſerve of wiſdom: That as it is in God, infinite, and abſolutely perfect, it is an incommunicable attribute, that is, ſuch a perfection, as cannot be in any creature; becauſe no finite being can have infinite and abſolutely perfect wiſdom: But as it is vouchſafed to other beings, in proportion to their natures and capacities, it is therefore juſtly reckoned among the communicable attributes or perfections of the Deity; becauſe it is from him alone that our wiſdom, as well as our knowledge, is deriv'd. So that tho' we are ſomewhere told, that “ he that is wiſe may be profitable unto himſelf;” yet God is our great and only benefactor in this, as well as with reſpect to all other gifts and graces. He is that overflowing, and never-failing fountain, from whence alone our wiſdom flows, and is derived unto us, in ſuch meaſure as is ſuitable and proper to our preſent ſtate of imperfection, and from whom alone we may ask and look for the encreaſe thereof, and power to improve it. So the Apoſtle tells us; “ If any of you lack wiſdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it ſhall be given him; Jam. i. 5.

In ſhort, God's wiſdom being infinite, and moſt abſolutely perfect, and he being the Fountain and Author of all the wiſdom that is in other beings; he is therefore ſtiled by the Apoſtle, God only wiſe; Rom. xvi. 27. And in another place, The only wiſe God; 1 Tim. i. 17. And whatever wiſdom any other beings are endued with, is all derived from him, and owing to his Bounty.

CHAP. XII.

1 Gods mercies muſt move us to pleaſe God. 3 No man muſt think too well of himſelf, 6 but attend every one, on that calling, where he is placed. 9 Love, and many other duties are required of us. 19 Revenge is ſpecially forbidden.

I Beſeech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reaſonable ſervice.

2 And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable and perfect will of God.

3 For I ſay, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himſelf more highly than he ought to think; but to think ſoberly according as God hath dealt to every man the meaſure of faith.

4 For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the ſame office:

5 So we being many are one body in Chriſt, and every one members one of another.

6 Having then gifts, differing according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us propheſy according to the proportion of faith:

7 Or miniſtry, let us wait on our miniſtring; or he that teacheth, on teaching.

8 Or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that giveth, let him do it with ſimplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that ſheweth mercy, with cheerfulneſs.

9 Let love be without diſſimulation. Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good.

10 Be kindly affectioned one to another; with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another:

11 Not ſlothful in buſineſs: fervent in ſpirit; ſerving the Lord:

12 Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing inſtant in prayer:

13 Diſtributing to the neceſſity of ſaints: given to hoſpitality.

14 Bleſs them which perſecute you: bleſs, and curſe not.

15 Rejoyce with them that do rejoyce, and weep with them that weep.

16 Be of the ſame mind one towards another. Mind not high things, but condeſcend to men of low eſtate. Be not wiſe in your own conceits.

17 Recompence to no man evil for evil, Provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men.

18 If it be poſſible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

19 Dearly beloved, avenge not your ſelves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, ſaith the Lord.

20 Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirſt, give him drink: for in ſo doing thou ſhalt heap coals of fire on his head.

21 Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

Here Paul enters upon the practical part of this epiſtle, wherein he exhorts to Chriſtian duties. And

I. He in general exhorts us to dedicate our ſelves to God, in expreſſions taken from legal worſhip, and by an amplification of the properties of this ſacrifice; ver. 1. not to conform our ſelves to the world, but to renew our minds, which will gain us acquaintance with the will of God; ver. 2. Then

II. He deſcends to particulars, (1.) ſuch as relate to publick employments, as to ſhun arrogance and ſelf conceit, and to entertain a ſober opinion of ones own underſtanding and abilities, amplified by the rule thereof, ver. 3 and urged by an argument taken from the communion of the faithful; expreſſed in a compariſon, which is firſt propounded, ver. 4. and then applied, ver. 5. Then he continues with an exhortation to a ſober and diligent uſe of our gifts; wherein we find a ſuppoſition of variety of gifts, with an enumeration of ſeveral extraordinary and ordinary gifts, and directions given for their uſe, ver. 6—8. Hence he deſcends to ſuch as are of a more private, yet general concern; as unfeigned love; flight from evil; purſuit of good, ver. 9. Brotherly kindneſs; mutual reſpect to each other, ver. 10. fervency in God's ſervice, ver. 11. managing afflictions with hope, patience, and prayer, ver. 12. beneficence, hoſpitality, ver. 13. bleſſing our perſecutors, ver. 14. ſympathy both in proſperity and adverſity, ver. 15. unanimity, condeſcenſion and ſober thoughts of our ſelves, ver. 16. patience under injuries, and honeſt behaviour, ver. 17. peaceableneſs, ver. 18. ſhunning revenge, ver. 19. requiting good for evil, ver. 20. and the victory of kindneſs, ver. 21.

Ver. 1. I beſeech you therefore, brethren.] So the Apoſtle begins to apply his foregoing arguments. Since, ſays he, the goodneſs of God is ſo exceeding great, as to make all men capable of ſalvation by the righteouſneſs of faith, as I have proved above, delivering us from the rigour and bondage of the law, and admitting Gentiles, as well as Jews to be partakers of the Goſpel-covenant; let me conjure you, who are my brethren in Chriſt, by this ſame goodneſs to offer, and dedicate to God your perſons, a living, inſtead of the former dead, ſacrifice; a pure and holy, ever as thoſe under the law were without blemiſh, and acceptable, for its own ſake, which thoſe were not: For this will be an oblation of rational, as thoſe were of brute and irrational creatures, and proceeds upon rational motives.

—By the mercies of God.] Here we are not to underſtand the bleſſings and comforts of this life; theſe were the bounds of the Jews deſires and expectations under the law: But the Apoſtle, as he has ſhewn how imperfect the law was to procure them ſalvation; ſo here concludes by exhorting his converts to fix their minds on thoſe mercies of redemption, which God had now beſtowed upon the whole world through Jeſus Chriſt, even ſuch mercies as will ſave our ſouls alive, if we do but concur with the Divine Influences which God is pleaſed to give us. For, the mercies of God revealed in the Goſpel, are the moſt proper, powerful, and effectual argument to perſuade, and prevail upon ſinners, who have not yet given up and devoted themſelves to God to do it; and thoſe who have done it, to do it ſtill more and more.

——That ye preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice, &c.] As above (chap. vi. 12, 13.) the Apoſtle ſaid, That our members became inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs, by obeying the motions of ſin, he now properly exhorts to preſent the ſame bodies now a living ſacrifice, in oppoſition to the legal ſacrifices, which were firſt ſlain, and then offered up to God on the altar, viz. by being now dead unto ſin, but alive unto God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

——Holy.] As being conſecrated to the ſervice of God, and having our fruit unto holineſs, as the ſervants of God ſtill have, chap. vi. 11, 22. And as the ſacrifices offered to God were to be from any ſpot or blemiſh, and ſo holy; ſo our bodies are made a holy ſacrifice, when they are kept in ſanctification, and honour, and free from all filthineſs of the fleſh; and thus a ſacrifice acceptable, and well-pleaſing to God, who deſireth not the legal ſacrifices, nor delighteth in burnt-offerings, Pſalm li. 16. Heb. x. 8.

——Which is your reaſonable ſervice.] The original reads it thus, παραϛῆσαν τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν——τὴν λογικὴν λατρέιαν ὑμῶν. Which is tranſlated verbatim thus, "That ye preſent your bodies,——your rational ſervice to God." Hence we underſtand the Apoſtle to ſay, the ſacrifice which God expects of us under the Goſpel, is not like thoſe ſacrifices of dead and unreaſonable animals under the law, which was bodily ſacrifice, or that in which the body was chiefly employed: But it is a ſacrifice of our reaſon, devoting ourſelves who are rational creatures to his ſervice, and alſo is highly ſuitable to our reaſon. This I apprehend to be the meaning of this Scripture. Yet I can't omit taking notice of an ingenious note I have read ſome where, viz.

It may be that λογικὴ λατρεία, or logike latreia may poſſibly agree to the notion of ὁ λογὸς, the word, as it ſignifies Chriſt, and then it is the Chriſtian ſervice, we are to underſtand thereby.

It may be λογὸς ſignifies the word of God, which we emphatically call the Scripture; and then it will be that worſhip which is preſcribed to us by Divine Revelation: And ſo the Syriac ſeems to underſtand it, according to the mouth of the word; that is, ſuch as the word preſcribes.

It may be alſo as λογὸς, word, is oppoſed to νομὸς, law; and then it will be the Evangelical worſhip. And once more,

It may note ſuch a worſhip of God, as is moſt agreeable to reaſon, and ſuch as a rational man will reſolve to be moſt agreeable to ſo excellent and pure a Deity.

Ver. 2. Be not conformed to this world.] As if he had ſaid, Do not faſhion or accommodate yourſelves to the corrupt principles and cuſtoms, or to the ſinful courſes and practices of the men of this world. So the Chriſtian is to remember from hence, that he is not to ſuit his profeſſion according to the faſhion of the times, or the humour of the company he falls into.

—— Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind.] Or, be ye regenerate and changed in your whole man, beginning at the mind or underſtanding, by which the Spirit of God worketh upon the inferior faculties of the ſoul.

——That ye may prove, what is that good and acceptable, and perfect will of God.] That is, that ye may diſcern and approve, what the will of God is under the Goſpel, which requires not what is ritually, but what is ſubſtantially good, and conſequently always acceptable to him.

——Good.] That is to ſay, the religion and the myſteries of Jeſus Chriſt, which faith diſcovers in the ceremonies of the law.

——Acceptable.] i. e. The victim of whom the hope and promiſes were given by the ſacrifices of the law.

——Perfect.] Or the fulfilling of the law by charity, which the precepts of the law oblige us to ask and ſeek for in Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 3.—Through the grace given unto me.] i.e. The Apoſtolical office whereunto God had pleaſed in a moſt ſingular manner to call this Apoſtle.

— The meaſure of faith.] Or, his part or ſtation under the Goſpel, as appears from the context.

Ver. 6.—Whether the prophecy.] i. e. An extraordinary gift of expounding the Holy Scriptures, according to that of the ſame Apoſtle, 1 Cor. xiv. 3.

— According to the proportion of faith.] Which is the ſame as the meaſure of faith, in the 3d verſe of this chapter.

Ver. 21. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.] By theſe words you arrive to a right interpretation of the foregoing proverbial expreſſion, Thou ſhalt heap coals of fire upon his head, ver. 20. For here by evil we are to underſtand any unkind or injurious dealing from others; any miſchief or ill turn which our neighbour has done us. And we are overcome of evil, when we dwell in our thoughts too much, too often, and too long, upon the injuries and unkindneſſes we have met with; and more eſpecially by way of revenge for injuries we have received. So we on the contrary overcome evil with good, when we return courteſies for injuries, and ſpeak well of thoſe, who have ſpoken both hardly and very ill of us; and this is the meaning of heaping coals of fire upon our adverſaries head, for if he has the leaſt grace in him, it will make him bluſh for ſhame.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Subjection, and many other duties we owe to the magiſtrates. 8 Love is the fulfilling of the law. 11 Gluttony and drunkenneſs, and the works of darkneſs, are out of ſeaſon in the time of the Goſpel.

LET every ſoul be ſubject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be, are ordained of God.

2 Whoſoever therefore reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the ordinance of God: and they that reſiſt, ſhall receive to themſelves damnation.

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou ſhalt have praiſe of the ſame:

4 For he is the miniſter of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the ſword in vain: for he is the miniſter of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doth evil.

5 Wherefore ye muſt needs be ſubject, not only for wrath, but alſo for conſcience ſake.

6 For, for this cauſe pay you tribute alſo: for they are God's miniſters, attending continually upon this very thing.

7 Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due, cuſtom to whom cuſtom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour.

8 Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for he that loveth another, hath fulfilled the law.

9 For this, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, Thou ſhalt not kill, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs, Thou ſhalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this ſaying, namely, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf.

10 Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.

11 And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of ſleep: for now is our ſalvation nearer than when we believed.

12 The night is far ſpent, the day is at hand: let us therefore caſt off the works of darkneſs, and let us put on the armour of light.

13 Let us walk honeſtly as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in ſtriſe and envying.

14 But put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make not proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.

This chapter contains an exhortation to three great duties.

I. Subjection to magiſtrates; where is laid down the duty enjoined, and the reaſons to enforce it taken from the author of this inſtitution; ver. 1. From the danger of reſiſting; ver. 2. and from the end of their juſtification, which is ſhewn to be the good of mankind, both in reſpect to rewards and puniſhments, amplified by a diſtribution of parts. (1.) That they are not a terror to the good, wherein we find a queſtion; an exhortation to do good, and the motives of obedience, to be not fear but praiſe; ver. 3. proved, becauſe that's the end why God appointed them; ver. 4. (2.) That they are a terror to the evil; proved by the power and authority God hath committed to them, and by another end in reference to the evil; ver.———4. (3.) The concluſion of this exhortation, by way of inference, ſhewing the neceſſity of ſubjection; where we read of both the duty inferred, which is ſubjection; and the principle out of which it is to be paid, for conſcience ſake; ver. 5. And this conſciencious ſubjection is urged by divers arguments, taken from the ſign of it, paying tribute; the nature of the office; ver. 6. the equity thereof; it's his due; amplified by an exhortation to the juſt payment thereof, and alſo by an enumeration of thoſe dues both of maintenance and reverence, ver. 7.

II. Love to our neighbours. Wherein we firſt have the duty enjoined laid down and expreſſed by way of exception to a prohibition; and then follow the reaſons to enforce it, taken from (1.) the nature of love; which is the fulfilling of the law, generally affirmed; ver. 8. and proved by an induction of ſeveral particulars; and then ſummed up in the general; ver. 9. (2.) a farther explication of the excellency of love, expreſſed negatively; and amplified by an inference, ver. 10.

III. Temperance in reference to ourſelves; wherein we find a two-fold direction (1.) concerning the manner of the performance of this duty, with watchfulneſs; urged by the conſideration of the time or ſeaſon; for, ſays he, it is high time; we are near ſalvation; ver. 11. and the night is far ſpent, &c. ver. 12.—— (2.) concerning the matter of the duty; inferred from the laſt words foregoing, nigh and day, and anſwering to both parts of them; expreſſed both metaphorically; ver.——13. and plainly; wherein an exhortation is propounded, and then expounded both negatively; ver. 13. and affirmatively, including an exhortation to put on Chriſt, and a prohibition to make proviſion for the fleſh; ver. 14.

Ver. 1. Let every ſoul.] Here ſoul is put figuratively for the whole man. Body and ſoul, as it is common in Scripture.

———Be ſubject.] The original word ſignifies an orderly ſubjection, and implies the reverence of the heart, reſpectful language and geſture, obedience without reſiſting, willingly and in due manner. So the Apoſtle does not ſay, Be obedient, but be ſubject; becauſe this word comprehends all other duties and ſervices.

———To the higher powers.] The Supreme Power eſtabliſhed by the rites, privileges and cuſtoms of every nation.

———There is no power but of God.] Or, God has ſo created the world, that he has appointed a natural ſubordination among all his creatures, ſo that they who are the higher powers, are ſuch by God's Providence: And therefore it follows, the powers that be are ordained (in the original conſtitution of things) of God.

Ver. 2.——Damnation.] Not eternal puniſhment, but ſuch puniſhments as thoſe higher powers are able and commiſſioned by their ſtation to inflict.

Ver. 4.———He is the miniſter of God.] God's Providence has placed him in that ſtation above other parts of the creation, to execute judgment and juſtice between man and man. And therefore it follows to thee, (whoever thou be that art injured) for good, &c.

CHAP. XIV.

3 Men may not contemn nor condemn one the other for things indifferent: 13 But take heed that they give no offence in them: 15 For that the Apoſtle proveth unlawful by many reaſons.

HIM that is weak in the faith receive you, but not to doubtful diſputations.

2 For one believeth that he may eat all things: another who is weak, eateth herbs.

3 Let not him that eateth, deſpiſe him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not, judge him that eateth: for God hath received him.

4 Who art thou that judgeſt another mans ſervant? to his own maſter he ſtandeth or falleth: Yea, he ſhall be holden up: for God is able to make him ſtand.

5 One man eſteemeth one day above another: another eſteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully perſwaded in his own mind.

6 He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks.

7 For none of us liveth to himſelf, and no man dieth to himſelf.

8 For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore or die, we are the Lords.

9 For to this end Chriſt both died, and roſe and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

10 But why doſt thou judge thy brother? or why doſt thou ſet at nought thy brother? for we ſhall all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt.

11 For it is written, As I live, ſaith the Lord, every knee ſhall bow to me, and every tongue ſhall confeſs to God.

12 So then every one of us ſhall give account of himſelf to God.

13 Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a ſtumbling-block, or an occaſion to fall in his brothers way.

14 I know, and am perſwaded by the Lord Jeſus, that there is nothing unclean of it ſelf: but to him that eſteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean.

15 But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkeſt thou not charitably, Deſtroy not him with thy meat, for whom Chriſt died.

16 Let not then your good be evil ſpoken of.

17 For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the holy Ghoſt.

18 For he that in theſe things ſerveth Chriſt, is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19 Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.

20 For meat deſtroy not the work of God. All things indeed are pure; but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence.

21 It is good neither to eat fleſh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother ſtumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

22 Haſt thou faith? have it to thy ſelf before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himſelf in that thing which he alloweth.

23 And he that doubteth, is damned if he eat, becauſe he eateth not of faith: for whatſoever is not of faith, is ſin.

In this chapter the Apoſtle treats of the uſe of things indifferent; and how Chriſtians, both ſtrong and weak, are to carry themſelves therein one towards another, that God may have glory, the Church peace, and themſelves mutual comfort.

The occaſion of this diſcourſe was this, by reaſon of the diſperſion of the Jews, the Church almoſt in all places conſiſted of Jews and Gentiles; the Jews, as we have noted before at the beginning of this Epiſtle, could hardly be brought off from the obſervation of Levitical ceremonies, being brought up in them from their cradles, as in ordinances coming from God himſelf; and therefore, though they entertained the Goſpel, yet they held difference of days and meats ſtill neceſſary to be obſerved in point of conſcience. The Gentiles very readily embraced their Chriſtian liberty from ſuch things, purchaſed by Chriſt, and lived without making difference; hence proceeded warm diſputes, eager conteſts, and diſſentions almoſt irreconcilable, the Gentile looking upon the Jew to be ſuperſtitious, and the Jew in his turn eſteeming the Gentile no better than a prophane perſon. This flame burnt furiouſly in the Church at Rome, ſo Paul wrote them this Epiſtle, if by any means he might quench the ſame, and endeavours as an umpire, to arbitrate the matter, and unite their differences, that they might thenceforward live in unity of ſpirit, and the Lord of peace. And,

In this chapter we find two general parts, the firſt is concerning differences about meats and days, ver. 1—12. The ſecond, concerning ſcandal in things indifferent, from ver. 13. to 23. incluſive.

I. Concerning differences about meats and days, he gives (1.) a direction how to deal with the weak, he muſt be received, yet with this limitation, not to doubtful diſputations, ver. 1. (2.) Another direction how to prevent or remove differences that might ariſe about meats and days, and ſuch like indifferent things.

Firſt, about meats, he lays down the occaſion of the difference between the ſtrong and the weak, viz. their different perſwaſions about meats, ver. 2. Then he preſcribes a remedy againſt it; neither to deſpiſe nor judge one another raſhly nor uncharitable for any ſuch thing. And then he gives the reaſons againſt ſuch a practice. (1.) Becauſe God will accept him, ver. 3. (2.) Becauſe he is not ſubject to this cenſure or judgment, being another's ſervant. (3.) Becauſe he is ſubject to God's judgment alone. (4.) Becauſe God will preſerve him from thoſe miſcarriages thou ſuſpecteſt he may be guilty of, ver. 4.

Secondly, about days, where he lays down their different opinion about them, and preſcribes certain directions how to behave themſelves, as (1.) to endeavour full ſatisfaction in their own minds, ver. 5. (2.) to refer all, whether one way or other, to the glory of God, (for I think this is to be underſtood rather of matter of right and duty, than of matter of fact; this being uſual in Scripture to put matter of fact, for matter of right, as (chap. xiii. 4.) urged from the general intent, ſcope and deſign both of a Chriſtian's life and death, laid down negatively, not to ourſelves, and poſitively, but unto the Lord, amplified by an inference concerning our relation to God as Lord in all conditions, propounded at ver. 8. and proved by the ground of this Lordſhip, Chriſt's performance, where are both the actions cauſing, and the effect cauſed, ver. 9.

Judging and deſpiſing one another, diſwaded by conſiderations of the laſt judgment, ver. 10. proved by a teſtimony of Scripture; wherein the matter teſtified (1.) bowing, (2.) the certainty of it; it being aſſured by God's oath, ver. 11. (3.) the amplification thereof, by the end of our appearance, before Chriſt's tribunal, to give an account, ver. 12. and by an inference concerning judging (1.) negatively, not to judge one another (2.) poſitively; to judge this, that none ſhould ſcandalize his brother. And thus he falls into the ſecond general part, namely,

II. Concerning ſcandal in things indifferent. The Sum whereof is, that as the weak may not judge or condemn the ſtrong for the uſe of his Chriſtian liberty, ſo the ſtrong muſt not in ſuch uſe, contemn the weak, but moderate his liberty for their good. Wherein we find a general declaration not to give offence, ver. 13. amplified by a conceſſion, that nothing is unclean in itſelf, limited by an exception, when a man judges any thing unclean, ver. 14. and confirmed by ſeveral reaſons; becauſe it is a breach of charity, it tends to the deſtruction of our brother, aggravated by the dignity of him thus liable to deſtruction; one from whom Chriſt died, propounded in form of a prohibiton, ver. 15. It will bring a reproach upon our Chriſtian liberty, (ſet down alſo in form of prohibition) ver. 16. and ſhewing that the nature and eſſence of true religion does not conſiſt in ſuch things. This is propounded both negatively and affirmatively, at ver. 17. and proved as to the affirmative part, (1.) from the nature of them, they are ſervices to God, and (2.) from their effects, i. e. God's acceptation and man's approbation. Then he applies the premiſes in an exhortation (by way of inference from the foregoing deſcription of the kingdom of God) to peace and mutual edification, ver. 19. In fine, ſays he, it tends to the overthrow of the work of God, amplified by conceſſion, that all things are pure, and by a correction, that yet it is evil to eat with offence, ver. 20. and then infers, from the rule of contraries, that it is good therefore to forbear, ver. 21. And then concludes with a direction concerning the uſe of our knowledge, amplified by two aphoriſms. The firſt relating to the ſtrong, ver. 22. the ſecond relating to the weak, wherein we find a poſition, and the confirmation thereof, at ver. 23.

Ver. 1. —— Weak in the faith.] Such as the Jews, who, being weak in underſtanding, thought it needful to retain the ceremonial law of Moſes in the Chriſtian Church.

—— Receive ye.] i. e. Do not reject him nor caſt him out of your communion, but rather bear with his weakneſs, and by good inſtructions convince him of his errors.

—— Doubtful diſputations.] Diſputes about things indifferent.

Ver. 2. For one believeth that he may eat all things, &c.] See this doubt reſolved by the Apoſtolical decree in Acts xv.

Ver. 3. Let not him that eateth deſpiſe, &c.] This is the Apoſtle's exhortation to peace and unity in the Church, that if a difference of opinion ariſeth, we muſt not vilify or ſet at nought one another, nor condemn each other, as humorous and ſcrupulous, much leſs as obſtinate and wilful; and eſpecially not to ſeparate from, or break communion, with each other on ſuch trifling occaſion. As if he had ſaid, while there is error in our underſtandings, weakneſs in our judgments, and narrowneſs in our faculties, differences will ariſe in the Church of God, but take care, that where there is not compliance, yet there may be peace, deſpiſe not, judge not, one another.

Ver. 4. Who art thou that judgeſt.] See the notes on Matt. vii. 1.

Ver. 5. Eſteemeth one day above another.] The Chriſtians converted from Judaiſm, thought or eſteemed the days which the law preſcribed for feaſting or faſting were moſt proper, and preferable to any other for the worſhip of God.

Ver. 6. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord.] According to the direction of the Lord in the old law.

—— And he that regardeth not, &c.] i. e. Doth it out of reſpect to the ſame Lord, who by the liberty of the Goſpel, hath freed us from thoſe Jewiſh obſervations.

Ver. 7. None of us liveth to himſelf.] According to his own will.

Ver. 8. —— We live unto the Lord.] Or, according to the will and word of the Lord.

Ver. 20. —— All things indeed are pure, &c.] See Luke xi. 21. and Acts x. 15.

Ver. 23. —— Whatſoever is not of faith.] Or, according to the Goſpel of Chriſt.

CHAP. XV.

1 The ſtrong muſt bear with the weak. 2 We may not pleaſe ourſelves. 3 For Chriſt did not ſo, 7 but receive one the other, as Chriſt did us all, 8 both Jews, 9 and Gentiles. 15 Paul excuſeth his writing, 21 and promiſeth to ſee them, 30 and requeſteth their prayers.

WE then that are ſtrong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe our ſelves.

2 Let every one of us pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification.

3 For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf; but as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.

4 For whatſoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we through patience and comfort of the ſcriptures might have hope.

5 Now the God of patience and conſolation, grant you to be like-minded one towards another, according to Chriſt Jeſus:

6 That ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

7 Wherefore receive ye one another, as Chriſt alſo received us, to the glory of God.

8 Now I ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt was a miniſter of the circumciſion for the truth of God, to confirm the promiſes made unto the fathers:

9 And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cauſe I will confeſs to thee among the Gentiles, and ſing unto thy name.

10 And again he ſaith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.

11 And again, Praiſe the Lord, all ye Gentiles, and laud him, all ye people.

12 And again Eſaias ſaith, There ſhall be a root of Jeſſe, and he that ſhall riſe to reign over the Gentiles; in him ſhall the Gentiles truſt.

13 Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghoſt.

14 And I my ſelf alſo am perſwaded of you, my brethren, that ye alſo are full of goodneſs, filled with all knowledge, able alſo to admoniſh one another.

15 Nevertheleſs, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you, in ſome ſort, as putting you in mind, becauſe of the grace that is given to me of God,

16 That I ſhould be the miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt to the Gentiles, miniſtring the Goſpel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt.

17 I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jeſus Chriſt, in thoſe things which pertain to God.

18 For I will not dare to ſpeak of any of thoſe things which Chriſt hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed,

19 Through mighty ſigns and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; ſo that from Jeruſalem and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the Goſpel of Chriſt.

20 Yea, ſo have I ſtrived to preach the Goſpel, not where Chriſt was named, leſt I ſhould build upon another mans foundation:

21 But as it is written, To whom he was not ſpoken of, they ſhall ſee: and they that have not heard, ſhall underſtand.

22 For which cauſe alſo I have been much hindred from coming to you.

23 But now having no more place in theſe parts, and having a great deſire theſe many years to come unto you;

24 Whenſoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you: for I truſt to ſee you in my journey, and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if firſt I be ſomewhat filled with your company.

25 But now I go unto Jeruſalem, to miniſter unto the ſaints.

26 For it hath pleaſed them of Macedonia and Achaia, to make a certain contribution for the poor ſaints which are at Jeruſalem.

27 It hath pleaſed them verily, and their debters they are. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their ſpiritual things, their duty is alſo to miniſter unto them in carnal things.

28 When therefore I have performed this, and have ſealed to them this fruit, I will come by you into Spain.

29 And I am ſure that when I come unto you, I ſhall come in the fulneſs of the bleſſing of the Goſpel of Chriſt.

36 Now I beſeech you, brethren, for the Lord Jeſus Chriſts ſake, and for the love of the Spirit, that ye ſtrive together with me in your prayers to God for me;

31 That I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judea; and that my ſervice which I have for Jeruſalem, may be accepted of the ſaints:

32 That I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreſhed.

33 Now the God of peace be with you all. Amen.

This chapter contains, in proſecution of the former argument,

I. Another direction (beſides that in ch. xiv. 1.) to the ſtrong, how to behave themſelves towards the weak; (1.) To bear their infirmities, ver. 1. (2.) to pleaſe them; yet only ſo far as may conduce to their edification; ver. 3. which being produced, is proved to be pertinent to the caſe in hand, by the end of the Scriptures, which is inſtruction; and by their uſefulneſs, to beget and nouriſh hope; ver. 4. and is again amplified by a prayer for unity and unanimity among thoſe that believe; ver. 5, 6. (3.) To receive them (expreſſed by way of inference from what went before) where we have firſt the duty, and then the rule of it; Chriſt's example receiving us; propounded at ver. 7. and proved by a diſtribution of the perſons received, who were Jews and Gentiles. So that at ver. 8. the Apoſtle gives us Chriſt's office and employment in reference to the Jews, and both the remote and nearer ends thereof. And he proves alſo, that the Gentiles are receiv'd into the covenant of grace, by the effect, their glorifying God, and by diverſe teſtimonies of Scripture; ver. 9——12.

II. A prayer for their joy and peace; amplified by the root, believing; the end; abounding in hope; and by the worker, who is the Holy Ghoſt; ver. 13.

III. The concluſion of the Epiſtle; (which begins at this place) wherein we have an excuſe (1.) concerning the manner of his writing; and here is a conceſſion of their eminency both in goodneſs and knowledge; ver. 14. And a correction; that yet he wrote to them to put them in mind of their duty, as his office obliged him; which duty of his office he deſcribes more generally at ver. 15, 16.——And then more particularly, in reference to the object, who were the Gentiles; then in reference to his work, which was to preach the Goſpel; and finally, in reference to the end thereof, viz. acceptation, amplified by the condition thereof, ver.——16. And its efficacy; ſo that he may glory. Affirmed, and then limited in reſpect of the principal efficient, Chriſt; and in reſpect of the matter; things pertaining to God; ver. 17. Both which are amplified; the former, by his refuſing to ſpeak of other things; ver. 18.——And the latter, concerning the matter of his glorying, by declaring (1.) the means, both inward and outward, whereby his miniſtry he became ſo efficacious; ver.——18, 19.——(2.) his travel about it; ver. 19 (3) his choice of places where to preach; ſet down negatively with the reaſon; ver. 20. and affirmatively in the words of Eſay; ver. 21. amplified by the conſequent (which is the other thing he excuſes) viz. (2.) concerning his not coming to them, in reference to the time paſt; that he had not done it all this while. This he excuſes by the reaſon thereof; his hindrance by another more neceſſary work; ver. 22. and by a promiſe to come to them; amplified by the reaſons; ver. 23. the time, and the benefit he hopes to receive thereby; ver. 24. Then he excuſes himſelf in reference to the time preſent, by telling them of his preſent journey elſewhere upon a weighty occaſion, even to carry the contributions of the rich brethren to thoſe that were diſtreſſed. This is firſt generally expreſſed at ver. 25. then particularly expounded in ſeveral circumſtances; ver. 26. and then amplified by the equity thereof; ver. 27.

He nevertheleſs promiſes to come as ſoon as occaſion offered, and his neceſſities would permit; which promiſe he amplifies by the benefit he was ſure they'd receive thereby; ver. 29. For which end he intreats their prayers; ver. 30. and mentions thoſe bleſſings he would have beg of God in his behalf, namely, deliverance from adverſaries, and acceptance of his ſervice; ver. 31. That his coming to them might be comfortable, and their meeting and converſe might be mutually refreſhing; ver. 32. And ſo concludes with his Apoſtolical Benediction; ver. 33.

Ver. 1. We then that are ſtrong.] In faith, knowledge and grace. We that have received a greater meaſure of grace, ought to exerciſe more charity towards our Chriſtian Brethren than others. If they be weak, haſty, froward, peeviſh, vexatious, let us uſe indulgence towards them, bear with them, help and relieve them; becauſe they are not ſo well inſtructed as we are.

——Ought to bear the infirmities of the weak.] We that are well grounded in faith ought to bear with meekneſs the miſtakes of others.

——And not to pleaſe ourſelves.] Or rather, not to be ſelf-willed, that will have their own way in every thing; that will ſpeak their pleaſure of every man; that will ſay what they liſt, let who will take offence at it; theſe are the preſumptuous perſons of whom the Apoſtle Peter ſays, that they are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities.

Ver. 32.——By the will of God.] Or, God willing, or permitting.

Now from the whole of this chapter it may be obſerved, That all people are not ſo ſtrong to diſcern the whole of our holy religion without much labour, and patient inſtruction; and that the great qualification for this, is a ſincere deſire to do the will of God: Therefore, note as follows,

1. This character of a man that is deſirous to do the will of God is to be conſidered as diſtinguiſhed from thoſe of great abilities and learning. Theſe are, no doubt, great advantages to a man, when joined with a good diſpoſition of mind; they will enable him to carry his enquiries a more conſiderable length, and are particularly requiſite for qualifying one to be a ſucceſsful inſtructor of others: But it was not deſigned, that religion ſhould be accommodated only to the underſtandings of the learned; it is brought down to the loweſt capacities. To underſtand the great things belonging to it, and diſtinguiſh truth from falſhood and impoſture, the principal thing required, is an honeſt heart and ſincere good meaning. Where this is wanting the moſt extraordinary parts and learning will be found to prove no great advantage, but rather perhaps the contrary. As knowledge ſeparated from goodneſs puffeth up; ſuch a perſon, with all his boaſted abilities, may run the greateſt hazard of knowing nothing to purpoſe, of miſtaking and miſrepreſenting to himſelf theſe things which he pretends to know: His conceit is apt to make him leſs exact in his reſearches, poſitive and inflexible in theſe opinions he hath embraced, incapable of receiving further light from others, and liable to be prejudiced againſt any who may offer this to him. From this character is to be diſtinguiſhed, a ſincere good diſpoſition and honeſt intention; as that which will lead moſt ſucceſsfully to the diſcovery of Divine Truth, amidſt all falſe pretenſions; and will ſecure a man from miſtakes, in a great meaſure, even without the advantage of a learned education.

2. This character, which was given by Chriſt himſelf, John vii. 17. is diſtinguiſhed from that of a mere curious ſpeculative enquirer; by this, that it propoſes the doing of what may appear to be the will of God, as the great deſign to which all our enquiries about religion are to be made ſubſervient. There are many, alas, of thoſe, who ſeem to be ſenſible, in general, of the importance of embracing the true religion; who are unhappily prepoſſeſſed with one fundamental miſtake about the great deſign of it, turning it into a piece of mere ſpeculation. Being very conceited of their own judgments, or blindly fond of theſe ſentiments in which they have brought up, their whole concern has been engaged in maintaining their own particular opinions: To be of their ſide of the queſtion has been thought of the greateſt importance: This hath been reckoned the chief thing to be minded; and ſo the main ſtreſs of religion has come to be laid on a ſound belief. In oppoſition to this, the character given by Chriſt, and is ſuppoſed in this whole Epiſtle to the Romans, as neceſſary to make a man a good Chriſtian, carries in it a ſincere deſign to do the will of God, as that which leads a man on in his religious enquiries. This ſuppoſes the firm belief of a God, of his infinite goodneſs, power, and wiſdom, and other perfections; ſuch a belief as is not merely the mechanical product of education and cuſtom, but eſtabliſhed upon reaſonable grounds and conſiderations: From this ariſes a regard to God, as a being infinitely great and good; a ſenſe of the importance of being on good terms with him, and the indiſpenſible obligations we are under to do what is agreeable to him: A conformity to him, and to his will, is regarded as the great honour and happineſs of men; to direct and influence us to this, is conſidered as the great deſign, which any true religion, any doctrine which is truly from God, muſt have in view, and for the ſake of which alone it is valuable. It being the language of ſuch a perſon, through the whole courſe of his enquiries about religion, Acts ix. 6. Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? He carries along with him a ſettled reſolution to put in practice whatever ſhall appear to be the will of God; to make that his chief care and ſtudy, which he ſhall find God himſelf lays the greateſt ſtreſs upon: And accordingly he ſhews this to be his ſincere diſpoſition, by actually conforming himſelf to whatever, upon due examination, appears to be the will of God, having reſpect to all his commands, without excepting any one thing which he finds God requires, and chiefly minding and purſuing what God himſelf principally inſiſts upon.

3. This character ſtands oppoſed to the conduct of thoſe, who, without a deliberate enquiry after the truth, are governed by humour and fancy in their opinions, or yield a blind ſubmiſſion to human authority. Some are, in their religious opinions, immediately determined by mere fancy: Whatever pleaſes their preſent humour and taſte, without undergoing a reaſonable examination, eaſily prevails with them; whatever does not ſuit this, is, without more ado, rejected by them. This is what the Apoſtle obſerves to have been the caſe with the generality of both Jews and Gentiles, 1 Cor. i. 22. the Jews, ſays he, require a ſign: They built much upon extraordinary ſigns from Heaven, ſuch as ſhould give a great deal of awful pomp and outward ſplendor to the appearance of their Meſſiah: And the Greeks, ſaith the Apoſtle, ſeek after wiſdom: They dealt much in ſophiſtry, and a great ſhew of learning and empty eloquence; and it was by this they were diſpoſed to judge of any perſon, who pretended to any thing of an extraordinary character: And therefore the doctrine of our Saviour and his Apoſtles was rejected by both Jews and Greeks, as not anſwering the demands which their humour and fancy ſuggeſted; the doctrine of Chriſt crucified was to the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and to the Greeks fooliſhneſs. Others are governed in their ſentiments by human authority. This too was partly the caſe with the Jews; they had ſurrendered themſelves to the abſolute conduct of their pretended guides; the prevailing argument with them was, John vii. 48. Have any of the rulers, or of the Phariſees believed on him? This is the way, by which thoſe of the Church of Rome have pretended to ſecure people from errors and miſtakes, and have in reality detained them in the groſſeſt deluſions. This is what many people are liable to fall into, through indolence and careleſneſs they take up their religion as they find it formed to their hand; or their regard to men of character, not being governed by reaſon, excludes the conſideration of that frailty which remains with the beſt, and inſenſibly produces a blind ſubmiſſion to their judgments. But a ſincere deſire to do the will of God, being founded in reaſon, proceeds in a rational way toward the diſcovery of the truth, and carries along with it a ſerious and unbiaſſed examination of whatever is pretended to be God's will. One of this character, being ſenſible of how great importance it is to have juſt notions of the Divine Will, ſpares no pains for attaining to theſe, and avoiding miſtakes about it; and admits of nothing as ſuch, but upon good and ſufficient evidence. What is preſented to him as a revelation from God, commands his attention; he ſets himſelf to the cloſeſt examination of its pretenſions, reckoning this a matter in which he has the greateſt concern: Having found its pretenſions to be good, he carefully enquires into the meaning of it; he reads it frequently, and meditates upon it, and makes uſe of all proper helps for leading him to the underſtanding of it; particularly of what aſſiſtance and inſtruction he can receive from thoſe of good abilities, and who have it for their profeſſed buſineſs to be guides to others: This, I ſay, he improves as an help to him; but remembring that the beſt may err, he does not give up his judgment to be abſolutely governed by them. What he hath thus diſcovered to be the will of God, he reaſonably adheres to, not ſuffering himſelf to be beat out of his ſentiments by the force of authority; yet ſtill, from the ſenſe of his liableneſs to miſtakes, he is ready to hearken to fair reaſoning, and to allow his opinions to be freely canvaſſed. And, in fine, according to this temper of his mind, which ſincerely regards the Divine Approbation, what he thus admits as a ſufficient intimation of the Divine Will, he reſolutely conforms his practice to, without fear of man's judgment. To this purpoſe are theſe exhortations, 1 Theſſ. v. 20, 21. Deſpiſe not propheſyings; prove all things; hold faſt that which is good. 1 John iv. 1. Beloved, believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits, whether they are of God. It is only in this way, that a man can pretend to do the will of God. No man can be thought ſincerely diſpoſed to this, who is careleſs of informing himſelf about it, and obtaining juſt views of it; that perſon cannot be juſtly ſaid to do God's will, even while he does what happens to be agreeable to it, while he himſelf is either not convinced of its being ſo, or, which is the ſame thing, does not know why he thinks ſo.

4. This regard to the will of God is ſuppoſed to be the prevailing temper of a man's mind; and this diſtinguiſhes him from ſome, who, though they have ſomething of a deſire to know and do God's will, and would be thought to examine and judge for themſelves; yet being, in the main, governed by their paſſions, theſe have the ſecret direction of their judgments. Some have ſome natural impreſſions of a God, of his awful majeſty, and of an eternal ſtate; they tremble at the thought of his wrath, and of everlaſting miſery; they would gladly be ſecured of eternal happineſs: In the mean time, they are habitually under the power of their luſts, the love of this world, and the pleaſures of ſin, their pride, malice, and other evil paſſions: The effect of which is, that, while they are ſome way concerned about religion, and taken up in enquiring into it, their prevailing paſſions repreſent things to them in a falſe light; as a diſeaſed eye gives a wrong colour to the objects preſented to it. Theſe paſſions have a ſecret influence on their judgments, ſo as to make their notions in religion to correſpond with their inclinations. But in the character of a true Chriſtian, deſire to know and do the will of God is ſuppoſed to be the prevailing principle of a man's mind, and to have the command of his other paſſions and affections. Not that theſe are ſuppoſed abſolutely ſubdued; they may be apt ſometimes to riſe in a good man's mind, and ſecretly to influence his judgment in ſome particular caſes: But, in the main, they are brought in ſubjection to a prevailing regard to God and his will. The good man ſets himſelf, in his enquiries, to have no regard to the gratifying of his paſſions; is at pains to diveſt himſelf of theſe, and to make a calm and deliberate judgment of things; and is ready to receive and embrace what appears to be God's will, however it may contradict his ſenſual inclinations and particular humours. Now,

Here it would ſeem neceſſary to ſhew how far a ſincere deſire to know God's will, ſhall prove a ſufficient preſervative from miſtakes in religion. Therefore,

1. This is chiefly to be underſtood with reſpect to more groſs and dangerous errors. It is not to be doubted that thoſe who ſincerely deſire, and intend to do the will of God, fall into ſmaller miſtakes, ſuch as are not inconſiſtent with a practice, in the main, coming up to their ſincere intention. As it is acknowledged that ſome things, which are not of abſolute neceſſity to be known and believed in order to ſalvation, are more obſcurely revealed, every honeſt mind may not be capable of apprehending theſe diſtinctly; in particular caſes, where the application of the general rules is not immediately obvious, ſuch may miſtake their duty. Hence is there, and always muſt be, in this dark ſtate, (1 Cor. xiii. 12.) a diverſity of ſentiments about ſmaller matters, among perſons of a ſincere good diſpoſition. Their ſecurity then muſt be underſtood chiefly to take place, with reſpect to matters of greater importance and neceſſity, on which the deſign of all religion does either entirely, or very much depend; the diſtinguiſhing a true from a pretended revelation; the diſcerning theſe doctrines, the knowledge and belief of which is neceſſary to a good practice; and theſe errors which are, in their conſequences, fatal to goodneſs.

2. If ſuch ſhould at any time fall into miſtakes which have a dangerous appearance, they ſhall nevertheleſs be preſerved from the malignant influence of theſe, and ſhall in time come at the diſcovery of the truth in theſe matters. It may perhaps be ſuppoſed that ſuch as are, in their general courſe, influenced by a ſincere inclination to do God's will, may, in a particular inſtance, fall into a miſtake, which ſeems threatning to the intereſts of virtue: This may ſerve for wiſe purpoſes in the Divine Conduct, ſuch as to teach others, and themſelves too upon the diſcovery, the frailty of human nature, and the weakneſs of our underſtandings, and to inſpire them with humble thoughts of themſelves. Yet to do God's will being their habitual and prevailing deſire, they ſhall eſcape the dangerous influence of ſuch a miſtake, which might prove fatal to others; and it is reaſonable to believe, that in the courſe of their enquiries, they ſhall come to diſcover their error. See to this purpoſe, Phil. iii. 15. Let us, ſays the Apoſtle, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwiſe minded, God ſhall reveal even this unto you. If in any thing ye be otherwiſe minded: You will obſerve that what the Apoſtle ſeems to be referring to, was of ſome conſequence; the liberty wherewith Chriſt had made them free, from circumciſion, and the other ceremonies of the Jewiſh Church; the introducing of which into Chriſtianity might prove very prejudicial to it, as it had no ſmall tendency to lead people's minds of from the great deſign and ſubſtantial parts of it: As to this, ſays he, if in any thing ye be otherwiſe minded, God ſhall reveal, or make known, even this unto you. And conſequently, as Chriſtianity is, upon good grounds, acknowledged by us for a true Divine Revelation; ſo ſufficient proviſion is made for our coming at a due underſtanding of the neceſſary and important doctrines of it, and diſtinguiſhing theſe from what may be falſely obtruded upon Chriſtianity. We may be perſuaded that all neceſſary points contained in it are among the things which are clearly ſet forth: Theſe things, I mean, which have a more immediate relation to, and connection with virtue; theſe things, the knowledge of which is neceſſary to promote and ſupport true goodneſs, and the importance of which did chiefly make a revelation needful; theſe things, I ſay, we may be ſure, are to be found among the things which are clearly revealed. There may be good reaſons why other things, which are not of that conſequence, ſhould be more obſcurely delivered. The firſt preachers of Chriſtianity, in accommodating themſelves to thoſe whom they more immediately addreſſed, may well be ſuppoſed to have frequently alluded to cuſtoms and facts very well known to them, but which we cannot have ſo diſtinct a knowledge of at this diſtance of time: And it is natural enough to think that, in the mean time, doctrines of univerſal concern were delivered in terms which might be always underſtood; other things, of particular uſe to thoſe to whom immediately they were ſpoken or wrote, but not of that univerſal importance with the other, might be expreſſed in a ſtile, which they indeed were well acquainted with, but, which length of time hath rendred obſcurer to us. That things of leſs importance, the diſcovery of which may indeed be of uſe to virtue, but is not abſolutely neceſſary for the ſupport of it; that theſe, I ſay, ſhould be left ſomewhat obſcure, may ſerve for ſome good purpoſes: It gives occaſion for ſome particular exerciſes of love and charity; ſuch as mutual forbearance amidſt our different ways of thinking; as it gives place for different degrees of knowledge and improvement among Chriſtians, it affords opportunity for thoſe who are farther advanced, to exerciſe their love, in bearing the infirmities of the weak, as it is worded in the firſt verſe of this chapter, and communicating to them further meaſures of knowledge. Theſe are among the exerciſes of charity belonging to this ſtate of trial, by which we are trained up to a ſtate of perfection. But certainly all theſe things, the knowledge and belief of which is more immediately neceſſary to a good practice, muſt, in a true revelation, be delivered in ſo plain a manner, as people, even of ordinary capacities, may readily come at the apprehenſion of them, by the due uſe of their faculties, and the means of knowledge. A revelation obſcure in theſe very articles, for the ſake of which chiefly a revelation was requiſite, would be unworthy of God: This would be to trifle with the weakneſs and ignorance of his poor creatures; it would be for God Almighty to act inconſiſtently with himſelf.

CHAP. XVI.

3 Paul willeth the brethren to greet many, 17 and adviſeth them to take heed of thoſe which cauſe diſſenſion and offences, 21 and after ſundry ſalutations endeth with praiſe and thankſgiving.

I Commend unto you Phebe our ſiſter, which is a ſervant of the church which is at Cenchrea:

2 That ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh ſaints, and that ye aſſiſt her in whatſoever buſineſs ſhe hath need of you: for ſhe hath been a ſuccourer of many, and of my ſelf alſo.

3 Greet Priſcilla and Aquila my helpers in Chriſt Jeſus:

4 (Who have for my life laid down their own necks: unto whom not only I give thanks, but alſo all the churches of the Gentiles)

5 Likewiſe greet the church that is in their houſe. Salute my well-beloved Epenetus, who is the firſt-fruits of Achaia unto Chriſt.

6 Greet Mary, who beſtowed much labour on us.

7 Salute Andronicus and Junia my kinſmen and my fellow-priſoners, who are of note among the apoſtles, who alſo were in Chriſt before me.

8 Greet Amplias my beloved in the Lord.

9 Salute Urbane our helper in Chriſt, and Stachys my beloved.

10 Salute Apelles approved in Chriſt. Salute them which are of Ariſtobulus houſehold.

11 Salute Herodion my kinſman. Greet them that be of the houſhold of Narciſſus, which are in the Lord.

12 Salute Tryphena and Trypheſa, who labour in the Lord. Salute the beloved Perſis, which laboured much in the Lord.

13 Salute Rufus choſen in the Lord, and his mother and mine.

14 Salute Aſyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them.

15 Salute Philologus, and Julia, Nereus, and his ſiſter, and Olympas, and all the ſaints which are with them.

16 Salute one another with an holy kiſs, The churches of Chriſt ſalute you.

17 Now I beſeech you, brethren, mark them which cauſe diviſions and offences, contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them.

18 For they that are ſuch, ſerve not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own belly; and by good words and fair ſpeeches deceive the hearts of the ſimple.

19 For your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf: but yet I would have you wiſe unto that which is good, and ſimple concerning evil.

20 And the God of peace ſhall bruiſe Satan under your feet ſhortly. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you. Amen.

21 Timotheus my work-fellow, and Lucius, and Jaſon, and Soſipater, my kinſmen ſalute you.

22 I Tertius, who wrote this epiſtle, ſalute you.

23 Gaius mine hoſt, and of the whole church, ſaluteth you. Eraſtus the chamberlain of the city ſaluteth you, and Quartus a brother.

24 The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

25 Now to him that is of power to ſtabliſh you according to my goſpel, and the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt, (according to the revelation of the myſtery which was kept ſecret ſince the world began,

26 But now is made manifeſt, and by the ſcriptures of the prophets according to the commandment of the everlaſting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith.

27 To God only wiſe, be glory through Jeſus Chriſt for ever. Amen.

¶ Written to the Romans from Corinthus, and ſent by Phebe ſervant of the church at Cenchrea.

We are to note in this chapter, which is, as it were, an appendix to the Epiſtle to the Romans.

I. A recommendation of one to their love and aſſiſtance, with the reaſon, ver. 1, 2.

II. Paul's ſalutations to divers worthy and excellent perſons, from ver. 3. to 15. incluſive.

III. His precept of mutual ſalutations among themſelves, and the ſalutation of others to them, ver. 16.

IV. An admonition; wherein the duty enjoined is firſt laid down, to avoid ſchiſmaticks, ver. 17. and confirmed in reference to theſe falſe teachers. (1.) From the end that they aim at, and (2.) from the miſchief they do, ver. 18. and in reference to the Romans themſelves; wherein we find a commendation of their obedience, amplified by his rejoicing in that reſpect. Then a caution at ver. 19. conſolation, in a promiſe or propheſy of what God would do for them, and laſtly, a bleſſing or benediction, ver. 20.

V. The ſalutations of divers perſons to them, ver. 21. ——23.

VI. A repetition of his Apoſtolical Benediction, ver. 24.

VII. A doxology, or acknowledgment of glory to God, wherein he gives us a deſcription of God, by his power to eſtabliſh them, which eſtabliſhing is amplified by the inſtrument or pattern, i. e. the Goſpel and preaching of Chriſt deſcribed by its different diſpenſation, as a myſtery kept ſecret before Chriſt, ver. 25. and a revelation made manifeſt ſince the preaching of Chriſt; then (2.) By the means of this revelation, the Scripture now better underſtood. (3.) By the authority, by which it is undertaken, even the commandment of God, and laſtly, by the end of this revelation, the obedience of faith, ver. 26. To which is added, an aſcription of glory to him, at ver. 27.

Ver. 1. I commend unto you Phebe our ſiſter.] i. e. I commend unto your care and affectionate regard Phebe, our ſiſter in the faith, who ſerveth the Church Cenchrea, either in quality of a deaconneſs, or in receiving and harbouring poor Chriſtians, who were perſecuted from city to city for Chriſt's ſake, among whom was the Apoſtle himſelf.

Ver. 2. That ye receive her in the Lord.] viz. With Chriſtian Love for the Lord's ſake.

Ver. 3.——My helpers in Chriſt Jeſus.] As it is before recorded of them in Acts xviii. 26.

Ver. 4.——Laid down their own necks.] An hyperbolical figure, ſignifying, That they had always ſhewn ſo much zeal for the Apoſtle and his doctrine, that they ſeemed ready to lay down their lives for his ſake; or that they had often expoſed themſelves to the hazard of their lives for his preſervation; ſee Acts xviii. 12, &c. 2 Tim. iv. 19.

Ver. 5.———The Church that is in their houſe.] i. e. The aſſembly or congregation of Chriſtians, who met there publickly to worſhip God; not a ſeparate aſſembly, but a part of the univerſal or Catholic Church, united to the whole in their worſhip and doctrine. And thus we are to underſtand the Church or Churches, of a particular city or place, in Scripture. Therefore, it will be proper to obviate the Romiſh uſurpations, to add the following note, which I ſhall draw up by way of Diſſertation, ſhewing you

What the Church of Chriſt was in the Apoſtle's days.

And this I propoſe to do by a deſcription of that original Church by all its tokens and characters, which are excellently deſcribed by the Evangeliſt Luke in the Acts of the Apoſtles, where he ſpeaking of the firſt Chriſtians, ſays, "They continued ſtedfaſtly in the Apoſtles doctrine, and fellowſhip, and in breaking of bread, and in prayer," Acts ii. 42. And this multitude, of whom this is recorded, is called at the laſt verſe in the ſame chapter, the Church, the Church of Chriſt in thoſe days. But

Before I ſpeak of the characters of a true Church, I ought to ſhew in few words what it is that is to be known by them.

The Church, Eccleſia, among Chriſtians in the largeſt uſe of the word, is the whole multitude of believers joyned together in one body or ſociety, under one head Jeſus Church.

In the Nicene Creed it is called, the Catholic Apoſtolic Church. Apoſtolic, becauſe it was planted at firſt by the Apoſtles, and ſtill retains the characters of their original Church. Catholic, that is, Univerſal; (for that is the plainer Engliſh word,) becauſe it is made up of all thoſe particular Churches, of which every one hath theſe characters in the fore-cited Scripture, and is therefore a true part of the Catholic or Univerſal.

For the word Catholic, as fond of it as they are now in the Roman Church, if any Chriſtian of Rome, for ſome ages, after Chriſt, had heard any one ſay, I am a Catholic, he would not have been able to have gueſt what religion he had meant. But when the Greeks had uſed the word καθολικὴ in their language: Firſt, to diſtinguiſh the Chriſtian Church as extending to all nations, from the Jewiſh which was confined to one nation in particular; afterwards to diſtinguiſh the common Chriſtianity, which was in all parts of the world, from that of a ſect which ſprang up in ſome particular country: After this, the word Catholic was taken up by them of the Roman Church. And in proceſs of time they came to diſtinguiſh themſeives by it, from the Greeks, and from thoſe of the other eaſtern Churches that firſt uſed it. Thus

The Catholic Church (as I have ſhewn) ſignifies the Univerſal. And by the Univerſal Church, we mean that which from this head came to diſperſe itſelf into all parts of the inhabited world. The original of this Church Univerſal was that Church which the Apoſtles planted firſt at Jeruſalem; therein following the command of our Saviour who bade them, Go, preach to all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem; Luke xxiv. 37. The body of this Univerſal Church conſiſts of all thoſe, whether national, or leſs, that are called particular Churches. Which were either derived from that original Church in that age; ſuch as were, thoſe ſeven Churches of Aſia, that in the houſe of Aquila, &c. and the reſt which are mentioned in Scripture: Or that have been derived from them by any after converſion, in whatſoever country or age.

Theſe particular Churches are many, as the parts of the body are many. And as all thoſe parts together are one body, ſo all theſe particular Churches make up one Univerſal. One, I ſay, in both reſpects, both as being derived from one ſource, that original Church at Jeruſalem: And alſo one, as being united together in thoſe common characters, by which that original Church is deſcribed above, in Acts ii. 42.

Thoſe characters are four, which I come now to conſider particularly; the Apoſtles doctrine, and fellowſhip, and ſacraments, and prayers.

The firſt is the Apoſtles doctrine, the doctrine of faith; and not the inward belief, but the outward profeſſion of it. The inward belief is required to make us true Chriſtians, but the outward profeſſion makes us members of a true Church. And as it can be no true Church that has not a public profeſſion of the Apoſtles doctrine; ſo it can be no ſound Church that embraces any other for the doctrine of faith, than what was received from the Apoſtles.

Now their doctrine, at this time referred to in Acts ii. 42. was no other than what they preached as the faith of Jeſus Chriſt. But conſidering how long ago it was that they preached; how many ages have paſt ſince; and eſpecially what ages they have been; many ages together, of darkneſs and groſs ignorance, as they cannot but know, that are any thing acquainted with hiſtory; V. Card. Baron. Annol. Eccl. Annal. 900, &c. I ſay, after ſo many extreme ignorant ages, it is impoſſible we ſhould have known what was preached by the Apoſtles, unleſs it had been alſo delivered in writing, and unleſs thoſe writings had been brought down to our own hands. And, bleſſed be God! there was ſuch a delivery, in the Books of the New Teſtament. In which Books, the Apoſtles bearing witneſs, as they do, to the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, that they were written by Divine Inſpiration; 2 Tim. iii. 16. and that they are able to make us wiſe to ſalvation through faith in Jeſus Chriſt; 2 Pet. i. 21. 2 Tim. iii. 15. and delivering the faith in Jeſus Chriſt, as they do, in their own writings, to the end that all men may believe on him to eternal life; John xxx. 31. Therefore in theſe Books of the Old and New Teſtament together, we have a ſtandard of the Apoſtles doctrine, and we have not the like for any other than what is written in theſe books.

Here is all that we can ſurely call the doctrine of the Apoſtles, unleſs we know more than the fathers of the primitive Church. They, through whoſe hands this doctrine muſt paſs, before it could come into ours, knew nothing but what they had in the Scriptures. This was conſtantly their "ſtandard and rule of all things, in the words of Chryſoſtom. Who ſays again, All things that are neceſſary, are plain and maniſeſt in the Scriptures; Chryſoſt. in 2 Cor. Hom. 13. Edit. Savil. Tom. iii. p. 624. 43. Idem in 2 Theſſ. Hom. 3. ib. Tom. iv. p. 234, 19. So Auſtin ſays, All things that belong to faith or life are to be found in plain places of Scripture. Baſil ſaith, Believe thoſe things that are written, inquire not into things that are not written." Jerom, Non credimus quia non legimus; "we believe no more than we read." In like manner ſay many other of the fathers.

And though they did ſometimes quote the Apoſtles traditions, for ritual things; yet in matters of faith, if they prove any thing from tradition, it is either the written tradition of Scripture; or if unwritten, 'tis no other than the Creed (as it were eaſy to ſhew in many inſtances. And withal, they believed there was nothing in the Creed but what they could prove from the Scriptures; and they did prove it from the Scriptures upon occaſion in every particular; as it is plain from Cyprian. Teſtim ad Quirinum. lib. 1. & 2. proving all things of faith and life from the Scripture. Conſtantin. M. apud Theodorit. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 1. c. 7. Edit. Valeſ. p. 25. D. "offers the Scriptures for deciding all controverſies touching the faith. So Athanaſius and others prove every diſputed article. And when the Heretics produced tradition on their ſide, the fathers held them to the Scriptures.

So that in their judgment, it is not only a ſufficient, but the only meaſure of the doctrine of the Apoſtles. And by this we may judge (as to matter of doctrine) who are, and who are not members of the Apoſtolical Church.

The next character is this, that they continued in the Apoſtles Κοινωνία or fellowſhip; a word that has diverſe ſenſes in Scripture. In this place it ſeems to be the ſame as ſociety. They were in the Apoſtles ſociety or communion.

Now to continue in their ſociety (conſidering what they were, men deputed by Chriſt for the government of his Church;) it could be no other than to continue as members of that body which Chriſt put under his government.

But how can any be ſo now? they being dead ſo many ages ſince, and their government ſo long ſince expired with them. No, their government is not expired, though they are. For it was to continue till the end of the world; Matt. xxviii. 20. So that according to the common ſaying among the Jews, Whoſoever one ſends being as himſelf: So our Saviour having ſent the Apoſtles, ſaith, Whoſoever receives you, receives me; Matt. x. 40. In like manner, whoſoever were ſent by the Apoſtles, were as themſelves; and whoſoever continued in their fellowſhip, were in the fellowſhip of the Apoſtles.

Now their government is declared to have been 'Επισκοπὴ, their Biſhopric; Acts i. 20. And in this office they were equal among themſelves; as our Saviour deſcribes them, ſitting on twelve thrones, and judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael; Matt. xix. 28. Luke xxii. 30.

It is obſervable that this was after his promiſe to Peter, Matt. xvi. 16, &c. Which promiſe I conſider, by the way, becauſe 'tis ſo much preſſed by the Romaniſts, to prove a power, which Chriſt had given Peter over the reſt of the Apoſtles. If Chriſt had truly given it, we muſt then have conſidered, whether Peter left any ſucceſſors in that power? And if ſo, why not John the Apoſtle by ſurvivance? why not the Biſhop of the undoubted Mother-Church at Jeruſalem? Why not the Biſhop of ſome other city, where the Scripture has aſſured us that Peter preacht? rather than of Rome, where if he did preach, we have not a word of it in Scripture. Theſe and ſundry more ſuch queſtions would have riſen up that hypotheſis, of ſuch a power given to Peter. But it is out of queſtion that the Apoſtles never ſo underſtood thoſe words of Chriſt. They knew of no power that was promiſed to Peter more than to themſelves in that text. For after this, they were at ſtriſe among themſelves who ſhould be chief; ſee Matt. xviii. 1. xx. 24. After this, they diſputed it again and again; Luke xxii. 24. and Chriſt chid them every time, but never told them, I have promiſed it to Peter. Nay, it appears that Chriſt did not intend it, by his open declarations to the contrary; that it ſhould not be among them, as in ſecular kingdoms and monarchies; Matt. xx. 26. and xxiii. 8, 9, 10. Luke xxii. 26. It appears more plainly in the fulfilling of his promiſe. For he both ordained the reſt with Peter, without any difference; John xx. 21, 22, 23. and when they altogether had received the Holy Ghoſt, in this chapter, Peter ſtood up with the eleven, ver. 14. And upon him and them Chriſt built his Church; even all theſe who continued, not only in his, but in the fellowſhip of all the Apoſtles.

Now if all the Apoſtles were equal in their 'Επισκοπή or government, then it is certain that their ſucceſſors muſt be ſo in like manner. Though one muſt have precedence before other, for order's ſake; as Peter had uſually, tho' not always among the Apoſtles, when they were together; Acts xv. Gal. ii. 9. And though one may be above others, in the ſame national Church, as all Primates are, by human laws; yet none, by the law of God, had authority over others; I ſay none, among their ſucceſſors, any more than among the Apoſtles themſelves. So Cyprian declares oftentimes in his writings; de Unit Eccl. c. 3. Not to mention the like, as I might, from many other of the fathers.

Now the Biſhops in after-times, in their ſeveral Churches, were undoubtedly held to be the ſucceſſors of Apoſtles. We have as great a conſent among the antients for this, as we have for the obſervation of the Lord's Day. And it is evident from the primitive writers, that they look'd upon communion with their Biſhops as communion with the very Apoſtles. They held it the duty of every Chriſtian, to obey them in ſpiritual things; they held it the duty of every Biſhop, to govern and feed his own flock; to attend to that only, and not to uſurp upon his brethren; but all, as occaſion ſerved, to do all good offices one for another, and to join their endeavours for the common concernments of the Church. And for them ſo to govern the Church, and for the people to live under their government, in ſpiritual things; this was to live in the fellowſhip of the Apoſtles.

The third character of an Apoſtolical Catholic Church, is the participation of the ſame ſacraments. One only is mentioned in Acts xi. 42. that is, the ſacrament of the Lord's Supper. For being already baptized, they had no more occaſion for baptiſm; but that being ſpoken of before, ver. 41. I therefore mention both theſe ſacraments.

The uſe of both theſe, in the Apoſtles times, was a character and token of the Chriſtian Church. Thus Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 13. mentions both theſe ſacraments, as the inſtruments and means by which we are united to Chriſt. By one ſpirit we are all baptized into one body, and we have all been made to drink into one ſpirit.

Both theſe ſacraments they received of Chriſt's own inſtitution, who required them to be uſed in all ages of the Church; to be adminiſtred to all its members by every Church. And that in the ſame manner as they were inſtituted by Chriſt; I mean as to all the eſſential parts of the ſacraments. However ceremonies or rites may be varied; yet in their eſſential parts they are of perpetual obligation.

For baptiſm, when it was inſtituted by our Saviour for the admiſſion of members into his Church; he ſaid thus to his Apoſtles, Go, make diſciples, (that is, Chriſtians) of all nations, baptizing them, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, Matt. xxviii. 19. And thus doing, lo I am with you till the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20.

And for the Lord's Supper, he adminiſtred it himſelf to his diſciples, (who were then not in orders, for it was before his death; and he did not ordain them till after his reſurrection.) And adminiſtring the ſacrament to them, who were not in orders, he took bread, and bleſſed it, and brake it, and gave it to them, ſaying, take, eat, this is my body, Matt. xxvi. 26. Mark xiv. 22. Luke xxii. 19. 1 Cor. xi. 24. and what follows. He gave them the cup in like manner, ſaying, drink ye all of it. This is my blood, or this cup is the New Teſtament in my blood, Matt. xxvi. 28. Mark xiv. 24. Luke xxii. 20. 1 Cor. xi. 25.

Accordingly it was done in the Church in the Apoſtles times. The Apoſtle calls it the bread and the cup which they received in the ſacrament, never otherwiſe; though ſpiritually and ſacramentally the body and blood of Chriſt, yet bread and wine in its natural and bodily ſubſtance. He ſays, the cup which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? And the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? 1 Cor. x. 16. No doubt we have the mind of Chriſt in theſe words. It is properly the communion of his body and blood, which we receive in this ſacrament. And according to his law they are conveyed to us, under the elements of bread and wine. For ſo the Apoſtle tells us, that, even after conſecration, it is bread which we break; it is bread which we partake; it is bread that we eat in this ſacrament. Which laſt thing he ſays three times together, in three verſes. In like manner it was properly wine which remained in the cup, even after conſecration, 1 Cor. x. 1, 6, 17. and xi. 26, 27, 28. So it was called by our Saviour, the fruit of the vine, and this fruit; even the ſame of which he had ſaid, this is my blood, Matt. xxvi. 29. Mark xiv. 25. And, as he ſaid to his Apoſtles, being laymen, drink ye all of it, and as Mark obſerves, xiv. 23. they all drank of it, ſo did all others in thoſe times, as well laity as clergy, 1 Cor. xii. 13. we are all made to drink into one ſpirit.

It is obſervable, the whole ſacrament there is called drinking, as here the whole ſacrament is called breaking of bread.

And the ſacrament being thus inſtituted by Chriſt, being thus adminiſtred by his Apoſtles, and being thus received in his Church, was to continue till Chriſt's coming again. So the Apoſtle ſaith expreſly, 1 Cor. xi. 26. So that here's a third character of an Apoſtolic Church; to continue the uſe of thoſe ſacraments which they uſed, and that in all the eſſentials of them, according to Chriſt's own inſtitution.

A fourth character is prayer, προσευχαῖς, in the plural number; that is, not one or two, but many, and oft. And it appears they were publick prayers, by what follows, ver. 46. They continued daily with one accord in the temple. There the Apoſtles uſed to meet after Chriſt's aſcenſion into Heaven. They were continually in the temple praiſing and bleſſing God, Luke xxiv. 53. They were conſtantly there in the times of devotion, as may appear from Acts iii. 1. and other places. They continued this practice as long as the Jews would ſuffer them; till they drove them away from their temple and ſynagogues. After which, theſe firſt Chriſtians had aſſemblies elſewhere, as we read, Acts xviii. 17. and in this chapter to the Romans.

In which aſſemblies, what they prayed, and what they did beſides praying, we have no particular account in Holy Scripture. But we have in thoſe writers that lived within the age of the Apoſtles. That is, in an Epiſtle of the younger Pliny to Trajan, and in Juſtin Martyr's Second Apology.

There we find in Pliny, that they did carmen Chriſto quaſi Deo dicere ſecum in vicem, Plin. lib. x. Epiſt. 97. They ſpoke verſes, anſwering one another by turns; as we ſpeak the reading Pſalms, I know not how he could better expreſs it.

And, ſaith Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 11. p. 98. they read leſſons out of the Apoſtles, and out of the Prophets; and when the reader had done the Biſhop preached, ὁ Προεστὼς, either the Biſhop, or the chief miniſter.

Then they roſe up all together, and prayed. They had, ſaith Juſtin Martyr, Κοινὰς ἐυχάς, common prayers. (Thoſe are his words.) In which they prayed for themſelves, and for their princes, and for all others that were living with them. They prayed only to God, ſaith Juſtin Martyr twice, ibid.

This, together with the adminiſtration of the ſacraments, and their gatherings for the poor, is all the account they give us of their meetings. Which account being given much within fifty years of the Apoſtles times, we may reaſonably conclude it was the manner of their prayers, the uſe whereof was the fourth character in our deſcription of the Apoſtolick Church; and ſhould be a ſtandard, for us Chriſtians, in our worſhip of God.

Ver. 7. —— Of note among the Apoſtles.] i. e. Men of high eſteem among them. Men eminent, not only among the teachers, but Apoſtles of the Churches. For they who were co-workers with the Apoſtles in planting Churches are ſtiled, Apoſtles of the Churches, 2 Cor. viii. 23. Phil. ii. 25. In which ſenſe, Philip the Deacon was called an Apoſtle by the ancients. So,

Let it be obſerved, that the word Apoſtle may be taken in three different ſenſes; 1. For one ſent immediately by Chriſt himſelf; as were the firſt Apoſtles, and Paul and Barnabas. 2. For one that does the work of an Apoſtle, though not ſo particularly ſent as the former. Thus the firſt preachers of Chriſtianity, Philip, Mark, Epaphroditus, and others in the Apoſtolic age, were called alſo Apoſtles for their works ſake, having converted many to the faith. 3. For one, who though not the firſt preacher of Chriſtianity in that province, has converted many to the Goſpel of grace; thus the miſſionaries in the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies, may be ſtiled Apoſtles in thoſe days, where they reap a plentiful harveſt to Chriſt.

——— In Chriſt before me.] Had embraced the faith of Chriſt, before I was called; ſee Gal. ii. 22.

Ver. 9. —— Our helper in Chriſt.] i. e. In the Goſpel or doctrine of Chriſt.

Ver. 10 —— Approved in Chriſt.] By many perſecutions for his ſake, and the Goſpel's.

Now from the whole of this Epiſtle it may be obſerved how ſoon diviſions and animoſities diſturbed the Church of Chriſt, how ſoon that Prophecy of Chriſt was fulfilled, that offences would neceſſarily ariſe in his Church, and from the labour of the Apoſtle to certify the truth, and moderate indifferent things, and eſpecially leaſt we incur the diſpleaſure of our Lord and Saviour, who has pronounced woe on all thoſe, by whom ſuch offences come; that it ſhould be our higheſt care to mark thoſe that would ſeduce us, and avoid their ſnares.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS,
ON THE
Firſt Epiſtle of PAUL the APOSTLE,
TO THE CORINTHIANS.

The INTRODUCTION.

Corinth was a celebrated city, and the capital of Achaia, ſeated on the Iſthmus; which ſeparates the Peloponneſus from Attica. Paul came to preach in this city in the year of Chriſt, An. 52.

This city was one of the laſt peopled, and the wealthieſt in all Greece. Its ſituation between two ſeas drew thither the trade of both the eaſt and weſtern parts of the world. Its riches produced pride, oſtentation, effeminacy, and all manner of vices, in its inhabitants, as the general conſequences of too much plenty. Laſciviouſneſs was not only tolerated, but in ſome ſort conſecrated there, by the worſhip of Venus, and the publick proſtitution of thoſe who were devoted to her. The Corinthians nevertheleſs, as well as all other Greeks, pretended to philoſophy, politeneſs and learning. Such was the condition of Corinth, when Paul arrived there with the Goſpel of Chriſt; and theſe were the monſters he was there to encounter.

He lodged there with Aquila and his wife Priſcilla, who, as well as he, made tents. For he got a livelihood by the labour of his own hands, to prevent his being burdenſome to any. He preached every Saturday there in the Jewiſh ſynagogues, and made ſome converts in that way; and from hence he writ his two Epiſtles to the Theſſalonians in the ſaid year 52. But ſometime after obſerving, that the Jews of this city Corinth, inſtead of being benefited by his inſtructions, oppoſed him with very blaſphemous words, he ſhook his raiment, and ſaid, Your blood be upon your own heads, I am clean: From henceforth I will go to the Gentiles, Acts xviii. 6, 7, 8. He went therefore, and lodged with Juſtus ſirnamed Titus, who was a Gentile indeed, but one who feared God; and many of the Gentiles afterwards embraced the faith.

Paul ſuffered a great deal at Corinth, but Jeſus Chriſt appeared one night to him, and ſaid, Be not afraid, for I have much people in this city. So that, taking freſh courage at theſe words, he continued eighteen months at Corinth, or in the neighbouring places; ſee Acts xviii. and our general Introduction to the Epiſtles.

He departed from thence in the fifty-fourth year of Jeſus Chriſt and went to Jeruſalem, leaving Apollos, a Jewiſh convert, to take care of the Corinthian Church; ſee Acts xviii. and Rom. xvi. 3. And from hence he went to Epheſus (ſee the general Introduction to the Epiſtles); where continuing ſome conſiderable time, he took up ſome reſolutions to go into Macedonia and Achaia, and to winter at Corinth, and ſo paſs again to Jeruſalem, where he intended to keep the feaſt of Pentecoſt, 1 Cor. xvi. 5, 6. After theſe viſits he deſigned to go to Rome, and ſee the Church there, which he had deſired many years, ch. iv. 17. and beg of God to direct his way to them, ch. xvi. 11. But his journey being delayed for ſome time, he ſent Timotheus and Eraſtus into Macedonia, giving Timothy order to viſit Corinth before his return, and prepare their alms for the poor Chriſtians in Jeruſalem. Not long after Timothy's departure came Apollos, Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, to Paul from Corinth, bringing him an account of the ſtate of that Church from ſome perſons of the family of Chloe; and a letter from the Church itſelf deſiring from him the reſolution of ſeveral points about marriage and chaſtity, and many other ſubjects. From the family of Chloe, he underſtood the diſtracted and bad condition of that Church, that they were crumbled into many parties and factions upon the account of their teachers, ſome adhering to Paul, others to Cephas or Peter (who, as Clemens ſays in his Epiſtle, was at Corinth when Apollos was there,) and others of Apollos, and others of Chriſt; and ſeparating from and contemning each other, as not ſo well or edifyingly taught; that many diſorders were committed at their love-feaſts, and the Holy Sacrament corruptly and irreverently celebrated; that the Chriſtians wronged and defrauded one another, and went to law at the Heathen tribunals, and that a Chriſtian of their city had married his mother-in-law, and that ſome denied the reſurrection.

In anſwer to both theſe, Paul compoſed this his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, and beginning with their ſelf-conceitedneſs, in the four firſt chapters, the Apoſtle reproves them for their diviſions and factions, ſiding with ſome teachers more than others, and exhorts to unity and peace, and a due ſubjection to him, as an Apoſtle of Chriſt; altho' his preaching had not been with their admired eloquence, and the wiſdom of this world; but far above it, in demonſtration of the Spirit and of power, and a diſcovery of the trueſt wiſdom, viz. that of God, and ſuch as the Spirit of God had revealed, and confirmed by miracles. For his part, he had laid the only ſure foundation, that is, faith in Jeſus Chriſt the true Meſſiah; and if any man builded on that foundation, gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, chap. iii. viz. ſound doctrine, that would abide the trial, (as gold and ſilver abides the fire) he ſhould receive a reward; but whoſoever builded wood, hay, or ſtubble, thoſe doctrines that would not abide the trial, but proved like wood and ſtubble, which the fire conſumes; viz. ſuch as conſiſted of curious queſtions and diſputings, (chap. i. 20.) Judaical obſervances and traditions taught by the ſcribes, (chap. i. 20.) or ſuch like, this labour ſhould be loſt, as ſtubble in the fire; yet ſuch a teacher, if he did it through ignorance of the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, and meant well and ſincerely, might be ſaved, though with difficulty, as a brand plucked out of the fire: For the Apoſtle aſſured them, the day would come, (whether that of Chriſt's coming to take vengeance on the Jews in the deſtruction of their city, temple, and nation, or the laſt day of judgment) when all doctrines and works ſhould be tried, (as metals or ſtubble are by the fire:) Upon which he exhorts them all, both Jews and Greeks, who were called or converted, that they would not ſet up their own vain philoſophy, or wiſdom of this world, or any legal rites or Jewiſh traditions, above the plain truths of the Goſpel, and that only ſolid wiſdom of God preached by him; which ſome indeed called fooliſhneſs, but it ſhould confound the wiſe among them. To this purpoſe he writes the four firſt chapters, concluding this part of his diſcourſe with aſſuring them of his faithfulneſs in preaching the Goſpel unto them, however diſcouraged by their behaviour; not without a mixture of threatning, to uſe the power of diſcipline Chriſt had intruſted him with, for the manifeſting his own commiſſion, and reforming the pride, and faction, and other irregularities of ſome among them.

In the next place, (chap. v, vi.) he writes concerning an inceſtuous perſon, whom he ſubjected to the diſcipline of the Church, commanding him to be delivered unto Satan, in order to his repentance, (for by ſuch delivering up, the Devil had power to inflict bodily puniſhment by ſome diſeaſe, &c. on the offender, which the Apoſtle calls, a rod, chap. iv. 21.) He alſo reproves them for vexatious law-ſuits, and appealing to Heathen tribunals to the ſcandal of Chriſtianity, and reflection upon its profeſſors, telling them the Saints ſhall judge the world and Angels, therefore ſmall controverſies ſhould be left to their deciſions among themſelves; whether the Apoſtle meant by the Saints judging the world and Angels, the eſtabliſhment of a Chriſtian magiſtracy, and a power over ſpirits; or, that they ſhould be aſſeſſors with Chriſt at the Day of Judgment, is not evident. The Apoſtle proceeds to caution them, as againſt other vices, ſo particularly againſt fornication, which of all other Gentiles, the Corinthians were moſt noted for.

Afterwards, (chap. vii, viii.) the Apoſtle anſwers ſome queſtions they had propoſed to him. 1ſt, Concerning virginity and marriage: Thoſe, who having the gift of continency, abſtain from marriage, ver. 1, &c. are thereby freed from worldly incumbrances, or live without carefulneſs, and are more at leiſure to care for the things that belong to the Lord, eſpecially in the preſent diſtreſs or ſtreights of the Church. However, marriage being appointed a remedy againſt fornication, thoſe who cannot contain ſhould marry; and the huſband or wife converted ſhould not forſake either though unconverted, becauſe the converſion of one of them renders their children holy, ſanctifies their offspring, that is, entitles them to the Goſpel-covenant; but if the unbelieving depart, let him depart; a Chriſtian huſband or wife is not under bondage in ſuch caſe, (but it may be objected, Chriſt forbids divorce except in caſe of fornication, Matt. v. 32. it is anſwered, St. Paul is ſpeaking of a voluntary departing of the unbeliever, and that moſt likely on the account of the faith, and when it is probable the marriage is diſſolved by the adultery of the unbelieving huſband or wife. In the next place, the Apoſtle declares that their being called, or converted to Chriſtianity, does not make any alteration in mens civil affairs, whether one be a freeman, or a ſlave, or ſervant, chap. vii. 20, &c.

And as to the caſe of thoſe of either ſex, who, according to the common notions of the Jews and others, eſteemed it undecent to paſs the flower of their age unmarried, chap. vii. 36. if need ſo require, as that they cannot eaſily contain, it is beſt that they marry; otherwiſe, if one find himſelf to have a ſtedfaſt purpoſe, and there is no neceſſity, that is, perceives that he can refrain, he or ſhe may better continue as they are. This ſeems to be the ſenſe, not in reſpect to parents diſpoſing of their daughters; if by virgin, ver. 36. we underſtand a perſon's own virginity, and tranſlate, ver. 38. not giveth her in marriage, but marries, as may be according to ſome of the beſt copies in the Greek. And this ſeems the rather to be the ſenſe, becauſe that this decreeing, or reſolution depends upon the ſtedfaſtneſs, or purpoſe of one's own heart, and the power a perſon hath over his own will; which ſhews it to belong rather to the perſon that marries than the parent.

After this, the Apoſtle anſwers another queſtion, chap. viii. concerning the partaking of the feaſts of the idol temples, which he would have them abſtain from. In the ancient ſacrifices, one part was offered on the altar, the other eaten by the offerers: This was eſteemed a federal rite, or a ſign of friendſhip and communion with that God to whom the ſacrifice was offered; ſo that ſuch a religious feaſt was a communion or fellowſhip with the idol, or falſe god. Sometimes a part of the fleſh offered to the idol, was afterwards ſold in the publick market-place: Now, as the Apoſtle argues, the meat is in itſelf indifferent, an idol being nothing, as for any Deity, (only a fiction, no real god) and ſo could not pollute the meat. The Apoſtles indeed decreed, (Acts xv.) that the Gentile converts ſhould abſtain from ſuch meats, eſpecially thoſe who had been proſelytes of the gate, poſſibly by virtue of one of the precepts given to the ſons of Noah, as hath been obſerved before in the Acts. Hereby alſo they would not break the Chriſtian union, by giving offence to the Jewiſh Chriſtians, who made conſcience of eating any ſuch; yet the eating or not eating is not otherwiſe neceſſary in itſelf, or in the ſight of God of any moment; however, ſince many of the newly converted did think otherwiſe, viz. that eating of ſuch meat was an honour and worſhip to the idol, a knowing Chriſtian, though he might be ſatisfied himſelf the meat was harmleſs, yet by going and eating with ſuch became an offence, or ſtumbling-block, or an occaſion of falling, by betraying them into ſin, who (out of an erroneous conſcience) believing ſuch meat to be unclean, were hardened by ſuch an example, in partaking with the ſacrifice offered to idols againſt their conſciences; and therefore, fore, a good Chriſtian is to take care, how he uſes his liberty in things indifferent, where there may be danger of being the occaſion of ſin to another; as the Apoſtle himſelf would rather wholly abſtain from ſuch a diſh, as the fleſh, or meat that had been offered to idols, how indifferent ſoever it was in itſelf, than wound the weak conſcience of any Chriſtian brother.

Furthermore, as the Apoſtle exhorted them to a care of uſing their liberty in things indifferent; ſo he tells them, how himſelf was careful in that matter, chap. ix. becauſe, although the Goſpel allows of a maintenance for the miniſters thereof, which he fully proves; yet he himſelf quitted that privilege whilſt he was amongſt them, as he did in divers other reſpects condeſcend both to the Jews and Gentiles, ver. 19, &c. complying with them, in order to the promoting the Goſpel. Here, upon the occaſion of mentioning his own zeal, he ſtirs them up to imitate him in running the Chriſtian race, taking a compariſon from the Iſthmian games of running and wreſtling much uſed at Corinth.

And to make them the more diligent, and that they might not depend too groundleſly on their Chriſtian privileges, but avoid the dangers by which others miſcarried, and eſpecially by idolatry, which they might ſtill be enſnared in, by going to the idol feaſts of their Gentile neighbours; he lays before them, chap. x. the caſe of the Iſraelites, and ſhews their privileges and advantages, in being all baptized into the covenant of God, in the cloud, and Red-ſea, and made partakers of the manna, and waters of the rock, which he calls ſpiritual, becauſe they were types of Chriſt; and yet many of them, as they themſelves might do, miſcarried by reaſon of divers impieties, which therefore he exhorts them to flee from, particularly idolatry, fornication, murmuring, &c. and if they were not wanting to themſelves, God would protect them, and not ſuffer them to be tempted above their ability. Upon this occaſion, he inſtructs them again, as he had done before, chap. viii. in their behaviour concerning things offered to idols, ver. 15, &c. and ſhews, that although idol gods were nothing, as to what the Gentiles believed of them; yet ſince under the names uſually given them, as Jupiter, Apollo, Mercury, and ſuch like) the Devil deluded mankind, and acted in and by the images, Deut. xxxii. 17. therefore, as they who offered the ſacrifice did ſacrifice to Devils, ſo the going to their idol temples, and knowingly eating of meats offered to idols, as ſuch, was a communion with the Devil, as it were feaſting with him upon what had been offered to him, as hath been ſaid, and utterly inconſiſtent with our communion with Chriſt in the Holy Sacrament: And although the meats offered to idols were indifferent in themſelves, and therefore lawful when not eaten as ſuch, in honour of, and by way of partaking with the idol; yet they ſhould be careful to give none offence by eating them, when they were told or knew them to be ſuch, neither to the unbelieving Jews, who would thence conclude them enemies to the law and prophets, and imagine that Chriſtians were allowed to honour and worſhip idols, nor to the idolatrous Gentiles, who might thence ſuſpect their abhorrence of idols was not real, nor to the weaker members of the Church of Chriſt, leſt they might be tempted by their example to eat thoſe things, which themſelves judged unclean againſt their conſciences: The earth is the Lord's, and therefore it both follows, that he can provide ſuſtenance ſome other way, and alſo that whatever we eat or drink, or do, it ſhould be all to his glory.

Afterwards, chap. xi. the Apoſtle treats of the decency and order of their publick aſſemblies, that whereas the man is the head of the woman, as Chriſt is of the man, they ſhould not confound the ſex; but that the man ſhould be uncovered in token of ſuperiority, and the woman covered, or veiled, in token of ſubjection; which decent behaviour ought to be ſhewn, becauſe of the Angels, who are eſteemed to be preſent in the aſſemblies of the ſaints: And for the ſame reaſon of decency, and a preſerving of the diſtinction of ſexes according to nature, the man ſhould not wear his hair long, after the manner of women, or which becomes a woman, whoſe hair growing long, is given her for a natural veil, or covering.

(Here it is not ſo much to be enquired, what may be natural or cuſtomary in ſome countries; as for men either to have or wear long hair; but the Apoſtle's argument ſeems to be taken from the particular notion of the Corinthians, ver. 14. 15. That for a man to wear his hair long, it is a ſhame unto him; but that for a woman to have long hair, it is a glory to her.)

The Apoſtle alſo directs a ſuitable behaviour in feaſts of charity, and the Lord's Supper, which they celebrated unworthily, by reaſon of the diviſions and factions among them, and the diſorders in not ſtaying for one another, and alſo intemperance, not diſcerning the Lord's Body, not diſtinguiſhing this ſupper from other meals, nor behaving themſelves ſuitably to the end of its inſtitution, by a ſolemn commemoration of Chriſt's death. This is the ſubſtance of what is ſaid to the end of the eleventh chapter.

In the next place, chap. xii. the Apoſtle diſcourſeth concerning ſpiritual perſons, and their ſpiritual gifts, ſuch as peculiar wiſdom and knowledge in matters of religion; the gifts of healing, and of languages, and propheſying, &c. of theſe he declares that every one had his proportion, according to the will of God, and they ſhould not look on each other as ſingle by himſelf, but one aſſiſt the other, and all join for the publick good of the Church, as members of the ſame body, each ſupporting and helping another; otherwiſe, without this unity, and alſo love and charity, which Paul hence takes an occaſion to deſcribe, particularly, chap. xiii. the beſt gifts are not valuable. The Apoſtle adds a ſolemn charge againſt uſing the gift of tongues without interpreting, chap. xiv. and that women keep ſilence in the Churches, ſo as not to perform any miniſterial office in the Chriſtian aſſemblies, as a ſign of their being under obedience or ſubjection to their huſbands, ver. 34, &c. Thus much from the beginning of the twelfth, to the end of the fourteenth chapter.

And becauſe ſome among them had learned from their philoſophers, to deny the reſurrection of the dead, (ch. xv. 12.) therefore the Apoſtle fully aſſerts and proves that doctrine, ch. xv. ſhewing, that we ſhall ariſe by virtue of Chriſt's reſurrection, which is a pledge of the general reſurrection of all mankind, ver. 13, &c. and whereby Chriſt having ſubdued all the enemies of his Church, the laſt of which is death, he himſelf ſhall deliver up, and reſign his kingdom, or kingly power and office, as Mediator, to the Father; there being then no farther occaſion for ſuch a power or office: And then God (Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt) ſhall be all in all, govern all things immediately without a Mediator for the future, ver. 24, &c. Farther, if there be no reſurrection, what ſhall they do who are baptized for the dead? ver. 29. Of which difficult text there are, among others, the following interpretations, viz. 1ſt, That to be baptized for the dead ſignifies to be baptized in the perſon, or ſtead, of one that died before he was baptized; (but this being the practice of ſome hereticks, its not likely that the Apoſtle would raiſe an argument from thence.) Or, 2dly, Upon confeſſing the article of the reſurrection of the dead, and conſequently in hope of the reſurrection: Which interpretation ſeems moſt probable. And ſo the queſtion is put, Why have they, in their baptiſm, made profeſſion of the reſurrection from the dead? ſee ver. 14, 17. The Apoſtle ſays, indeed, that fleſh and blood ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God, ver. 50. but that is meant of fleſh and blood, as it is now unaltered, and ſubject to corruptions; and therefore he adds in the following words, Neither doth corruption inherit incorruption: But the groſs bodies of the ſaints ſhall be altered, as to their quality, at the reſurrection, and changed into ſpiritual bodies, ver. 44. Whereby it is underſtood, that they ſhall be free from their groſs allay, and be refined and made pure and bright, like ſpirits, be raiſed in glory, fitted for the enjoyment of ſpiritual and heavenly pleaſures; and alſo have no need of ſleep or nouriſhment, like unto a natural body, nor be ſubject any more to ſickneſs, death, or corruption; for this corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal muſt put on immortality, ver. 53. And as for ſuch who ſhall be living when the day of judgment comes, or found alive at the laſt trump, they ſhall not ſleep, or die, that is, after the uſual diſſolution of nature, ver. 51. but ſhall be changed in a moment, or put into the ſame ſtate with ſuch, who were dead, and are riſen again.

Afterwards, ch. xvi. he puts them in mind of providing before-hand a relief to be ſent to their Chriſtian brethren at Jeruſalem; and to that purpoſe, that every one ſhould lay by him in ſtore, each Lord's day, in ſuch a meaſure as God had bleſſed him the week before.

Laſtly, Having exhorted them to ſtedfaſtneſs and Chriſtian Love, with ſubmiſſion to their ſpiritual teachers, as the beſt way to cure their diſſenſions and diſorders, he concludes.

In the twenty-ſecond verſe of this laſt chapter, the Apoſtle pronounces a direful judgment againſt one who loves not the Lord Jeſus, let him be anathema maranatha; concerning which words ſee the note on the place.

Now beſides what has been ſaid, it will be neceſſary to add ſome remarks on particular paſſages which occur in many parts of this Epiſtle, by which means the reader may be the better enabled to proceed in his reading with pleaſure and profit; becauſe thereby we ſhall endeavour to obviate all cavils, and illuſtrate many apparent difficulties. As for example,

I. We read in the third chapter of a purification by fire: Which, ſays the Papiſt, is a proof of the fire of Purgatory. Therefore, let it be obſerved, that this can't by any means be wreſted with any ſhew of truth to ſerve ſuch a bad cauſe, it is not proper material fire, but only figuratively ſo called, as the fifteenth verſe of the ſame chapter explains, where it is ſaid, He ſhall be ſaved ſo, as by fire. Moreover, this fire was to try not every man, but only the works of every man. Of which I have ſpoken ſomewhat before. Beſides, the Scripture intimates no more than two ſtates after this life in Heaven or Hell; and two expectances of ſalvation or damnation; and divides all people into two ranks, ſheep and goats; neither can a third place or middle ſtate of ſouls be any ways ſhewn deſcribed; ſee the Diſſertation on Purgatory, at the place laſt cited.

II. It is of great concern that every member of Chriſt's Church do his duty in preſerving peace and unity among Chriſtians; for the Apoſtle writes earneſtly to the Corinthians, as he does alſo to the Romans, on that ſubject; ſee ch. i. 10, 11, 12, 13. and iii. 3, 4, &c. and xii. 12, 13, 25. and repreſent thoſe that cauſe diviſions as mere carnal perſons, and their behaviour as contrary to the Chriſtian Doctrine, as it would be unnatural to tear off a limb or member, from the reſt of one and the ſame body.

III. Note, that although the Apoſtle wrought with his own hands at Corinth; yet he declared it to be the ordinance of the Lord, that the miniſters ſhould be maintain'd by thoſe to whom they miniſter ſpiritual things (either by publick prayer, and praiſes, preaching or adminiſtring of ſacraments) ch. ix. 7. to 15. See alſo 2 Theſſ. iii. 8, 9. The Prophet Micah, iii. 11. complained, that the prieſts taught for hire; but that was not becauſe they had a maintenance, for God allotted the ſame, and a very large one too: For firſt, they had the tenth part, which from the beginning God had reſerved to himſelf; Levit. xxvii. 30. and then ſettled it on the Levites; Numb. xviii. 20, 21. Then another tythe of the nine parts remaining, was to be ſpent at the tabernacle, of which the Levites had their ſhare; Deut. xii. 17, 18. to which if we add the firſt-born, with other offerings, the cities and ſuburbs appropriated to the Levites, it hath been computed, that a fifth part of the land belonged to them; and the Prophet reproved the people for with-holding any part of theſe tythes and offerings, becauſe thereby they robbed, not ſo much man, as God himſelf; Mal. iii. 8. But the Prieſts were reproved, becauſe for hire they dared to teach, not what God appointed them, but what beſt pleaſed the people, and for money ſoothed them in their ſins; ſee Mic. ii. 11. and iii. 5. So the hireling in John x. 12. is not he who receives money, maintenance or hire, of which, Chriſt ſaith, the labourer is worthy; Luke x. 7. but it is he who intrudes, whoſe own the ſheep are not; ver. 12. and deſigns not their good, careth not for the ſheep, but in danger fleeth, and leaveth them to themſelves; ver. 13.

4thly. Tho' the Apoſtle declares againſt the Philoſophy, or wiſdom of this world and the excellency of ſpeech, or eloquence, in the beginning of this Epiſtle; doth not thereby diſparage ſound philoſophy, human learning and wiſdom properly ſo call'd, or the gift of perſwaſive ſpeaking, but ſuch vain philoſophy, wiſdom, and eloquence of the Corinthians as rendered them proud and conceited, and made them eſteem the preaching of Chriſt fooliſhneſs; chap. i. 18---24. and oppoſe the Wiſdom of God, and the myſteries of the Goſpel; as if it were beneath their deep knowledge and lofty eloquence, to vouchſafe attention to the Apoſtle, when he preached Chriſt crucified, in weakneſs and fear and much trembling; chap. ii. 2, 3. But when on the other hand, human learning, true philoſophy and knowledge, and fluency of ſpeech are made to be ſubſervient to the glory of God, the author of every good and perfect gift, and the demonſtration of the Goſpel, by promoting the great end and deſign thereof, to the honour of God and the good of ſouls; ſuch wiſdom and learning Paul is ſo far from diſparaging, that he thanked God, chap. i. 4, 5. that they were enriched in all utterance, and in all knowledge; and he himſelf, as other inſpired writers of the Scriptures, very often illuſtrates Divine ſubjects by the ornaments of eloquence and figures of ſpeech to make the greater impreſſion on our minds. It is true, indeed, that we ought to attend more to the truth of them, than to the ornamental expreſſion; yet we here learn, that this laſt is often very uſeful to make the former the more agreeable and acceptable: and further, as for the ſtudy of philoſophy, and a skill in nature, it is apt to beget in men the higher veneration for the God of nature. Some, indeed, who had but a ſlight ſuperficial knowledge, and looked only on ſecond cauſes, withal having proud minds and vicious inclinations, have become obnoxious to Atheiſtical thoughts, and have fancied they could give an account of things, without having recourſe to a creation or providence; but the more deeply men penetrate into the nature of things, they will be the more apt to acknowledge their own ignorance, and the Divine Wiſdom, Power, and Goodneſs; and conſequently become the more expoſed to a regularity in their minds and converſations, and be the more virtuous and religious. The ſame may be ſaid of the philoſophy and vain deceit this Apoſtle cautions the Coloſſians to beware of; Col. ii. 8. See more of this in the third obſervation hereafter, on the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians.

V. The worſhipping of images, or idols, is a very Heatheniſh cuſtom and ſin; therefore, the Apoſtle puts the Corinthians, who had embraced Chriſtianity, in mind, that before their converſion they were carried away to dumb idols, chap. xii. 2. The Papiſts pretend, that as their images are the images of Chriſt and ſome ſaints, not the idols of the Gentiles, ſo in their intentions the worſhip, which for inſtance, is paid to the image of Chriſt, is referred to Chriſt himſelf, whom the image repreſented: But then in the firſt place, whatever worſhip they give to Chriſt, they give it firſt to the image. 2dly, This was the pretence of the Pagan idolaters, who did not make the image the laſt object, but fancied that their gods reſided in the conſecrated images; as our primitive reformers ſet forth in their third homily of the Church of England againſt the peril of idolatry. 3dly, They ought not religiouſly to worſhip an image at all; for God hath made all religious worſhip peculiar to himſelf; and therefore, he only is the object of religious worſhip, Matt. iv. 10. Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. The repreſenting God by an image is a debaſement of him, who is a jealous God, as if he were a corporeal being, or a creature like our ſelves; when therefore, God hath determined the way of his worſhip, not to be by an image, his law is to be the rule of worſhip, and not our invention, eſpecially when the outward act is expreſly contrary to his law.

VI. Let it alſo be carefully remarked, that it is contrary to the Apoſtle's directions for the publick worſhip and ſervice, to uſe a language, which is not underſtood by the people, ſince they cannot ſay, Amen, to what they do not underſtand, ch. xiv. 14---17. This uſage is alſo contrary to the cuſtom of the ancient Chriſtian Churches, who worſhipped God in their own languages, (ſee Biſhop Jewel's Defence, part v. ch. iii. diviſ. 9. and reply, art. 3. and) as appears by the liturgies we have in languages then generally ſpoken; which were Greek in the eaſtern Churches, and Latin in the weſtern. Amongſt the reſt they of the Church of Rome, had the publick ſervice in the Latin tongue, becauſe it was then their own language, and well underſtood by the people, but by the barbarous nations among them, they loſt their language by degrees, and yet moſt ridiculouſly kept up the Scripture, and the publick ſervice in the Latin tongue, when it was not underſtood, except by the learned only. Which unreaſonable practice is contrary to a decree of one of their Popes and council, twelve hundred years after Chriſt; (ſee the council of Lateran, ch. ix.) and, which is more, to that edification, which the Holy Ghoſt enjoins at ver. 26. and therefore, the Apoſtle gives this reaſon againſt it, at ver. 17. the other is not edified. It is therefore in vain to pretend, as the Papiſts do, that it is ſufficient to be preſent at the ceremony, or to her maſs, if one does not know what is done, and in his heart contemplate the Divine myſteries, and thereby raiſes his affections of love, hope, ſorrow for ſin, whereby he may be a partaker of the prayers of the prieſt, and of the ſacrifice, which, they ſay, he is then offering, altho' he underſtood not the words ſpoken (as it was among the Jews, while the prieſt was offering in the temple, the people were praying without, Luke i. 10. and could not hear what the prieſt ſaid) as if Paul's diſcourſe about edification and the Church-ſervice in a known tongue, and the conſtant practice of the primitive Church, had ſignified nothing; and as if it had been no part of the publick devotion, to join in the publick prayers; or laſtly, that a man may as eaſily raiſe his affections by words, which he cannot underſtand, as by thoſe he doth. As for the Jews, what the prieſt did in the temple at the offering incenſe, was peculiar to him as a prieſt, in which the people were not to bear a part with him; and it does not appear that he then uſed any prayers at all: But there are prayers in the maſs which the people are concerned in; and whatever devout thoughts they may have otherwiſe, they cannot join with the prieſt in offering up the ſame petitions to God.

VII. The Apoſtle has explained the words of Chriſt concerning the bread in the Sacrament, This is my body; namely, that we are not to underſtand it, as if the ſubſtance of the bread was by tranſubſtantiation changed into the real groſs ſubſtantial body of Chriſt, as the Papiſts pretend; for, he calls it bread after conſecration, ch. x. 16, 17. The bread which we brake; and we are all partakers of that one bread. Again, ch. xi. 26. As often as we eat this bread, which we cannot do till after conſecration; but that ſuch bread, duly bleſſed, broken, and received, is the communion (or communication) of the body of Chriſt; ch. x. 16, 17. a making the faithful joint-partakers of thee, (of the benefits of Chriſt's body) being crucified on the croſs, and his blood ſhed for our redemption. So that the bread is Chriſt's body only in a myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe; that is, the ſacrament of his body, as repreſenting his crucified body, and conveying the benefits thereof to our ſouls. When Chriſt ſpake theſe words to his diſciples, Take, eat, this is my body, they ſaw him alive before them, and therefore could not conceive, that he meant his natural body to be both whole and living before their eyes, and yet broken and crucified, or given for them at the ſame time; but they muſt know it was a ſacramental phraſe, like that of the Paſſover Lamb, which was a type of Chriſt, Exod. xii. 11. Ye ſhall eat it in haſte; it is (that is to ſay, it repreſents) the Lord's Paſſover. So we hence infer, VIII. That to worſhip the hoſt, or conſecrated wafer in the ſacrament, is to worſhip a creature, which is to commit idolatry; for although it ſhould be granted that by conſecration it is ſanctified to a ſpiritual and more exalted uſe, than it was before, yet the ſubſtance of it ſtill remains; accordingly the ancient Chriſtians, as they expreſſed a great reverence for this ſacrament, and apprehended it to be an unſearchable myſtery, and on all occaſions endeavoured to enflame their own and their brethrens hearts, with the moſt ardent love of God for it, and the devouteſt receiving thereof; and often ſay, the Euchariſt is the fleſh and body of Chriſt, which ſuffered for our ſins; Ignatius in Epiſt. ad ſmyr. ſect. 7. Yet (which is the main point) they plainly diſtinguiſh between the material, bodily and earthly part thereof, and the ſpiritual, or heavenly part. The former, ſay they, we receive with our mouths, and that nouriſhes our bodies; the latter we receive by faith, and that feeds our ſouls. See Forbeſii Inſtruct. hiſt. Theolog. l. 2. c. 11. 15, 17. Tillotſon's Diſcourſe againſt Tranſubſt. Jewel's Defence of his apol. part 2. ch. xii. diviſ. 1. and Irenæus, l. 4. c. 34. fiere ad finem, with Grabe's notes.

IX. The Apoſtle abſolutely forbids a woman to teach in the congregation, or aſſembly of the faithful, meeting for religious worſhip, that ſhe may not thereby uſurp authority over the man; but commands, That the women keep ſilence in the Churches, for it is not permitted for them to ſpeak; and if they will learn any thing, let them aſk their huſbands at home, for it is a ſhame for a woman to ſpeak in the Church; chap. xiv. 34, 35; ſee alſo 1 Tim. ii. 12. What the Apoſtle ſays of a woman's praying or propheſying, (chap. xi. 5.) cannot mean the performance of any miniſterial office, of praying or teaching in the congregation, or during the time of publick Divine Service; for that would contradict what he ſays in the ſame Epiſtle, as above-mentioned, but imports only ſome extraordinary ſudden motion or impulſe of the Holy Spirit (as we may conclude from many paſſages of the Apoſtolic writings, was uſual in the firſt times of the Goſpel) and even upon that account they were not permitted to ſpeak in the Churches, or during the time of public Divine Service, though at any other time and place, they might, with their head veiled. Whether propheſying there ſignifies the foretelling of ſomething to come, or to expound Scripture myſteries, or rather, to praiſe God by inſpired hymns, (ſee Mede's diſc. 16.) it is evident thoſe gifts were extraordinary; and conſequently no warrant for ſuch a practice in our days, when there are no ſuch gifts neceſſary, and therefore not beſtowed.

X. As nothing is to be enjoined or obſerved in the worſhip of God, but what in general is agreeable to his Holy Word; ſo, as to the particular circumſtances of public worſhip, viz. the place, time, method, or manner, &c. theſe are left to the conſcience and prudence of the overſeers of the Church, provided always, that what is ordained ſhall, in every particular, be agreeable to the general rules laid down here by Paul, (in chap. xiv. 26.) Let all things be done to edifying, and (at ver. 40.) Let all things be done decently and in order. Hence it follows, that the miſtake of ſome, concerning ceremonies in our worſhip, ariſes from their not diſtinguiſhing between the ſubſtance of worſhip, and the circumſtances thereof: for altho' nothing can be an article of faith, unleſs God hath revealed it, and conſequently it is only God who can direct in the ſubſtance of religious worſhip; as adoration, prayer, praiſe, the ſacraments, &c. Yet, as to the time, manner, order, or method, the garb of the miniſter, &c. they are circumſtances indifferent and mutable in themſelves, and left to the diſcretion of the Church, according to foreſaid rule, for edification, decency, and order, which Paul here appoints; and the enjoining theſe indifferent things, in compliance with the Apoſtle's rule, is not teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, becauſe they are not enjoined as neceſſary and good in themſelves, as the Phariſees eſteemed their traditions to be of old amongſt the Jews; but only as the Holy Ghoſt directs, as tending to edifying, decency, and order.---The Scripture no where ſays, that nothing is to be uſed in the worſhip of God, but what is preſcribed therein; and when the ſubſtance of Chriſt's inſtitutions remains entire, the appointing circumſtances is not an addition in the Scripture-ſenſe, provided thoſe circumſtantials are not diſagreeable to the nature of Chriſt's inſtitutions, and do not render any religious office the leſs acceptable to God.

XI. The matter of prayer, and the ability of expreſſing it, either in known or unknown languages, in the Apoſtles and firſt Chriſtians, was extraordinary, as the other ſpiritual gifts of interpreting ancient Prophecies, healing diſeaſes, &c. and were then beſtowed by the Holy Spirit of God for two reaſons; namely, to ſupply the preſent neceſſity of the Church in its infancy, when there was neither time, nor perchance natural abilities in the firſt preachers of Chriſtianity, to learn the languages of all nations; and alſo to be for a ſign, and confirmation of the Goſpel: This is evident from what you may read in ch. xiv. where we find that ſome abuſed their ſpiritual gifts of tongues, by their prayers and hymns in the publick aſſemblies, when none, or at leaſt very few were preſent, who underſtood them; his being ſo contrary to that decency, order, and edification, which the Apoſtle directs them to obſerve and ſupport, as a rule to regulate their behaviour, and the exerciſe of their gifts in publick; ver. 26--40. So he forbids any one's praying or ſinging in an unknown tongue, unleſs the meaning were known to the reſt; or himſelf, or ſome other perſon preſent might interpret the meaning, ver. 8. to 15. And then adds at ver. 15. What is it then? I will pray with the Spirit, and I will pray with the underſtanding alſo: I will ſing with the Spirit, and I will ſing with the underſtanding alſo; i. e. ſo as to be underſtood, or to teach others, ver. 19. Conſequently no one ought any more to pretend to the gift of praying with, or by the immediate influence or dictate of the Spirit, which is the ſenſe of the Apoſtle here, than to the gift of tongues, or languages, which he never learnt.---The like ſeems to be the true ſenſe of Romans viii. 26. The Spirit helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us with groanings which cannot be uttered; in which place the Apoſtle is ſpeaking of thoſe who had the firſt-fruits of the ſpirit; ver. 23. Or, were endued with the extraordinary gifts thereof. See Chryſoſtom in Loc. and Dr. Hammond on Jude, ver. 20.

So that, as far as we can know, ſince miracles are ceaſed, the gift of prayer, which we can expect now, is properly that compunction of heart in praying, whereby we may perform the duty rightly, by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit; and therefore, when we perceive our minds to be poſſeſſed with deep impreſſions of the Glorious Majeſty of God, his Holineſs, and Purity, Infinite Power, Juſtice, Love, and goodneſs towards all creatures, but more eſpecially to-us-ward; together with an humble ſenſe of our own vileneſs and ſolutions, and of our neceſſities, and abſolute dependance upon him; if from hence, our affections are excited, and our hearts lifted up to God, through faith in Chriſt, with fervour, an affectionate reliance on his goodneſs, and an entire reſignation to his Divine Will; this is ſpiritual praying with us, whether we have gotten ſome form of prayer by heart, or read the ſame in a book, or hear it read by others.

XII. The Apoſtle affords an evident argument for infant-baptiſm, where he ſaith, ch. vii. 14. The unbelieving husband is ſanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is ſanctified by the husband; elſe were your children unclean, but now are they holy, i. e. having by birth a title or claim to be admitted into the Chriſtian-Covenant, which the children of unbelievers have not, as appears; becauſe the Scriptures often underſtand by the unclean, the Heathens in oppoſition to the Jews, who were the clean or holy people, being in covenant with God. So Iſaiah xxxv. 8, 9, An high-way ſhall be there, it ſhall be called the way of holineſs; the unclean ſhall not paſs over it----, but the redeemed ſhall walk there. See alſo, Iſa. lii. 1. Acts x. 28. Hence the Jews are ſtiled, an holy ſeed; Ezra ix. 2. Iſaiah vi. 13. in the ſame ſenſe the Jews, in the times of the New Teſtament were wont to underſtand the term holy; (ſee Lightfoot's Hor. in 1 Cor. vii. 14.) for, when a man and his wife, who had been Heathens, were made Proſelytes to Judaiſm, they were to be ſeparated ninety days, that it might be known whether their children were begotten without holineſs, as they expreſſed it, or within: That, while the parents were Gentiles or Jewiſh Proſelytes, and ſo within the covenant; to which known and common ſenſe of the word holy, the Apoſtle alludes in this place of Corinthians; and thus Peter alſo, 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10. Where he obſerves, that the Holy People, who had been in covenant with God, namely, the Jews, being caſt off, the profeſſors of Chriſtianity were ſeparated to be the people of God, and ſo became holy: Ye are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; which in time paſt were not a people, but are now the people of God. And in this ſenſe Paul ſhews in the fore-cited 1 Cor. vii. 14. that the children of either Chriſtian parent are holy, or have a title to be admitted to the covenant of grace; and then they are as capable of being ſo admitted, and of receiving the ſign thereof, which is baptiſm, as the holy ſeed of the Jews were of circumciſion.

Obj. It is objected, that by unclean in this Epiſtle is meant baſtards, and that holy, in the oppoſition ſignifies here Legitimate. But that is not conſiſtent: Becauſe,

I. Anſw. Firſt, if both parents were Heathens, no body would declare their children baſtards purely on that account; that they were born of Heathen parents. And

II. Anſ. Secondly, The Apoſtles does not there ſpeak of any political affair, as of baſtardy or legitimacy; but for the ſatisfaction of the conſcience of ſuch a Chriſtian man, or woman, whoſe wife or husband was a Gentile or unbeliever; that the Chriſtian in ſuch a caſe ſhould not diſſolve the marriage, becauſe it was ſo far ſanctified by one of them being a Chriſtian, that their children were as holy, having as much a title to the covenant of grace, as if both parents had been Chriſtians.

XIII. Though Paul commends the Corinthians for keeping the ordinances or traditions, which he delivered them, chap. xi. 2. Yet this can be no plea for the ſuperſtitious traditions of the Papiſts, till they can prove their traditions confirmed by their council of Trent in the ſixteenth century, to have been delivered above fifteen hundred years before, by the mouth of an Apoſtle, and received as ſuch by the primitive Church, as the ordinances and traditions mentioned by Paul were received by the Corinthians.

XIV. From the direction in ch. xvi. 2. "Upon the firſt day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in ſtore, as God hath proſpered him," many pious Chriſtians, both in the ancient Church, and of latter years, have kept a ſtock in a box, or purſe, for the poor (ſee Caryloſt. in loc.) that might be ready, as opportunity ſhould be offered to diſtribute it; and have experienced a great conveniency in this method of charity, in being ſo far from grudging when a due occaſion has been offered, that they have been rather pleaſed with an opportunity of diſpoſing well what they had laid up for that purpoſe. And again, hence we learn, that not only the richer ſort are concerned in the duty of charity, but all Chriſtians in their ſeveral degrees (though from thoſe to whom much is given more is required) muſt according to Paul's directions lay up in ſtore, as God hath proſpered him, and ſo in 2 Cor. viii. 12. the meaſure of charity is proportioned, "according to that a man hath," and in 1 Pet. iv. 11. "The ability which God giveth;" ſo that a poor man, when he ſeeth another in greater want than himſelf, at ſuch a time, either in reſpect to the ſufferings in the body or goods, in ſuch caſe, Chriſtian compaſſion, and the giving aſſiſtance, is the poor man's duty, and will procure his reward from him whoſe providence ruleth over all.

CHAP. I.

After his ſalutation and thankſgiving, 10 he exhorteth them to unity, 12 reproveth their diſſenſions. 18 God deſtroyeth the wiſdom of the wiſe 21 by the fooliſhneſs of preaching; and 26 calleth not the wiſe, mighty, and noble, but 27, 28 the fooliſh, weak, and men of no account.

PAUL called to be an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, through the will of God, and Soſthenes our brother.

2 Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are ſanctified in Chriſt Jeſus, called to be ſaints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, both theirs and ours.

3 Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

4 I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jeſus Chriſt;

5 That in every thing ye are enriched by him, in all utterance, and in all knowledge:

6 Even as the teſtimony of Chriſt was confirmed in you.

7 So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

8 Who ſhall alſo confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameleſs in the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

9 God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowſhip of his Son Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

10 Now I beſeech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye all ſpeak the ſame thing, and that there be no diviſions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the ſame mind, and in the ſame judgment.

11 For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the houſe of Chloe, that there are contentions among you.

12 Now this I ſay, that every one of you ſaith, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and I of Chriſt.

13 Is Chriſt divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

14 I thank God that I baptized none of you, but Criſpus and Gaius:

15 Leſt any ſhould ſay that I had baptized in mine own name.

16 And I baptized alſo the houſhold of Stephanas: beſides, I know not whether I baptized any other.

17 For Chriſt ſent me not to baptize, but to preach the goſpel: not with wiſdom of words, leſt the croſs of Chriſt ſhould be made of none effect.

18 For the preaching of the croſs is to them that periſh, fooliſhneſs: but unto us which are ſaved, it is the power of God.

19 For it is written, I will deſtroy the wiſdom of the wiſe, and will bring to nothing the underſtanding of the prudent.

20 Where is the wiſe? where is the ſcribe? where is the diſputer of this world? hath not God made fooliſh the wiſdom of this world?

21 For after that, in the wiſdom of God, the world by wiſdom knew not God, it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe.

22 For the Jews require a ſign, and the Greeks ſeek after wiſdom:

23 But we preach Chriſt crucified, unto the Jews a ſtumbling-block, and unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs;

24 But unto them which are called both Jews and Greeks, Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God.

25 Becauſe the fooliſhneſs of God is wiſer than men; and the weakneſs of God ſtronger than men.

26 For ye ſee your calling, brethren, how that not many wiſe men after the fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called.

27 But God hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world, to confound the wiſe; and God hath choſen the weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty;

28 And baſe things of the world, and things which are deſpiſed, hath God choſen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are:

29 That no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence.

30 But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption:

31 That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

We note in this chapter a preface to the whole Epiſtle; wherein the Apoſtle begins with an inſcription, 1, 2. to which he immediately adds a ſalutation, ver. 3. and then declares his good will towards them: Which declaration of his good will is manifeſted. (1.) By his thankfulneſs for the benefits beſtowed upon him, of which he gives a general idea in ver. 4. and then ſpecifies them more particularly in ver. 5. amplifying them from their uſe, which is the confirmation of the Goſpel, ver. 6. and their effect, ver. 7. (2.) By the aſſurance he gives them of perſeverance. Which is firſt propounded, and afterward amplified by the effect, blameleſs, ver. 8. proved by God's faithfulneſs, ver. 9. which concludes the preface and brings us to The body of the Epiſtle; wherein we

(1.) Meet with an emphatical exhortation to unity; ver. 10. amplified by the occaſion thereof, viz. the report of their contentions, ver. 11. By the matter of their contentions, viz. about their teachers; ver. 12. By a diſſuaſive taken from the unity of the Church and religion, in reſpect of its head, redeemer and form of baptiſm; ver. 13. and finally, by Paul's vindication of himſelf from being any occaſion thereof; neither by his baptizing; for he baptized but few of them; ver. 14, 16. both to avoid all miſrepreſentation; ver. 15. and beſides, it was no part of his commiſſion, ver. 17. nor by his preaching; which was not to gain applauſe and admiration among them. Now upon this occaſion he falls into a long diſcourſe concerning,

(2.) The way of preaching, and the abuſe of eloquence therein. So he begins (1.) with his denial of his uſe of ſuch a way of preaching, with the reaſons: Becauſe it tends to fruſtrate the deſigns of the Goſpel; ver. 17.—— and becauſe it is only the other way, (preaching the croſs) wherein God ſhews his power, and which he bleſſes to converſion and ſalvation, ver. 18. Becauſe the other way eloquent preaching is ineffectual for this purpoſe; as appears by the teſtimony of Eſay, ver. 19. and by the event and experience of its ineffectualneſs and folly, ver. 20. (2.) The reaſon of God's appointment of this way contrary to carnal wiſdom, viz. as a puniſhment to the world for their abuſe of other means and helps, ver. 21. (3.) The reaſon why this way is rejected both by Jews and Gentiles; becauſe it is contrary to their carnal expectations, ver. 22. (4) The different opinions of perſons about this way of preaching and ſalvation, both of unbelievers, ver. 23. and of believers, ver. 24. illuſtrated by a compariſon between the wiſdom of God and men; wherein is ſhewn the ſuperiority of the wiſdom of God, ver. 25. which is proved by the effect of this wiſdom and power, viz. the ſucceſs he gives to weak, unlikely means, ver. 26. amplified by the ends thereof, as (1.) to confound and bring to nought all worldly excellency, ver. 27, 28. (2.) to take away matter of glorying from man, ver. 29. (3.) that the glory of all may be aſcribed to himſelf, where God is ſhewn to be the efficient cauſe of all bleſſings; as Chriſt is the meritorious cauſe of our ſalvation. Then follows an enumeration of ſundry benefits, ver. 30. and their final cauſe; that all glory may be given to him.

Ver. 1. Paul called to be an Apoſtle.] When Chriſt appeared to him in the way to Damaſcus.

——Through the will of God.] Merely by the grace of God; who, at the time that this Paul was breathing out threatnings, and was going with commiſſion and authority to perſecute the Chriſtians at Damaſcus, vouchſafed to bring him to a due ſenſe of his error, and a thorough repentance of his ſins, and moreover, was pleaſed, of a perſecutor, to make him a powerful and zealous preacher of the Goſpel of Chriſt.

——Our brother.] Or, coajutor, aſſiſtant, or one that labours together with us in the work of the Goſpel.

Ver. 2. Unto the Church of God which is at Corinth.] See the notes on Romans, chap. xvi. 5.

——Sanctified in Chriſt Jeſus.] i. e. Separated from the reſt of mankind through faith in Chriſt, to be a peculiar people to God, as the Jews had been afore-time: All Chriſtians being by virtue of their calling in Chriſt, a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, a holy nation, and peculiar people, 1 Pet. ii. 9. and ſo it follows; —Called to be ſaints.] This is, as it were, an explication of the laſt clauſe; for it muſt be remembred, that, as I have explained long ago, the word ſaints in many places of the Acts, and of the Epiſtles, is as extenſive as the word Chriſtians: And ſtands in oppoſition, as the word holy among the Jews did, to the heathen world; and not, as ſome have imagined, to unſound or wicked Chriſtians.

—In every place.] Here the Apoſtle ſays, that though he primarily and purpoſely writes to the Corinthians; yet he intends to write ſuch things as ſhould be ſerviceable and binding to all the Churches of Chriſtians throughout the world.

——Both theirs and ours.] i. e. Both the Lord of me, who write theſe things in his name, and of you to whom I write for his glory, and your ſalvation.

Ver. 4.—For the grace of God which is given you by Jeſus Chriſt.] Which grace is the confeſſion of a true faith in Chriſt; ſee Rom. i. 8. and the bleſſings of great abilities to make it known, and defend it, and to give a good account thereof before the wiſe men of their nation; for ſo much may be fairly gathered from the three following verſes.

Ver. 5. —— In all utterance.] i. e. In an excellent faculty of preaching, or making known by a good elocution, which is engaging to the ear, that knowledge which the Spirit had enriched them with in matters of faith, or the myſteries of our holy religion.

——In all knowledge.] Or, ability to explain prophecies and myſteries.

Ver. 6.—The teſtimony of Chriſt.] Was the Goſpel; ſee chap. ii. 1.

——Was confirmed in you.] By my preaching, and ſince that by ſufficient probation of the truth thereof, which muſt eſtabliſh you therein againſt all oppoſition.

Ver. 7.——In no gift.] See chap. xii. ver. 8.

Ver. 8. Who ſhall alſo confirm you unto the end.] Provided you hold faſt that faith whereunto you are called, and are now confirmed in it; ſee ver. 2, 6, 9.

—— That ye may be blameleſs.] And then ye will, as I pray ye may, be found blameleſs, without ſin, in the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, even in that day when Jeſus Chriſt ſhall come to judge all the earth.

Ver. 9. God is faithful.] In all his promiſes: Therefore, as he has called you to ſalvation under certain conditions by his Son Jeſus Chriſt, if you obſerve to perform your part of that covenant, he will certainly comply with his.

Ver. 10. —— That ye all ſpeak the ſame thing.] i. e. Hold the ſame faith, the ſame terms of Communion in Chriſt; that they preach all one and the ſame doctrine. Where I would have it obſerved, that theſe words are ſpoken to the elders of the Church, or preachers of the word of God at Corinth, and not to the whole body of the Church; for ſo I underſtand by the word brethren in this Scripture, compared with what Paul ſaid before of Soſthenes, whom he calls our brother, ver. 1. becauſe occupied in the work of the miniſtry.

—— No diviſions among you.] No hereſies, nor ſchiſms. Hereſies are properly Church diviſions about certain fundamental doctrines: Schiſms are ſuch diviſions as are occaſioned by contrary practices in the Church, in point of ceremonies, &c.

—— But that ye.] My brethren in the miniſtry.

Ver. 11. —— It hath been declared unto me.] i. e. I have been perfectly informed in ſuch a manner, as I can't miſtruſt the relation of your differences.

—— That there are contentions among you.] Where note, that the Corinthians as if they had learned a new religion from every teacher, began to diſtinguiſh themſelves into ſects and parties, and made uſe of their teachers names, as the heads of their ſeveral ſects, ver. 12. for one ſaid I am of Paul, another I am of Apollos, &c. as if Chriſt had been divided, or elſe were to ſtand with the reſt, as the name of a diſtinct religion. Not that the Apoſtles gave any occaſion to this diviſion, or encouraged the Corinthians in their fond humour of preferring one before another; but from the diverſity of their own minds and opinions flowed this diverſity of names. When the unlearned, wreſting the ſenſe of what they had heard preached, would impoſe that ſenſe upon others, who thinking that contrary to what they had been taught by another Apoſtle, ſet up the one in oppoſition to the other.—— Thus congregation cenſured congregation, and quoted Paul againſt Peter, Apollos againſt both; and Chriſt againſt them all. —— This by a natural tranſition, grew to diſagreement in ſociety and common life. They were no longer neighbours to one another; and he was moſt acceptable to his party, who ſhewed himſelf moſt irreconcileable to thoſe in the oppoſition. It was therefore to reconcile theſe differences, and to make the reconciliation firm and laſting that Paul laid down the directions in the context; and that he might prove more ſucceſsful in this undertaking, he lays aſide, for a while, the authority of an Apoſtle, and mingles requeſt and conjuration, with exhortation and advice, he acts the part of an Apoſtle in the form of a petitioner.

This diverſity of chief paſtors in the Church of Corinth ſeems to have proceeded from the different ſort of Chriſtians, of which that Church was compoſed. For, one part of the Gentile believers preferred Paul, as their Apoſtle, or ſpiritual father, becauſe, in Chriſt Jeſus, he had begotten them through the Goſpel, 1 Cor. iv. 5. Others of them preferred Apollos, as being an eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, Acts xviii. 24. But the Jewiſh Chriſtians adhered to Peter, as the Apoſtle of the circumciſion.

Ver. 12. — Every one of you.] i. e. You all in your turns ſay,

——— I am of Paul.] I adhere to the doctrine taught by Paul.

——— I am of Apollos.] I am a zealous follower of our teacher Apollos.

——— I of Cephas.] I believe thoſe things which Peter teacheth concerning circumciſion.

——— And I of Chriſt.] I am for the circumciſion of the Gentiles, that they may be like Chriſt, who was alſo circumciſed on the eighth day. This was the doctrine of the Ebionites, according to Epiphanius.

Ver. 13. Is Chriſt divided?] Can he be the head of two oppoſite Churches? Or, can his doctrines be oppoſite?

——— Was Paul crucified for you? &c.] Do you look upon Paul with that regard, as you ought to look upon Chriſt alone, who is your Saviour; and yet they who take up doctrines, and believe them for the ſake or on the account of the preacher thereof, makes ſuch a one their Saviour, and thereby diſhonoureth Chriſt, who is our only Saviour and Mediator between God and man. He that holdeth Chriſt for his only maſter, will hear his doctrine by whomſoever it is preached.

——— In the name of Paul.] i. e. To believe in Paul, or in Chriſt whom Paul preaches?

Ver. 17. —— Chriſt ſent me not to baptize, but to preach the Goſpel.] Here the Apoſtle refers to that commiſſion he received from Chriſt's own mouth at his converſion, in which is no mention of baptiſm; ſee Acts xxii. 21. See my Diſſertation on baptiſm at the end of this chapter.

——— Not with wiſdom of words.] Or ſpeech more properly, by which the Grecian orators were accuſtomed to varniſh over their publick harangues and declamations, &c.

——— The croſs of Chriſt.] i. e. The crucifixion of Chriſt.

Ver. 18. The preaching of the croſs.] Or, of Chriſt crucified to make ſatisfaction to God for our ſins.

——— Fooliſhneſs.] Becauſe it propoſed ſalvation through a crucified Saviour.

——— The power of God.] i. e. The powerful inſtrument in God's hand, of ſalvation to thoſe who embrace the Goſpel, however it may be deſpiſed by thoſe who think themſelves wiſe; ſee John iii. 18. Acts xvii. 18. and Rom. i. 16.

Ver. 19. —— It is written.] In Job. v. 12, 13. and Iſaiah xxix. 14. xxxiii. 18.

Ver. 20. —— Hath not God made fooliſh, &c.] See Job xii. 17, 20, 24.

Ver. 21. For after that, in the wiſdom of God, the world by wiſdom knew not God, it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe.] From hence we learn, that the wiſe men among the Greeks; the ſcribe or interpreter of Scripture among the Jews are by this revelation of God's will through Jeſus Chriſt, convinced of folly, and inſufficiency to give men the knowledge of ſaving truth. And therefore, it will be highly neceſſary for every Chriſtian to note as follows.

By the wiſe, the diſputer of this world, and the wiſdom of this world, we are here to underſtand the ancient philoſophers eſpecially, whom I ſhall prove to have been utterly ignorant of many important points in religion, as the context here directs us to underſtand, which the revelation of God's will to man has diſcovered to us in Chriſt our Saviour. For,

They were ſtrangers to the true account of the creation of the world, and the original of mankind, and to God's adminiſtration of the world, and intercourſe with mankind, in the moſt early ages. One ſect of philoſophers, the Peripateticks, held, that the world was eternal, and another, the Epicureans, that it was made by chance; and they who believed it had a beginning in time, knew not by what ſteps, nor in what manner it was raiſed into ſo much beauty and order; and ſo, for want of a ſure hiſtorical knowledge concerning this point, it became a fit ſubject for the fancy and imagination of the poets.

They were ſenſible of a great degree of corruption and irregularity in the nature of man, but could not tell from what cauſe it proceeded, nor in what ſtate our firſt parents came out of the hands of God, nor by what means they loſt their original perfection. And the want of knowing theſe things, leads men of courſe into endleſs perplexities, how to reconcile the purity and perfection of God the Creator, to the uncleanneſs and corruption of man the being created; and tempts them to ſuppoſe, either that the nature of God is not pure, or, that the ſoul of man is not of a Divine Original.

Much leſs could the light of nature acquaint them with the method he has ordained and eſtabliſhed for the recovery of loſt man; to effect a reconciliation between God and man, to exerciſe his goodneſs without the violation of his juſtice, and not only to make the pardon of ſinners conſiſtent with the wiſdom of his government, the honour of his laws, and his hatred of ſin, ſo as to render their ſalvation poſſible, but to give them the ſtrongeſt aſſurances of pardon and favour, upon the plain conditions of faith and repentance. Theſe are things that depend wholly upon revelation; and without the knowledge of theſe, mankind muſt remain in a perplexed and deſponding ſtate, as to the pardon of ſin, and the favour of God. The comfort they would raiſe from the mercy and goodneſs of God is checkt by the conſideration of his juſtice, and nothing is able to fix the guilty mind in a ſtate of ſolid and well-grounded comfort, but an aſſurance that the Divine Juſtice is ſatisfied, and an expreſs declaration on the part of God, upon what terms and conditions he will receive the ſinner into favour.

Then as to the publick worſhip of God; the light of nature might in general ſuggeſt to men the reaſonableneſs of joining in worſhip; but in what manner he would be worſhipped, and in what way they might perform a ſervice that would be acceptable to him, was underſtood to be a point which the wit and penetration of man could not fix and determine. Inſomuch, that the founders of ſtates and kingdoms, who undertook to ſettle civil adminiſtrations by the rules of human prudence, found it neceſſary to ground their ſchemes of religion upon pretended revelations, as the only way to give them a proper ſanction, and the people an aſſurance, that their religious performances would be accepted.

The points of knowledge mentioned under this firſt head, are evidently ſuch as the philoſophers were wholly ignorant of, as not falling within the compaſs of human reaſon in its corrupt ſtate; and the importance of them to the comfort and happineſs of mankind, ſhews the vaſt advantage we receive from revelation, in removing many doubts and difficulties which would otherwiſe ariſe concerning the nature and attributes of God, in ſhewing us the true ſtate of our own original and condition, and in acquainting us in the cleareſt manner, upon what terms, and by what ſervices, we may be ſure of his favour and acceptance. To all which we may add, as another point above the reach of human reaſon, the comfortable promiſe he has made us of ſupernatural aid and aſſiſtance in our ſincere endeavours to perform what he has revealed to be his will, in order to render ourſelves acceptable to him.

2. The knowledge which the philoſophers had of ſeveral important points of religion, was dark, imperfect and uncertain. Many of them, and thoſe, of the greateſt note, laid it down for a general maxim, that all things were uncertain, that truth lay buried in a deep abyſs, and, that the furtheſt that human wit and underſtanding could go in ſearch of it, was no more than probability and conjecture; and accordingly we find the wiſeſt among them plainly intimating the need there was of a Divine Revelation, to give mankind a full and certain knowledge of their duty. But ſuppoſing them to have been able to lay out all the duties and offices of life in the cleareſt manner; that which diſabled them from reforming the world and obliging men to attend to their duty, was the uncertainty they were under about the great and only effectual motives to it, the immortality of the ſoul, and a future account.

Cicero, (Tuſ. q. l. 1.) enumerating the opinions of philoſophers upon this head, not only aſſerts what every one knows to be true, that the whole ſect of Epicureans diſbelieved the ſoul's immortality, but adds, that many of the moſt learned philoſophers were of the ſame opinion; and he particularly mentions two of great note among them; one, who in his writings had avowedly argued againſt it, and another who had profeſſedly written three books to confute it. He tells us further, that though the Stoicks believed that the ſoul remained after death for ſome time, yet they did not believe it was immortal. And even Socrates and Cicero, who were peculiarly favourable to the doctrine of the immortality of the ſoul, do yet diſcover ſome doubt and uncertainty about it.

Socrates, (in Phæd.) a little before his death, tells his friends, he had good hope of ſome ſort of being, when this life was at an end; but after that, he ſpeaks doubtfully, and ſays, though he ſhould be miſtaken, he did at leaſt gain thus much, that the expectation of it made him leſs uneaſy while he lived, and his error would die with him; and he concludes, (In Apol. Socratis.) I am going out of the world, and you are to continue in it; which of us has the better part, is a ſecret to every one but God.

And Cicero, (Tuſc. q. l. 1.) ſpeaking of the ſeveral opinions concerning the nature and duration of the ſoul, ſays, "Which of theſe is true, God alone knows; and which is moſt probable, a very great queſtion." And he introduces one, complaining, "that while he was reading the arguments for the immortality of the ſoul, he thought himſelf convinced; but as ſoon as he laid aſide the book, and began to reaſon with himſelf, his conviction was gone." All which gave Seneca juſt occaſion to ſay, (Ep. 102.) that immortality, however deſireable, was rather promiſed than proved, by thoſe great men. And if the philoſophers doubted even of the exiſtence of the ſoul after death, much leſs could they pretend to know any thing of the reſurrection of the body, and a ſolemn day of judgment, and the ſentence that will be finally pronounced upon good and bad men at that day. So far from this, that the great argument by which they prove that death cannot properly ſpeaking be called an evil, is, That it either wholly extinguiſhes our being, or at leaſt leaves us ſuch a being as is not ſubject to puniſhment or miſery in another ſtate. And they eaſed the people of thoſe fears, by exploding the notion of infernal torments prepared for the wicked, as mere dreams, and fictions of the poets; Plut. de Aud. Poet. Cic. Tuſc. q. l. 1. Sen. ad. Marc. c. 19.

This uncertainty about thoſe great and fundamental truths, was attended with fatal effects both in principle and practice: In principle, it naturally led mankind to call in queſtion the providence, juſtice, and goodneſs of God, when they obſerved the proſperity of the wicked, and the calamities of the righteous, without being ſure that either of them ſhould ſuffer or be rewarded in another ſtate; or elſe to doubt, whether there really was any eſſential difference between virtue and vice, and whether it did not depend wholly upon the inſtitution of men. In practice; hope and fear are the two things which chiefly govern mankind, and influence them in their actions; and they muſt of courſe govern and influence more or leſs, in proportion to the certainty there is, that the things feared and hoped for are real, and the rewards and puniſhments aſſuredly to be expected. And as the corrupt inclinations of human nature will eaſily overcome any fear, the foundation of which is but doubtful; ſo thoſe being let looſe and freed from the apprehenſion of a future account, will of courſe carry men into all manner of wickedneſs. Nor is it ſufficient to ſay, that they are under the reſtraint of human laws; ſince it is certain, that very great degrees of wickedneſs may both be harboured in the heart, and carried into execution, notwithſtanding the utmoſt that human authority can do to prevent it.

From hence it appears, how great a bleſſing and benefit it is to mankind, that the Goſpel-revelation has given us a full aſſurance of the immortality of the ſoul, and of rewards and puniſhments in another life, according to our behaviour in this; and not only ſo, but has very particularly acquainted us, "who ſhall be our judge. What the manner and ſolemnity of the judgment, "What is to be the rule of judging, "what the ſentence that will be paſſed both upon good and bad men, and "what will be the ſtate of each in conſequence thereof. The certain expectation of theſe things, enforced by the aſſurance God has given us that he takes notice of all our thoughts, words, and actions, in this life, in order to that future account, conduces greatly, or rather is of abſolute neceſſity, to ſecure the general peace and order of the world, as well as to preſerve the virtue and innocence of particular perſons.

3. The differences among the philoſophers in points of the greateſt weight and moment, were endleſs, and irreconcileable. This is a truth ſo well known, and ſo univerſally acknowledged, that thoſe among us who have the greateſt zeal for natural reaſon as a ſufficient guide in religion, will not deny the fact. A lively deſcription of which, we find in an ancient writer of the Church, Lact. l. 3. c. 4. "Every ſect of them overthrows all others, in order to eſtabliſh itſelf, and can allow none to be wiſe, becauſe by that it would acknowledge itſelf to be fooliſh; and as it overthrows the reſt, ſo is itſelf overthrown by the reſt." And elſewhere, —c. 28. "To what end ſhould we fight againſt thoſe, who are deſtroying one another?" Nor can it be ſaid, that theſe differences were only about matters of leſs conſequence; ſince it is notorious, that the moſt important points in religion were ſubjects of the greateſt diſputes. While ſome aſſerted the being of a God, others openly deny'd it; and others again ran into the notion of a multiplicity of gods, celeſtial, aerial, terreſtrial, infernal; and as every country had its peculiar gods, ſo the philoſophers made it a general rule, that every one ſhould worſhip the gods of his own country. While ſome were willing to believe that the ſoul was immortal, and that they ſhould live in a future ſtate, others affirmed it to be mortal, and to die with the body: While ſome affirmed that virtue and vice, as founded in the nature of things, were eternal and unchangeable; it was the doctrine of others, that nothing was good or evil, juſt or unjuſt, right or wrong, otherwiſe than as the laws and cuſtoms of particular countries determined: While one ſect, (the Stoicks,) affirmed that virtue was the ſole good, and its own reward; another ſect (Ariſtotelians) rejecting that notion in the caſe of virtue in diſtreſs, made the good things of this life a neceſſary ingredient of happineſs; and a third ſet (Epicureans) up pleaſures, or at leaſt indolence and a freedom from pain, as the final good that men ought to propoſe to themſelves; upon which differences Tully very juſtly obſerves, (Cic. Acad. qu. l. 1. —— de Fin. l. 5.) "That they who do not agree in ſtating what is the chief end or good, muſt of courſe differ in the whole ſyſtem of precepts for the conduct of life. Again, while many of them thought it reaſonable to believe, that the general order and government of the world could not be maintained without the ſuperintendence of ſome ſuperior power; one whole ſect (Epicureans) abſolutely denied a providence; others (Ariſtotelians) acknowledged no more than a general providence which did not reſpect particular beings; others, who owned a particular providence, extended it only to greater matters, while the leſs, in their opinion, were neglected; others again denied the omniſcience of God, which was little leſs than the denial of a providence, as to the effects it ought to have upon the behaviour of mankind. And while ſome talked of their gods taking vengeance upon the bad and rewarding the good, in order to deter men from wickedneſs, and excite them to goodneſs; others exploded the notion of the gods being pleaſed or diſpleaſed on any account, and by that, entirely removed out of the minds of men the deſire of pleaſing and the fear of diſpleaſing them, and all thoughts of praying to them or thanking them, for the benefits they either wanted, or enjoyed. Upon which, it is juſtly obſerved by an ancient Chriſtian writer, (Lact. de Ira. c. 6.) that if this principle of God's being neither pleaſed nor diſpleaſed, were true, there muſt be an end of all religion; ſince it leaves no foundation either for honouring or fearing the Deity. And yet it is ſaid (by Cic. Offic. l. 3.)

to have been the univerſal opinion of philoſophers (not only of thoſe who thought that God did not concern himſelf with human affairs, but of thoſe who believed he did) that he was neither angry with men, nor would puniſh them.

Theſe and the other differences among them which would fill volumes, are not mentioned as any reproach to the philoſophers in point of ability and underſtanding ; ſince it happened no otherwiſe to them, than it always will do to any number of men, who in this corrupt ſtate of things will depend upon themſelves alone, in matters of religion. But I mention them, to ſhew the weakneſs and folly of thoſe, who, becauſe the philoſophers now and then indulged themſelves in ſpeculations of a Divine Nature, would ſend us to them for a complete and uniform ſcheme of religion ; who, from their having laid down many uſeful rules, grounded upon the natural connexion of things as they appear in daily experience and obſervation, in order to the wiſe conduct of human affairs, and our peace and happineſs in this life, would infer, that they are therefore proper and ſufficient guides to our happineſs in the next ; and who, in reality, under this pretext, are doing all they can to gratify and encourage the voluptuous part of mankind, by diſcharging them from all regard to the laws of Chriſt (which have the ſanction of Divine Authority, and againſt which there can be no objection, but that they are too pure for appetites ſo much vitiated and depraved,) and leaving them to form a religion for themſelves out of this or that philoſopher, whoſe maxims and doctrines they can beſt reliſh ; the wiſeſt of which, (how ſublime ſoever ſome of the thoughts may ſeem) were no more than the imaginations and conjectures of fallible men.

But be their ſchemes of religion what they would, theſe two things are certain ; that no one philoſopher had more right than another, to impoſe his ſcheme upon mankind ; and, that ſetting aſide revelation, no one perſon at this day has any authority to determine, amidſt ſo many different and contradictory opinions, which of the philoſophers was in the right, and which in the wrong. Upon this foot therefore, the greateſt part of mankind are left in a ſtate of endleſs perplexity, without ability to determine for themſelves, and without any certain guide on whoſe determination they may ſafely rely. And this made one of the beſt and wiſeſt among them ſay, “that error was ſo mixed with truth, and oft-times with ſuch likeneſs to each other, that there was no way left to determine the judgment ; and, “that it would be time enough to blame the Sceptick philoſophy which doubted of every thing, when either the reſt of the philoſophers were agreed, or ſome one ſhould be found who could aſcertain the truth.” Which ſhews the great advantage of a Divine Revelation, as well to aſcertain our duty, as to engage our attention and regard to it ; to give all men, great and ſmall, learned and unlearned, a ſure rule, and a clear view of all they are to do, and effectually to engage them in a ſteady and uniform purſuit of the great end that ſuch a revelation propoſes.

By attending to the matters wherein the philoſophers differed, we ſee clearly that they were points which concerned the very being of religion and virtue ; and that thoſe differences rendered the motives and obligations to both, precarious and uncertain. And this ſhews how unjuſt the objection is, which infidels raiſe upon this head, from the different opinions among Chriſtians, and the ſeveral ſects and denominations formed upon thoſe differences. As long as men are men, and have different degrees of underſtanding, and every one a partiality to his own conceptions ; it is not to be expected, that they ſhould agree in any one entire ſcheme and every part of it, in the circumſtances as well as the ſubſtance, in the manner of things as well as in the things themſelves, it is ſufficient that they believe the doctrines, ſo far as they find, upon due enquiry and examination according to their ſeveral abilities and opportunities, that God has revealed them. Now, this is a ſtate of things very different from that of the Heathen world ; in which their teachers differed about the moſt important points in religion : And while no one could claim an authority from God, nor any right to require an aſſent to his doctrines , the generality of people had no certain teſt to try them by, nor by conſequence any means to deliver themſelves out of a maze of endleſs doubt and uncertainty. Which is well expreſſed by an ancient writer, (Lact. l. 3. c. 27.) in anſwer to the queſtion, Did the philoſophers then teach nothing that was right ? Yes, ſays he, many things ; but their precepts have no weight, becauſe they are human, and want a Divine Sanction. They are not believed, becauſe he who hears, thinks himſelf a man, as well as he who teaches.

4. The philoſophers taught doctrines, which directly tend to encourage vice and wickedneſs in the world. Of this ſort, were the notions concerning providence, and the omniſcience and omnipreſence of God, and their denying that he was either pleaſed or diſpleaſed with mankind, and their reſolving the diſtinctions between good and evil into human authority and appointment. Such was alſo the doctrine of fate, or mens doing every thing through neceſſity, and not by choice ; which takes away all virtue and vice, and leaves no place for rewards or puniſhments either here or hereafter ; and yet this was the avowed doctrine of one famous ſect (the Stoicks) among them. And the prevalency of this doctrine of fate in the Heathen world, together with the pernicious influence it naturally has upon virtue and religion, was the reaſon why the ancient fathers of the Chriſtian Church took ſo much pains in their ſeveral writings to confute and expoſe it.

Nor did they only hold principles deſtructive of virtue, but alſo maintained practices of a very vile and corrupt nature. Plato taught the expedience and lawfulneſs of expoſing children in particular caſes, and Ariſtotle alſo of abortion ; at Athens, the great ſeat and nurſery of philoſophers, it was laid down for a rule, that infants which appeared to be maimed, ſhould either be killed or expoſed ; and, that the Athenians might lawfully invade and enſlave any people, who, in their opinion, were fit to be made ſlaves. Many of the philoſophers maintained the lawfulneſs of ſelf-murder. Not only the Epicureans and others, but even Plato himſelf allowed fornication, and, which is more ſhocking, a community of wives ; and the moſt famous among them were known not only to approve, but practiſe, unnatural luſt. To which we may add the Cynicks, who, laying aſide the natural reſtraints of ſhame and modeſty, committed the acts of luſt like brute beaſts, openly, and in the ſight of the ſun ; and the Stoicks, who held that no words or ſpeech of any kind ought to be avoided or cenſured, as filthy and obſcene.

Theſe are principles and doctrines, by which many of the philoſophers, and thoſe of greateſt note, let men looſe from the obligations of duty, and gave them full liberty to indulge their brutal appetites, and degrade human nature into that of beaſts, while they were filling their heads with fine notions and exalted ſpeculations. And as theſe indulgences, ſo agreeable to the corruptions of nature, plainly account for that zeal which is ſhewn for reaſon and philoſophy, as our beſt guides in religion ; ſo the great objection againſt the Goſpel-revelation is, that it expreſly forbids uncleanneſs of all kinds, whether in thought or deed, as that which above all other things poiſons and corrupts the ſoul, and makes it utterly unfit for the ſpiritual joys and delights of the next world ; for which the pure precepts of the Goſpel, and the daily practice of them, are deſigned to prepare us.

5. In fact, the influence which the ancient philoſophers had in reforming mankind, was inconſiderable. Idolatry was univerſally practiſed throughout the Heathen world, and the worſhip of their gods conſiſted of the moſt filthy, abſurd, and abominable rites. The oblation of human ſacrifices to their gods was frequently practiſed ; nor was their own offſpring ſpared upon ſome occaſions. Nothing could be more cruel and barbarous, than to take pleaſure in ſeeing men murder and deſtroy one another, which yet was avowedly practiſed in their publick ſhews, and perſons were trained up to that inhuman exerciſe, and permitted to hire themſelves out to the work ; and it is affirmed by Lipſius, who wrote an entire diſcourſe upon the ſubject, that even war itſelf did not occaſion ſo great a deſtruction of mens lives, as thoſe ſhows which they inſtituted for publick diverſion. Nor, in private life, can we reaſonably hope or expect to find among them the great virtues of love, meekneſs and forgiveneſs, when we find Socrates declaring it neither unjuſt nor revengeful, to rejoice in the calamities of our enemies ; and Cicero expreſly approving and profeſſing revenge ; and Ariſtotle ſpeaking of meekneſs, not only as a defect of the mind, and as carrying in it too great a diſpoſition to forgive, but calling the patient enduring of reproach, the ſpirit of a ſlave, Ariſtot. Eth. l. 4. c. 11.

When our Saviour came into the world, and for ſome time before, human knowledge of all kinds, and particularly the ſtudy of philoſophy, was cultivated and improved in the Roman empire, with the greateſt application, and by the ableſt hands. But how little effect either theirs or the writings of the Greek philoſophers had upon the generality of mankind, may be learned from this ſame Paul's account of the ſtate of the Heathen world, and the cautions he gives the Chriſtian converts againſt their wicked and abominable practices. This I ſay therefore, and teſtify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanities of their mind; having the underſtanding darkned, being alienated from the life of God, thro' the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the blindneſs of their hearts; who, being paſt feeling, have given themſelves over unto laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs, Epheſ. iv. 17, &c. And again, Have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them; for it is a ſhame even to ſpeak of thoſe things which are done of them in ſecret, Epheſ. v. 11, 12. i. e. in the celebration of ſeveral of their rites and myſteries, which was accompanied with all manner of lewdneſs. And in his Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, ch. iii. 5, 6, 7. Mortify therefore your members which are upon earth, fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affection, evil concupiſcence, and covetouſneſs which is idolatry; for which things ſake the wrath of God cometh upon the children of diſobedience; in the which ye alſo walked ſome time, when ye lived in them. Agreeably to this, John tells us, that except the profeſſors of Chriſtianity, the whole world lay in wickedneſs, 1 John i. 5. and Paul, ſpeaking of the Gentile world in general as living under the law of nature, and having mentioned unnatural luſt as common among them, goes on and tells us, That they were filled with unrighteouſneſs, fornication, wickedneſs, covetouſneſs, maliciouſneſs; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, whiſperers, backbiters, haters of God, deſpiteful, proud, boaſters, inventers of evil things, diſobedient to parents, without underſtanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful, in Rom. i. 26, 27—29, 30, 31. Peter alſo exhorting the Gentiles who had been converted to Chriſtianity, to live as became their new profeſſion, tells them, that the time paſt of their life may ſuffice them to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, in which they walked in laſciviouſneſs, luſts, exceſs of wine, revellings, banquettings, and abominable idolatries, 1 Pet. iv. 3.

And, in truth, between the corruptions of human nature, and the inability of the philoſophers to reform them, we are not to wonder that the Heathen world had grown by degrees to ſuch a pitch of wickedneſs. The philoſophers in the ſeveral ages were but few; the numbers who repaired to them for inſtruction, were ſmall in compariſon, and their inſtructions confined to their own ſcholars, who were uſually perſons only of fortune and diſtinction; the generality of the people had no opportunity to be inſtructed by them, nor if they had, were they able to underſtand and enter into the many dark and abſtruſe notions of their inſtructors; the publick rites of worſhip, which the people did attend, conſiſted wholly of the ceremonies performed by their prieſts, without any moral inſtructions or leſſons of duty; though the philoſophers had been more clear, few of them had ſchemes of religion and duty, or any more than ſcattered notions of morality, added to ſome private and ſingular tenets to diſtinguiſh them from other ſects: Though they had given ſchemes entire and uniform, they had not ſufficient authority either to command attention, or require obedience; or, whatever authority any one had, it was greatly diminiſhed by the endleſs diſputes among the philoſophers themſelves; and though they had been qualified to teach in all other reſpects, little fruit was to be expected from teaching, where it was not accompanied with good living. Which laſt defect is noted by Tully, in this remarkable paſſage (Cic. Tuſc. qu. l. 2.) "Scarce any of the philoſophers, ſays he, are formed in mind and manners, according to the dictates of reaſon: Scarce any, who do not make their inſtitutions rather an oſtentation of knowledge, than a rule of life; ſcarce any, who obey themſelves, and are governed by their own precepts." And ſo, Ariſtotle, long before, repreſented the ſcholars of the philoſophers, (Ariſt. Eth. l. 2. c. 3.) "as learning to wrangle, rather than to live, and being no more bettered by the moral leſſons of their maſters, than ſick men would be by the diſcourſes of their phyſician without taking his preſcriptions." To the ſame purpoſe, Quintilian ſpeaks of the philoſophers of his own time, (Quintil. inſt. l. 1. præf.) "That the moſt notorious vices were ſkreened under that name; and that they did not labour to maintain the character of philoſophers by virtue and ſtudy, but concealed very vicious lives, under an auſtere look and a different habit from the reſt of the world. All which is agreeable to what the Apoſtle ſays in the firſt chapter to the Corinthians.

As to their worſhip; it may be truly ſaid in general, that idolatry has been found in almoſt every country that has been diſcovered, and, in many of them, rites of worſhip very wicked and abominable. In ſome, they were performed by women, who, in performing them, laid aſide all natural ſhame and modeſty; and, in others, women proſtituted themſelves for the maintenance of their idol, and in honour of it. In ſome places, the people cut off pieces of their own fleſh, and threw them to their idol, and in many others they were found to offer human ſacrifices, and vaſt numbers of them at a time. The objects of their worſhip were the ſun, moon and ſtars, the four elements, the ſeveral quarters of the earth, apes, elephants, ſerpents, vipers, dragons, tygers, herbs, trees, birds, fiſhes, mountains, and in many places evil ſpirits. And, together, with their idolatrous worſhip, ſorcery, divination, and magick, were found to be common among them.

Among their doctrines, and heads of belief, were found theſe that follow. Two Gods, one of heaven, the other of earth; two ſorts of gods, dæmons to be feared, and conquerors and benefactors to be honoured; ſeveral gods, preſiding over ſeveral quarters of the earth; one God above the reſt, becoming ſo, by firſt paſſing through a multitude of bodies; gods ſubject to various changes, and limited certain times of government; Providence concerning itſelf only about the great affairs of the world; the tranſmigration of human ſouls into the bodies of beaſts; pagans eating and drinking like men; the ſouls of men, after death, needing meat and drink, and other accommodations of this life.

Many practices have been found among them that are abominable; women burning themſelves with their huſbands, when dead; the chief ſervants of a prince killed at his death, to attend him in another world; eating mens fleſh, and ſhambles for ſelling it; ſucking up the blood of wounded and dying perſons; feaſting upon the bodies of their captives; having a number of wives and concubines, and putting away wives at pleaſure; expoſing and killing their children, if born under an unhappy planet, or born before the mother was of ſuch an age, or if the parents found themſelves over-charged. More inſtances of the like kind may be ſeen in Mr. Lock's Eſſay, l. 1. c. 3. ſ. 9.

Theſe, and the like inſtances of corruption in worſhip, doctrine, and practice, which have prevailed, and do ſtill prevail, in ſeveral parts of the heathen world, may further ſhow that the wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God, or the inſufficiency of natural reaſon to be a guide in religion, and into what monſtrous opinions and practices whole nations may be led, where that is their guide, without any help from revelation. Nor will it take it off the force of this argument, to ſay, that theſe were owing to an undue uſe of their reaſon, which is in effect to beg the queſtion; or that the meaſure of reaſon they had was low and imperfect, ſince they appeared to be ſkilful and dextrous enough in worldly matters, in the arts of annoying their neighbours, and defending themſelves againſt incurſions, in entering into leagues for their mutual defence, and conducting the ordinary affairs of life according to the manners and cuſtoms of their ſeveral countries. Nor are the abſurdities in religion that have been found among them, greater than thoſe that have been found among the moſt polite nations before the publication of the goſpel; which are a joint proof, that no age or country, be it rude or civilized, inſtructed or uninſtructed in arts and ſciences, infected or uninfected with plenty and luxury, is ſecured by mere natural reaſon againſt falling into the groſſeſt errors and corruptions in religion.

Hitherto, you have ſeen the pernicious errors and wicked practices into which the world has fallen both in ancient and later days, notwithſtanding the light of natural reaſon, and the leſſons of philoſophers. But as the Chriſtian inſtitution, in its nature and tendency, is far better calculated for the reformation of mankind than any teaching or diſcipline the world had in the days of heatheniſm; ſo in fact it has had a far greater effect in the advancement of true religion, and the reformation of the lives and manners of men. For after that, in the wiſdom of God, the world by wiſdom (or natural reaſon) knew not God, it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe, or follow the light of divine revelation. Therefore, not to inſiſt upon the exalted degrees of purity and perfection to which Chriſtianity raiſed ſo many of its firſt profeſſors, "their contempt of the world, "their wonderful courage and patience under perſecution, "their mortifications and ſelf-denials, "their fervent love and charity and devotion," not, I ſay, to inſiſt upon theſe, though the true and genuine effects of Chriſtianity, becauſe it may be ſaid they were effects of an extraordinary kind, and wrought only upon particular perſons; let us take a view of it, not as it was embraced by ſingle perſons or families, but as it became the received religion of whole countries, and ſee what effects it had among them. And it is univerſally true, that whereever Chriſtianity prevails, oracles ceaſes, idols are deſtroyed, and the worſhip of the true God is eſtabliſhed. And whereas the heathen worſhip, as we have ſeen, conſiſted of the ſacrifices of beaſts and men, and was accompanied with many fooliſh, cruel and impure rites, Chriſtianity baniſhes all theſe, and, wherever it is received, eſtabliſhes a worſhip ſuitable to the pure and ſpiritual nature of God, a worſhip of the heart, conſiſting of prayers, and praiſes and thankſgivings, to him who is the author of our being, and under whoſe daily protection we live, and who beſtows upon us all the good things we enjoy. And there is no Chriſtian country, wherein this reaſonable ſervice is not ſolemnly performed by miniſters, and attended by the people; to which, and to the inſtructions and exhortations of Chriſtian preachers, it is to be aſcribed, that the knowledge of the true God, and the duty we owe him, is preſerved to ſuch a degree upon the minds of the generality of the people, and that ſeveral vices which were not only practiſed, but publickly allowed in the times of heatheniſm, are ſcarce known, and never named without abhorrence, in Chriſtian countries. Thus it has pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe. Nor can it be ſaid, with any colour of reaſon or truth, that the general order, regularity, and ſenſe of duty, which is found in Chriſtian countries at this day, compared with the cruelties, diſorders, and exceſſes of all kinds, that are generally practiſed in heathen nations, is not owing to the Chriſtian inſtitution and worſhip, and to the certainty of future rewards and puniſhments that Chriſt brought to light; the ſenſe of which is preſerved upon the minds of the people by ſuch publick teaching. And though ſo great is the corruption of human nature, that notwithſtanding thoſe means of inſtruction, and thoſe reſtraints from wickedneſs, many diſorders and exceſſes are practiſed in Chriſtian countries; it is ſufficient to our preſent purpoſe, "That if thoſe means and reſtraints were removed, the exceſſes would evidently be far greater and more general than they are;" "That the commiſſion of them among Chriſtians, is by far leſs frequent, and is attended with more caution and ſhame than among heathens;" "That beſides thoſe general influences of Chriſtianity, ſuch exceſſes are in ſome meaſure balanced by the extraordinary degrees of piety, purity, and exactneſs of life and manners, which are obſerved by multitudes of people in every Chriſtian country;" "That the deſign of the Chriſtian inſtitution was not to force men to be good, but only to propoſe fit motives and proper encouragements and aſſiſtances to make them ſo; and our Saviour himſelf (Matt. xiii. 24.) ſuppoſes that in his kingdom here upon earth there will always be tares growing up with the wheat (a mixture of good and bad) till he himſelf ſhall make the final ſeparation." Though his kingdom is not of this world, it is in it; and it is a very unfair inference, that becauſe wickedneſs is found in Chriſtian countries, therefore Chriſtianity has failed of its end.

Ver. 22.——The Jews require a ſign.] That is, beſides all the miracles and the reſurrection of Chriſt, the Jews demand ſome greater ſign from heaven to prove that Chriſt was the Meſſiah ſent from God.

——The Greeks ſeek after wiſdom.] i. e. They look for worldly learning and philoſophical ſpeculations in the goſpel, and deride it, becauſe they do not find it anſwer their appetites.

Ver. 23. ——We.] Chriſtians

——Preach Chriſt crucified.] Propoſe a crucified perſon for the example of all mankind, even as he is the Saviour of us all; and that through him alone we are to expect ſalvation, by his nailing our ſins to his croſs.

——Unto the Jews a ſtumbling block.] In regard of his poverty and ſufferings; the meanneſs and miſery of his condition in this world, which in no wiſe ſuited their expectations of a victorious Meſſiah, that ſhould reſcue them from their enemies.

——And unto the Greeks fooliſhneſs.] They concluded the incarnation of God impoſſible, and rejected the death of our Saviour, as an impiety contumelious to God. They could not reconcile ſervitude with ſovereignty, nor puniſhment with innocence, nor the loweſt human miſeries with the higheſt of divine honours; and accordingly they eſteemed it fooliſhneſs to expect eternal life from him, who was put to death; and that he was able to bring them to the higheſt glory, who himſelf ſuffered in the loweſt weakneſs.

Ver. 24.——But to them that are called.] This is the Apoſtle's limitation of his diſcourſe; as much as if he had ſaid, what I have ſaid in the foregoing clauſe relates only to the unconverted: for as many Jews and Greeks as have embraced the goſpel, they believe that God the Father made and upholdeth all things, and redeemed all men by his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, in which both the power and wiſdom of God is demonſtrable. And this Chriſt is properly called the power and wiſdom of God. See ver. 30.

CHAP. II.

He declareth that his preaching, 1 though it bring not excellency of ſpeech, or of 4 human wiſdom ; yet conſiſteth in the 4, 5 power of God : and ſo far, excelleth, 6 the wiſdom of this world, and 9 human ſenſe, as that 14 the natural man cannot underſtand it.

AND I brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of ſpeech, or of wiſdom, declaring unto you the teſtimony of God.

2 For I determined not to know any thing among you, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified.

3 And I was with you in weakneſs, and in fear, and in much trembling.

4 And my ſpeech, and my preaching was not with enticing words of mans wiſdom, but in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of power :

5 That your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God.

6 Howbeit, we ſpeak wiſdom among them that are perfect : yet not the wiſdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought.

7 But we ſpeak the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, even the hidden wiſdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory.

8 Which none of the princes of this world knew : for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

9 But as it is written, Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

10 But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit : for the Spirit ſearcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, ſave the ſpirit of man which is in him ? even ſo the things of God knoweth no man but the Spirit of God.

12 Now we have received, not the ſpirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God ; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

13 Which things alſo we ſpeak, not in the words which mans wiſdom teacheth, but which the holy Ghoſt teacheth ; comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual.

14 But the natural man receiveth not the things of the ſpirit of God : for they are fooliſhneſs unto him ; neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned.

15 But he that is ſpiritual, judgeth all things, yet he himſelf is judged of no man.

16 For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may inſtruct him ? But we have the mind of Chriſt.

In this chapter the Apoſtle proceeds in his former argument concerning the plain way of preaching the goſpel, which he further confirms by his own practice and example in reference to

I. His preaching, laid down negatively, or by removal of the other way, ver. 1. amplified by the ground thereof ; his determination in this caſe, ver. 2.

II. His perſon ; in a mean outward appearance, ver. 3.

III. His preaching again ; expreſſed both negatively and poſitively, ver. 4. amplified by the ground or end thereof, ver. 5.

He ſhews that the matter of his preaching is wiſdom, yet negatively, not worldly wiſdom, ver. 6. but poſitively, divine wiſdom, deſcribed,

1. By the myſterioutneſs and antiquity of it, ver. 7.

2. By the unſearchableneſs of it by human underſtanding, ver. 8. which he proves by a teſtimony of the Prophet Eſay, ver. 9. yet,

He ſhews how they come to the knowledge of this wiſdom, viz. by the Spirit of God, amplified, by ſhewing,

1. How the Spirit comes to know theſe things, ver. 10. which he illuſtrates by a compariſon of man's knowledge, ver. 11.

2. That true believers are partakers of the Spirit, who reveals theſe things to them, ver. 12, Then

He returns to his former ſubject concerning the way of preaching, both negatively and poſitively ; with the reaſon why they, the Apoſtles, uſe this way, taken from the nature of the things they preach about ; which, ſays he, are ſpiritual things, ver. 13. And

He gives the reaſon why ſpiritual things find no better entertainment.

1. Becauſe of the low eſteem men have of them.

2. Becauſe of their inability to underſtand them, ver. 14. which inability he illuſtrates by its oppoſite, the knowledge and underſtanding of ſpiritual perſons in ſpiritual things ; and amplifies by the effect thereof, freedom from the judgment of others, ver. 15.

3. Confirms. In reference to the ignorance of the natural man, by the cauſe of it ; want of one to reveal it to him : and in reference to the knowledge of the ſpiritual man, and by the cauſe thereof likewiſe, which is the ſpirit of God revealing the mind of Chriſt, ver. 16.

Ver. 1. —— Brethren.] In Chriſt, the Chriſtians that dwelt at Corinth.

——— Not with excellency of ſpeech] Or, as it is ſaid before, not with wiſdom of words, ch. i. 17. i. e. he ſtudied not to gratify their curioſity with rhetorical ſtrains, or philoſophical niceties, to pleaſe their wanton genius's, but ſolidly to inform their judgment with the great and neceſſary duties of the goſpel, and to furniſh them with the ſtrongeſt arguments and motives to a Chriſtian life ; where, note, that we are not forbid to uſe eloquence or excellency of ſpeech in preaching the goſpel, but only we are to take care not to aſcribe the efficacy thereof to human acquiſitions ; for was there not an inward operation of the Spirit in the matter preached, all the eloquence that man can attain unto would never produce that reformation, that good influence upon mens lives, as we ſee the preaching of Paul did produce upon the Corinthians. So that

The whole that Paul means in this Scripture, is only to caution us Chriſtians, not to ſuppoſe that the word of God ſtands in need of human eloquence to enforce it upon the conſciences of men.

——— The teſtimony of God.] Which the Apoſtles bare concerning the Meſſiah, or Son of God, his death, his reſurrection and exaltation to be a prince and the Saviour of all mankind ; which are called the teſtimonies of God, or, the witneſs of God, 1 John v. 9. becauſe God teſtified to the truth of theſe doctrines by ſigns and wonders, and divers miracles and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, Heb. ii. 4.

Ver. 2. I determined to know, &c.] To appear to know, or to act as one who knows nothing of the eloquence and wiſdom of the Greeks, but only to give them the knowledge of a crucified Saviour ; which was to them fooliſhneſs, ch. i. 23.

Ver. 3. I was with you in weakneſs.] Not ſupported by any earthly power; ſo that he was afraid leſt the ſame obſtruction ſhould hinder his preaching, and the fruit thereof, as before happened unto him in ſome other cities, of which letts and hinderances; ſee the general preface to the Epiſtles.

Ver. 4. ——Was not with enticing words of mans wiſdom.] See the note on ver. 1. where obſerve, that a miniſter's words ought not to be high-ſwelling, but heart-inflaming words.

——In demonſtration of the ſpirit and of power.] i. e. The doctrine which Paul preached was accompanied with, and confirmed by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, to convince them that Jeſus was riſen from the dead, and was made Lord of all; whom therefore they ought to believe and obey. He did not go about to bewitch men with fair ſpeeches, and ſophiſtical arguments; but he confirmed the truth of his doctrine, which was delivered with all plainneſs, gravity, and ſincerity; by ſtrange and miraculous operations, to which he was enabled by the Holy Ghoſt.

Some perchance may aſk, where is now that demonſtration of the Spirit, &c.? Anſw. We are not now to expect that gift of miracles, nevertheleſs, the miniſtry of the word is ſtill attended with a Divine Power of the Spirit, enlightning the underſtanding, and perſuading the conſcience, which may be called a demonſtration of the Spirit; becauſe the evidence of truth is no longer diſputed or contradicted, but the underſtanding aſſents to the word as true, and the will embraces it as good.

Ver. 5. That your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men.] i. e. That your faith or belief of the Goſpel ſhould not ſeem to be obtained by human wiſdom and eloquence of ſpeech, but be aſcribed to a Divine Power, influencing ſuch weak means, as my plain preaching was among you.

Human faith is an aſſent to any thing credible, as credible upon the fallible teſtimony of man it is founded on, and reſolved into the authority of the ſpeaker. But

Divine faith is an aſſent to any thing credible, as credible upon the infallible teſtimony of God, and is grounded on, and reſolved into the evidence of Divine Revelation. Upon this foot ſtood the Corinthians faith; not in the wiſdom of men, which, if ſuch wiſdom had been ſufficient to make them perfect, abounded in their city, (ſee the Introduction to this Epiſtle) but in the Power and Wiſdom of God, or that Divine Revelation, which was perfected from God the Father through Jeſus Chriſt, his Son our Lord, whom Paul preached. And therefore from hence, as from many other parts of Scripture.

That a Divine Revelation was not only expedient, but highly needful to be a ſure guide in matters of religion.— This has in part been proved in the notes on the 1ſt chap. and 21ſt verſe. To which I ſhall now add, that

It is univerſally agreed, that the moſt ſucceſsful efforts of mere natural reaſon towards the diſcovery of Divine Truths, and the duties to be performed by us, with our obligation to perform them, were made by the ancient philoſophers. (ſee ch. i. ver. 21. in the notes.) Therefore, if they, after all their ſearches could never tell how, or in what manner, God was to be worſhipped, nor by what means ſinners might be reconciled to him, and recover his favour; if they never could come to a certain knowledge, concerning the immortality of the ſoul, and future rewards and puniſhments, which are the principal motives to the performance of our duty, and the only motives that can make it regarded by the generality of mankind: If the differences among the philoſophers, concerning points of the greateſt importance in religion, were ſo many, and ſo eagerly purſued by the ſeveral ſects; that, inſtead of informing mankind in their duty, they perplexed and diſtracted them, and at laſt, left them under greater uncertainties than they were in before, while no one had more authority than another, to preſcribe a fixed ſcheme of duties; if many of the philoſophers mixed precepts of vice with their precepts of virtue, and if in fact, under their direction and diſcipline, the Heathen world and generality of mankind in their ſeveral ages, remained in a ſtate of groſs idolatry, uncleanneſs, impiety and immorality of all kinds; it follows, that either mankind muſt remain irrevocably in a ſtate of ignorance and corruption, or that there muſt be ſome Divine Revelation to help them out of it. And

Truly, it is abſurd to ſuppoſe, that either philoſophy, or any thing out of a Divine Revelation could do it. The philoſophers were moſt ſenſible of the great darkneſs and degeneracy of the human mind; whoſe ſenſe thereof may be eaſily gathered from this paſſage of Tully: "If, (ſays Cicero in his Tuſcul. qu. l. 3. præf.) nature had ſo framed us, as to give us a full and perfect view of her, and an ability to follow her as our guide, then mankind would have needed no other teacher; but now the light we receive from her, is no more than little ſparks which we quickly extinguiſh by corrupt lives and perverſe opinions; ſo that the true light of nature is no where to be found." And then he proceeds, "there are in our minds the ſeeds of virtue, by which nature would conduct us to happineſs, if they were allowed to grow up. But now, no ſooner are we born, but we fall into a wretched ſtate of depravity and corruption of manners, and opinions." Yet though the philoſophers ſaw this depravity and corruption clearly; it is not to be wondered that they could not find out a cure for it, becauſe they knew not the cauſe thereof. For, the recovery of mankind depended wholly upon the will and pleaſure of God, and the method of it was not to be known but by a particular revelation from him. The means whereby it was to be wrought effectually for our ſalvation, was a ſupernatural aſſiſtance, which being his own free gift, could not be made known and cenſured by any other hand. And therefore,

We find two of the greateſt philoſophers, Socrates and Plato, deſpairing of the recovery of mankind out of a ſtate of error and corruption, without ſome extraordinary aſſiſtance from God. For Socrates tells the Athenians, "that when he is gone, they will fall into an irrecoverable ſtate, unleſs God ſhall take care of them, and ſend them another inſtructor;" ſee Plato Apol. Socratis. And Plato ſpeaking of the wrong methods of education among the Athenians, ſays, "That in ſuch a ſtate of things, whatever is kept right and as it ought to be, muſt be effected by a Divine Interpoſition," de republ. l. 6. See alſo Plato in Phæd. But

Should it be granted that ſome or other of the philoſophers had in their ſeveral writings diſcovered by the light of natural reaſon the whole of religion. What then? Would ſuch a diſcovery have made a Divine Revelation needleſs? No. For, whatever human reaſon pretends to diſcover, muſt be judged by human reaſon, whether it be true or falſe, and it was not likely the generality of people ſhould be able to make ſuch a judgment, ſince there was ſcarce any one point in which the philoſophers themſelves did not oppoſe and contradict one another, while no one pretended to have any higher guide than his own reaſon, nor by conſequence any right to advance and eſtabliſh his own notions in oppoſition to all the reſt. So that, in this caſe, it is manifeſt there would ſtill have been wanting a ſuperiour authority to give a ſanction to ſome one ſcheme, which could not be given otherwiſe than immediately from God, or by ſome perſon who gave evident teſtimonies of his coming from God; and none of the philoſophers pretending to this, mankind were left to be toſſed about by contrary waves, without either pilot, or ſtar, or compaſs to bring them to their harbour. Some of the philoſophers had indeed an implicit ſubmiſſion paid to their dictates, but that was only for their own ſcholars, who thought themſelves bound to maintain the doctrines of their ſect as ſuch, though without any pretence of Divine Authority in the founder. But the caſe was otherwiſe with our Saviour: He is ſaid by the Evangeliſts to teach with authority, and to teach with power; and he had a right ſo to do, becauſe he proved by his miracles, that he had a commiſſion from God, and by that was fully impowered to declare the will of God, and to deliver to mankind a fixt, certain, and indiſpenſible rule of duty; ſee Matt. vii. 29. Luke iv. 32. And

Whoever ſearches into the volume of that rule, will find it to contain ſo many excellencies, that every wiſe and good man muſt find it his intereſt to wiſh the Goſpel-revelation to be true; whether we conſider the ends it propoſes, or the means it delivers, and informs us of, for the attainment of thoſe ends. For, The great ends it propoſes, are, the perfection of human nature, and the happineſs of mankind, to remove us from the ſtate of brutes, and advance us to the perfection of angels, and, upon the whole, to lay a ſure foundation for our peace and happineſs, both temporal and eternal.

The means it uſes for attaining thoſe great ends, are of ſeveral ſorts. For inſtance; fierceneſs and cruelty, and an unreſtrained enjoyment of ſenſual pleaſures, being the diſtinguiſhing characters of the brutal nature; the Goſpel-revelation abounds with prohibitions of anger, malice, hatred, revenge, and the like brutal qualities; and alſo lays the ſtrongeſt reſtraints upon ſenſual pleaſures and delights, and ſtrictly forbids the enjoyment of them beyond the bounds it has ſet. And this, not only in the outward acts, but alſo in the inward thoughts, imaginations, and deſires; which corrupt the ſoul, and keep it in a diſpoſition to acts of cruelty and uncleanneſs, and in a readineſs to proceed to the exerciſe of them, whenever provocations or enticements come in the way.

And theſe prohibitions duly attended to, in inward deſires as well as outward acts, at the ſame time that they ſet us above the condition of brutes, do alſo lay a foundation for the peace and happineſs of our lives; which experience, as well as the univerſal conſent of the wiſeſt men in all ages, proves to be interrupted and deſtroyed by nothing ſo much, as the indulging unruly luſts and paſſions. And whereas, next to theſe, the happineſs of this life is greatly impaired by ſickneſs, want, oppreſſion, and many other temporal calamities; Chriſtianity provides for our comfort under all theſe, not upon the principles of the ancient philoſophers, " becauſe they are common to mankind, and we cannot avoid them, and death will put an end to them;" but by aſſuring us, that they come from the hand of a wiſe and good God, who can, and will either deliver us from them, or ſupport us under them, and that they are deſigned by him to wean us from the delights of this world, and to prepare us for the enjoyment of a much better. Of the like tendency, are the many precepts of the Goſpel, which command us not to ſet our hearts upon the things of this world, but to purſue them with moderation and indifference, and a conſtant reſignation to the will of God; as theſe do not only prevent all the vexation that otherwiſe attends the loſs of them and our diſappointments about them, but alſo diſengage the heart from them, and give it greater liberty, as well as a readier diſpoſition, to attend and purſue the affairs of the next life.

For though it is certain, that the precepts of Chriſtianity greatly tend to our comfort and happineſs in this life, it is as certain, that they are chiefly deſigned to prepare us for the happineſs of another. The rules of the philoſophers were many of them wiſely calculated for the good of human ſociety, and the members of it in this world; but had by no means ſuch a direct tendency and relation to the ſpiritual enjoyments of the next, as appears to be the general aim and tenor of the rules of the Goſpel. And as the precepts of Chriſtianity are preparations for a happineſs of a very different nature from that which any worldly enjoyments afford, and have higher views and nobler ends than can be anſwered, or attained by thoſe of mere morality; in theſe reſpects, it was neceſſary that the Goſpel precepts ſhould be built upon higher principles than thoſe of morality; and that they ſhould be of a more pure, refin'd, and exalted nature, and enforced by higher and more noble motives.

Accordingly, Chriſtianity firſt gives us a true knowledge of the nature of God; that it is not impure as the greateſt part of the heathens believed, nor yet ſevere and terrible, according to the general tenor of the Jewiſh diſpenſation, as given to a ſtiff-necked and obſtinate people; but that he is a being of a pure ſpiritual nature, and is kind to us, and loves to do us good, and has given the higheſt proof of it in ſending his own Son to die for us and redeem us from eternal death, to the end he might engage our love and obedience to him, and we by that means procure eternal happineſs to our ſelves. And by this knowledge of his nature, we are led to ſee, that he muſt not be worſhipped according to the impure rites of the heathen ſervices, nor yet by the ſacrifices of beaſts, which were only types of our redemption by Chriſt; but with a ſteady attention of the ſoul, and a pure heart, and ſincere intentions and reſolutions of obedience; which our Saviour briefly expreſſes by worſhipping God in Spirit and truth, John iv. 23. and which has a natural tendency to fit us for the Divine Exerciſes of praiſe and contemplation in the next life, and, in the mean while, is a means of preſerving a conſtant communication between God and us, during our continuance in this world.

To the ſame ſpiritual ends, tend all the duties of life which are either peculiar to the Chriſtian inſtitution, or at leaſt are carried by it to greater degrees of purity and perfection. Such are, with regard to our ſelves; holineſs of heart; a ſober uſe of the enjoyments of life, with mortifications and ſelf-denials as we find occaſion; an indifference about the things of this world, compared with our care about the things of the next; the ſeeking thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God; the having our converſation in Heaven, the laying up our treaſure in Heaven, and the keeping a ſtrict watch over our thoughts as well as actions. With regard to our neighbour, the forgiveneſs of injuries, the loving of enemies, the doing all the good we can to men for God's ſake, the bleſſing them that curſe us, the praying for them that deſpitefully uſe us and perſecute us, and the overcoming evil with good. The precepts which relate to our ſelves, prepare us for Heaven, as it is a place of pure ſpiritual enjoyments; and thoſe which relate to our neighbour, prepare us for it, as it is a place where love, and peace, and unity reign, to the greateſt degree, and in the higheſt perfection. And whereas not only the Heathen, but alſo the Jewiſh worſhip, conſiſted chiefly in outward rites and ordinances; there are no more than two of that ſort in our Saviour's inſtitution, and thoſe very plain and ſignificant; baptiſm, by which we are admitted into the ſociety of Chriſtians, and all the advantages of it: and the Lord's Supper, by which we declare our continuance in that ſociety; thankfully commemorating the great work of our redemption by Chriſt, and applying to our ſelves the comforts and benefits of it; and at the ſame time, reſolving to live as becomes his diſciples, and receiving ſpiritual ſtrength to ſupport us in that reſolution. But,

Becauſe the ſenſe of our natural corruption and infirmity might well diſcourage us from attempting to live up to the pure and ſpiritual precepts of the Goſpel, and to bring our hearts to a thorough liking of them, and an habitual obedience to them; therefore the ſame Goſpel enſures a ſupernatural aſſiſtance to all thoſe who ſhall deſire and pray for it, to ſupport them againſt temptations, and preſerve in them a conſtant deſire and endeavour to conform their lives to the laws of Chriſt. If ye, ſays our Saviour, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more ſhall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him: Luke xi. 13. By which ſpirit our natures are renewed, Rom. xii. 2. and our hearts ſanctify'd, Rom. vi. 13. and by the ſame ſpirit we are ſtrengthened with might in the inner man, Epheſ. iii. 16.

And again, becauſe men, through a conſciouſneſs of their manifold offences againſt God, would be in perpetual dread of the Divine Juſtice, and, in a ſenſe of their great failings and infirmities, would think themſelves unworthy to approach a Being of infinite purity, and deſpair of recovering his favour when they have offended him by the tranſgreſſion of their duty; therefore, to comfort ſincere Chriſtians, and encourage them to perſevere in their duty, the Son of God, who took our nature upon him, hath ſatisfied the Divine Juſtice by dying for us, and is appointed the interceſſor between God and man, and the mediator of a new covenant; by which all who ſincerely deſire and endeavour to perform their duty, are not only aſſured of ſupernatural aſſiſtance to enable them to diſcharge it, but alſo upon a ſincere repentance, and faith in him, are entitled to pardon and forgiveneſs if they tranſgreſs it, and aſſured, that upon theſe terms they ſhall be reſtored to the favour of God, and the comfortable hope of eternal life, notwithſtanding ſuch tranſgreſſions.

This is the account which the New Teſtament gives, of the redemption wrought for us by Chriſt: That his death was a ſatisfaction made to the Divine Juſtice for the ſins of mankind; that through faith in him, we are aſſured of the forgiveneſs of our ſins upon our repentance and amendment; that being forgiven, we are juſtified in the ſight of God; that being juſtified in his ſight, we are reconciled to him; that he who reconciles us to God, ſanctifies our hearts by the Holy Spirit, to enable us to perform the will of God, and thereby to continue in his favour; that for the ſame end, he mediates and intercedes for us with God, while we continue in this preſent life; and, that through him we have the promiſe of life eternal. This is a ſcene full of comfort to all thoſe who comply with the terms of the Goſpel; and, that good Chriſtians may be aſſured that this is the true account, and that by conſequence the hope and comfort they build upon the redemption wrought for them by Chriſt, and their truſt in him, are well founded; I will give them in one view, and in the words of Scripture, what is plainly delivered there, on each of the forementioned heads.

1. Chriſt, by his death, made ſatisfaction to the Divine Juſtice for the ſins of mankind. This the Scripture ſets forth by the expreſſions, of dying for us, of bearing our ſins, of taking away our ſins, of being a propitiation for our ſins, of purchaſing and redeeming, or ranſoming us with the price of his blood.

——— By dying for us.] — He laid down his life for us. — He died for our ſins. — He gave himſelf for us. — He was delivered for our offences. — He taſted death for every man. Agreeably to the Prophecy concerning him, He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities, 1 John iii. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 3. 1 John iii. 16. Rom. iv. 25.

———By bearing our ſins.]— He was once offered to bear the ſins of many. — He bare our ſins in his own body on the tree. — Agreeably to the Prophecies concerning him, He hath born our griefs and carried our ſorrows. — The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all, Heb. ii. 9. Iſa. liii. 5. Heb. ix. 26. 1 Pet. ii. 24. Iſa. liii. 4. — liii. 6.

———By taking away our ſins.] — He was manifeſted to take away our ſins. — He put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf. — He hath waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood. — The blood of Jeſus Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin, 1 John iii. 5. Heb. ix. 26. Rev. i. 5. 1 John i. 17.

——— By being a propitiation for our ſins.] — Him God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood. — God ſent his Son to be a propitiation for our ſins. — He is the propitiation for our ſins, — and not for ours only, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world, Rom. iii. 25. 1 John iv. 10. 1 John ii. 2.

——— By purchaſing, and redeeming or ranſoming us with the price of his blood.] — He purchaſed the Church of God with his own blood. — He came to give his life a ranſom for many. — He gave himſelf a ranſom for all. — We are bought with a price. — In him we have redemption through his blood. — He hath redeemed us to God by his blood. — We are redeemed with the precious blood of Chriſt, Acts xx. 28. Matt. xx. 28. 1 Tim. ii. 6. 1 Cor. vi. 20. Eph. i. 7. Col. iii. 4. Rev. v. 9. 1 Pet. i. 18.

2. The Divine Juſtice being ſatisfied, we are aſſured of the forgiveneſs of our ſins through Chriſt upon a ſincere repentance. His fore-runner, John the Baptiſt, preached the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins, Luke iii. 3. Chriſt tells us, His blood was ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins. — After the reſurrection, the Apoſtles are directed by him to preach repentance and remiſſion of ſins in his name among all nations. — Luke xxiv. 47. Accordingly, their preaching was this: Acts v. 31. Him God hath exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſins. — Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jeſus, for the remiſſion of ſins. — Through this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins. — To him give all the Prophets witneſs, that through his name whoſoever believeth in him ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins. — God was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them. — In him we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveneſs of ſins. — And we are commanded to forgive one another, even as God, for Chriſt's ſake, hath forgiven us, Acts ii. 38. — xiii. 38. Acts x. 43. 2 Cor. v. 19. Epheſ. i. 7. — iv. 32.

3. Our ſins being forgiven, we are juſtified by Chriſt in the ſight of God. By him all that believe are juſtified. — We are juſtified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jeſus Chriſt. — Being juſtified by his blood, we ſhall be ſaved from wrath through him. — God hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin, that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. — Acts xiii. 39. 1 Cor. vi. 11. Rom. iii. 24. Rom. v. 9. 2 Cor. v. 21. Even the righteouſneſs of God, which is by faith of Jeſus Chriſt unto all, and upon all them that believe, Rom. iii. 22.

4. Being juſtified by Chriſt, we are reconciled to God. Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. — We are reconciled to God by the death of his Son. — Us, who were enemies, hath Chriſt reconciled in the body of his fleſh, through death. — He hath made peace through the blood of his croſs, by him to reconcile all things unto himſelf. — God hath reconciled us to himſelf by Jeſus Chriſt; — who ſuffered for ſin, that he might bring us unto God. — And, we are accepted in the beloved, Rom. v. 2. — 10. Col. i. 21. — i. 20. 2 Cor. v. 18. 1 Pet. iii. 18. Epheſ. i. 6.

5. Having reconciled us to God, he ſanctifies our hearts by the holy Spirit, to enable us to perform our duty, and thereby to continue in God's favour. — We are choſen to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit, — and through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience. — We are ſanctified through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt. — God hath not called us to uncleanneſs, but unto holineſs, — who hath alſo given unto us his holy Spirit. — The Spirit of God dwelleth in us, — and our body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, and we are an habitation of God through the Spirit. — We are renewed by the Holy Ghoſt, — and quickned by the Spirit, — and ſtrengthned with might by the Spirit in the inner man. — And it is through the Spirit that we mortify the deeds of the body, — by which deeds, we grieve and quench the Spirit, 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. 1 Pet. i. 2. Heb. x. 10. 1 Theſſ. iv. 7, 8. Rom. viii. 9. 1 Cor. vi. 19. Epheſ. ii. 22. Acts ii. 38. John vi. 63. Epheſ. iii. 16. Rom. viii. 13.

6. He who aſſiſts us by his Spirit upon earth, to enable us to do the will of God, and thereby to continue in his favour, is our conſtant Mediator, Interceſſor, and Advocate with God in Heaven, Epheſ. iv. 30. 1 Theſſ. v. 19. Luke xi. 13. to preſent our prayers for the ſupply of our wants, and to obtain a compaſſionate regard to our failings and infirmities. He is the Mediator of the New Covenant. — There is one Mediator between God and Man, even the Man Chriſt Jeſus. — He makes interceſſion for us at the right hand of God. — He appears in the preſence of God for us. — No man cometh unto the Father but by him. — He is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt who come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever lives to make interceſſion for them. — If any man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous. — He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and therefore let us come boldly to the throne of Grace, that we may find grace and mercy to help in time of need, — and let us draw near with a true heart, and full aſſurance of faith. — In him we have boldneſs and acceſs with confidence, Heb. xii. 24. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Rom. viii. 34. Heb. ix. 24. John xiv. 6. Heb. vii. 25. 1 John ii. 1, 2. Heb. iv. 14. — x. 22. Epheſ. iii. 12.

7. As it is he who enables us to do the will of God, and to preſerve his favour in this life, ſo it is through him that we are made partakers of life eternal: The Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world, — to ſeek and to ſave that which was loſt, — that we might live through him, — that the world through him might be ſaved, — that believing, we might have life through his name, — that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. — Through him we are ſaved from wrath. — He hath delivered us from the wrath to come. — Eternal life is the gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. — God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son, — who is the captain of our ſalvation, — the author of eternal ſalvation to all thoſe that obey him: — neither is there ſalvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved, John iv. 14. Luke xix. 10. 1 John iv. 9. — xx. 31. John iii. 17. — xx. 31. 1 Theſſ. i. 10. John iii. 15. Rom. v. 9. — vi. 23. 1 John v. 11. Heb. ii. 10. — v. 9. Acts iv. 12. Now,

What has been ſaid in this note, lay before you a model of that preaching which Paul boaſteth of in this chapter, and exhibits to you a ſhort view of the Chriſtian inſtitution both in the ends it propoſes, and the means for attaining thoſe ends; and it appears from the whole, that the method which the Goſpel lays down for our ſalvation, is altogether a conſiſtent and uniform ſcheme, worthy of God, and contrived with the greateſt wiſdom and goodneſs for the comfort and happineſs of men. It appears plainly alſo, from what has been noted, that our faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God. That human reaſon is unable, without Revelation, to direct us either to the ends, or the means, and that however the due uſe and application of our reaſon, may anſwer the purpoſes of this life, it is by no means ſufficient to guide us in the way to the next.

Ver. 6. Howbeit we ſpeak wiſdom among them that are perfect.] As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, though the wiſe-men of the world account me a fool, and my preaching fooliſhneſs, yet I ſpeak the higheſt wiſdom among them that are perfect, or fully inſtructed in the principles of the Chriſtian faith. (ſee the preceding note on ver. 5.) Now the Apoſtle declares what this wiſdom is in the next verſe, where he calls it, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery.

Ver. 7. —— We ſpeak the wiſdom of God in a myſtery.] i. e. The Goſpel of Chriſt. Which the Apoſtle ſtiles the wiſdom of God, becauſe it makes men truly wiſe; wiſe to ſalvation, directing us to uſe the beſt means, in order to the beſt and higheſt end; (ſee the notes on ver. 5.) and the hidden myſterious wiſdom of God, or, the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, even the hidden wiſdom, &c. becauſe it lay hid in the ſecret counſels of God from all eternity, and afterwards lay hid under Jewiſh types; but is now revealed by the miniſtry of Chriſt and his Holy Apoſtles, revealed in due time to our glory.

—————— Unto our glory.] That is to be the means of our happineſs and glory.

Ver. 8. Which none of the princes of this world knew.] None of the philoſophers, or moſt celebrated naturaliſts, could ever attain unto the perfect knowledge, which we arrive at through the Goſpel; ſee the notes on ver. 5. But from the next words, for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory; ſome would confine this expreſſion to the princes of the Jewiſh nation, who were the immediate murderers of Chriſt, as Caiaphas, Herod, Annas, &c. But from the whole context it more reaſonably ought to ſignify both the learned rabbies of the Jewiſh nation, and their celebrated doctors, and the Heathen philoſophers, who are here ſtiled, princes of this world, as utterly unacquainted with the wiſdom of the other world.

—————— The Lord of glory.] Chriſt is the Lord of glory by right of creation, John i. 3. by right of inheritance, Heb. i. 2. by donation, Pſ. ii. 8. Matt. xxviii. 18. and by right of redemption, 1 Pet. i. 18. He is alſo Lord of glory, as he is ſo in himſelf, and as he is the author of glory to his followers. Where note, that Chriſt was only crucified as man; but becauſe the ſame man was alſo God, he is called the Lord of glory; ſee the notes on John i.

Ver. 9. But as it is written.] In Iſaiah lxiv. 4.

—————— Eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him.] Theſe words, though they are often applied in reſpect to the happineſs of Heaven, and a future ſtate, are not ſo to be underſtood in this place, where the Apoſtle, ſpeaking of the perfectneſs of the Goſpel-ſtate, above all that man can arrive at by the force of unenlightned reaſon, applies this quotation of Iſaiah to the ſaid Goſpel-ſtate, and to the bleſſings we are promiſed ſhall be enjoyed by them that love God here. So that

It ſhould be obſerved, that there is a two-fold revelation of a future ſtate, viz. A revelation by faith, which is the Goſpel-Revelation; and a revelation by viſion, which is the certain enjoyment of thoſe good things in Heaven, which the Goſpel promiſes to all thoſe that love God and keep his commandments in this ſtate of faith and probation. So the firſt revelation is made to us, while we are here in the body, by the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit. But the latter can only be enjoyed in Heaven, when we ſhall ſee as we are ſeen, and know as we are known. And therefore,

Theſe words of Iſaiah in their primary ſenſe may only intimate, that no man by his own ſenſe or reaſon, or by inſtruction from others, can diſcern what kindneſs God will afford to thoſe who wait upon him, except from the true God himſelf. And, as I have hinted above, both the context and oppoſition of theſe words to the revelation of theſe things by the Spirit, ſhew the Apoſtles intent to be this, "That no human wiſdom, by any thing that may be ſeen, heard of, or conceived by us, can acquaint us with the things taught by the Spirit, without a revelation; ſee the notes on ver. 5.

Ver. 10. — The Spirit.] Of God; ſee ver. 11. The Holy Ghoſt, ver. 13.

Ver. 12. —— The ſpirit of the world] That evil ſpirit which grovels upon the earth, and depreſſes our hearts, ſo as to retain us from the glory of God by worldly appetites.

—————— Freely given to us of God.] Which God of his infinite bounty and goodneſs, has given to us that believe in the name of Chriſt, through the ſame Chriſt his Son our Lord, what theſe things were I have particularly ſet down at the end of the note, on ver. 5. See alſo the note on ver. 13. as follows,

Ver. 13. Which things alſo we ſpeak, not in the words which mans wiſdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghoſt teacheth, comparing ſpiritual things with ſpiritual.] See the notes on ver. 5. And this will more fully appear to be true from the enforcement of moral duties in the New Teſtament, and the diſcouragement of thoſe that break them, not ſo much from conſiderations relating to this world, or any temporal benefit accruing from thence to ourſelves or others, as from the ſanctions of duty, which the civil relations among men have received from God, from the manner of God's dealings with men; from the example of Chriſt our Lord and Maſter; from the regard we owe to our Holy Profeſſion; from the relation we bear to Heaven while we live here upon earth; from the different ſpiritual ſources of moral and immoral actions; and from the influence which our regard or diſregard to the duties of morality, will have upon our future ſtate.

From the ſanctions of duty, which the civil relations among men have received from God. Magiſtrates muſt be obeyed, not only for wrath, but for conſcience-ſake, becauſe they are the ordinance of God; and they muſt alſo conduct themſelves towards the people, as the miniſters of God to them for good, Rom. i. 2, 5. i. 4 Husband and wife muſt inviolably adhere to each other, becauſe they are joined together and made one by God, who at the beginning made them male and female, and by whom whoremongers and adulterers will be judged, Mat. xix. 4, 6. Heb. xiii. 4. Servants are commanded to be obedient to their maſters in ſingleneſs of heart, fearing God; with good will doing ſervice as to the Lord, and not unto men; and maſters to be juſt and merciful to their ſervants, as knowing that they alſo have a maſter in Heaven, Epheſ. vi. 6, 7. Col. iii. 22. Epheſ. vi. 9. And in general, whatſoever we do, the Goſpel enjoins us to do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men; and that whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, we do all to the glory of God, Col. iii. 23. 1 Cor. x. 31.

—From the manner of God's dealings with men, Matt. v. 44. We muſt be kind to enemies as well as friends, becauſe God maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth rain on the juſt and on the unjuſt. We muſt forgive one another, becauſe God for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven us, Epheſ. iv. 32. And upon God's having manifeſted his love to us in ſending his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him, 1 John iv. 9. is grounded the inference which John makes beloved, if God ſo loved us, we ought alſo to love one another, 1 John iv. 11. and the loving one another is the moſt conſtant and forcible motive of good offices one to another.

—From the example of Chriſt our Lord and maſter. Learn of me, ſays he, for I am meek and lowly, and ye ſhall find reſt to your ſouls, Matt. xi. 29. And, ſays the Apoſtle, Epheſ. v. 2. Walk in love, as Chriſt alſo loved us, and gave himſelf for us.—Let every one of us pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification; for even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf, Rom. xv. 2, 3.—Let nothing be done through ſtrife or vain-glory, but in lowlineſs of mind let each eſteem other better than themſelves: Look not every man on his own things, but every man alſo on the things of others; let this mind be in you, which was alſo in Chriſt Jeſus, Philip. xi. 3, 4, 5. —As he that hath called you, is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation, 1 Pet. i. 15.

—From the regard we owe to our holy profeſſion. Immoralities of all kinds are forbidden to Chriſtians, becauſe they ought to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called, Epheſ. iv. 1, 2, 3. with all lowlineſs and meekneſs, with long-ſuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring vouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. —They muſt walk worthy of God, who hath called them to his kingdom and glory, 1 Theſſ. ii. 12.—They muſt walk as children of light, Epheſ. v. 8 — Their converſation muſt be as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt, Phil. i. 27. They muſt adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things, Tit. xi. 10. and take care that the name of God and his doctrine be not blaſphemed, 1 Tim. vi. 1. or evil ſpoken of, among the Gentiles, through them.—We are to walk honeſtly (or decently) as in the day (the day-light of the Goſpel) not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in ſtrife and envying; and we muſt put on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof, Tit. xi. 5. Rom. xiii. 13, 14.

—From the relation we bear to Heaven, " while we live here upon earth.—Our converſation (or citizenſhip) is in Heaven, Phil. iii. 20. and becauſe we are only ſtrangers and pilgrims upon earth, we muſt abſtain from fleſhly luſts (the inordinate enjoyments of this world) which war againſt the ſoul, 1 Pet. ii. 11. and we are alſo put in mind that we are only ſojourners here, Heb. xi. 16. and have no continuing city, but ſeek one to come," that we may not ſet up our reſt in this world, nor be too ſollicitous about the things of it, but may have our heavenly country always in our eye, and make it our greateſt concern to arrive ſafely there.

—From the different ſpiritual ſources of moral and immoral actions. " Love, peace, gentleneſs, goodneſs, meekneſs, temperance," are recommended to our practice, Gal. v. 22, 23. James iii. 17. " as fruits of the ſpirit, and as the wiſdom that is from above, which is firſt pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eaſy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits. But adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, ſtrife, envying, murders, drunkenneſs, revellings, and ſuch like," are repreſented, Gal. v. 19, 20, 21. James iii. 15. " as works of the fleſh, and the fruits of that wiſdom which deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, devilish;" as proceeding from the corruptions of nature without the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, and from the ſuggeſtions of the Devil, of whom the Goſpel every where warns us as an implacable enemy to mankind, " who walketh about ſeeking whom he may devour," and whoſe wiles and ſnares we muſt not hope to eſcape, but by watchfulneſs and prayer, 1 Pet. v. 8. Epheſ. vi. 11, 18. 2 Tim. ii. 26.

— From the influence which our regard or diſregard to the duties of morality will have upon our future ſtate. Paul concludes a large catalogue of ſins, fornication, uncleanneſs, wrath, envy, &c. with this juſt but terrible ſentence, " of which I tell you before, (Gal. v. 21.) as I have alſo told you in time paſt, that they which do ſuch things ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God. On the contrary, the Goſpel recommends the practice of humility, by enſuring to it the kingdom of Heaven, Matt. v. 3. meekneſs, becauſe it is in the ſight of God of great price, 1 Pet. iii. 4. mercifulneſs, as the means of obtaining mercy, Matt. v. 7. temperance, as neceſſary to the running our Chriſtian courſe with ſucceſs, 1 Cor. ix. 25. purity of heart, as a neceſſary preparation to the ſeeing God, Matt. v. 8. charity, as it is the " laying up in ſtore for our ſelves a good foundation againſt the time to come, that we may attain eternal life," 1 Tim. vi. 18, 19. patience, and perſeverance in well doing, becauſe our " light affliction which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen, becauſe the things which are ſeen are temporal, but the things which are not ſeen, are eternal. See 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18.

This is the true Goſpel-morality; which makes all the relations among men, and the duties belonging to them, to center in God, and connects the offices of this life with the happineſs of the next; and it is no other in effect, than that which Paul more briefly lays down in the following words, Tit. ii. 11, 12, 13, 14. " the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world; looking for that bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. And of which the ſame Apoſtle in this chapter ſays, we ſpeak wiſdom among them that are perfect, &c. ver. 6.

Ver. 14.——The natural man.] One that has not the advantage and light of Divine Revelation, ſuch as the ancient philoſophers, who act only by the principles of human reaſon and worldly wiſdom.

——The things of the Spirit of God.] Evangelical truths. See the note on chap. i. ver. 23.

——Neither can he know them.] Except revealed. For as I have ſhewn at large in the note on the fifth verſe of this chapter, natural reaſon, by what helps ſoever aſſiſted and improved, is altogether inſufficient, without ſpiritual illumination to apprehend ſupernatural and evangelical truths, not that Chriſtianity obliges us to throw away our reaſon, but to bring it into captivity to the faith in Chriſt.

——Spiritually diſcerned.] Known only by the revelation communicated to us by the Spirit of God, or through the operation of the Spirit of God in his Son Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 15. But he that is ſpiritual.] i. e. Is led by the Spirit of God in the ſtudy of his revealed word.

——Judgeth.] Formeth a ſound judgment, or cometh to the knowledge of all things neceſſary for his ſalvation.

——Yet he himſelf is judged of no man.] i. e. God himſelf cannot be diſcerned. We are no where informed by revelation how God exiſteth; and therefore is not to be diſcerned by us, nor to be pried into by our vain curioſity.

Ver. 16. For who hath known, &c.] See Iſaiah xl. 13. and Jer. xxiii. 18. Wiſd. ix. 13. and Rom. xi. 34.

CHAP. III.

2 Milk is fit for children. 3 Strife and diviſion, arguments of a fleſhly mind. 7 He that planteth, and he that watereth, is nothing. 9 The miniſters are Gods fellow-workmen. 11 Chriſt the only foundation. 16 Men the temples of God, 17 which muſt be kept holy. 19 The wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God.

AND I, brethren, could not ſpeak unto you as unto ſpiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Chriſt.

2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

3 For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and ſtrife, and diviſions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?

4 For while one ſaith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal?

5 Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but miniſters by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man?

6 I have planted, Apollos watered: but God gave the increaſe.

7 So then, neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth: but God that giveth the increaſe.

8 Now he that planteth, and he that watereth, are one: and every man ſhall receive his own reward, according to his own labour.

9 For we are labourers together with God: ye are Gods husbandry, ye are Gods building.

10 According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wiſe maſter-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

11 For other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt.

12 Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, wood, hay, ſtubble:

13 Every mans work ſhall be made manifeſt. For the day ſhall declare it, becauſe it ſhall be revealed by fire; and the fire ſhall try every mans work, of what ſort it is.

14 If any mans work abide which he hath built thereupon, he ſhall receive a reward.

15 If any mans work ſhall be burnt, he ſhall ſuffer loſs: but he himſelf ſhall be ſaved; yet ſo, as by fire.

16 Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

17 If any man defile the temple of God, him ſhall God deſtroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

18 Let no man deceive himſelf: If any man among you ſeemeth to be wiſe in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wiſe.

19 For the wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God: for it is written, He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſs.

20 And again, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wiſe, that they are vain.

21 Therefore let no man glory in men: for all things are yours:

22 Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things preſent, or things to come; all are yours;

23 And ye are Chriſts; and Chriſt is Gods.

In this chapter the Apoſtle continues his argument againſt diviſions; wherein,

I. He repreſents the Corinthians condition, both literally, as not ſpiritual, but carnal; and metaphorically, as babes, ver. 1. Where he proves, (1.) By the food he was neceſſitated to provide for them, viz. milk, not meat, ver. 2. And, (2.) by their works, which were works of the fleſh, ſuch as ſtriſe, &c. which are generally mentioned at ver. 1. and particularly deſcribed by the occaſion thereof, or the matter about which they did divide themſelves and contend, viz. about their Teachers, ver. 4.

II. He diſſuades them from theſe diviſions, whereby they diſcovered their carnality. (1.) Becauſe their teachers are not principal agents in this work, but only inſtruments, whom God furniſhes with various meaſures of gifts as he pleaſes, ver. 5. (2.) Becauſe the ſucceſs of all their labours depends upon God's bleſſing, ver. 6. amplified by an inference, that therefore they are not to be ſo highly valued, as that there ſhould be ſchiſms and diviſions raiſed among the people on their account, ver. 7.

III. He perſuades to concord and unity. (1.) Becauſe of their paſtors in ſeveral reſpects, amplified by an exception of a difference in their reward, according to their different labours, ver. 8. and proved, becauſe they are cooperaters with God, whatever difference there be in their gifts or exerciſe of them, amplified by the effect of this cooperation in the Corinthians, ver. 9. (2.) Becauſe there is a unity of the foundation, concerning which he ſhews the workman or maſter-builder which laid the foundation, i. e. himſelf. Then he produces his commiſſion or authority ſo to do, the grace of God. And then gives a caution to be uſed by ſucceeding teachers, not to vary from this foundation, ver. 10. Which caution the Apoſtle enforces with ſeveral arguments: (1.) Becauſe there is no other foundation, ver. 11. (2.) Becauſe every man's work muſt be tried; where we find a ſuppoſition of different ſuperſtructures, ver. 12. The trial of them, and the means of their trial, by fire, ver. 13. (3.) Becauſe upon the trial every one ſhall be dealt with according to the nature of his work; which, if found to be ſolid, ſhall be entitled to a reward, ver. 14. But if ſlight, ſhall ſuffer loſs, yet not the loſs of the perſon, but of the labour, ver. 14. (4.) Becauſe of the danger of an ill ſuperſtructure; where is ſhewn the dignity of the believers, that they are the temples of God, ver. 16. And the danger of defiling them, with the reaſon thereof, ver. 17.

IV. He cautions the teachers againſt an over-meaning conceit of their own carnal wiſdom, and an exhortation to renounce it, ver. 18. (1.) Becauſe it is fooliſhneſs with God, foraſmuch as it tendeth to their ruin, ver. 19. And is unable to ſecure them againſt the power and juſtice of God, ver. 20. Then,

V. He admoniſhes the people, by way of concluſion, to all the foregoing diſcourſe concerning their contentions, not to glory in men; becauſe, ſays he, to the Corinthians, and in them to all Chriſtians, all are yours, ver. 21, 22. You are Chriſt's, and Chriſt is God's; and as he ſeeks the glory of God the Father, ſo ſhould we, ver. 23.

Ver. 1. —— As unto ſpiritual.] The ſpiritual man is he that ſtrictly and conſcientiouſly follows the precepts of the Goſpel, practiſing them in his life and converſation, not knowing any thing ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified, ch. ii. 2.

—— But as unto carnal.] Note, the Apoſtle muſt not be underſtood to mean that he believed the Corinthians, to whom he wrote, were abſolutely carnal; as if they were wholly returned to their vomit, forſaken Chriſt, and yielded themſelves to work all iniquity, or to the works of the fleſh, which are deſcribed at ver. 3. but we are to underſtand him to ſay comparatively, that they had too much carnality and corruption in them, and to ſavour too much of the fleſh, though, for the main, truly pious; and therefore he uſes the word (as) for mitigation ſake; as if he had ſaid, I could not ſpeak with you "but as unto carnal:" becauſe the fleſh in them luſted againſt the ſpirit, following, in many things, the deſires of the fleſh, not perceiving, or at leaſt not reliſhing many things of the ſpirit, as being but novices in the ſchool of Chriſt.

Ver. 2. Fed you with milk.] This is a metaphorical expreſſion, ſignifying, that the Apoſtle had not overcharged the minds of his converts with the myſterious part of the Goſpel knowledge, but had only catechized them with eaſy and common truths, which are the firſt principles of the doctrine of Chriſt; and theſe, ſays he, may as eaſily be digeſted in the heart and mind of a young convert, as milk is in the ſtomach of a young child.

Ver. 3. —— Ye are yet carnal.] i. e. As it follows, ye walk as yet after the rudiments of this world, after the manner of men, ſubject to your former paſſions, which are not yet brought into ſubjection to your reaſon by the Goſpel of Chriſt, ver 4.

Ver. 4. For while one ſaith, I am of Paul.] Or, I worſhip God after Paul's method or doctrine.

——— And another, I am of Apollos.] Or, I worſhip God according to the preaching of Apollos.

——— Are ye not carnal?] Do not you by this party-worſhip, turn your faith into faction? See ch. i. 12.

Ver. 5. ——— By whom.] Or, by whoſe miniſtry it has pleaſed God to ſend you the light of the Goſpel. It is true,

Ver. 6. I have planted.] I converted you firſt to the faith of Chriſt, I founded your Church. And,

——— Apollos watered.] This your preſent miniſter has watered, or cultivated the ſeeds of faith which I had ſown in your hears, and has refreſhed your ſouls with his conſtant and zealous preaching the word of truth. But,

——— God gave the increaſe,] i. e. Neither I nor he could have reaped any fruit of our labours, had not God diſpoſed your hearts by the internal operation of his grace to receive the words from us. So that God is both gracious in ſending the meſſengers of his will, and in diſpoſing the hearts of his people to receive their meſſage. Thus,

Ver. 8. ——— He that planteth, and he that watereth, are one.] In their miniſtry or commiſſion. Hence we are taught, not to eſteem the doctrine of the Goſpel on any ſuppoſed pre-eminence of the preacher, but purely becauſe it is the Goſpel of Chriſt; for all miniſters of the Goſpel are equal, are, as Paul ſays in the text, one in commiſſion. We are to eſteem the miniſter for the word's ſake, when he preaches nothing but the Goſpel, and not the doctrine for the ſake of the perſon that preaches it.

Ver. 9. For we.] Miniſters.

——— Labourers together with God.] Planting and watering where God commands us.

——— Ye.] The people to whom the word is preached, i. e. the Church of God.

——— God's huſbandry.] Or God's field, ſays Chryſoſtom, &c. Hence inferring, that the field (or Church of Chriſt) is God's, and the Apoſtles are his labourers, ſent and enabled by him for that work; and that they ought, as a field, to be fenced with the hedge of concord, and not be divided into parties.

Ver. 10. ——— I have laid the foundation.] i. e. I firſt taught the Corinthians the knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, and faith in him. See ver. 11.

——— And another buildeth, &c.] He ſpeaks here of Apollos, then Biſhop of Corinth.

Ver. 13. ——— By fire.] See the Introduction to this Epiſtle, Remark I.

——— The fire ſhall try every man's work.] Therefore this fire cannot be ſuppoſed to be the fire of purgatory, becauſe the Papiſts will not be ſo bold to ſay, that every man muſt go through that ſuppoſed ſtate of purgation before they go to Heaven. If they are ſo tenacious as to affirm it, let them tell me, what they think of martyrs, &c. at their departure out of this world. They cannot ſay they go to purgatory; and yet that muſt be granted, if they pretend to find out purgatory in this text.

Ver. 15. ——— So as by fire.] This is a proverbial expreſſion for thoſe that with much difficulty eſcape great danger. See Tillotſon's ſermon on this text.

Ver. 16. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, &c.] i. e. the Chriſtian Church, where God delighteth to dwell.

Ver. 17. ——— Defile.] Rend the temple of God by diviſions.

——— Which temple ye are.] See notes on ver. 16.

Ver. 18. ——— Seem to be wiſe in this world.] Or, is eſteemed ſkilful and learned in the wiſdom of this world, in philoſophy, eloquence, &c.

——— Let him become a fool.] i. e. Let him prefer the doctrine and faith of Chriſt crucified to that learning which the world accounteth wiſdom. See ch. i. ver. 17—25. and the notes thereon.

——— That he may be wiſe.] Unto ſalvation. See ch. ii. ver. 4, &c.

Ver. 19. ——— The wiſdom of this world is fooliſhneſs with God.] See ch. i. ver. 20, 21.

——— It is written.] In Job v. 13.

Ver. 20. And again.] In Pſalm xciv. 11.

Ver. 21. ——— Glory in men.] In Paul, or in Apollos, or in a doctrine in reſpect of the perſon that preacheth it.

——— All things are yours.] All the miniſtry is for the good of the whole Church. All miniſters, and miniſterial abilities, are given by God for the Churches ſervice, and ſpiritual advantage of the faithful. Thus Paul, and Apollos, and Cephas were for the miniſtry of the Church, to ſerve the Church according to their reſpective abilities. And, ——— The world.] i. e. All the good things of the world are ours to enjoy, according to God's creation; for we have all things eminently and tranſcendently in God and Chriſt, by whom we have a title to all things; ſee Revelations xxi. 7.

——— Or life.] This is ours, both in regard of the comfort and end thereof; becauſe, only the ſincere Chriſtian lives to purpoſe, by anſwering the great end of life, which is the promoting God's glory, and ſecuring his own ſalvation.

——— Or death.] i. e. Death is only profitable to a Chriſtian; becauſe none but a good Chriſtian can paſs thereby into life eternal; and thus we may learn, that both the preſent things of this life are created for us, and the things to come, which God has prepared for them that love him, are reſerved for us, if we love God by keeping his commandments.

Ver. 23. ——— Ye are Chriſt's.] i. e. The ſervants of Chriſt; the redeemed of Chriſt, the diſciples, not of Paul or of Apollos, or of any other, but of Chriſt alone.

——— Chriſt is God's.] Miniſter to publiſh the Goſpel of ſalvation to, and to reconcile man to God by his blood. So Chriſt, as Mediator between God and man, is God's miniſter of mercy, and for the glory of God.

CHAP. IV.

1 In what account the miniſters ought to be had. 7 We have nothing which we have not received. 9 The Apoſtles ſpectacles to the world, Angels and men, 13 The filth and off-ſcouring of the world: 15 Yet our fathers in Chriſt, 16 Whom we ought to follow.

LET a man ſo account of us, as of the miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God.

2 Moreover it is required in ſtewards, that a man be found faithful.

3 But with me it is a very ſmall thing that I ſhould be judged of you, or of mans judgment: yea, I judge not mine own ſelf.

4 For I know nothing by my ſelf, yet am I not hereby juſtified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts: and then ſhall every man have praiſe of God.

6 And theſe things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to my ſelf, and to Apollos, for your ſakes: that ye might learn in us not to think of men, above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one againſt another.

7 For who maketh thee to differ from another? and what haſt thou that thou didſt not receive? now if thou didſt receive it, why doſt thou glory as if thou hadſt not received it?

8 Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have reigned as kings without us: and I would to God ye did reign, that we alſo might reign with you.

9 For I think that God hath ſet forth us the apoſtles laſt, as it were appointed to death. For we are made a ſpectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men.

10 We are fools for Chriſt's ſake, but ye are wiſe in Chriſt: we are weak, but ye are ſtrong: ye are honourable, but we are deſpiſed.

11 Even unto this preſent hour, we both hunger and thirſt, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place;

12 And labour, working with our own hands: being reviled, we bleſs: being perſecuted, we ſuffer it:

13 Being defamed, we intreat: we are made as the filth of the world, and are the offſcouring of all things unto this day.

14 I write not theſe things to ſhame you, but as my beloved ſons I warn you.

15 For though you have ten thouſand inſtructors in Chriſt, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Chriſt Jeſus I have begotten you through the goſpel.

16 Wherefore I beſeech you, be ye followers of me.

17 For this cauſe have I ſent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved ſon, and faithful in the Lord, who ſhall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Chriſt, as I teach every where in every church.

18 Now ſome are puffed up as though I would not come to you.

19 But I will come to you ſhortly, if the Lord will, and will know, not the ſpeech of them which are puffed up, but the power.

20 For the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

21 What will ye? ſhall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the ſpirit of meekneſs?

The Apoſtle having warned the Corinthians againſt an undue eſteem of their miniſters, or not to have ſo much reſpect to the perſon who preaches, as to the doctrine preached. Now he proceeds to ſhew, (1.) what eſteem they ought to be in among their congregation, or what relation they (the preachers of the Goſpel) bare to the people, ver. 1. amplified by ſhewing the properties of a ſteward, ver. 2. (2.) He declares, that this character is no ways exaggerated for any eſteem of himſelf, by ſhewing the diſeſteem he makes of their judgment concerning himſelf; becauſe it belongs not to man to judge neither others, nor himſelf, ver. 3. and becauſe, it is God's property or prerogative to judge all men, ver. 4. which he amplifies by a prohibition (by way of inference) of their judging; and by the reaſon of God's fitneſs only to judge, ver. 5. (3.) He argues againſt their partiality, in judging of their miniſters, and againſt their factiouſneſs, both from his own example of modeſty and humility, ver. 6. and becauſe, whatſoever abilities and attainments they had, were beſtowed upon them by God for other ends and purpoſes, ver. 7. (4.) He grants their flouriſhing condition in reſpect of ſpiritual gifts; which he amplifies by a wiſh of the continuance of them, to which he ſubjoins the reaſon of his wiſh, ver. 8. and then illuſtrates their flouriſhing condition, by ſetting forth the contrary miſerable condition (in outward reſpects) of the Apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt; in a large enumeration of many calamities they underwent, ver. 9—13. amplified by ſhewing his intent in this enumeration, ver. 14. (5.) He ſhews his ſpiritual relation to them; that he had begotten them in Chriſt, ver. 15. amplified by their doctrine thereupon; to be followers of him, ver. 16. and by the means he uſed to draw them to the performance of this duty, which was his ſending Timothy to them, ver. 17. and his intention to come to them in perſon, where we find the occaſion, ver. 18. and the end of his coming, ver. 19. amplified by the reaſon, ver. 20. to which he adds, and concludes with the manner of his coming; which ſhould be according to their behaviour, ver. 21.

Ver. 1. Let a man ſo account of us, as of the miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God.] In the preceding chapters we read of contentions about the miniſters of the Goſpel, one part of the Corinthians preferred Paul, another party ſet up Apollos, and a third clave to Cephas, and extolled him above the other two. Paul you have heard has laboured to perſuade them from this faction and ſchiſm, by ſhewing them that they ought to regard the doctrine, rather than the preacher, and that all the miniſters of the Goſpel are one in Chriſt, chap. iii. ver. 8. compared with ver. 11, 12. Yet, ſays he, Let a man ſo account of us, the preachers of the Goſpel, as of the miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God, conformable to that of the Prophet Malachi, The prieſt's lips ſhould keep knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth; for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts, Mal. ii. 7. Therefore, by comparing theſe texts together, the diligent reader may obſerve, the dignity of the prieſt or miniſter of God's Word and Sacraments; and both the miniſters and peoples duty. Of which I ſhall ſpeak methodically in the following Diſſertation.

A Diſſertation on the prieſthood.

The true occaſion of the prieſthood was, in its original, the corrupt and degenerate condition of man fallen from the grace and favour of God, and become objects of Divine Vengeance. Man, in this ſad ſtate, could not pretend to obtain mercy for himſelf, or for his brother; ſee Exod. xx. 19. Deut. v. 24—27. xviii. 16. Heb. xii. 19—21. and Pſal. xlix. 7, 8. So that if no other method could have been found out, this matter muſt have been let alone for ever, and we, for what appears, had ſunk and periſhed in that miſery we had thrown ourſelves into.

But behold an expedient truly juſt, and wiſe, and merciful, and every way worthy of God. Becauſe man was neither able nor worthy to appear as advocate in his own cauſe, therefore, there was one Mediator appointed between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus, 1 Tim. ii. 5. in whom the human nature by a perſonal myſterious union was aſſumed to the Divine. In him the Father is well pleaſed, and admits him as our Sponſor to plead in our behalf: Him therefore, God may hear, without diminution of his own honour: Him alſo, man may truſt with full aſſurance of ſucceſs: He offered up himſelf a propitiatory ſacrifice for the ſins of the whole world, Matt. iii. 17. He pleads the ſatisfaction and merits of that ſacrifice, and makes for ever interceſſion for us. He came to preach the Goſpel to the poor, and inſtruct mankind in the nature of their duty. He is laſtly made the head of his body, the Church, and has all power committed to him both in Heaven and in earth. In theſe inſtances conſiſt the ſeveral parts of his office as mediator between God and man. In ſome of which it is obvious at firſt ſight; he tranſacts from God to men, in others for men with God, but in all as a middle perſon, or between both. And to the end theſe offices might be executed in his abſence, as far as preſent execution ſhould be requiſite; that the Catholick Church diffuſed throughout the world might be duly taught and governed, and the body here on earth correſpond with the acts of its head and high-prieſt now in Heaven; we find that he appointed certain ſubſtitutes to ſupply the room of him the only Mediator. He ſent his Apoſtles as his Father had ſent him, to ſuſtain his offices on earth, and ordain others after him, that might keep up a perpetual ſucceſſion.

Were this reflection but in any due meaſure attended to, the nature of the prieſthood would be much better underſtood than uſually it is. It would then appear, that when the miniſters of Chriſt teach and inſtruct the people, they do but diſcharge that prophetick office, begun by their great Lord and Maſter, of preaching the Goſpel to the poor; that when they, by baptiſm, receive new members into his Church, when they remit or retain ſins, abſolve or excommunicate, ordain or deprive, when, in fine, they preſcribe fit rules of decency and order; theſe are but the ſeveral branches of that power and authority which their Supreme Lord and King has delegated to them as his proper ſubſtitutes; that laſtly, when they offer up the prayers of the congregation, and make a ſolemn memorial of Chriſt's ſacrifice upon the croſs, they do indeed but correſpond with the ſacerdotal office of our dear Redeemer, who, having offered up himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin, now lives to plead the ſatisfaction and merits of that ſacrifice, and make for ever interceſſion for us. Hence

We may collect, that the end of the Levitical and Chriſtian prieſthood is the ſame; that they point equally to Chriſt the only eternal and unchangeable high-prieſt. Only in the firſt, this end was clouded and wrapt up in myſtic types and ceremonies; whereas in the other, the power of the Goſpel ſhines out, and is diſplayed with a conſpicuous luſtre: And though ſtill it be not without myſtery, yet it is as far unfolded, as is proper for our preſent condition, that looked at Chriſt as future and to come: But this regards him, as having already done his part on earth, and appearing now our advocate in Heaven. In both however, the prieſt is alike the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſt; he acts by virtue of a Divine Commiſſion delegated to him; he is appointed by God as the miniſter of his word to the people, and the proper ſpokeſman by whom he will hear and will accept them. It was plainly ſo under the Moſaick diſpenſation: The tribe of Levi God had choſen to himſelf as the lot of his inheritance, inſtead of the firſt-born of every family; and out of that tribe in like manner, appointing the reſt to the inferior offices about the ſanctuary; only Aaron and his poſterity had been firſt pitched upon, and authorized to do the ſervice of the altar. They were to burn incenſe upon the altar of incenſe, and therewith to offer up the prayers of the congregation. They were to lay the victims, either whole, or elſe ſome proper portions or ſegements of them, on the wood; to ſprinkle their blood in ſuch ſort as the law preſcribes, and thereby either to attone for the ſins, or offer up the praiſes of the people. They therefore, as God's menial ſervants and domeſticks, had ſuch proviſion made out of the things conſecrated to him, as is at large deſcribed among the legal inſtitutions. Nay, they (as we ſee here) were properly the men whoſe lips were to keep knowledge, and at whoſe mouth the people were to ſeek the law. Theſe were the offices and privileges of that family which God had choſen to himſelf. So that there is a particular emphaſis in that charge of Hezekiah, when having ſummoned the prieſts and Levites together, he put them in mind that the Lord had choſen them to ſtand before him to ſerve him, and that they ſhould miniſter unto him, and burn incenſe.

Nor is the nature of the prieſthood changed in this reſpect ſince the appearance of Chriſt. For as the law pointed out Chriſt to come; ſo the Goſpel-inſtitutions look back to him, and conſider him as come already. There is equal occaſion for ſome to diſcharge theſe offices under each œconomy. And therefore, although the prieſthood be not now confined to a diſtinct family; yet ſtill the miniſters of the New Teſtament are as much appropriated to the ſervice of God, as much the appointed meſſengers of the Lord of hoſts. The word in the original is the ſame which ſignifies an Angel: And indeed it is from the nature of their office, becauſe they are ſent forth as meſſengers to execute the commands of the great author of their being, that thoſe miniſtring ſpirits themſelves are diſtinguiſhed by that appellation. Hence alſo we find, that the ſeven Aſian Biſhops in the Revelation are called the Angels of their reſpective Churches, and elſewhere to the ſame purpoſe, that the miniſters of the Goſpel are entitled ambaſſadors for Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God.

Thus far of the dignity of the prieſthood: And a ſubject ſo fruitful of very uſeful inferences, ought not to be diſmiſſed, 'till we have made at leaſt the following reflections.

Inf. 1. Firſt, we may learn from hence, that ſome regard is due from the people towards them, who are inveſted with this Sacred Office. From the dignity of the office it is natural to conceive a value for the officer; and the one muſt riſe or fall of courſe in proportion to the other. [" They who can believe the clergy to be no other than the ſervants of the congregation, deputed and hired by them to do their buſineſs; it is no wonder ſuch perſons ſhould ſlight and diſ-eſteem them, and at length be drawn to a contempt of thoſe doctrines which come ſo meanly recommended. But they who conſider the prieſt, as the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts, cannot but have a greater value for his character, which will not fail to add weight and authority to what he ſhall deliver."] The regard and honour paid the repreſentative is done in reality to the perſon whom he repreſents; otherwiſe he can have no title to it intrinſically or in himſelf, being by nature but upon the level with the reſt of mankind, and diſtinguiſhed only by that relation he bears to his ſuperior. Therefore princes, we find, reckon themſelves to be diſ-eſteemed or honoured by the treatment which is given their ambaſſadors. And accordingly our Bleſſed Saviour aſſures us, he reſents the treatment that is ſhewn his miniſters. " He that heareth you (ſays he to his diſciples) heareth me, and he that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me, and he that deſpiſeth me deſpiſeth him that ſent me. And in like manner Paul; he that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not man, but God, who hath alſo given unto us his Holy Spirit. And let a man therefore, (ſays he in this place) ſo account of us, as of the miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of the myſteries of God."

Nor did he herein arogantly aſſume undue honours to himſelf, or eſteem them owing to his own merit and ſufficiency: He confeſſed that he was not ſufficient to anſwer the great end of his function, as of himſelf; but had all his ſufficiency derived to him from another hand: And therefore whatever honours he might expect or demand, he thereby preached not himſelf, but Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, to whom thoſe honours ſhould ultimately be deſigned and done.

Inf. 2. Secondly, that no man is qualified for this office, who is not ordained to it according to Chriſt's inſtitution. For who ſhould appoint God's meſſengers, but God himſelf? Who ſhould ſend forth labourers into the harveſt, but the Lord of it? We have ſeen there are ſuch privileges and powers annexed to the prieſthood, as are neither common to all men, nor natural to any, but depend entirely on the good will and pleaſure of God; and therefore can indeed be exerciſed by none but ſuch as are called according to his inſtitution. Of old therefore the prieſthood was confined to the family of Aaron: And when Korah, with a company of inferior Levites, Numb. xvi. and ſome others to ſupport them, arrogated an equal honour to themſelves; the Almighty Hand of Providence notoriouſly interpoſed to put an end to the contention, and viſibly diſtinguiſhed between theſe bold invaders of the ſacerdotal office, and thoſe whom God has choſen to do the ſervice of his altar. And that it may appear more particularly, that the prieſthood is no contrivance of man, nor in its nature derivable from the civil authority; we find that when Uzziah (though he was a king, and ſo had all the right that mere civil authority could give him) preſumed to take a cenſer full of incenſe in his hand, he was immediately ſmitten with a grievous leproſy, and bore in his fleſh the marks of the Divine Diſpleaſure, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16—21.

It was indeed a part of Jeroboam's policy, " to make him prieſts of the loweſt of the people, which were not of the ſons of Levi, 1 Kings xii. 31. But I ſuppoſe no one would be willing to argue from his example, of whom that very act is undoubtedly recorded to his reproach and infamy.

If from the legal we deſcend to the Goſpel diſpenſation, we ſhall find indeed the manner of commiſſioning altered, but ſtill a Divine Commiſſion equally required. The Aaronical is in that reſpect the pattern of the Chriſtian prieſthood, or rather the typical expreſſion and prefiguration of it. To this purpoſe are we told expreſly, that "no man taketh this honour to himſelf, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron; that even Chriſt, the great Shepherd and Biſhop of our ſouls, glorified not himſelf to be made an high-prieſt, but he that ſaid unto him, "thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee," Heb. v. 4, 5. And if then the great high-prieſt of our profeſſion, had himſelf an external call to inveſt him with this office: What mortal ſhall pretend to take it, without call, and ſo uſurp what ought to be beſtowed? Chriſt being thus made an high-prieſt, appoints his ſubſtitutes himſelf, and all Chriſtian prieſts, all that come in his name, muſt derive their authority from him. For that reaſon ſent he forth his Apoſtles, as his Father had ſent him, Jo. xx. 21. and ordained ſuch a ſucceſſion in the miniſtry as might continue to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20. And all them that enter not by this door into the ſheepfold, but climb up ſome other way, them that came in their own name, and run although he has not ſent them; all ſuch he ſtigmatiſes with the opprobrious character of thieves and robbers. See John x. 1.

From all which we may gather, in what ſenſe we are to take it, that the collective body of Chriſtians is ſaid, in Scripture, to be a royal prieſthood, 1 Pet. ii. 9. and Chriſt is ſaid to have "made us kings and prieſts unto God," Rev. i. 6. namely, in the ſame ſenſe as it had been ſaid to the Iſraelites of old, "ye ſhall be unto me a kingdom of prieſts," Exod. xix. 6. i. e. that in the diſtinction of the Church from the reſt of mankind there ſhould be ſomething analogous to the prieſthood; that as the prieſt is one taken from among men, and dedicated more immediately to the ſervice of God, and admitted to ſome ſpecial privileges; ſo were the Hebrews of old, and ſo are Chriſtians now, diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the world by being ſacred to him likewiſe, and called to the privilege of ſons. That it could mean no more in the old law is evident: For notwithſtanding that the Iſraelites were a kingdom of prieſts," in this analogical inferior ſenſe; yet it cannot ſurely be denied, that the family of Aaron were the only prieſts in that higher and more proper ſenſe, in which we are now diſcourſing of the prieſthood, and do uſually underſtand the word. And I conceive it would be unreaſonable to explain the ſame phraſe in the New Teſtament, in a ſenſe different from that which it muſt be allowed to bear in the Old. And they who do from hence inſiſt on the community of the prieſthood to all Chriſtians in general, would do well to ſhew us in what ſenſe we are all ſaid to be kings in the Goſpel-acceptation. For the regal character (we may obſerve) no leſs than the prieſtly, is one of the privileges conferr'd upon every true member of the Chriſtian Church. And yet he, who upon this title ſhould lay claim to the crown, would go nigh to be reckoned a traytor to the civil government.

Inf. 3. Thirdly, the laſt thing I would gather from this dignity of the ſacerdotal office, is, that the clergy yet are ſtill to remember themſelves to be but miniſters, ſtewards, ambaſſadors, and ſervants. Titles! Which all of them beſpeak a ſtate of dependance and ſubjection, and infer the perſons to whom they belong not at liberty to act after their own humour, but under the ſtricteſt obligations to deſerve the Divine Commands of that Heavenly Lord and Maſter, whoſe ſervants and miniſters they are! Obedience to his commands, no doubt, is due from all: But they who ſtand in ſo near a relation to him, as that of the prieſthood has already been explained to be, have yet that additional engagement to obey. Thus far the argument will hold for the common performance of all Chriſtian duties; but yet more particularly it concludes for the faithful and regular diſcharge of the duties of their Sacred Function, for the due execution of thoſe great offices, and purſuance of thoſe ends, upon account of which they were inveſted with this character. For the dignity of their office (they ought always to remember) was not deſigned to aggrandize themſelves, (who can pretend to no more merit than the reſt of their neighbours) but to ſet forth the honour of our great high-prieſt, by whoſe authority they act, and the more effectually to anſwer the exigencies of his Church. So that unleſs they do ſincerely endeavour to promote thoſe purpoſes for which they were ordained, they are manifeſtly deficient in their duty towards him whoſe miniſters they are. Thus far of the dignity, which naturally leads me to conſider the duty of the prieſt in his office, which is included in theſe words of the Prophet, the prieſts ſhould keep knowledge.

The office of the prieſt having already been explained to be ſubordinate to the office of the Mediator, which is three-fold, viz. regal for the government of the Church, ſacerdotal for the expiation of ſins, and prophetical for the inſtruction of the people: There can be no doubt but it is the prieſt's duty to execute and attend to all of them, ſo far as he is concerned in them, with ſuch diligence and conſtancy, as may become the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts. But ſince the words in view lead us to conſider only the prophetick part of his office, I ſhall at preſent confine my ſelf to that. And

1. Firſt, he ſhould, by diligent ſtudy and application, endeavour to get himſelf informed in thoſe points, which are neceſſary to qualify him for the due diſcharge of his office. Otherwiſe, neither will his lips keep knowledge, nor will he be able to anſwer them that ſeek the law at his mouth; and he, by conſequence, will diſcover himſelf to be a very incompetent meſſenger of the Lord of Hoſts, a very improper miniſter of Chriſt, and ſteward of his myſteries.

It ought not from hence to be concluded with ſome Romaniſts, that the clergy only ſhould have liberty of examining the Scriptures, and the laity perfectly debarr'd from them. The paſſages encouraging and exhorting all men to a diligent ſearch and ſtudy of the Scriptures, are too many and perſpicuous to be thus eluded, and leave us no room to doubt but they were certainly deſigned to lye open for every one's perſual. But ſtill, however, all have a right to ſearch; yet to underſtand and explain them, is a work, for which all have not capacity, all have not leiſure. There are many texts of Scripture, which, indeed, are clear and eaſy to be underſtood; but then there are many others which are obſcure and difficult. That which is clearly propoſed in one place, is perhaps more darkly delivered in another: And ſurely then it muſt be highly convenient, the truth ſhould have all its evidence diſcovered and ſet in open view. Many other things there are, though not abſolutely neceſſary, yet very uſeful to be known, which are no where clearly propoſed at all, but wrapt up in dark and intricate obſcurity. Nay, there are ſuch δυσνόητα in Scripture, as for want of being rightly underſtood, have led men into dangerous errors, and which (as Peter witneſſes) they that are unlearned and unſtable have ſometimes wreſted to their own deſtruction, 2 Pet. iii. 16.

So that the work is but half done in diſcovering the truth. Thoſe enemies likewiſe, by which it is attacked on all ſides, muſt be ſilenced and confuted. The heretick and ſceptick muſt be artfully purſued through all their various windings, and receive proper anſwers to their ſubtle fallacies. The ignorant muſt be inſtructed, the ſcrupulous reſolved, the erroneous baffled, and the vicious reclaimed.

But who is ſufficient for theſe things? 2 Cor. ii. 16. The far greater part of mankind, have not an education to qualify them for them. The ſtudy of languages, the knowledge of hiſtory, the rules of arguing, the method of inſtruction, are what many have neither capacity to attain, nor leiſure to attend. In reſpect of the endowments of the mind, as well as thoſe of the body, and other outward advantages of life, it is God that maketh one to differ from another, 1 Cor. iv. 7. It is he (ſays the Pſalmiſt) that teacheth man knowledge, Pſ. xciv. 10. And if any man therefore lack wiſdom, it is James's direction, let him ask of God, Jam. i. 5. In vain ſhall man labour and ſtrive to know, if he with-hold thoſe gifts and qualifications which are neceſſary for it.

But ſuppoſe all men equally qualified by nature; yet all cannot have leiſure to attend to it. The outward neceſſities of life muſt be conſulted; and theſe are ſo many and various, that much time and many hands muſt be employed for their ſupply. And therefore, if the knowledge of the Scripture requires ſo much labour and ſearch, as has been ſaid, it follows that moſt men cannot of themſelves attain it, becauſe they want either leiſure or abilities to ſearch after it.

I ſpeak not this to diſcourage any from the reading and ſtudy of the Scriptures; let them in God's name uſe the opportunities they have, with due preparation and attention of mind, with due meditation and reflection afterwards; and then much benefit they will be ſure to reap from their own reading and experience. But I ſpeak it to ſhew the great neceſſity of having ſome more immediately ſet apart for that purpoſe, to ſupply their defects, and to ſhew from thence the bounden duty of ſuch perſons, to apply themſelves with utmoſt diligence and care, to the ſtudy of thoſe things it is their buſineſs to teach. And this is what the Prophet means in the words now before us, that the prieſt's lips ſhould keep knowledge.

It concerns all men, without doubt, to know the things which belong to their own peace; but it concerns the prieſt, not for his own ſake only, but the ſake of others: And if through an inexcuſable neglect of ſearching into theſe matters, he ſhould be miſtaken in his notions of faith or duty, and from thence proceed to lead others aſtray, and make ſhipwreck of the ſouls committed to his charge; he ſhall not only die in his own ſin, but their blood alſo ſhall be required at his hands, Ezek. xxxiii. 8. For he is Chriſt's miniſter and ſteward ſet as a watchman to the Church, to give early notice of approaching danger, to deſcribe ſin to his hearers both in its nature and its conſequences, to inſiſt upon the obligation and reward of virtue, to defend the truth, and to confound error: And if he be unacquainted with theſe things himſelf, how ſhall he be able to inſtruct others? If the blind be ſet to lead the blind, how diſmal is the conſequence? And what can be expected but that both ſhould fall into the ditch? And yet the matter is ſtill worſe, if after he has made himſelf maſter of theſe qualifications, he be wilfully negligent and remiſs in the execution of his office; for the ſin of preſumption is yet more culpable than ignorance. Wherefore,

2. Secondly, To compleat this part of the prieſt's character, and that his lips ſhould keep knowledge, 'tis farther neceſſary that being in the firſt place thus qualified himſelf, he ſhould next be faithful and vigilant, and careful, to inſtruct his flock: Otherwiſe his knowledge were of no uſe to any but to himſelf; whereas the end of the prieſthood is the publick benefit. And, indeed, the very phraſes of his lips keeping knowledge, and of his being a miniſter, ſeem to imply his duty to communicate what he knows to others. For the lips are to be conſidered as the door of utterance; and therefore, 'tis ſaid in the next words, that the people ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth, becauſe he is authorized and obliged to teach and to inſtruct them.

But not to dwell long upon an argument which can hardly be diſputed; to his precept he muſt add his own example. This I mention here, not ſo much upon account of the neceſſity of a good life in general, as becauſe 'tis more particularly neceſſary in him, to render his doctrine effectual with others. For, however abſurd and unreaſonable it may be, to argue againſt religion from the viciouſneſs of its miniſters, and to conclude thoſe maxims falſe which have no influence on ſome who muſt inculcate them; (ſince mens practices are not always guided by their principles, and they commonly indeed act not ſo much by reaſon, as affection:) Yet it cannot be denied, but that, weak and frivolous as it is, it has been made uſe of by ſome ſort of people to the prejudice of religion, and has been dexterouſly managed by ſuch perſons as are glad of any handle for continuing in ſin. Now, he who would avoid theſe fatal inconveniencies, who would remove theſe impediments of the efficacy of his doctrine; he ſhould firſt be careful to begin at home, and make himſelf an enſample to the flock, 1 Pet. v. 3. Then would they ſee that the duties he preaches are not only practicable, but actually practiſed: They would be provoked by his example to a generous emulation; and every virtue which ſhone forth in him, would be a tacit, but powerful reproof of the vices predominant in them. The Jewiſh prieſts, it ſeems, were guilty of ſcandalous corruptions after their releaſe from captivity; and it was upon that very account the Prophet Malachi was ſent, to put them in mind of the original inſtitution of their order, and the true intention of their Sacred Function; (which, if attended to in any due meaſure, muſt needs make them aſhamed of their enormities, ſo groſly inconſiſtent with, and ſo inviſibly repugnant to it;) that "the prieſt's lips ſhould keep knowledge, and the people ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth." Which brings me in order to the conſideration of,

The people's duty with regard to the prieſt: "They (ſays the Prophet) ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth: Which duty of theirs muſt principally, I conceive, imply,

1. Firſt, that regard and eſteem they are to bear to the character of the Prieſt. That they who miniſter in holy things, deſerve ſome reſpect and obſervance upon account of their character, is a thing ſcarce to be doubted. For unleſs men have ſome antecedent reſpect to the character of him that ſpeaks, they will hardly pay any due attention or regard to what he ſays. The moſt candid perſons in the world can ſcarce wholly diveſt themſelves of prejudice; and when they have conceived a mean opinion of any man, it is natural to ſlight his counſel, and refuſe him their attention. So that it muſt be a matter of the utmoſt conſequence, that the people ſhould have a juſt veneration for the character of the prieſt, if it be (as I hope in the

2. Second place to ſhew it is) their duty to conſult him. The prieſts (as we have ſeen) are the meſſengers of the Lord of hoſts, miniſters of Chriſt, and ſtewards of his myſteries, to inſtruct the people in the nature of their duty; which ſure can imply no leſs than that the people ſhould attend and give ear to their inſtructions. As often as they have any particular which they want to have reſolved, they ſhould be ſure to make it known to them with all its real circumſtances, and not diſguiſe the truth by any means, where a miſtake may turn to their irreparable loſs.

But the more ordinary method of inſtruction, and which at preſent I would chiefly inſiſt on, is publick in the preaching of the word. With regard to this, men are exhorted to be ſwift to hear, and to receive with meekneſs the engrafted word, James i. 19, 20. And a mighty privilege it ought to be eſteemed, that God has been graciouſly pleaſed to provide thus for their inſtruction; and ſo no doubt they will eſteem it, who are duly ſenſible of their being ignorant in many things, and negligent in what they know. For ſuch, we may take notice, is the end of preaching, not only to reform, but to remind; not only to tell men what they knew nothing of before, but (as Peter teaches) to ſtir up their minds, and put them in remembrance, 2 Pet. i. 12, 13: ſo that men of the greateſt parts and learning need not be aſhamed to hear. For as no man's knowledge indeed is ſo great, as to be incapable of all increaſe, but the truths he believes may be enforced with new arguments, or the ſame arguments be ſet in clearer light; ſo all men are but too apt to grow remiſs and heedleſs, and want to have their affections at leaſt excited, if not their intellects informed. They who boaſt their own knowledge, to excuſe their omiſſion of this duty, have, I fear, as much occaſion as any for this part of the preacher's office: and it may be, if they were at the pains to examine themſelves impartially, would find reaſon ſufficient to reproach their ignorance: at leaſt it ought to be conſidered that preaching is the ordinance of God, inſtituted with deſign to miniſter grace unto the hearers, Eph. iv. 29. And therefore be the preacher himſelf ever ſo unworthy, or ever ſo ill qualified to inſtruct others, this can never make the grace of God of none effect; but they who attend with honeſt and religious minds, may expect his bleſſing on their pious obedience to his inſtitution. He therefore that deſpiſeth, deſpiſeth not man, but God, 1 Theſſ. iv. 8. For ſo by a very juſt and equitable conſtruction may they be ſaid to do, who deſpiſe or neglect thoſe Sacred Ordinances which his wiſdom has appointed. And let them boaſt as they pleaſe, either of their own knowledge, or of their reading better ſermons at home than they can hear at Church: I am ſure, they can have no good reaſon to expect God's bleſſing on any private endeavours, ſet up in oppoſition to the publick ordinances of his own appointment. But,

3. Thirdly, it is not enough to conſult and hear their teachers, they muſt go on farther to follow their advice. This likewiſe appears from the true nature of the thing; for the people would ſeek the law in vain, if they were not obliged to take notice of it afterwards.

Not that they are bound to receive every thing that is taught them in this manner: for then they would be ſometimes under a neceſſity of receiving contradictions. Their teachers, alas! are frail and fallible as themſelves; and though their education and leiſure may give them better opportunities of enquiry, yet are they not abſolutely ſecured againſt poſſibility of error and miſtake. Nay, they have the ſame corruptions in their nature with other men, and may ſometimes, poſſibly through the temptations of covetouſneſs, ambition or applauſe, join in the ſame baſe deſigns, and purpoſely endeavour to deceive and delude the people.

What remains therefore in this caſe to be done, is, that all men ſhould uſe the opportunities they have, and not rely ſolely on the judgment of their paſtors: that they would pray to God in the firſt place for the illumination of his Holy Spirit, and then make uſe of all thoſe means of information he has put into their hands; diſcourſe with their religious neighbours and acquaintance, ſearch the Scriptures diligently as their condition will admit, and not implicitly follow their ſpiritual guides, where, by the due uſe of theſe means, they might be able to confute them. But where their judgment fails, and they find they are not able to determine, there it is but decent to refer themſelves to them, who, by their education and profeſſion of life, are better qualified; eſpecially where they know them to be men of knowledge and integrity. For they are under the ſtricteſt obligations to inform them right; they watch for their ſouls as they that muſt give account; and if the people, after a diligent uſe of all means proper for their condition, ſhould by them be deluded, we have reaſon to hope they will not ſuffer for an ignorance which is invincible, but their blood ſhall be required at the watchman's hands, Ezek. xxxiii. 8.

Such as theſe we are forced to make our rules of action in matters of far leſs importance. No man that deſires to live, would take what he knows to be a cup of poiſon, though it were recommended to him by the ableſt phyſicians: and yet where his own knowledge does not carry him ſo far, no one would blame him for obſerving the preſcriptions of the learned. So again, that traveller would be certainly to blame, who being in a dangerous road where he is unacquainted, ſhould refuſe the direction of authorized and skilful guides; and yet he, on the other hand, would as deſervedly be thought a mad-man, who ſhould venture to follow them into known bogs and quickſands. Juſt ſo then the people muſt not follow their ſpiritual guides, where they can find them to be wrong; but in other reſpects, they ought to uſe their underſtanding as a direction to their own. And,

4. Fourthly, the people are obliged to avoid all ſuch teachers as act of their own head, and without commiſſion. And after what was ſhewn in this diſcourſe, that the miniſters of the Goſpel are the ambaſſadors of Chriſt; and afterwards by way of inference from thence, that no one is qualified for this office, who is not ordained to it according to Chriſt's inſtitution, one would think, it ſhould need but little labour to evince, that all who are not ſo commiſſioned, and yet pretend to execute the Sacred Functions, are indeed but uſurpers of the miniſterial office, and therefore ought to be avoided.

The prieſt is the authorized meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts: At his mouth the law is to be ſought, and by his hands the ſacraments adminiſtred. No mention any where of any but the prieſt, to tranſact in ſacred Matters, or to diſpenſe the word and myſteries of God. And then, how deplorable is their condition, that have heaped to themſelves teachers, having itching ears, 2 Tim. iv. 3. that have choſen to be led by them that are no prieſts nor prophets, men that run of their own heads, although God ſent them not, and though he ſpake not to them, yet will propheſy, Jer. xxiii. 21. God's grace, it is true, attends his inſtitutions; but then only are they his inſtitutions, when performed by ſuch perſons as he inſtitutes, by his miniſters and ſtewards. All others, pretending to exerciſe their office, will hardly be able to make out their claim to ſuch exceeding great and precious promiſes: Since it is ſtill under the New Teſtament, as it was under the Old; and no man (we are expreſly aſſured) can "take this office unto himſelf, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron," Heb. v. 4. Hence

Note, That Paul ſaid, let them ſo account of us, as of the miniſters of Chriſt, in oppoſition to ſuch who are no more than the miniſters of men, or ſuch as are deputed any otherwiſe, by the ordinance of men, than Chriſt has ordained.

——Stewards of the myſteries of God.] Which imports, that whereas men could only arrive to the knowledge of the incarnation, the ſatisfaction and redemption of our bleſſed Saviour, the juſtification through faith, the doctrine of the Trinity, and ſuch like myſteries by a revelation from God; ſo theſe myſteries having been revealed by Chriſt, and by the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, to the firſt Apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt, they became, as Paul rightly calls them, the ſtewards of thoſe myſteries to diſperſe them to others in ſuch a manner, and with ſuch judgment, that they might feed the babes or weak in faith with milk, and the ſtronger with meat agreeable to their ſtronger underſtanding; ſee chap. iii. 1, 2.

Ver. 2. Moreover, it is required in ſtewards, that a man be found faithful.] i. e. As every ſteward is required by the law of nature and nations, to be true and juſt in the diſcharge of his truſt: So ought the ſtewards of the myſteries of Chriſt, to divide rightly and expound the word of truth with the utmoſt ſincerity, perſpicuity, and exactneſs; ſee 2 Tim. ii. 4. In ſuch a manner that he can't be charged with keeping back any part of the counſel of God; ſee Acts xx. 27.

Ver. 3.——Or, of mans judgment.] i. e. A judgment of private perſons, ſupported by no authority; a judgment of partiality and affection, which intermeddles where it hath no buſineſs, and tends unduly to exalt or debaſe their teachers in the opinion of the world.

Ver. 4. I know nothing by my ſelf.] Or, I can't accuſe my ſelf of negligence or unfaithfulneſs in the function of my miniſtry;

————Yet am I not hereby juſtified.] Or, our final juſtification or abſolution from condemnation, depends not on the judgment which we paſs upon our ſelves, but upon that which God, the righteous Judge will paſs upon us at the laſt day, which is the day of the Lord. See the next verſe.

Ver. 5.——Judge nothing before the time.] When all things ſhall appear in their proper light before the Lord, ſeated on his judgment-ſeat.

————Every man.] Who is found faithful, or worthy of praiſe.

Ver. 6. —— Theſe things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myſelf, and to Apollos, for your ſakes.] Here ſome have thought, that by a figure we are to underſtand writing, as if he had ſaid, "I have in writing," but the ſubject and context, and the very letter thereof directs us to underſtand Paul to ſay, I have figuratively, taken the part for the whole, exemplified under mine own name, and the name of Apollos, what I would have underſtood of all the miniſters and ſtewards of the myſteries of Chriſt; and ſo it follows, —— That no one of you be puffed up for one againſt another.] i. e. Be factious; or ſet up one miniſter againſt another miniſter, on account of any outward perfections or engagements of the world.

Ver. 7. —— To differ from another.] Or, excel another in the gifts of the Spirit.

Ver. 8. Now ye are full, now ye are rich.] In all manner of knowledge, as ye think, ſo as to be puffed up in your own conceits, and deſpiſe me and Apollos, who firſt converted you to the faith; now we are accounted not worthy of your praiſe, in compariſon of thoſe new teachers you have ſet up, and admire for their multitude of words and frothy eloquence.

Ver. 9. —— Us, the Apoſtles laſt.] Or rather, us, Paul and Apollos, the laſt of the Apoſtles, or of thoſe called to the miniſtry; ſo ſome have interpreted this text: But I think the word laſt, has an alluſion to the Roman cuſtom in their bloody theatres. As if the Apoſtle had ſaid, God hath ſet forth us the Apoſtles laſt, that the world may know we are appointed to be put to death. For, in the Roman ſpectacles, here referred to, the men were brought forth in the morning into the theatre to fight with wild beaſts; to whom was allowed armour, and other weapons, to defend themſelves, and to ſmite the beaſt that attacked them; but at noon, the gladiators, or ſword-players, were brought out naked, and without any weapon to defend themſelves, and he who then eſcaped, was only reſerved for ſlaughter laſt, or for another day: Thus therefore, ſays Paul, we are like theſe miſerable wretches, daily tormented with perſecutions, we conflict with all ſorts of miſery, and can expect nothing but death at the laſt.

Ver. 10. We are fools.] Or, ſo accounted; becauſe, the Heathen wiſdom calls our preaching of Chriſt fooliſhneſs; ſee chap. i. 23. Or, becauſe we ſuffer for Chriſt's ſake.

——— Ye are wiſe.] As ye think, becauſe ye preach Chriſt in ſuch a manner, as to hazard nothing for him, nor incur any danger of your perſons or eſtates.

Ver. 11. —— We both hunger and thirſt, &c.] Here the Apoſtle reckons up the ſeveral kinds of ſufferings which he and his brethren were expoſed to and exerciſed with.

Ver. 15.—Fathers.] Spiritual teachers, who will take as much care for your ſouls, as a natural father does for the body of his child.

Ver. 16. —— Be ye followers of me.] In the ordinances and doctrines which I have, and Timothy ſhall, deliver unto you from me. See the next verſe.

Ver. 17.—Timotheus.] See the Introduction to the firſt of Timothy.

——— Faithful.] Steward in the Lord. See ver. 2.

——— Of my ways.] i. e. My inſtructions.

Ver. 19. And will know.] Try, examine or prove.

——— Not the ſpeech of them.] Not your eloquent preachers fine talk, and ſmooth tongue.

——— But the power.] But what authority they have to preach, what power and efficacy there is in their preaching, how you profit thereby, and what example they ſet their hearers.

Ver. 20. For the kingdom of God.] The Goſpel of Chriſt, which only can bring us to the kingdom of God.

——— Is not in word.] Does not conſiſt in the letter, or fine words.

——— But in power.] In the Spirit, or miracles done by the power of the Spirit.

CHAP. V.

1 The inceſtuous perſon 6 is cauſe rather of ſhame unto them, than of rejoicing. 7 The old leaven is to be purged out. 10 Heinous offenders are to be ſhunned and avoided.

IT is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and ſuch fornication as is not ſo much as named amongſt the Gentiles, that one ſhould have his fathers wife.

2 And ye are puffed up, and have not rather mourned, that he that hath done this deed, might be taken away from among you.

3 For I verily as abſent in body, but preſent in ſpirit, have judged already, as though I were preſent, concerning him that hath ſo done this deed;

4 In the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when ye are gathered together, and my ſpirit, with the power of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt,

5 To deliver ſuch an one unto Satan for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus.

6 Your glorying is not good: Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?

7 Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Chriſt our paſſover is ſacrificed for us.

8 Therefore let us keep the feaſt, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedneſs; but with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth.

9 I wrote unto you in an epiſtle, not to company with fornicators.

10 Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then muſt ye needs go out of the world.

11 But now I have written unto you, not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with ſuch an one, no not to eat.

12 For what have I to do to judge them alſo that are without? do not ye judge them that are within?

13 But them that are without, God judgeth. Therefore put away from among your ſelves that wicked perſon.

In this chapter the Apoſtle reproves their neglect of Church-diſcipline, wherein we have mention of the crime, inceſt, for which in particular they ought to be cenſured, ver. 1. and then he takes notice, that their behaviour was contrary than it ought to be in this matter, ver. 2. To which he ſubjoins the puniſhment to be inflicted deſcribed, (1.) By the efficient cauſes, Chriſt, Paul, the Church of Corinth, ver. 3, 4. (2.) By the kind, excommunication. (3.) By the ends, in regulation to the offender, his ſalvation, ver. 5. and in relation to the whole Church, preventing infection, ver. 6. And then,

The Apoſtle adds a general exhortation (by way of inference) to remove this, and all other offences, urged by the end to be a new lump; by their obligation thereto, and by the ſeaſonableneſs thereof; it being then paſſover-time, ver. 7. amplified by an exhortation to behave ourſelves ſuitably thereto, ver. 8.

Upon this occaſion he adds alſo a diſcourſe concerning the object of Church-cenſures, by ſhewing (1.) the occaſion; ſomething that he had written formerly, ver. 9. and (2.) by giving an explication of his meaning negatively, with the reſt, ver. 10. and affirmatively, that he meant it of Church-members, ver. 11. which ſenſe and deciſion, (viz. that Church-members only are to be dealt with in Church-cenſures) he further confirms, becauſe others belong not to them; becauſe this is agreeable to their own practiſe, ver. 13. and becauſe others belong to God's judgment, ver. 13.— And ſo,

Concludes, by way of inference, with an exhortation to proceed to the cenſure of this ſcandalous perſon, ver. 13.

Ver. 1. —— Fornication.] It is plain from the latter clauſe of this verſe, that the word fornication in this place is uſed in the worſt ſenſe, even for the unnatural ſin of inceſt, as they are guilty of, who uncover the nakedneſs of their father's wife to lie with her; ſee Levit. xviii. 8. and Deut. xxvii. 20.

Ver. 2. And ye are puffed up] i. e. Ye are ſo puffed up with the pride of your own gifts, and the vain-glory of your teachers, who tolerate any crime rather than run the riſque of your diſpleaſure, that ye forſake Chriſt by tolerating ſuch offenders, and their ſcandalous ſins among you.

Ver. 3. — Judged] Determined, being preſent with you in mind and conſent.

Ver. 4 — And my ſpirit.] i. e. With my conſent and approbation of a cenſure, which I give according to the power committed to me by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 5. To deliver ſuch a one unto Satan.] i. e. To excommunicate, or deprive ſuch a one from the communion of Chriſt's Church.

——— In the day of the Lord.] Or, day of judgment.

Ver. 6. Your glorying.] Of the knowledge of this world, or, in your eloquent verboſe teachers, is not good.

Ver. 7. — Chriſt our paſſover.] Chriſt is termed our paſſover, either by metonymy of the thing ſignified, for the ſign, or elſe by a metaphor in regard of many reſemblances between Chriſt and the Paſchal Lamb; ſee Entick's evidence of Chriſtianity in the chapter concerning the types of the Meſſiah.

Ver. 11. — Not to keep company.] This, I apprehend, does not mean ſocial intercourſe, but that they ſhould not admit ſuch a one to their religious communion, which opinion I ground upon the reaſon of the thing, the context, ver. 7, 8. and eſpecially from the following prohibition, no, not to eat, i. e. at the Lord's table.

Ver. 12. — Judge.] See Matt. vii. 1.

Now to conclude the notes on this fifth chapter, I ſhall conſider the words of the 7th and 8th verſes, by way of Diſſertation. Therefore, I ſay,

Theſe words in reference to the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, are to be conſidered in this manner,

Firſt, That Chriſt is our Paſſover. Secondly, that we are to keep the feaſt in memory of this Paſſover, as the Jewiſh feaſt was a memorial of the Jewiſh Paſſover, with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth, Exod. xii. 14.

1. Chriſt is our Paſſover, that is, he is the ſame thing to all mankind, but in a more eminent and tranſcendent manner, which the Jewiſh Paſſover was to the Jews, only with this difference, that whereas the ſolemnity of the paſſover among the Jews was to be repeated every year at the ſtated and uſual time, that is to ſay, on the fourteenth day of the firſt, or in ſome caſes, of the ſecond month. See Numb. ix. 5. collat. cum v. 9, 10. and 2 Chron. xxx. 13. Chriſt, who was typified by it, was to be but once offered to bear the ſins of many, Heb. ix. 28. And we are ſanctified through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt once for all, Heb. x. 10.

Wherefore if the eating the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, and the drinking of his blood, which is the effuſion of it, be a renewal of his paſſion, a ſacrificing of, and a feeding upon the paſſover afreſh, then I affirm that no ſuch thing is done, or at leaſt we muſt be reduced to this dilemma, either the Scriptures are not true, or the doctrine of Tranbſubſtantiation is falſe. Now, whether the determination of the author to the Hebrews, that is, of an inſpired writer, that is, in effect of God himſelf, and of Peter in his firſt Epiſtle, chap. iii. ver. 18. where he tells us, that Chriſt hath once ſuffered for ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt; or the dictate of his pretended infallible ſucceſſors is moſt to be believed and ſtood to, judge ye: nay, let our adverſaries themſelves be judges.

Again, Chriſt being our paſſover, was for this very reaſon, among others, offered up at Jeſuralem, becauſe it was unlawful to kill the paſſover at any other place, after ſuch time as the temple was built, Deut. xvi. 2, 5, 6, 7.

Thus thoſe three great and ſolemn paſſovers which we read of, (2 Chron. xxx. 2. 2 Kings xxiii. 23. Ezra vi. 19.) in the times of Hezekiah, Joſiah and Ezra, were every one of them celebrated at Jeruſalem; and it is ſaid of Joſeph, and the Bleſſed Virgin, the Mother of our Lord, that they went to Jeruſalem every year at the feaſt of the paſſover, Luke ii. 41.

Now, if Chriſt ſuffered at Jeruſalem, becauſe the paſſover was to be killed there, if Chriſt be our paſſover, and if the paſſover could not be ſacrificed any where elſe, nay, if it cannot now be offered at Jeruſalem itſelf, becauſe the city and temple are demoliſhed, becauſe God hath taken his name from thence, becauſe, inſtead of being the metropolis of true religion, it is now the ſeat of the groſſeſt idolatry and ſuperſtition, becauſe the law of Moſes is aboliſhed, becauſe the meaning and intention of the paſſover is compleated; if all theſe things be true, as moſt certainly they are, then is it plain, that if Chriſt be corporeally and ſubſtantially preſent in the Sacrament, if his body and blood be truly and properly eaten and drunk by us, yet he is not preſent, neither do we feed upon him as our paſſover.

Wherefore it is clear, that either Chriſt hath ceaſed to be our paſſover, and then it will be more eaſy than pleaſant to pronounce what will become of us; we are all in a very miſerable condition, or elſe it is not lawful to feed upon him, ſince the paſſover cannot now be eaten in any part of the world: And therefore we may aſſure our ſelves from this, (as well as from what has been ſaid above, that he could be offered up but once) that we neither do, nor ought to feed upon him, if we will follow his own inſtitution; and why he ſhould enable any Romiſh prieſt to work a miracle, ſuch a ſtrange miracle as this of Tranſubſtantiation, in contradiction both to the Law and Goſpel, is a moſt prodigiouſly ſtrange and unaccountable thing. I am confident, it will puzzle the ableſt perſon of their Church to give a tolerable account of this.

Laſtly, Chriſt is our paſſover, therefore it is unlawful to drink his blood; for the blood of the paſſover, as of other ſacrifices, could not by the law of Moſes be either eaten or drunk; therefore we may boldly affirm that the prieſt, when he pronounces thoſe words, This is my blood, or this is my blood of the New Teſtament, does not by this means tranſubſtantiate the wine into it, therefore neither is the bread changed into the body of Chriſt, by his ſaying, this is my body; for the caſe is the ſame in both, and it is altogether incredible, that ſuch a wonderful power ſhould accompany thoſe words, this is my body, when thoſe other, this is my blood, which one would imagine in all reaſon ſhould be conſidered, by themſelves, of equal force and validity with the former, have no ſuch virtue or efficacy at all.

I take the confidence to affirm, that all this is abſolute, irreſiſtible demonſtration, if there be ſuch a thing as demonſtration in the world; for Chriſt was not truly and literally a Paſchal Lamb, no, he was a man born of a woman as we are, though after a more Divine and Heavenly manner, by the overſhadowing of the Holy Ghoſt in the womb of the Bleſſed Virgin; but he is called our paſſover, only in reſpect of the likeneſs or analogy which there was betwixt his ſacrifice of himſelf upon the croſs, and the ſacrifice of the Paſchal Lamb under the law.

Now, I beſeech you, where is the analogy, if thoſe paſchal lambs, whoſe blood was firſt ſprinkled in that great deliverance upon the poſts and lentils of the Jewiſh houſes, could be but once offered, and all ſucceeding celebrations of the paſſover were nothing elſe but thankful acknowledgments and commemorations of this, while all this time the ſame, the very ſelf-ſame Chriſt, may be offered every day in the year, and every hour in the day, as often as ever we receive the Sacrament, and as many times told, almoſt at the very ſame inſtant, as there are people that receive it?

Where is the analogy, if the Moſaical paſſover could be offered no where but at Jeruſalem, and cannot be offered ſo much as there any more, if one and the ſame Chriſt, at the very ſame inſtant, may be offered in all parts of the world; and all this as many times repeated as there are days and hours, nay, moments, the moſt incredibly ſmall parts, the moſt exquiſite ſub-diviſions, and, as it were, atoms of time, from the firſt inſtitution of the Sacrament to the end of the world?

Laſtly, Where is the analogy, if the blood of the Paſchal Lamb were moſt ſtrictly prohibited to be either drunk or eaten, and yet there is a neceſſity of drinking the blood of Chriſt? An imputation which the prieſt, with all his artifice and ſophiſtry, cannot poſſibly avoid; and the people alſo are affirmed to do it collectively, though they do not take the elements in ſunder: and certainly this, if it be not eating and drinking blood, yet it is at leaſt eating with the blood, which was as much unlawful as the other, and this was the ſin of the Iſraelites in the 14th chapter of the firſt book of Samuel.

So that it is manifeſt a man muſt have the impudence to contradict plain texts of Scripture, as well as common ſenſe, he muſt deſtroy the analogy of types to their antitypes, of ſymbols to their ſubſtance, as well as the agreement and connection of things with one another, before he can aſſert the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, to be a true doctrine.

Secondly, We are to keep the feaſt in memory of this paſſover with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth.

Grotius obſerves out of Servius, Flamines farinam fermentatam contingere non licebat, nimirum, ſays he, ἄζυμα ſignificationem habent puritatis & animi ſubmiſſi; which is very good reaſon, and is ſufficiently confirmed by teſtimony of Scripture: from whence it plainly appears, that leaven was anciently looked upon as a ſymbol of every thing which was bad, but more eſpecially of pride, which is a certain leaven or puff-paſt of the mind; and the contrary to this, that is, unleavened bread, was a ſymbol of every thing which was good and virtuous, but more eſpecially of humility and ſincerity of mind. Thus you ſee, in the words of my text, we are bid to keep the feaſt, not with the old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedneſs, but with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth.

Thus our Saviour forewarned his diſciples to beware of the leaven of the Phariſees and Sadducees, Matt. xvi. 6. which in the twelfth verſe is expounded of their doctrines; and the reaſon why falſe doctrines are called by the name of leaven, is becauſe they are naturally corruptive of the mind, and fill it commonly as full of pride as error, neither is there any man, for the moſt part, ſo poſitive, ſo ſeemingly infallible, ſo full of arrogance and ſelf-conceit, ſo great an admirer of himſelf and his own ſect or party, and ſo great a deſpiſer of all other men beſides, as he that labours under a religious miſtake, he that conſecrates error by making it an article of his creed, and upholds, by the ſtrength of impudence and the ſtrength of a ſtrange kind of obſtinate faith, the diſcriminative nonſenſe of a party, which cannot be defended by the ſtrength of reaſon.

But if a falſe doctrine, which is commonly no more than a miſtake in the greateſt part of them that embrace it, though it may be, and is uſually, knavery in their teachers, if this be called by the name of leaven, then certainly a bad life and a vicious practice ought much more to be branded with this hateful name: from whence it is, that in the twelfth chapter of Luke's Goſpel, at the firſt verſe, our Saviour bids his diſciples beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, which is hypocriſy; and in this very chapter, fornication, pride, idolatry, covetouſneſs, extortion, and in a word, every thing almoſt that is but bad, are manifeſtly compared to leaven; and it is of all theſe, as well as of that glorying which is not good, that the Apoſtle ſays, Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are, unleavened.

He ſpeaks chiefly of one of the Church of Corinth, who had taken to himſelf his father's wife, and conſequently was guilty of ſuch fornication, as was not ſo much as to be named amongſt the Gentiles, for fear of giving occaſion of ſcandal to the Goſpel of Chriſt: he exhorts them with great earneſtneſs to deliver ſuch an one unto Satan, to the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit might be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus; and the reaſon he gives, why he would have this done, is taken from the neceſſity of it, know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump, that is, a wicked man in a party or ſociety, is the ſame thing as leaven in the kneaded lump, they both communicate their own bad qualities to the whole maſs; and the whole ſociety is in equal danger of being infected by the pernicious example of a bad man, as the whole lump of being ſeaſoned by a ſmall quantity of leaven. Wherefore leaven has a double ſymbolical meaning. Firſt, it is a ſymbol of ſpreading and propagation: Secondly, it is a ſymbol of wickedneſs, and of every naughty habit of the mind.

In the firſt reſpect, the Kingdom of Heaven, that is, the miraculouſly ſtrange propagation of the Goſpel of Chriſt, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition of its profeſſed enemies is likened to leaven, and a grain of muſtard-ſeed, by our Saviour himſelf, Matt. xiii. 31, 32, 33. Mark. iv. 31, 32. Luke xiii. 18. ad 21. and upon account of both theſe reſpects taken together it was, that leaven was in all kind of ſacrifices whatſoever, forbidden, Levit. ii. 11. (See alſo Exod. xxxiv. 25. & Levit. vi. 17.) no meat-offering which ye ſhall bring unto the Lord ſhall be made with leaven; for ye ſhall burn no leaven nor any honey in any offering of the Lord made by fire; and offering a ſacrifice of thankſgiving with leaven is mentioned by the Prophet Amos, as one of the higheſt inſtances of the Jewiſh abominations, Amos iv. 5.

Ye ſhall burn no leaven nor any honey in any offering of the Lord made by fire; What was the reaſon of this? Why, the reaſon is plain, becauſe the fire would agitate and provoke the fermenting nature of the leaven and honey, and by that means render them more effectual ſymbols of thoſe bad habits and qualifications of mind, which the Jews, by this prohibition, were ſymbolically commanded to avoid.

Let us keep the feaſt with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth.

From theſe words we may obſerve theſe three things: Firſt, it is manifeſt that this was a real feaſt, and therefore could not be kept with metaphors and allegories; now the only thing here mentioned with which we are to keep it, is unleavened bread, which was, as has been ſhewn, a ſymbol of ſincerity and truth: ſo that to keep the feaſt after this manner, was, in effect, to enter upon new reſolutions of a holy and virtuous life.

Secondly, this feaſt is the feaſt of Chriſt our Paſſover, therefore there is no doubt at all but there is here a plain alluſion made to that unleavened bread, which was made uſe of at the ſolemnity of the paſſover and other ſacrifices; but this bread was not the very Paſchal Lamb which was offered up for ſacrifice, and to which it was annexed; therefore neither is this bread the ſame thing in it ſelf, or by any means changed into it, with that ſacrifice of Chriſt, by which he offered up himſelf for the ſins of men; who, though he neither did nor could ſuffer above once, yet is he virtually offered up by the merits and efficacy of his paſſion, every time we come to the participation of this holy myſtery, behaving our ſelves in it like reverend and worthy partakers.

Thus I have in general conſidered the words: I will now be ſomewhat more particular, beginning again with the firſt particular, Chriſt is our Paſſover. It is with reſpect to this that Iſaac, who was a type of Chriſt, is prophetically called a Lamb, though the buſineſs of the Paſchal Lamb were not then known in the world, Gen. xxii. 7, 8. And Iſaac ſpake unto Abraham his father, and he ſaid, my father; and he ſaid, Here am I, my ſon: and he ſaid, Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the Lamb for a burnt-offering? And he ſaid, my ſon, God will provide himſelf a Lamb for a burnt-offering; meaning his ſon Iſaac, whom he was about to ſacrifice.

Peter alſo tells us, 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. that we are redeemed by the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a Lamb without blemiſh and without ſpot; alluding to that place in the twelfth of Exodus, your Lamb ſhall be without blemiſh, ver. 5

In the fifty-third of Iſaiah, at the ſeventh verſe, it is ſaid of the Meſſias, that he was brought as a Lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before his ſhearers was dumb: and in the eighth of the Acts, at the thirty-ſecond verſe, the place is inverted, He was led as a ſheep to the ſlaughter, and like a lamb dumb before his ſhearers.

The thirteenth of the Revelations, at the eighth, with alluſion to this Paſchal Feaſt, he is called, the lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; and in the 19th chapter, at the ninth verſe, we find mention of the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb; by which marriage-ſupper, in that place, is immediately underſtood, the final completion and conſummation of the happineſs of Saints in Heaven, by being perfectly freed and exempted from all the miſeries of human life, and brought to a complete enjoyment of God and Chriſt in his glorified eſtate; but it has alſo a reſpect to that marriage-ſupper, which is to be celebrated in this life; that is, the due and worthy participation of the body and blood of Chriſt in the Holy Euchariſt; for Chriſt even with reſpect to the Church in this life, is called the bridegroom; and every particular diſciple is a child of the bed-chamber, and the Church in the general conſidered as his ſpouſe, ſee Matt. ix. 15, &c.

Now a man would think in all reaſon, where there is a bridegroom and a ſpouſe, there muſt alſo be a wedding and a marriage-feaſt; and accordingly we find both of theſe in the 22d chapter of Matthew's Goſpel, ver. 2. and in the 14th of Luke, ver. 16. where the kingdom of Heaven, that is, the gracious offers of bleſſedneſs and immortality by the Goſpel, is likened to a certain king, which made a marriage for his ſon, at the ſolemnity of which marriage a feaſt is made, to which many rich and noble gueſts, ſuch as were moſt ſuitable to the ſplendor of a kingly entertainment are invited, but they refuſing to come, that is in truth; for this is at the bottom of the parable, being prejudiced againſt the Goſpel, by reaſon of the ſeeming meanneſs of the firſt promulger of it, and of its manifeſt contrariety to their worldly deſigns and intereſts; what was at firſt intended for magnificence is afterwards converted into charity; and he ſends his ſervants into the ſtreets of the city, to call in the poor and the maimed, the halt and the blind, by which is ſignified the mean and ſeemingly contemptible condition of the firſt diſciples and Apoſtles of Chriſtianity.

Now as this marriage of the king's ſon is really nothing elſe, but the converſion of Jew and Gentile, Greek and Barbarian, bond and free to the faith of Chriſt, and their admittance into the Church by baptiſm; ſo the marriage-feaſt, or the more eſpecial ſolemnities of this marriage, together with that union of the ſpouſe to her husband, which is conſequent thereupon, are no where better ſet forth than in the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt; which is a thankful commemoration of that paſſion, by which this marriage is finally conſummated, and by which the children of adoption, who are born under it, and engrafted by the merits of it into that body of which Chriſt is the head, are made heirs of grace and partakers of eternal life.

So that this feaſt in Luke differs only in degree from that in the Revelation, the preſence of Chriſt by his grace and Spirit, by the merits of his paſſion, and the power of his interceſſion, to every worthy communicant at this Bleſſed Table, being only a pledge or earneſt of thoſe joys unſpeakable, and pleaſures at the right hand of God, where Chriſt himſelf is in the other world. And this is all that can be underſtood to be included in the true notion of the Sacrament. It is firſt a grateful commemoration of the ſufferings of God for the ſins of men, which cannot poſſibly be unattended with ſorrow for ſin, and reſolutions of a new life; neither can it when it is hearty and ſincere, be unaſſiſted by the gracious encouragements of the Holy Spirit.

It is ſecondly a pledge or earneſt of our future happineſs with the Saints in Heaven.

The firſt notion of the Sacrament has been ſufficiently proved already, our Saviour himſelf, if we will believe him, (and certainly, he knew beſt what was his own meaning.) tells us plainly, that he inſtituted this Sacrament, εἰς τὴν ἑαυτȣ̃ ἀνάμνησιν, for a remembrance of himſelf; and Paul likewiſe tells us, that as often as we eat this bread and drink this cup, we do ſhew forth the Lord's death till he come.

The ſecond alſo has the very ſame authority to vouch it, Matt. xxvi. 29. I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom, ὅταν ἀυτὸ πίνω μεθ' ὑμῶν καινόν, when I drink it new with you, that is, when I drink it after a more excellent manner than you do now, when I enjoy that happineſs, that infinite, complete, and entire ſatisfaction, undiſturbed by any of the miſeries or incumbrances of human life, of which this banquet is but a type and figure. Τὸν οἶνον νοητόν, ſays Grotius, Lætitiam immortalem quæ per vinum adumbrata intelligebatur, ſo we read of the New Jeruſalem in the book of the Revelation, ch. iii. 12. which Paul calls, the Jeruſalem which is above, Gal. iv. 26. that is, the Spiritual Jeruſalem of which the earthly city was a figure.

In the ſecond of the Revelation, at the 17th. we read of a new name, to him that overcometh, ſaith the Spirit to the Churches, I will give to eat of the hidden manna, that is, the New, the Spiritual Manna, and will give him a white ſtone, and in the ſtone a new name written, which no man knoweth ſaving he that receiveth it. What was this new name which the Spirit would beſtow upon him that overcometh? why in the 3d chapter at the 12th verſe, it ſeems to be explained, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he ſhall go no more out, and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jeruſalem which cometh down out of Heaven from my God, that is, I will make him an inhabitant of the New Jeruſalem, an inheritor of eternal life, I will bring him to the infinitely pleaſant and delightful enjoyment of the beatifical viſion in Heaven, and he ſhall be a pillar in the temple of my God and ſhall go no more out, or, his happineſs ſhall be as durable as it is exceeding great, and all this I will do, becauſe I will write my new name upon him, that is, I will ſet a mark upon him, by which he ſhall be known to be mine, he ſhall appear ſprinkled with my blood, adorned with my merits, clothed with my righteouſneſs, and ſhall lay a juſt title to the promiſes of my Goſpel, after having performed the conditions of it, which is the true ſenſe of overcoming.

And this new name of Chriſt is by the author to the Hebrews called a more excellent name, chap. i. 4. and all that is meant by it is, the tranſcendent happineſs and glory of Jeſus Chriſt far beyond the moſt excellent ranks and orders of created beings, who being the brightneſs of his Father's glory and the expreſs image of his perſon, when he had by himſelf purged our ſins, ſat down on the right hand of the Majeſty on High, being made ſo much better than the Angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the Angels ſaid he at any time, thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee; and again, I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a ſon, &c. In fine, to conclude this matter, we are told likewiſe of a new and better covenant, a new commandment, and a new doctrine, all which may well enough comport with this interpretation.

And now from all this it may be pretty plain, that the true ſenſe of that place, I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's Kingdom, is as much as if he had ſaid, I have now done with types and ſhadows, and am haſting to the full and compleat enjoyment of the ſubſtance itſelf, to the actual poſſeſſion of that happineſs of which this wine is but a ſymbol: which notion, however true in it ſelf, if it will not paſs upon the credit of this expoſition, there are other places of Scripture which may be produced to help it out; in the 22d chapter of Luke's Goſpel, at the 15th verſe, our Saviour tells his diſciples, with deſire have I deſired to eat this paſſover with you before I ſuffer, For I ſay unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the Kingdom of God; and again, in the 18th verſe, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the Kingdom of God ſhall come: the ſenſe of both which places is certainly the ſame, I will neither eat this paſſover nor drink this wine any more, but am now leaving mortality and things below, and am haſtening to the poſſeſſion of that glory, which I had with the Father before the world was, that feaſt of eternal joy and comfort, of which this paſſover is a type and ſhadow; I am now preparing for my ſolemn inauguration and inveſtiture in that ſpiritual dominion, which I, as the King of Saints and Sovereign of Angels, and Judge of all the world, am to exerciſe over all created Beings, from the time of my aſcenſion and for ever, and ſo the πλήρωμα, the ἀναπλήρωσις, the fulfilling of the paſſover, and of the wine in Luke, will be the ſame with the καινισμὸς, ἀνακαινισις, the renovation of them in Matthew, and the analogy between theſe two, the earthly and the heavenly feaſt is ſufficiently manifeſt from the 29th and 30th verſes of that chapter of Luke, which I have juſt now cited, where, immediately after the inſtitution and celebration of the Lord's Supper, our Saviour, plainly alluding to that feaſt, with which they had been juſt now entertaining one another, thus beſpeaks his diſciples: I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table and ſit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

Again, as theſe feaſts had a plain alluſion, reſpect and relation to one another, ſo the qualifications of the gueſts are in both caſes the ſame, only that the degree of thoſe qualifications in the marriage of the Lamb, is much more high and intenſive than in that of the King's ſon, for the Lamb's wife, in the 8th verſe of the 19th chapter of the Revelations, Revelation, was to be arrayed in fine linnen, clean and white; which fine linnen, ſaith the voice there ſpeaking, is the righteouſneſs of ſaints, that is, no man muſt expect to be partaker of the heavenly inheritance, who hath not wrought out his own ſalvation with fear and trembling, not every one who puts in a lazy claim to the merits and ſatisfaction of Chriſt, by an unactive faith, a faith without an inward and vital principle of goodneſs, a faith without good works, but they who by patience and perſeverance in well-doing, by an effectual conqueſt of all their luſts and paſſions to the obedience of God and Chriſt, ſo far forth as human nature is capable, and by an unfeigned repentance for what, by human frailty, they have done amiſs, are made partakers of the benefits of Chriſt's ſufferings, by having fulfilled the conditions of his Goſpel.

So likewiſe in the other marriage in Matthew, it is ſaid, that when the King came in to ſee his gueſts, he ſaw there a man which had not on a wedding garment, ch. xxii. 11. and that indeed was no great wonder, nor any ſuch heinous fault, if you take the words in the literal ſenſe: for, it was not to be expected that the poor and the lame, the halt and the blind, ſhould come all furniſhed with their wedding-garments. Wherefore the meaning is, he did not come rightly prepared to the participation of this holy Table. There is, indeed, one main difference between the marriage-feaſt of the Lamb, and that of the King's Son; and that is this, that of the firſt it is ſaid, bleſſed are they which are called to the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb, Rev. xix. 9. but of the latter, many are called, but few are choſen, Matt. xxii. 14.

The reaſon of which difference is to be taken from the different perfection of the feaſts themſelves; the one being only a pledge or earneſt, an imperfect taſte and reliſh of our future happineſs, which may be afterwards forfeited by ſin, or at that very inſtant become forfeit, by the lazy indifference and indiſpoſition, by the ingratitude and unthankfulneſs; or by the filth and impurity, the naughtineſs and uncleanneſs of a man's mind and will at the participation of this holy feaſt; but the other is the full and final, and irreverſible enjoyment of it.

To which purpoſe it is likewiſe, that to the marriage of the King's Son, the good and bad are equally admitted, Matt. xxii. 10. So thoſe ſervants went out into the highways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good; and the wedding was furniſhed with gueſts.

The reaſon is, becauſe it is naturally impoſſible in this life, in very many caſes, to diſtinguiſh the ſaint from the hypocrite; a due preparation from an imperfect; a ſincere from a pretended and counterfeit repentance: And he that does preſume to approach this holy Table, without that awful preparation which becomes it, he does it at his own peril, and muſt expect to hear of it another day.

But in the marriage of the Lamb, that is, in the other world, in that ſtate which is not the trial of virtue, but the reward of it; none will be admitted but ſuch as are in ſome ſenſe or other perfect; ſuch as have at leaſt a conditional and evangelical, though not an abſolute and legal, righteouſneſs; a perfection of true faith and of ſincere repentance, though not of univerſal and unſinning obedience; ſuch as have maintained a ſharp conflict with their luſts and paſſions, though they have not perfectly conquered and ſubdued them; but to the reſt it will be ſaid, as it was to him who had not on his wedding-garment; Friend, how cameſt thou hither, not having on thy wedding-garment, bind him hand and foot, take him away, and caſt him into utter darkneſs, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, Matt. xxii. 12, 13.

To make an end of this compariſon of Chriſt to the Paſchal Lamb, it is in alluſion to this, that John ſeeing Jeſus coming unto him, ſaith, behold the lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world, John i. 29. as the Paſchal Lamb, by redeeming the firſt-born, may be ſaid to have taken away the ſins of the Iſraelites: for by taking away ſins, nothing elſe is meant, but remitting that puniſhment which was due to them; otherwiſe a ſin being once committed, it is impoſſible it ſhould ever be uncommitted again, and ſo cannot be ſaid to be taken away in any other ſenſe but this, and this the Paſchal Lamb did by the Divine Appointment; the Iſraelites being otherwiſe as obnoxious to this or any other puniſhment, as the Egyptians themſelves were; though not for the very ſame ſins for which Pharaoh and his ſubjects were, yet for ſin in general, which no man but is more or leſs guilty of, and which is enough to ſtand in need of a redemption.

And truly he that ſhall conſider their repinings in the wilderneſs, and their murmurings in the deſart, their diſobedience to God and his ſervant Moſes, their relapſes to idolatry both in the wilderneſs and after; their want of an entire ſyſtem of a law in Egypt to be the rule of their lives, and the perfect meaſure of their behaviour, either towards God or man: Laſtly, whoever ſhall reflect upon their groſs ignorance, in matters of a more ſpeculative and refined nature; their utter unfitneſs for all ſuch philoſophical conſiderations, as are the beſt preſervatives againſt idolatry, will not think otherwiſe, but that they had ſome taint of it from their converſe in Egypt; eſpecially conſidering, that by ſuch compliances as theſe, ſome of their hard task-maſters might be rendered leſs cruel to them, ſo perhaps their hankering ſo vehemently after the garlick and onions in Egypt, may well enough bear ſomething of this ſenſe; for, we know very well what veneration ſuch trifles met with in thoſe parts.

> Porrum & cæpe nefas violare & frangere morſu,
> O ſanctas gentes quibus hæc naſcuntur in hortis
> Numina ———

Now, if it be true that the Paſchal Lamb was a type of Chriſt, the Saviour and Redeemer of mankind; if it be likewiſe true, that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is the marriage-feaſt of the Lamb, or ſomewhat more imperfectly, the marriage-feaſt of the King's Son, that is, of Chriſt to his Church; there being nothing which either does, or ought more cloſely to unite us to him, than the obſervation of this bleſſed banquet: Then it is plain, that the bread and wine in the Euchariſt are not tranſubſtantiated, either by any prieſtly charms, or by any Divine Power, into the very body and blood of Chriſt himſelf; otherwiſe the bridegroom and his marriage-feaſt will be the ſame, and his gueſts, inſtead of congratulating with him upon ſo happy an occaſion, will but devour him, and eat him up, playing the perfect cannibals with their friend and benefactor, which, as I take it, is an improper way of congratulation.

Again, in the third chapter of the Revelations, at the 20th verſe, it is ſaid, Behold, I ſtand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will ſup with him, and he with me. Now, in the firſt place, it cannot be denied, that theſe words have reference to the Church-Militant, i. e. to the Church of God on this ſide Heaven. For, firſt, it appears from the 14th verſe of this chapter, that theſe words were ſpoken to the Angel of the Church of Laodicea, which is alſo alike clear all the way from the 14th verſe to the 19th; and in that verſe it is ſaid, which is my ſecond proof; As many as I love, I rebuke and chaſten, be zealous therefore and repent: Now, they who are bleſſed in a future ſtate, are paſt all manner of rebuke and chaſtiſement, and they need no repentance; no more do the damned neither, for any good it will do them; for their repentance is but one part of their miſery, therefore it would be fruitleſs to exhort either of them to it, which the Amen, that is, Chriſt, in this place manifeſtly doth. I might urge a third and a fourth argument from the 21ſt and 22d verſes of this chapter, but this is enough; for which reaſon I will omit theſe, and proceed to the ſecond obſervable in the words, which is the thing I aim at, and that is this; If any man hear the voice, and open the door; that is, if he have a mind fitly qualified and prepared to give a due reception and entertainment to the Spirit of God and Chriſt; if he do not wilfully harden himſelf, and ſhut him out, Chriſt will come in unto him and will ſup with him; that is, he will at all times be ſufficiently preſent to him by the grace and aſſiſtance of his good Spirit, to encourage him in well-doing, to ſtrengthen him in temptations, and comfort him in and under afflictions, and will at laſt bring him to glory by the merits of his paſſion, and the powerful intereſt of his interceſſion: It is impoſſible, it cannot be denied that this is the very ſenſe, Chriſt cannot be ſaid to ſup with us in any other ſenſe but this; it is likewiſe impoſſible and abſurd to deny, that Chriſt, in this ſenſe, does ſup with every true believer at the receiving of the Sacrament; but he cannot both ſup with us, and alſo be that very meat on which we feed our ſelves: therefore I conclude that the elements of bread and wine in this holy ſolemnity are not changed into the body and blood of Chriſt.

And if it be objected, that this is only a figurative way of ſpeaking, and ſo nothing can be inferred from it; I grant, indeed, that it is a figure; but then it is ſuch a ſtrange figure as was never heard of before, that our fellow-boarder, our fellow-commener, ſhould be taken for our diet.

Again, I will come in unto him, and will ſup with him, and he with me. Let it be granted once, that by the Pronoun [I] in this place, is meant not the ſpiritual, but the perſonal and corporeal preſence of Chriſt, by the ſeat of tranſtubſtantiation; and one of theſe muſt be allowed, unleſs they will deny, that Chriſt does as really ſup with, that is, is as much preſent to believers at the receiving of the Sacrament, as upon other occaſions. What will be the conſequence of this? The bread and wine, thus tranſubſtantiated into the body and blood of Chriſt, is not only the ſpiritual, but the material and literal food of believers; they do really and truly eat his body and drink his blood; ſo then, I will come and ſup with you, that is, my body and blood will come and ſup with you, is as much as to ſay they will feed upon themſelves; for theſe are the two things that make the entertainment. Laſtly, ſince we are told hereafter, That we being many, are one bread and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread, 1 Cor. x. 17. it will follow, if we take theſe words literally, that the whole Church, by being partakers of that one bread, are tranſubſtantiated into that one bread, which is that one body, which is Chriſt; and ſo, at this rate, the Church and the two elements of bread and wine, and Chriſt himſelf, will be all one and the ſame thing; which is ſo abſurd, that I am certain no one can pretend to patronize it.

Thus I have proved in general, I could do it much more particularly, if the time would permit, or if there were any doubt of it among Chriſtians, that Chriſt is our Paſſover, and ſhewn what are the conſequences of that propoſition. The Jews themſelves confeſs, that the Paſſover was a type of the Meſſias as well as we, though they will not allow our Jeſus to be that Meſſias; and accordingly, they tell us fine ſtories of the deliverance of their nation by him, upon that very day on which the Paſſover was inſtituted, being ſome time or other to happen on the anniverſary of their deliverance from the Egyptian bondage; and this, if they had known what kind of deliverance that was, which they were to expect, together with the reſt of mankind, had been right enough; for it is on all hands agreed, they themſelves cannot deny it, that our Bleſſed Lord ſuffered upon the croſs at this very time; but this was not that deliverance from temporal bondage, and from the Roman power, which they with ſo much earneſtneſs expected, although it be manifeſt, at firſt ſight, that the Paſchal Lamb could be no type of the Meſſias, if they had been to be delivered by any other way, than that of his ſuffering and being put to death for their ſakes. For this reaſon they have, ſome of them, employed their thoughts in finding out objections why our Jeſus could not be typified by the Paſſover under the law; which are generally ſo weak, that it will be foreign to my purpoſe to take up your time in reading the anſwers which have been given to them. For,

To maintain the ſimilitude between the Paſchal Lamb, and the ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the croſs, it is enough to ſay, that as the deſtroying Angel ſpared the firſt-born of the Iſraelites upon ſeeing the blood of the paſſover ſprinkled upon the poſts and lentils of their ſeveral houſes; ſo God for the ſake of Chriſt will paſs over us, and will not impute ſin to us, wherever he ſees the blood, that is, the meritorious paſſion of his Son rightly applied by a hearty belief of the Goſpel, and by a converſation anſwerable to it, and that as this preſervation of the firſt-born by the blood of the Paſchal Lamb, while the Egyptians had nothing but the voice of mourning and lamentation in their ſtreets, was the laſt miracle wrought in the behalf of his people while they continued in Egypt, accompanied with the laſt plague inflicted on the Egyptians, except their being drowned and finally deſtroyed in the Red-ſea (which Red-ſea was likewiſe a type of the blood of Chriſt, by which they who are not ſaved by making a right uſe of it, will be more effectually and inexcuſably condemned for having abuſed ſo great a mercy) ſo the ſhedding of the blood of Chriſt upon the croſs is the laſt deliverance, the laſt atonement which God will afford his people; it will likewiſe in the end prove the laſt plague of thoſe, who have not duly applied it to themſelves, but living in a perpetual oppoſition to the laws of God, and the doctrine of the Goſpel, have ſlighted all the gracious offers of pardon and forgiveneſs, and wilfully neglected ſo great ſalvation.

And as the ſame Red-ſea gave a ſafe and ſecure paſſage to the Iſraelites, but executed the utmoſt of its rage and fury upon Pharaoh and all the hoſt of the Egyptians, ſo will the blood of Chriſt give a ſafe and comfortable paſſage to all his hearty followers and diſciples into the joys of Heaven, while it will but ſerve more effectually to overwhelm and ruin the unbelieving world.

Again, as that firſt paſſover of the deſtroying Angel, paſſing by the habitations of the Iſraelites did but prepare the way for the ſecond paſſover, that is, the paſſage of the Iſraelites through the Red-ſea and wilderneſs, into the land of Canaan; ſo God's paſſing over us, that is, his pardoning and forgiving our ſins, and not imputing them to as many of us, as heartily believe and obey the Goſpel, does but prepare the way through the wilderneſs and Red-ſea, all the troubles and difficulties of this life, into the land of Canaan, that is, if we do not repine and murmur, if we do not disbelieve his word, diſtruſt his providence, and diſobey his laws, as the Iſraelites did, into the compleat and entire poſſeſſion of eternal happineſs, of which the land of Canaan was a type.

Farther, as the Paſchal Lambs which the Jews fed upon for ever after, neither were nor could be the ſame with thoſe which were killed by the reſpective families, the evening before the great deliverance of the firſt-born, but only a memorial, a commemoration of them; ſo neither is that Euchariſtical feaſt, which we celebrate in the Chriſtian Church, a feaſt upon the body of Chriſt himſelf, but only a memorial of our deliverance in, by, and thro' him, and a ſanction of that covenant, which he hath purchaſed for us by his blood.

Laſtly, as it was unlawful either to eat or drink the blood of the Paſchal Lamb; ſo alſo it muſt needs be unlawful for us either to eat or drink the blood of Chriſt, for contraries cannot poſſibly be types of contraries, the blood of the Paſchal Lamb cannot poſſibly be a type of the blood of Chriſt, if it be unlawful for us to feed upon the one, and neceſſary to drink the other.

And this is enough to make out the reſemblance between the Paſchal Lamb and Chriſt, and to ſhew that one was a type of the other; he that will have more than this, before he will admit it to be a type, does not underſtand the nature of types and parables and ſymbols, nay, not ſo much as of metaphors in common diſcourſe, in which there is required no more than only ſome plain agreement in one or more particulars, without any groſs repugnancy or inconſiſtency in any.

But Jeſus was at the ſame time our Paſchal Lamb and our ſin-offering too, wherefore being to fulfil two ſuch different repreſentations of himſelf under the law, it is not much to be wondred, if the ſimilitude do not hit in all points.

By being our Paſchal Lamb he takes away the puniſhment of our ſins, which God paſſeth over and will not impute them to us; by being our ſin-offering he takes away the guilt of them too, to as many as are ſanctified by faith in his blood, as the ſin-offering under the law did, by the guilty perſons laying their hands upon it, truly and properly receive that guilt, which was to be expiated by this way of atonement; which by the way, may be ſufficient to ſhew us, how bad interpreters the Socinians are of the New Teſtament, and how little they underſtand the nature of our Saviour's ſacrifice for ſin, when they deny him to have made a true and proper ſatisfaction to the juſtice of God for it; for there can be no reſemblance between him and the ſin-offering, but only in this particular; for this reaſon it is, that he is ſaid to have born our ſins in his own body on the tree, to have been a ranſom for us, to have been made ſin for us who knew no ſin, and the like; and from hence it was that Jeſus, that he might ſanctify the people with his own blood, ſuffered without the gate, Heb. xiii. 12. as the ſin-offering under the law was to do without the camp, by reaſon of its uncleanneſs, being polluted with the ſins of thoſe on whoſe behalf it was offered, as the ſame inſpired writer likewiſe takes notice in the ſame place, ver. 11. for the bodies, ſaith he, of thoſe beaſts, whoſe blood is brought into the ſanctuary by the high prieſt for ſin, are burnt without the camp: Upon which account it was, that if the blood of theſe ſacrifices were brought into the tabernacle to make reconciliation withal, it was unlawful not only for God himſelf, (for that he never did in the ſin and treſpaſs-offering,) but even for the prieſts, or any body elſe, to partake of them; to which the ſame author, in the ſame place, manifeſtly alludes, and brings the compariſon home to the ſacrifice of Chriſt, We have an altar, ſaith he, whereof they have no right to eat that ſerve the tabernacle, for the bodies of thoſe beaſts, whoſe blood is brought into the ſanctuary by the prieſt for ſin, are burnt without the camp, wherefore Jeſus alſo that he might ſanctify the people with his own blood ſuffered without the gate; now it being unlawful for the people in all caſes, and for the prieſt himſelf in this, to partake of the ſin-offering, and Chriſt being our ſin-offering, and having ſanctified the people with his own blood, it is manifeſt that it muſt needs be unlawful for us to partake of this ſacrifice, in that ſenſe which the Papiſts would have; that is, we muſt not truly and properly eat his body; and ſo thoſe words, This is my body, muſt not be underſtood in the literal ſenſe, much leſs muſt we imagine, that God will work miracles to contradict himſelf and his Apoſtles, and deſtroy the nature of thoſe types, by which the ſacrifice of his ſon was ſignified under the law.

But yet, notwithſtanding this, nothing hinders, but that we may celebrate an Euchariſtical or a commemorative feaſt in both of theſe reſpects, as well becauſe he is our ſin-offering, as upon account of his being our paſſover; for by both of theſe taken together, our deliverance from the jaws of death and hell is completed, and we are delivered from the bondage of corruption, from the intolerable ſervitude of ſin and Satan, into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God; a deliverance of ſo high a nature, that though we had not been commanded to commemorate it by our Saviour himſelf, who, with his own blood, purchaſed it for us; yet mere gratitude and good-nature, nay, common honeſty and common ſenſe themſelves would have prompted all hearty Chriſtians not to ſit down contented with a bare narrative, a cold ſtory of ſuch a redemption; but they would certainly have found out ſome ſymbols, the better to repreſent it, as much as may be, to our outward ſenſes, and fix it deeper in our minds, according to that ſaying,

Segnius irritant animas demiſſa per aures,
Quam quæ ſunt oculis ſubjecta fidelibus.—

And there could not poſſibly better ſymbols have been found out, than thoſe of eating bread and drinking wine, by which both the manner of our Lord's Paſſion, by the rending of his body and the ſpilling of his blood is ſignified; and the union of the Church by the participation of the ſame table, which was always accounted a ſymbol of the ſtricteſt friendſhip, and which was another end of this Holy Feaſt, was intended to be inviolably maintained and preſerved.

And thus the feeding upon the Paſchal Lamb under the law, is more than anſwered, by our ſpiritual feeding upon the body of Chriſt; that is, by our being more than nouriſhed, by our being ſaved and eternally made happy by the merit and ſatisfaction of his death.

CHAP. VI.

1 The Corinthians muſt not vex their brethren, in going to law with them: 6 Eſpecially under infidels. 9 The unrighteous ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God. 15 Our bodies are the members of Chriſt, 19 and temples of the Holy Ghoſt. 16, 17. They muſt not therefore be defiled.

DARE any of you, having a matter againſt another, go to law before the unjuſt, and not before the ſaints?

2 Do ye not know that the ſaints ſhall judge the world? and if the world ſhall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the ſmalleſt matters?

3 Know ye not that we ſhall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, ſet them to judge who are leaſt eſteemed in the church.

5 I ſpeak to your ſhame. Is it ſo, that there is not a wiſe man amongſt you? no not one that ſhall be able to judge between his brethren?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers.

7 Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, becauſe ye go to law one with another: why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather ſuffer your ſelves to be defrauded?

8 Nay, you do wrong and defraud, and that your brethren.

9 Know ye not that the unrighteous ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abuſers of themſelves with mankind,

10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, ſhall inherit the kingdom of God.

11 And ſuch were ſome of you: but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.

13 Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God ſhall deſtroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body.

14 And God hath both raiſed up the Lord, and will alſo raiſe up us by his own power.

15 Know ye not, that your bodies are the members of Chriſt? ſhall I then take the members of Chriſt, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid.

16 What, know ye not that he which is joyned to an harlot, is one body? for two (ſaith he) ſhall be one fleſh.

17 But he that is joyned unto the Lord is one ſpirit.

18 Flee fornication. Every ſin that a man doth, is without the body: but he that committeth fornication, ſinneth againſt his own body.

19 What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the holy Ghoſt which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

20 For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your ſpirit, which are Gods.

In this chapter the Apoſtle treats of two things, which he blames in the Corinthians.

I. He condemns their practice of going to law one with another in the Heathen courts of judicature, and directs them to make uſe of Chriſtian umpires, or arbitrators, in caſe of diſputes about right or wrong, ver. 1. which he urges, becauſe they ſhall judge greater matters, ver. 2, 3. Then he exhorts them to the uſe of this courſe, ver. 4. ſhames them out of the other, ver. 5, 6. blames them for their litigiouſneſs upon trifling occaſions; amplified by an exhortation to the contrary duty, to take wrong, ver. 7. charges them with injuſtice herein, ver. 8. which he diſſuades them to forbear, by reaſon of the danger, becauſe it will deprive them of the kingdom of Heaven, ver. 9. — proved by parallel caſes of other ſins, ver. — 9, 10. and ſo concludes this point with a declaration of his good opinion of their preſent condition, ver. 11.

II. He confutes their opinion about fornication, becauſe they pleaded, that it was an indifferent thing. He confutes them, I ſay, by ſhewing, that though it were indifferent, yet it may not be practiſed, becauſe it is not expedient, in that it enſlaves a man under its power, ver. 12. And then by denying it to be indifferent, as meats are, for meats have bodily parts fitted for them, and the time will come when this relation between the body and meats ſhall be taken away. But, as for fornication, the body was deſigned by God for another, and for a more noble uſe, ver. 13. not to be deſtroyed, but to be raiſed up again. Therefore,

He argues directly againſt it. (1.) Becauſe it is a ſin againſt the relation of their bodies to Chriſt, as his members. (2.) Becauſe thereby they make their bodies the members of an harlot, ver. 15. proved by the nature of the act, and the teſtimony of Scripture, ver. 16. (3.) Becauſe every true believer is ſpiritually one with the Lord, ver. 17. (4.) Becauſe it is a ſin againſt the dignity of the body more than other ſins, ver. 18. (5.) Becauſe it is againſt the inhabitation of the Spirit, ver. 19. And (6.) it is a ſin againſt the redemption of the body by Chriſt, ver. 20.

Ver. 2. Do ye not know.] How, or where it is written, that the Saints ſhall judge the world; ſee Pſal. xlix. 14. Dan. vii. 22. Matt. xviii. 28. Luke xxii. 30. Rev. ii. 26. and iii. 21. and xx. 4.

Ver. 4. If then ye have judgments.] Or, need of a judicial deciſion.

Ver. 5. I ſpeak to your ſhame.] It would be a ſhameful thing to excuſe yourſelves, by ſaying, you have not one among you wiſe enough to judge, or to arbitrate your differences.

Ver. 7. — Why do ye not rather take wrong?] See the notes on Matt. v. 39, 40, &c.

Ver. 9. — Abuſers of themſelves with mankind.] i. e. Sodomites.

Ver. 10. — Shall inherit the kingdom of God.] Shall not be admitted into the inheritance of the children of God, if they do not repent, but die in their ſins.

Ver. 15. — Are the members of Chriſt.] As he is the head of the Church.

Ver. 16. — Two, ſaith he, ſhall be one fleſh.] See Gen. ii. 24. and Matt. xix. 5. Eph. v. 31.

Ver. 17 — Is one ſpirit.] With the Lord; ſee John xvii. 21, 22, 23. Eph. iv. 4. and v. 30.

Ver. 18. — Sinneth againſt his own body.] See Rom. i. 24. 1 Theſſ. iv. 4.

Ver. 20. — Ye are bought with a price.] Ye are redeemed from ſin and Satan by the blood of Chriſt.

CHAP. VII.

2 He treateth of marriage, 4 ſhewing it to be a remedy againſt fornication: 10 And that the bond thereof ought not lightly to be diſſolved. 18, 20 Every man muſt be content with his vocation. 25 Virginity wherefore to be embraced. 35 And for what reſpects we may either marry, or abſtain from marrying.

NOW concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me: It is good for a man not to touch a woman.

2 Nevertheleſs, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband.

3 Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewiſe alſo the wife unto the husband.

4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: and likewiſe alſo the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.

5 Defraud you not one the other, except it be with conſent for a time, that ye may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

6 But I ſpeak this by permiſſion, and not of commandment.

7 For I would that all men were even as I my ſelf: but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8 I ſay therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I.

9 But if they cannot contain, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn.

10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband:

11 But and if ſhe depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

12 But to the reſt ſpeak I, not the Lord, If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and ſhe be pleaſed to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleaſed to dwell with her, let her not leave him.

14 For the unbelieving husband is ſanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is ſanctified by the husband: elſe were your children unclean; but now are they holy.

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a ſiſter is not under bondage in ſuch caſes: but God hath called us to peace.

16 For what knoweſt thou, O wife, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy husband? or how knoweſt thou, O man, whether thou ſhalt ſave thy wife?

17 But as God hath diſtributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one ſo let him walk: and ſo ordain I in all churches.

18 Is any man called being circumciſed? let him not become uncircumciſed: is any called in uncircumciſion? let him not become circumciſed.

19 Circumciſion is nothing, and uncircumciſion is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God.

20 Let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called.

21 Art thou called being a ſervant: care not for it; but if thou mayeſt be made free, uſe it rather.

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a ſervant, is the Lords free-man; likewiſe alſo he that is called being free, is Chriſt ſervant.

23 Ye are bought with a price, be not ye the ſervants of men.

24 Brethren, let every man wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

25 Now concerning virgins, I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful.

26 I ſuppoſe therefore, that this is good for the preſent diſtreſs, I ſay, that it is good for a man ſo to be.

27 Art thou bound unto a wife? ſeek not to be looſed. Art thou looſed from a wife? ſeek not a wife.

28 But and if thou marry, thou haſt not ſinned; and if a virgin marry, ſhe hath not ſinned: nevertheleſs, ſuch ſhall have trouble in the fleſh; but I ſpare you.

29 But this I ſay, brethren, the time is ſhort. It remaineth, that both they that have wives, be as though they had none;

30 And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoyce, as though they rejoyced not; and they that buy, as though they poſſeſſed not;

31 And they that uſe this world, as not abuſing it? for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away.

32 But I would have you without carefulneſs. He that is unmarried, careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may pleaſe the Lord:

33 But he that is married, careth for the things that are of the world, how he may pleaſe his wife.

34 There is difference alſo between a wife and a virgin: The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that ſhe may be holy, both in body and in ſpirit: but ſhe that is married, careth for the things of the world, how ſhe may pleaſe her husband.

35 And this I ſpeak for your own profit, not that I may caſt a ſnare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that you may attend upon the Lord without diſtraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himſelf uncomely toward his virgin, if we paſs the flower of her age, and need ſo require, let him do what he will, he ſinneth not: let them marry.

37 Nevertheleſs, he that ſtandeth ſtedfaſt in his heart, having no neceſſity, but hath power over his own will, and hath ſo decreed in his heart, that he will keep his virgin, doeth well.

38 So then, he that giveth her in marriage, doth well: but he that giveth her not in marriage, doth better.

39 The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth: but if her husband be dead, ſhe is at liberty to be married to whom ſhe will; only in the Lord.

40 But ſhe is happier if ſhe ſo abide, after my judgment: and I think alſo that I have the ſpirit of God.

This chapter contains the reſolution of ſome caſes of conſcience about marriage, and a ſingle life, propounded by the Corinthians to the Apoſtles. And,

I. Concerning marriage, or the married ſtate; Paul ſays, that it is convenient to forbear marriage, ver. 1. except in caſe of incontinence, ver. 2.

II. Concerning married perſons, he ſays, that the conjugal duty muſt be mutually rendred, ver. 3. which he, firſt, proves by a reaſon, ver. 4. and then explains by a four-fold exception, ver. 5. and by the obligation or extent of this advice, how much it bindeth, ver. 6 amplified by the reaſon taken from every one's proper gift, ver. 7.

III. Concerning widowers and widows, how they are to govern themſelves, ver. 8, 9.

IV. Concerning divorce and ſeparation of married perſons, which he ſays is not to be allowed merely upon differences ariſing between man and wife, ver. 10, 11. nor in caſe of unequal marriages between believers and heathens, neither muſt they part voluntarily, ver. 12, 13. confirmed by a reaſon, ver. 14. and in caſe of a departure, that they muſt ſeek reconciliation, ver. 15. confirmed with a reaſon at ver. 16. and by a general rule, ver. 17. exemplified in particular inſtances, ver. 18. and confirmed by reaſon, ver. 19. which rule is again repeated with a further exemplification concerning ſervants, ver. 20—24.

V. Concerning ſingle perſons never married; and

Firſt, Thoſe that are at their own diſpoſal, having, firſt, ſhewn the nature of his advice, ver. 25. he diſſuades from marrying on many accounts; and

1. Becauſe of the preſent diſtreſs, ver. 26. amplified by a rule to married and unmarried, ver. 27. and by a conceſſion of the lawfulneſs of marriage to ſuch, ver. 28.—

2. Becauſe of the troubles incident to a married ſtate, ver. 28. amplified by an injunction to moderate the affections towards all worldly things, and in all worldly conditions; to which he ſubjoins his reaſon, ver. 29—31.

3. Becauſe of the cares attending that ſtate of life; illuſtrated by a view of the advantage of the contrary ſtate in this caſe, both on the man's part, ver. 32, 33. and on the woman's, ver. 34. amplified by his end in this advice, ver. 35. In like manner he proceeds,

Secondly, To give his advice about marriage to thoſe that are at the diſpoſal of others; diſtinguiſhing his reſolution, where there is a neceſſity, and where there is none, ver. 36, 37. and they lay down his concluſion, ver. 38.

V. Concerning ſecond marriages, he declares that they are lawful, ver. 39, 40.

Ver. 1. —— It is good for a man not to touch a woman.] The firſt ſcruple or caſe of conſcience, concerning which the Corinthians wrote to Paul, who had founded their Church, was about the married ſtate. The occaſion of this ſcruple was given by the Gnoſticks, which hereticks of the Apoſtolick age, among many other dangerous doctrines, troubled the Church of Chriſt with this, that marriage was the invention of the Devil. Againſt which the Apoſtle in another place declares, that the ſtate of matrimony is holy and honourable, Heb. xiii. 4. And here he determines (1.) in general, that ſuch as have the gift of continency, and can live chaſte in a ſingle ſtate, do well. And (2) in particular, that a ſingle life at that time, was more adviſeable, as being moſt agreeable to the calamitous and afflicted ſtate of the Church. So that when the Apoſtle ſays in this verſe, it is good for a man not to touch a woman; we are to underſtand him to ſay, that it is more agreeable to the preſent neceſſity, more convenient in regard of the perſecuted ſtate of the Church, as being in a condition leſs diſtracted with cares and troubles.

Ver. 2. Neverthelеſs, to avoid fornication.] i. e. Let a ſingle life be never ſo eligible on account of our preſent caſe, it muſt not be choſen where a perſon cannot contain; then ſays the Apoſtle to avoid fornication he muſt marry, every perſon muſt avoid this ſin, and therefore every man may have a wife; ſee the following Diſſertation.

A Diſſertation on Celibacy.

It may be remembred that the Gnoſticks, who were hereticks in the Apoſtolick age, not only promoted celibacy among their followers, but alſo taught that marriage, or the married ſtate, was a deviliſh thing. In like manner amongſt many other errors the Church of Rome, which not only adviſeth, but impoſeth celibacy; in many of the Clergy have diſſolved marriage, in all deſcrieth it as hereſy, defineth it to be worſe than fornication, and to none allows a remedy for incontinency. To demonſtrate the injuſtice of the Church of Rome herein, and her departure from the doctrine and practice of the ancient Church, ſhall be the ſubject of this preſent Diſſertation.

It is no ſmall preſumption of error, when the defenders of any opinion agree not in the merits of the cauſe they undertake. In the Church of Rome, there are four opinions about the celibacy of the Clergy: The firſt, that it is of Divine Right, inſtituted and commanded by God. So Jo. Major, (in 4. Diſp. 24. Qu. 2.) Clichtovæus, (de contin. ſacerd. c. 4.) and Turrian teach, (de dogmatic. charact. l. 2.) that God hath forbidden biſhops, prieſts, deacons, and ſub-deacons (whom we ſhall hereafter comprehend under the general name of the Clergy, unleſs when we manifeſtly diſtinguiſh them) to marry, or uſe their wives already married. The ſecond is that of Bellarmine, Valentia, Vaſquez, Becanus, Aquinas, and the far greater part of the Roman Divines, that it is not properly of Divine, but of Apoſtolick Right, as being inſtituted by the Apoſtles, and ever ſince conſtantly and invariably practiſed by the Church; that a vow of continence ſhould be annexed to Holy Orders; and conſequently, that marriage thereby becomes unlawful to the clergy, without a diſpenſation. The third, without any reſpect to Divine or Apoſtolical inſtitution and practice of the ancient Church, whether they be here had or not, thinks it ſufficient that the Church hath power to impoſe a vow of continence upon the clergy, and that ſuch a vow being once taken, all uſe of marriage is become unlawful, and ſubſequent contracts invalid. This ſeems to be the opinion of many of the canoniſts, and the council of Trent, (Seſſ. 24. can. 9.) which ventured to define no more than this, that clergymen or regulars, after a ſolemn profeſſion of continence, cannot marry, or if they do, that their marriage is unlawful. Laſtly, the more moderate Divines maintain, that it is neither of Divine nor Apoſtolical Right, but deriveth all its obligation from Eccleſiaſtical Inſtitution; which, as well as the vow annexed to it, will ceaſe to oblige, as ſoon as the Church ſhall pleaſe; although in the mean while ſhe hath ſufficient reaſon to continue her inſtitution. Againſt theſe opinions, I ſhall prove theſe four propoſitions.

I. Celibacy of the clergy was not inſtituted either by Chriſt or his Apoſtles.

II. It hath nothing excellent in it, and bringeth no real advantage to the Church or to the Chriſtian Religion.

III. The impoſition of it upon any order of men, is unjuſt, and contrary to the law of God.

IV. It was never univerſally impoſed or practiſed in the ancient Church.

Firſt then, that celibacy was not inſtituted either by Chriſt or his Apoſtles. By celibacy, we mean a perpetual abſtinence from the uſe of the nuptial bed in thoſe already married, and not contracting of marriage in ſingle perſons, after taking of Holy Orders, or making a vow of chaſtity. That ſuch celibacy was not at all enjoined by Chriſt, nor by the Apoſtles, as of Divine Right, is ſufficiently proved from the diſſent of our adverſaries herein. For it is the received opinion of the Church of Rome, that nothing can be a matter of faith, ſuch as this would be, if it had been commanded by Chriſt; which is doubted and diſputed of among the doctors of the Church. Now this is denied by the maintainers of the ſecond and fourth opinions: As for the third, that according to the uſual artifice of the latter Popiſh councils, is ſo obſcurely propoſed, that it neither directly favours nor oppoſeth it. Beſides, neither Scripture or tradition can be offered for this claim of Divine Inſtitution. The former is not ſo much as pretended to, or if it be, we ſhall examine it afterwards: The latter cannot juſtly be, ſince none but an univerſal tradition of all paſt and preſent ages is ſufficient to convey down a matter of faith; whereas here the greateſt part even of the preſent Church deny it. But I will not inſiſt upon diſproving this, as well becauſe it is diſowned by the greateſt part of our adverſaries, as becauſe all the arguments to be produced againſt the other opinions, will with much more force be valid againſt this. I will only obſerve, that if this opinion be either falſe or uncertain, the infallibility of the Church of Rome is wholly overthrown; ſince many Popes and councils in the eleventh age, determined the celibacy of the clergy to be of Divine Inſtitution, and the lawfulneſs of their marriage to be downright hereſy.

Bellarmine therefore, Controv. Tmo. ii. l. 1. c. 18, 19. and with him the more learned of the Church of Rome, decline this plea, and aſſign to this celibacy a bare inſtitution of the Apoſtles, acting herein without any particular or expreſs commiſſion from our Lord, but by them preſcribed and adviſed as meritorious itſelf, and convenient to the Church; punctually herein followed and obeyed by the Church in all ages. Whether the Church, and more eſpecially the ancient, did conform its diſcipline to this pretended inſtitution of the Apoſtles, we ſhall enquire hereafter; and by proving that it did not, prove alſo that the Apoſtles made no ſuch inſtitution: Since the Primitive Church cannot be ſuppoſed to have immediately degenerated from the inſtructions and admonitions of their founders and great doctors. But to paſs by that, I obſerve, that whether the Apoſtles inſtituted celibacy, and ordained ed a vow of continency to be annexed to holy orders, is a queſtion of fact, and conſequently cannot be infallibly determined by the Church; but muſt be by them clearly proved, either from expreſs texts of Scripture, or an univerſal and invariable tradition. That there is no ſuch tradition, we ſhall ſhew in ſome meaſure preſently, and more largely hereafter. For Scripture, we deſire to know, where thoſe plain admonitions of celibacy to the clergy are to be found? For, we are in no ways obliged to prove the negative; marriage being not forbidden to the Clergy by the moral law, and therefore to be eſteemed lawful to them, till a manifeſt prohibition ſhall be produced. Bellarmine, indeed, urgeth that precept of the Apoſtle, Tit. i. 8. that a Biſhop be ſober and temperate, σώφρων ϗ ἐγκρατὴς. But, not to ſay that Bellarmine herein forſakes his own principle, and maketh celibacy to be of Divine Inſtitution, ſince Paul ſpeaketh this, at ver. 25. not only as one that had obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful, but alſo, as an Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, Tit. i. 1. Theſe words ſerve not the purpoſe, as deſigning neither continence nor chaſtity, but abſtinence from drunkenneſs and covetouſneſs, and are oppoſed, the firſt to πάροινος, and the ſecond to αἰσχροκερδὴς, in the former verſe. Or, if we ſhould, with St. Chyſoſtom, In loc. interpret ἐγκρατῆ in this place, of an univerſal temperance, we muſt remember, that ſuch a temperance is nothing elſe but a moderation in the uſe of all lawful pleaſures. Πάντα ἐγκρατεύεται, ſaith Clemens Alex. οὐ πάντων ἀπεχόμενος, ἀλλ' οἷς ἔκρινεν, ἐγρατῶς χρώμενος. Strom. l. 3. He is univerſally temperate, not who abſtaineth from all things, but who moderately uſeth thoſe things, which he judgeth lawful. Or laſtly, if we ſhould, againſt all reaſon, interpret σώφρονα ϗ ἐγκρατῆ, chaſte and continent: Yet the Fathers unanimouſly teach, that theſe virtues are not incompatible with the moderate uſe of marriage, as we ſhall prove hereafter. In the mean while, let it be obſerved, that Paul reaſoned before Felix, περὶ δικαιοσύνης ϗ ἐγκρατείας, of righteouſneſs and temperance, Acts xxiv. 25. and yet cannot be ſuppoſed to have forbidden him the embraces of his wife. As for Bellarmine's other text, 2 Tim. ii. 4. No man that warreth, entangleth himſelf with the affairs of this life: It is ſufficient theſe words are addreſſed not only to clergymen, but to all Chriſtians. Whether a married ſtate doth neceſſarily entangle perſons in the affairs of this life, more than celibacy, ſhall be enquired hereafter.

Let us now conſider this great ſtore-houſe of the aſſertors of celibacy, this 7th chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians: And here a few obſervations might have prevented many miſtakes; as firſt, That the Apoſtle was ſo far from impoſing virginity upon any order of men, that he ſeemeth to have foreſeen the danger of ſuch miſtakes, and therefore to have inſerted theſe cautions of them: But I ſpeak this by permiſſion, and not of command, ver. 6. Ye are bought with a price, be not ye the ſervants of men, ver. 23. And this I ſpeak for your own profit, not that I may caſt a ſnare upon you, ver. 35. Secondly, To thoſe who are already married, he adviſeth not a total, but a temporary abſtinence, ver. 5. Defraud not one the other, except it be with conſent for a time, that you may give your ſelves to faſting and prayer, and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency. Let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called, ver. 20. Art thou bound unto a wife? ſeek not to be looſed, ver. 27. Thirdly, That of thoſe who are already unmarried, he adviſeth virginity to them only who have the gift of continence Nevertheleſs, he that ſtandeth ſtedfaſt in his own heart, having no neceſſity, but hath power over his own will, and hath ſo decreed in his heart, that he will keep his virgin, he doth well, ver. 37. I ſay therefore to the unmarried and widows, it is good for them if they abide even as I, But if they cannot contain, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn, ver. 8, 9. Fourthly, That this advice of virginity was given not for the attainment of any greater merit, but merely for reaſons of convenience, and the urgent neceſſities of thoſe times. I ſuppoſe therefore that this is good for the preſent diſtreſs, ver. 26. Such ſhall have trouble in the fleſh, but I ſpare you. But this I ſay, brethren, the time is ſhort, ver. 28, 29. But I would have you without carefulneſs, ver. 32. Fifthly, That this advice was directed not only to the clergy, but to all Chriſtians in general. The Apoſtle no where reſtrains his diſcourſe to the former, but all along addreſſes himſelf to the whole multitude of believers. If any one of theſe obſervations be true, as they are all moſt certainly, then no advantage can be drawn out of this chapter for the cauſe of celibacy, now in controverſy.

But our adverſaries are not only deſtitute of reaſon and revelation in favour of this opinion, but we have alſo many ſtrong arguments againſt it. For, to paſs by the greateſt of all, the ſilence of Scripture, and the contrary practice of antiquity; the firſt manifeſted already, the latter to be proved hereafter: Many of the greateſt divines of the Roman Church do expreſly confeſs, that the celibacy of of the Clergy is neither of Divine nor Apoſtolical Inſtitution. This all thoſe Popes, councils and doctors, hereafter to be produced, who allow the marriage of prieſts in the Greek Church to be lawful, muſt have held, unleſs they be ſuppoſed to have betrayed the doctrine and tradition of the Church. All thoſe divines likewiſe who have admitted or allowed a total abrogation of the laws of celibacy, could not believe it to have a Divine or Apoſtolical original. However, I ſhall produce ſome few, who expreſly denied it. As, firſt, the canon-law, which may be looked upon as the ſenſe of the whole Church of Rome for ſome ages. So then Gratian, Cauſ. 26. qu. 2. c. 1. The marriage of prieſts is forbidden neither by Legal, nor Evangelical, nor Apoſtolical authority; and yet is wholly forbidden by the eccleſiaſtical law. And, Cauſ. 35. qu. 1. in fin. The Church, after the Apoſtolical Inſtitutions, hath added ſome counſels of perfection, as that of the continence of miniſters. Joannes, a Ludegna, in a ſpeech made in the Council of Trent, and printed among the acts of that council, determineth and largely proveth, that the celibacy of the clergy is neither of Divine Right, nor in any ſenſe commanded by the Apoſtles, but only adviſed by them: And that, if there was no laws of the Church, or monaſtick vows, prieſts or monks might lawfully marry.

Beſides, if the opinions of thoſe divines be true, who maintain that Chriſt ſuperadded no Evangelical councils to the moral law; celibacy can be neither of Divine nor Apoſtolical inſtitution, unleſs we ſuppoſe that the Apoſtles immediately adulterated that moſt pure and ſimple religion, which they had received from their Maſter. And, indeed, this ſeemeth highly rational, moſt conſonant to the honour of God, and adapted to the nature of man. That religion was moſt befitting the wiſdom of the Deity, to preſcribe for the laſt and moſt perfect rule of mankind, which was moſt pure and ſimple: And this ſeems to have been the great end of Chriſt's coming into the world, to free us from the bondage of the ceremonial law, and eſtate us in that perfect liberty, if not of will, yet at leaſt as to the objects of choice, in which we were at firſt created; whereas had he preſcribed a perpetual continence to all thoſe who aim at perfection, as is pretended, without altering their natures at the ſame time, and by an extraordinary miracle, enduing all, who deſire it, with the gift of continence: This alone would have debaſed the excellency of his religion, and have been an impoſition more grievous and burthenſome, more difficult and intolerable, than all the rites and ceremonies of the Moſaick Law. And then in reſpect of us, it became the wiſdom and goodneſs of our ſupreme law-giver, to give us a religion, not as to Angels or ſpiritual Beings, but in a way moſt conſentaneous to our natures, and agreeing to our imperfections. That can neither refine, nor perfect our nature, which is preternatural; and if in this mortal ſtate, while enchained in a body ſurrounded with frailties, and endued with paſſions, we affect the impaſſibility of Angels, and the perfection of Spirits, we may be called ambitious, but I know not whether pious.

But this is not all. The Apoſtle not only forbids not, but even expreſly permitteth marriage to the clergy. For laying down the neceſſary qualification of a Biſhop, the higheſt and moſt perfect degree of the Clergy, he propoſeth this as one, that he be blameleſs, the husband of one wife. One that ruleth well his own houſe, having his children in ſubjection, with all gravity, 1 Tim. iii. 2, 4. Of a prieſt, that he be blameleſs, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, Tit. i. 6. Of a deacon, that he be the husband of one wife, ruling his children, and his own houſe well: 1 Tim. iii. 12. And further, looketh upon it as no ſmall mark and teſtimony of the ability and worthineſs of the candidates of any of theſe Sacred Offices, if they have ruled their own houſes well, and by their precepts and examples taught their wives and children the practices of all virtues. And in another place, 1 Cor. ii. 2. to avoid fornication, allows to every man his own wife, maketh no exceptions. That is, a lamentable refuge of ſome, who ſeek to elude the force of the former places, by pretending that the Apoſtle means here by the word Μονόγαμος, he who hath been the husband of one wife, but is not now, being become a widower, or at leaſt unable for the exerciſes of the bed. For beſides that, the Apoſtle givethrules for the virtuous carriage of deacons wives, 1 Tim. iii. 2. beſides that, this interpretation is uncertain, which is ſufficient to our purpoſe, that it is contrary to the ſenſe of all mankind, and the vulgar acceptation of the word husband, that it ſeemeth repugnant to the following precept, of ruling their houſes well, and is certainly repugnant to the explication of the fathers: The practice of the antient Church do manifeſtly evince the falſeneſs of it, wherein it cannot be denied many perſons were admitted to Sacred Orders, who had wives then alive and dwelling with them. And in the Apoſtolical conſtitutions, the apoſtles are introduced thus ſpeaking, lib. 6. cap. 17. We have ordered, that a Biſhop, prieſt, and deacon, be the husband of one wife, whether their wives be alive, or whether they be dead.

To paſs by therefore this unreaſonable interpretation, there are three other explications of this word Μονόγαμος, all of them back'd with great reaſons and authorities. Firſt, That the Apoſtle means no more thereby, than that the perſons admitted into holy orders, ſhould not have two wives at the ſame time. Secondly, That he ſhould not have ſucceſſively two wives, much leſs three or four, one after the death of another. Thirdly, That he ſhould not have two wives living at the ſame time, one married after the divorce of another. The firſt interpretation was generally followed by the Greek, the ſecond by the Latin fathers; although Chryſoſtom eſpouſeth both, Hom. x. in 1 Ep. ad Tim. & Hom. ii. in Ep. ad Tit. and Hierom in ſo many ſeveral places admits all three, Ep. 83. ad Oceanum, comm. in loc. l. 1. adv. Jovin. Which of them be the trueſt, is of no great moment to the preſent buſineſs, ſince each of them deſtroy the opinion of our adverſaries, and leave to the clergy a liberty of marriage. However, becauſe the ſecond interpretation, if admitted, may in ſome meaſure prejudice that principle which we ſhall hereafter lay down, that all cannot contain, and that God and nature hath provided no other remedy for incontinent perſons, than marriage, which conſequently muſt be reiterated as often as neceſſity ſhall require: I ſhall ſay ſomewhat to it, and oppoſe firſt, the contrary opinion of all the Greek fathers. Secondly, the authority of the whole Catholick Church, who admitted bigamiſt Biſhops and prieſts, or thoſe who had married one wife after the death of another, and that in great numbers, as we ſhall hereafter occaſionally demonſtrate: ſo that if the Apoſtle had forbidden all ſuch to be admitted into theſe Sacred Offices, the Univerſal Church had erred in a matter of the greateſt moment. Thirdly, the third interpretation ſeems far more conſonant to reaſon, the analogy of the Scripture, and the circumſtances of thoſe times. For that ought not to exclude any man from this Sacred Dignity, which is ſo far from being a crime, that in many caſes it becomes neceſſary; and if marriage be allowed to all men, to avoid fornication, if any man's wife dieth, before either his years, or the peculiar favour of God hath reprieved him from the temptations of incontinence; that man, although a prieſt or Biſhop, may, without the leaſt injury to the ſtricteſt rules of piety or religion, contract a ſecond marriage. Bigamy in him, as Comm. in 1 Ep. ad Tim. cap. 3. Theodoret invincibly argues, will become involuntary, and conſequently not derogate from his character either of prieſt or Chriſtian. Beſides, it was an abuſe very frequent in that age, both among the Jews and Gentiles, to divorce their wives upon the ſlighteſt occaſions, or the leaſt diſcontent; an abuſe which argued in all an inconſtant and unjuſt, and in many a luſtful mind; and therefore although committed before their converſion, rendred ſuch perſons unworthy of this Sacred Character. This interpretation therefore is embraced by Theodoret, Loc. c. 14. who, after he had affirmed the ſame opinion to be maintained by many others, and aſſerted it by many reaſons, concludeth thus, They ſeem to me to be in the right, who hold, that the Apoſtle here teacheth him to be worthy of epiſcopal ordination, who liveth chaſtly with one only wife. For he hath not herein rejected ſecond marriages, which he hath in many caſes even commanded to be contracted. Conſidering then theſe and ſuch like arguments, I receive the interpretation of theſe writers. Chryſoſtom alſo in one place explains it the ſame way, Hom. 2. in Ep. ad Tit. And Hierom, when freed from the paſſion of diſputing againſt Jovinian, enclined to the ſame opinion, Comm. in Ep. ad Tit. c. 1. Tom. ix. p. 245. For, propoſing the examples of two Biſhops, whereof the one ſhall have loſt his wife in his youth, and overcome by the neceſſity of the fleſh ſhall marry another, bury her after ſome time, and ever after contain; the other ſhall enjoy the company of but one wife, even till his death: He determineth the former to be the better, more chaſte, and more continent. And in another place, Ep. 83. ad Oceanum in init. reſolving Oceanus's queſtion, whether Carterius, a Spaniſh Biſhop, who had married one wife before, and a ſecond after baptiſm, had not thereby violated the Apoſtle's injunction, of a Biſhop's being the husband of one wife? He pronounceth, that he had not. Laſtly, the contrary opinion is built upon a falſe foundation. For, not to ſay that it was firſt ſet on foot by Tertullian, after he was become a Montaniſt, and from him received by the Latin fathers; it relieth wholly upon theſe two falſe ſuppoſitions. Firſt, That according to any other ſenſe the precept of the Apoſtle would have been unneceſſary, the Roman laws never allowing polygamy. Secondly, That the Apoſtle maketh uſe of the ſame phraſe, when he commands a widow to be choſen, the wife of one husband, γεγονῦια ἑνὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνὴ, 1 Tim. v. 9. although no laws or civilized nations ever permitted women to have two husbands at the ſame time. But both theſe reaſons vaniſh, when oppoſed to our third interpretation. For divorce was permitted by the Roman as well as Jewiſh laws, for many other cauſes beſides that of adultery, which alone was allowed by Chriſt: So that whoſoever had put away his wife for any other cauſe, and married another, might truly be ſaid to have two wives: and any woman, who had married again after ſuch an unlawful divorce, had truly two husbands.

Having thus refuted the pretence of divine or apoſtolical inſtitution, I proceed to the ſecond propoſition, That the celibacy of the clergy hath nothing excellent in itſelf, and produceth no real advantage either to the Church or the Chriſtian religion, beyond marriage. I ſhall not here undertake, nor is it neceſſary to make an harangue upon the praiſes of marriage, much leſs to depreſs the excellencies of the virgin ſtate; it will ſuffice to ſhew the weakneſs and invalidity of the contrary arguments, and thereby reduce both marriage and virginity to that equilibrium, wherein nature firſt placed them, and our Saviour left them.

Firſt then, I obſerve, That this extraordinary affection and reverence of virginity, was firſt ſtarted and introduced by a Heretick, Tertullian; who deceived by the enthuſiaſms of Montanus, endeavoured to refine the Chriſtian religion, and advance it into a ſyſtem of angelick perfection. He led the way to the writers of the Latin Church; who receiving this prejudice from him, propagated it in ſome meaſure among the Greeks, although it never was by them embraced with that zeal, and purſued with that fervour, which always accompanied it in the weſtern Church. Secondly, it may be obſerved, that this extravagant veneration of virginity prevailed proportionably to the decay of learning, and encreaſe of ignorance in all ages. The reputation of celibacy was ever then higheſt, when knowledge was at its loweſt ebb. Particularly in the tenth and eleventh ages, the moſt ſcandalous and barbarous periods of time, that ever the Church waded through; when learning ſeemed baniſhed out of the whole world, then celibacy triumphed every where, and was looked upon as the conſummation of all vertues, marriage of the clergy decried and aboliſhed, and more monaſteries founded, than in all the ages either before or ſince. Thirdly, This opinion was firſt produced, and ever after advanced and maintained by a groſs miſtake; that there is ſomewhat of impurity or ſinfulneſs in the uſe of marriage, and that chaſtity cannot be retained in a married ſtate. See Bellarmine Controv. Tom. ii. l. 1. c. 19. Where his diſtinction of a ſin, and a conſequence of a ſin, is wholly vain. For, if in all uſe of marriage, the effect of a ſin interveneth, then cannot marriage be uſed without ſome precedent ſin: A propoſition ſo falſe and erroneous, that the uſe of marriage was intended for our firſt parents in the ſtate of innocence, and would have been practiſed to this very day, had they never fallen. Nay farther, whether fallen or not fallen, it was their duty to make uſe of marriage for the propagation of mankind; and even for ſome ages after the creation, it was ſo far from being meritorious, that it was unlawful to continue virgins. But if by the antecedent ſin, which produceth this pollution in the act of marriage; Bellarmine means, only the original depravity of our nature: If it be a neceſſary effect of this depravity, then God cannot in juſtice, and will not in mercy impute it to us; if it be not a neceſſary effect of it, then marriage may be uſed without it, and his propoſition will fall to the ground. Therefore,

On the other ſide, we ſay the conſervation of a true chaſtity, is both poſſibly and eaſy in marriage; if it be not frequent, that ariſeth from the corruption of mankind, not any deficience or imperfection of marriage. Now that chaſtity and continence may be here found and practiſed, the Apoſtle aſſureth us, when he ſaith, Τίμιος ὁ γάμος ἐν πᾶσι, καὶ ἡ κοίτη ἀμίαντος, Marriage is honourable in all men, and the bed undefiled, Heb. xiii 4. or impolluted, directly contrary to Bellarmine's propoſition. The Apoſtle is herein followed by almoſt all the fathers. I ſhall produce ſome of them: and firſt the great Paphnutius, who when in the council of Nice the celibacy of the clergy was propoſed, under the pretence of advancing chaſtity, pronounced the embraces of a lawful wiſe to be chaſtity, and was therein applauded by the whole council. Socrat. l. 1. c. 11. So Clemens Alex. Juſt men under the old law, begat children, marrying (or uſing marriage) incontinently. Ibid. What, may we not uſe marriage continently? and not go about to diſſolve that, which God hath joined, Ibid. He alſo who marrieth for the ſake of procreation of children, ought to uſe continence, ſo as not to luſt even after his own wiſe, whom he ought to love, begetting children with an honeſt and chaſte will. To which I could add Lactantius in Epitom. c. 8. and Ambroſe in Epiſt. 82. ad vercell. and ibid. ante Med.

If then chaſtity is common both to marriage and celibacy, the latter can have no intrinſick excellence beyond the former: The excellence therefore of it is wholly accidental, and conſiſts only in affording greater advantages of piety, knowledge, and beneficence, than marriage. This therefore is next to be examined. Let us then conſider any one as a man, a Chriſtian, and a prieſt. If in the firſt quality, as a member and citizen of mankind, that eſtate will deſerve the preheminence, which is moſt communicative of good, and beneficial to the whole univerſe. The benefits of celibacy are indirect, accidental, and rare; thoſe of marriage, direct, natural, and frequent. If as a Chriſtian, that ſtate will be moſt eligible, that more immediately procureth the grace and favour of God; this celibacy directly affords to none; marriage confers on all, in the opinion of the church of Rome, who make it a ſacrament. If as a prieſt, that ſtate is preferable, which giveth the greater and more diffuſive example to the laity. A vertuous celibacy will be indeed exemplary to virgin laicks, the ſmalleſt and moſt inconſiderable part of the Church: But then a prudent and religious conduct of marriage will ſerve as a rule for other married perſons, the far greater part of the laick Church.

Thus far the merits of both are at leaſt equal. If we recur to the authority of examples, we may begin at Paradice, and the firſt ſtate of mankind. Here we find a married couple even in the ſtate of innocence, and the very firſt bleſſing given by God unto mankind, to be this, be fruitful and multiply, Gen. i. 28. And as it can be no laudable ambition, to deſire to exceed the piety and innocence of Paradice, ſo neither can it be any great perfection, to defeat the firſt bleſſing of the creation. If we deſcend hence until the times of Moſes, we ſhall find all the patriarchs both before and after the flood, to have pleaſed God, and ſerved their generations at the ſame time. All this while celibacy hath no example, nor any one preſident. If we look into the Moſaick law, marriage was there expreſly permitted, and indirectly commanded to the prieſt, ſince none but their own poſterity could be admitted into that order. I am not ignorant that the patrons of celibacy urge mightily the three days abſtinence from their wives, impoſed upon the people, in preparing themſelves to receive the law of God in Mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 15. But this was enjoined not only to the prieſts, but to all the people; was a ſhort and temporary, not a total and perpetual abſtinence; ſerved only to typiſy that inſeparable purity of mind and body, which was to flouriſh in the Church of Chriſt; and was a mere rite and ceremony, unworthy of the dignity and ſimplicity of the Chriſtian religion. Again, if we conſider the ſaints and Prophets of the Old Teſtament, Chryſoſtom will tell us, that all the Prophets had wives and families, as Eſaias, Ezekiel, and the great Moſes; and yet ſuffered thereby no diminution of their virtue, Matt. Hom. 56. in fine. Or if we take our meaſures from the venerable examples of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, we may learn both from their doctrine and practice, that the perfection of a Chriſtian ſtate conſiſts not in an idle and contemplative, but in an active and beneſactive ſtate. That moſt, if not all the Apoſtles were married, we ſhall prove hereafter; and if our Saviour choſe a ſingle ſtate, wherein to paſs his life on earth, Clemens Alex. ſhall anſwer for us, Strom. l. 3. p. 446. That he had his proper ſpouſe, the Church. And then if we caſt our eyes upon the worſhip and opinion of the Gentiles, we ſhall find celibacy in no great eſteem among them, and marriage not only allowed to their prieſt, but even made neceſſary to ſome of them; inſomuch as the Pontifex Maximus among the Romans, could continue no longer in his office, than his wife lived. Hierom, indeed, and ſome other champions of celibacy, alledge the example of the Hierophantæ of Greece, who practiſed in their ſecret rites and myſteries, the moſt abominable luſts and villanies of the Pagan ſuperſtition. A ſad example indeed; and not worth our obſervation: Only in ſpeaking of this matter, I will further obſerve that there was but one great order of prieſts among the Heathens, which profeſſed virginity, thoſe of Cybele or Iſis (for as for the veſtal virgins, they were permitted to marry, when their time of ſervice was expired) and but one ſect of philoſophers, that decried and contemned marriage, the Epicureans, and of theſe the firſt were the moſt infamous and incontinent of all prieſts, the latter the moſt debauched and voluptuous of all philoſophers, Vid. Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 2. p. 421.

Laſtly, If we conſult reaſon, neither will that declare in favour of celibacy. That will only teach us, that ſtate is more noble, which moſt advanceth the happineſs of life, and gives the greateſt aſſiſtance to the perfection of our nature. For neither marriage, nor celibacy, have of themſelves any intrinſick merit, at leaſt not celibacy, as we before proved: Neither of them doth immediately and directly illuminate the underſtanding, refine the reaſon, or purge the will. Now the happineſs of human life, and the perfection of nature, conſiſts in the tranquility and imperturbation of the mind, whereby it is fitted for the contemplation of her Creator, and the exerciſe of all more noble and ſublime virtues. This tranquility, next to habits of vice in the ſoul, is chiefly interrupted by immoderate and ungoverned paſſions in the body, although even thoſe habits were produced at firſt by the intemperance of theſe paſſions. The greateſt and moſt vehement of our paſſions, are thoſe of deſire, and among them the propenſity to the continuation of our ſpecies obtains the firſt place. A right uſe of marriage ſatisfies this propenſity, allays its violence, ſecureth the mind from all tempeſts on that ſide. This celibacy can do only in thoſe who have the gift of continence, who perhaps are not the thouſandth part of mankind; if thoſe be excepted, to whom not God or virtue, but ſome defect of nature, hath given a reprieve from this paſſion. In the reſt, celibacy, eſpecially when enforced, will be only the occaſion of perpetual, or at leaſt intermitting tempeſts, which inſtead of a ſweet ſerenity, will introduce into the mind a turbulent commotion, diſorder all her thoughts, and deprive her of all happineſs: Or, if we ſhould grant, which is moſt falſe, that celibacy well governed, is in all able to give the mind the ſame tranquility, and ſecure her from all perturbations ariſing from the paſſion of deſire; yet ſtill the merits and advantages of marriage and celibacy will be equal, even in this conſideration.

There remains then only arguments of temporal convenience, and outward decorum of the Church. And here, though it might ſuffice to obſerve that arguments of convenience are of no validity againſt a probability of unlawfulneſs, much leſs againſt an expreſs Divine Permiſſion;

yet ſhall I briefly examine the reaſons of this kind produced by our adverſaries. They may be reduced to three heads: A greater immunity from ſecular cares and worldly buſineſs, and thereby a better opportunity to attend the ſervice of God, and execute the duties of their office: Secondly, A certain indecency in the uſe of marriage, which renders it incompatible, or at leaſt inconvenient, to the ſacerdotal office: Thirdly, The better adminiſtration of the goods and revenues of the Church. As for the firſt that might indeed with ſome colour have been pleaded in the infancy of the Goſpel, when many of the clergy were deſigned as itinerant preachers, for the propagation of the faith; although it was then ſo far from being neceſſary, that many of the Apoſtles did in their travels lead about with them, if not their wives, which is moſt probable, yet at leaſt, women. But now when the faith is planted, and the clergy have particular limits aſſigned them wherein to execute their office; that reaſon ceaſeth. Another caſe may happen wherein this argument may take place; in times of perſecution, when it is of great advantage and intereſt to the Church, that her clergy give examples of patience and conſtancy to their flock, and is very probable, that a man will embrace martyrdom with a greater reſolution and unconcernedneſs when freed from the ſolicitude of wife and children, whoſe conſideration, and perhaps importunities, might tempt him to prevarication; but then celibacy is here alſo ſo far from being neceſſary, that it will augment the merits and the glory of martyrdom to break through thoſe obſtacles, and ſlight thoſe conſiderations. However, certain it is, that in the peaceable and flouriſhing times of the Church, this reaſon is of no validity. Hence appeareth, with how little reaſon our adverſaries urge that ſo much celebrated text of Paul, He that is unmarried, careth for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may pleaſe the Lord, at ver. 32. An admonition by the Apoſtle adapted to thoſe times of perſecution; as appears by the preface of it: But I would have you (ſpeaking to all Chriſtians) without carefulneſs. For otherwiſe, marriage does not neceſſarily involve more carefulneſs or diſquiet, than celibacy. If a greater anxiety doth ordinarily attend it, that proceeds not from the nature of marriage, but the abuſe of men. And therefore, Clemen. Alex. anſwers to the ancient hereticks urging this very text againſt marriage: What then? Cannot thoſe who pleaſe their wives in a lawful way, give thanks to God? May not a married man, together with his marriage, care for the things that belong to the Lord? Strom. l. 3. Further, theſe texts do no more prove the neceſſity or convenience of prieſts celibacy, than it doth of all other Chriſtians. For, to uſe Chryſoſtom's words, Hom. xxi. in Geneſ. Marriage doth not only not hinder the practice of Divine philoſophy, if we will be ſober, but alſo adminiſters to us great aſſiſtance in it, by calming the turbulencies of nature, and not permitting it to be toſſed in tempeſts, but preparing it a haven, wherein to ride ſecurely. Wherefore, God hath herein granted a privilege to mankind. Again,

The ſecond reaſon alledged by our adverſaries, is a certain indecency and impurity in the act of marriage, which renders it unfitting for a prieſt to proceed from the late embraces of his wife to the adminiſtration of holy things. So that becauſe the clergy of the Chriſtian Church do either daily adminiſter the Sacraments, and offer up ſacrifices of praiſe and thankſgiving to God, in the name of all the people; or at leaſt ought to be always ready and prepared to do it: They ought therefore perpetually to abſtain from conjugal duties. This was ever the chief argument and foundation of celibacy. Popes and councils in enjoining it to the clergy, ſeldom make uſe of any other than this; and all the enemies of prieſts marriage from the times of Origen to this day, have certainly placed it in the front of their arguments. Yet after all it is a ſhameful and moſt fooliſh ſophiſm. For,

Anſw. If by this indecency and impurity in the uſe of marriage, they mean a moral one; that is abſolutely falſe, and flat hereſy: The very opinion of the Marcionites, Encraites, Gnoſticks, and other more abſurd hereticks. But if they mean only a natural impurity, that in no ways renders any man leſs fit for the ſervice of God, nor ought to exclude him from the adminiſtration of holy things, any more than the other more frequent evacuations of nature. So groſs a conceit is unworthy the ſimplicity of the Chriſtian Religion, and makes it degenerate into the dregs of Judaiſm. Beſides, if we ſhould ſuppoſe a natural impurity ſomewhat indecent in the clergy (which yet is fooliſh to imagine of a ſecret and hidden impurity, ſuch as this is) yet will it be infinitely outweighed by the inevitable danger of a moral turpitude to which prieſts are expoſed by enforced celibacy. Laſtly, this argument of the daily celebration of maſs and conſecrating of the Euchariſt, affects not deacons nor ſub-deacons; and is entirely overthrown by the practice of the Church in the Apoſtolick and primitive times; when all baptized Chriſtians daily received the Euchariſt, and yet cannot be ſuppoſed either to have been enjoined, or have uſed perpetual abſtinence from their wives.

The third reaſon is the better œconomy of the goods and revenues of the Church; which our adverſaries would not have expended upon wife and children, but in publick acts of charity.

Anſw. This might indeed with ſome pretence be urged, if all the unmarried clergy employed the ſuperfluity of their revenues upon piety and charity, or none of the married clergy did it, or if the well-ordering of families, and good education, and decent proviſion for children were not of advantage to the publick. But theſe are equally falſe. And then in vain are wives and children removed, when nephews and other relations can gain acceſs. The examples of the court of Rome, eſpecially for the laſt two hundred years, demonſtrates that Popes have employed themſelves with greater zeal and fervour to the aggrandizing of their families, than ever the married clergy of the reformed Churches did to the enriching of their poſterity.

Thus have we examined the pretended advantages of the clergy's celibacy, and found them to be null and vain. But ſuppoſe them valid, and really as great as they are repreſented to us by our adverſaries. If after all, it hath in other reſpects no leſs diſadvantages, celibacy will yet remain indifferent, both in its nature and convenience. To paſs by therefore the inconvenience of celibacy in general, as that it ordinarily produceth moroſneſs, pride and uncharitableneſs, to ſay nothing worſe, when affected and choſen as a matter of merit, as Clemens Alex. of old obſerved; Strom. l. 3. I ſhall conſider only the particular inconveniencies ariſing from the enforced celibacy of the clergy, and mention but two of them; but thoſe ſo great and ſenſible, that each of them infinitely outweigheth all the pretended advantages of it.

The firſt is the inevitable and moſt certain danger of open incontinence in many of the clergy, and thereby introducing a horrible ſcandal into the Church of Chriſt, which may alone more effectually obſtruct piety and virtue among the laity, than the preaching of all together can promote it. For all ignorant Chriſtians, which are the far greater part of the Church, are led more by examples than reaſon, and aſſent to the Chriſtian Religion merely for the authority of their paſtors that propoſe it. So that the ſcandal cauſed by the luſt of one incontinent prieſt, is more dangerous to the Church than the celibacy of an hundred chaſte prieſts can be advantageous to it. Now that forced celibacy betrays the clergy to open incontinency, let Bernard ſpeak. Take from the Church honourable marriage, and the bed undefiled; Do you not fill it with fornicators, inceſtuous perſons, abuſers of themſelves, Sodomites, and all kind of uncleanneſs? Serm. 66. in Cantica poſt. init. This experience hath alſo ſadly demonſtrated.

The ſecond inconvenience of forced celibacy is, that it deprives the Church of the ſervice of many pious and learned men; who either being already married, will not conſent to ſeparate themſelves from their wives; or being yet ſingle, will not receive orders upon the terms of celibacy, as either finding that they have not the gift of continency, or doubting whether they ſhall always have it.

Laſtly, Suppoſe that celibacy had all the aforementioned advantages, and none of the inconveniences; yet ſtill if marriage hath peculiar advantages, which celibacy wants, both will remain indifferent, and neither to be preferred. That marriage hath ſuch, cannot be denied. For not to ſay, that marriage, in the opinion of the Church of Rome, actually confers grace, and was choſen by Chriſt to be a type of his myſtical union with the Church; not to urge the precedent arguments, nor produce a-new the authority of Chryſoſtom; not to ſay, that the virtuous marriage of a prieſt may be highly exemplary to his people, ple, ſince the effects of it are viſible and manifeſt in the prudent government of his family, and the pious education of his children; whereas continence, which is the perfection of celibacy, is a virtue of the ſoul, inviſible, and hidden from the eyes of men, and ſo cannot be properly exemplary. To paſs by all this, I will alledge only the authority of Clemens Alex. (Strom. l. 3.) in theſe words; Marriage, as well as celibacy, hath its peculiar offices and duties pleaſing to God, I mean the care of children and wife. Whence the Apoſtle commandeth thoſe to be choſen Biſhops, who from the virtuous government of their own families, have learned to preſide over the Church well. And in truth, a man approveth not himſelf in chuſing a ſingle life; but he tranſcends the ordinary rank of men, who uſeth marriage, and the procreation of children, and the government of a family, without immoderate affection or anxiety; and notwithſtanding the care of his houſe, is unalterable from the love of God, and bravely reſiſts all the temptations of wife and children, ſervants and poſſeſſions, Strom. lib. 7.

Having thus proved that the celibacy of the clergy was neither inſtituted by Chriſt nor his Apoſtles, and hath no excellence in itſelf, or convenience to the Church: I proceed to

The third propoſition, that the impoſition of it upon any order of men, is unjuſt and repugnant to the law of God. Becauſe,

I. Firſt, the Church hath no authority to forbid marriage to the clergy, even ſuppoſing that all men may, by due diligence, obtain the gift of continence. This may be evidently deduced from what was laſt proved. For, the Church cannot challenge a greater authority than the Apoſtles had. But their authority, as we are aſſured by Paul, was given them only for edification and not for deſtruction, 2 Cor. x. 8. Not that the impoſition of celibacy tends not to the edification of the Church, we have already proved, that it naturally tends to the deſtruction of many members of the Church, is manifeſt. For, in ſo numerous a body as the clergy is, it is morally impoſſible that many of them ſhould not neglect thoſe means whereby the gift of continence may be acquired, and thereby falling into incontinency, loſe their own ſouls, and by their ſcandal and example, draw many into perdition with them; whereas had marriage been permitted them, both would in all probability have been prevented. Secondly, The Church cannot totally deprive any man of the liberty of enjoying any lawful and natural pleaſures; nor take from him any of thoſe comforts and benefits which nature and the right of creation firſt gave him, and intended for him. She may reſtrain and limit the uſe of them as to time and place, but can by no means totally aboliſh it. So the Church may forbid fleſh to be eaten, or marriage to be contracted at ſome certain ſeaſons of the year; but as ſhe cannot enjoin to any man a perpetual abſtinence from fleſh, ſo neither can ſhe totally forbid marriage to any order of men. For this is contrary to the very genius and conſtitution of the Chriſtian religion, whoſe peculiar glory is the ſimplicity of it, and the entire conformity in all the Agenda of it to the law of nature. Thirdly, Whatſoever may be pretended for inhibiting marriage to the unmarried clergy, the Church moſt certainly cannot diſſolve the marriage of thoſe, who never made any vow of continence, and were lawfully married before the prohibition of the Church, ſince our Saviour expreſly ſaith, What God hath joined together, let no man put aſunder, Matt. xix. 6. Yet the Church of Rome did this in the eleventh and twelfth ages, when many Popes and Councils commanded the married clergy to be ſeparated from their wives upon pain of excommunication, not permitting them to retain their wives, by relinquiſhing their offices, and retiring into lay-communion: Although the clergy, in their remonſtrance offered to Nicolas II. proteſted that they had never made any vow of continence, and could not contain without the uſe of marriage. I know it is pretended, that the clergy, in receiving orders, are ſuppoſed to have made a tacit and interpretative vow of chaſtity. But the vanity of that pretence, I ſhall manifeſt immediately. Other reaſons might be produced, but theſe are ſufficient.

II. Secondly, All men cannot contain, and therefore to impoſe celibacy upon any order of men, is unjuſt, and contrary to the Divine Law. For all perſons who cannot contain, have a right to marry by the law of nature, that they may not be neceſſitated to ſin; and are commanded to marry by the law of God. But if they cannot contain, let them marry: for it is better to marry, than to burn, ver. 8, 9. In impoſing celibacy, therefore, upon the clergy, the Church of Rome forbids many to marry, whom God commands to do it. Now, that all men cannot contain, appears from this very place of the Apoſtle, which inſinuates, that in ſome perſons there is no medium between marriage and burning; but it is evident, beyond all contradiction, from the reaſon of this permiſſion of marriage aſſigned in the precedent verſe 7, For I would that all men were even as myſelf, (that is, continent.) But every man hath his proper gift of God; one after this manner, and another after that. Our Saviour expreſly teacheth the ſame thing, when to the Apoſtles (objecting, that if the caſe were ſo, it is not good to marry.) He anſwered, All men cannot receive this ſaying, ſave they to whom it is given. And, He that is able to receive it, let him receive it, Matt. xix. 11, 12. God hath obliged himſelf indeed, by promiſe, to confer upon us all graces neceſſary for the performance of our duty, and attainment of ſalvation; but the gift of continence is not of this nature, ſince God hath provided marriage for a remedy of incontinency; which, if we will not make uſe of, the danger lieth at our own doors, God is no further obliged. Indeed, if through any accident, which diſables either of the married perſons, marriage fails to be a remedy of incontinency, (which our adverſaries frequently object) God muſt be then ſuppoſed to have obliged himſelf to beſtow the gift of continence, when duly aſked, becauſe, in that caſe, he hath provided no other remedy. So that the argument of the Council of Trent, that, God will not deny this gift to thoſe that rightly aſk it, as having promiſed, not to ſuffer us to be tempted above what we are able, Seſſ. 24. Can. 9. is wholly impertinent. Since God thereby obliged himſelf to no more than with the temptation alſo to make a way to eſcape, not that way which we beſt like, for that it is not promiſed, and is highly unreaſonable, but which himſelf pleaſeth: And that he hath abundantly done, in aſſigning the eaſy and natural way of marriage. Therefore, as God hath diſtributed to every man, ſo let him walk, ver. 7. And, as for that place (which is urged by ſome) I would that all men were even as my ſelf, that no more proves the poſſibility of continence in all, than that other place, I would that ye all ſpeak with tongues, doth, that all can obtain the gift of tongues, ch. xiv. 5.

The ancients thought the ſame thing. So Ambroſe, Virginity is rather in our wiſh, than in our power, De Virginib. l. 1. Hierome, even when diſputing for celibacy, frequently grants that all cannot contain; more eſpecially in theſe words, Adv. Jovin. l. 1. c. 21. Fear not that all will become Virgins. Virginity is a difficult thing, and therefore rare, becauſe difficult. Many are called, but few choſen: Many begin, but few can perſevere. If all could be Virgins, our Lord would never have ſaid, He that is able to receive it, let him receive it. And the Apoſtle would not have doubted in perſuading it, nor ſaid, Now concerning Virgins, I have no commandment from the Lord. And for that reaſon (ſays Ambroſe) none ought to be obliged to continence, leſt being reſtrained from what is lawful, he commit things unlawful. But let him chuſe for himſelf what he will follow. Comm. in 1. Ep. ad Cor. c. 7. See alſo what Hierom. adv. Helvid. c. x. and adv. Jovin. lib. i. Ambroſe, in his exhortation to Virgins, acknowledge in our favour; and Clem. Alex. ſays, Of neceſſity marriage muſt not be forbidden, Strom. l. 3.

And in this aſſertion, he is defended by the authority of Theodoret in Tim. iv. 13. Pope Gregory I. epiſt. 42. l. 1. and the councils of Toledo II. Can. 2. and the Panormitan, cauſ. 32. qu. 1. cap. integritas.

I know that the preſent ſticklers for an unmarried ſtate, eſpecially for a celibate clergy, pretend, that though the Church be denied the power of making ſuch an inſtitution neceſſary and eternally binding, under pain of ſin and damnation; yet the clergy may not marry, becauſe that vow which the ordinance makes, or is ſuppoſed to make in receiving orders, includes a voluntary obligation to continence. But it is moſt eaſy to blow away this tottering hedge. Becauſe this ſuppoſed vow, or real vow, muſt be of Divine original, by Divine command, or it is not; if not, than it can in no wiſe be univerſally binding; and any one may collect from the premiſes, that God has no where impoſed ſuch a vow in his covenant with mankind, through Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore,

We find in the primitive Church, that there was not thought of ſuch a vow as this ſubſiſting in the Chriſtian oeconomy; as may be gathered from that of Paul to Timothy, where he ſpeaks of certain widows, who had been choſen by the Church of Epheſus to attend the ſervice of the Church, and were called Deaconneſſes, who being young, and either not able or not willing to contain married, or perchance did worſe, by giving ſcandal with their looſe behaviour. The Apoſtle, I ſay, blames both the Epheſians for their imprudent choice, and virtually rebukes the widows for breaking their agreement, or contract with the Church; but is ſo far from condemning the act of marriage, that he ratifies the marriages of thoſe who were already married, and giveth free leave to the reſt to marry. But for the future, commands that none be admitted into that order under threeſcore years old, at which age there is no danger of incontinency; ſee 1 Tim v. 9.—14. and Bellarmine de Monarch. l. 2. c. 24. And Cyprian following the doctrine of the Apoſtle, when he ſpeaks of virgins that had profeſſed chaſtity, concludes, That if they will not or cannot perſerve, it is better they ſhould marry, than fall into continency by their faults, Epiſt. 62. ad Pomponium; ſee alſo Epiphanius Hor. 41. at the end, beginning κρεῖττον ἔχειν ἁμαρτίαν, &c. and Baſil in lib. de vera virginitate, p. 728. πολλῷ αἱρετώτερον, &c. and Auſtin de bono viduit. c. x. Damnantur tales, &c. and de ſanct. virginit. c. 24. as alſo Hierom's advice to a nun who had left her vow and lived with an unmarried clergyman; Epiſt. 47. de vitando ſuſpecto contubernio, where he adviſes the nun and the prieſt to marry, that they might not ſin, or to avoid ſin by fornication. To theſe may be added the decrees of the council of Ancyra, can. 19. Anno 314. and Pope Leo I. confeſſeth, that though an unmarried ſtate in a monk is the better choice, yet marriage is honeſt, when he can't contain, Epiſt. 92. ad Ruſticum Narbon. c. 12. Thus alſo Pope Gelaſius in the fifth century ſays, If they (who have vow'd chaſtity) could not perhaps contain, they were not at all forbidden to marry.—The matter ſhould be left to their own conſcience, Epiſt. ad Lucania Epiſc. c. 21. To the ſame purpoſe we read the decree of Theodore Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the ſeventh age; apud Gratian. Diſt. 27. c. 3. And in the eleventh age Ivo the French Biſhop of Chartres, and the greateſt canoniſt of his age, relates the marriage of a canon of the Church of Paris, and maintains that the marriage neither can, nor ought to be diſſolved, Epiſt 218. But in the next age Gratian, the compiler of the canon law declares more expreſly, That not even by the violation of the vow can the marriage be diſſolved. In the 13th age Innocent III. and the whole Lateran council acknowledged the marriage of prieſts, in ſome weſtern provinces to be firm and valid, and the uſe of it to be lawful, Can. 14. And in the 15th age Æneas Sylvius, or Pope Pius II. writes to a prieſt, who found he could no longer contain, That it was better for him to marry than to burn, Epiſt. 307.

Thus we have ſhewn, that the doctrine of the invalidity of marriages contracted after a vow of continence, was unknown to the firſt ages of Chriſtianity, oppoſed in the laſt, and not univerſally received in the Church of Rome until defined or impoſed with an Anathema by the council of Trent. Moreover,

It ſhould be obſerved, that this impoſition of celibacy was not obtained even in the weſtern Church, till the ambition and uſurpation of the Popes, drawing to themſelves the diſpoſal of all greater eccleſiaſtical preferments, poverty became neceſſary to the married clergy; which cauſed marriage to be wholly laid aſide by them about two hundred years before the reformation. For,

The Apoſtles by their own example, recommend marriage to all people. Baſil ſeems to have believed that all the Apoſtles were married; ſerm. de abdicat. rerum poſt init. The interpolater of Ignatius's Epiſtles produceth the examples of Peter, Paul and other Apoſtles for the lawfulneſs of prieſt's marriage, Epiſt. ad Philadelph. Though the author of the commentaries upon the Epiſtles of Paul in Ambroſe's works, excepts Paul and John, and affirms all the reſt to have been married; Comm. in Epiſt. ad Cor. c. xi. As for Peter the Goſpel declares his marriage, Matt. viii. 14. See alſo 1 Cor. ix. 5. Paul was alſo a married man, as Clemens Alexandrinus teſtifieth, Strom. l. 3. to whom we may add the authority of Euſebius, hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 30. of Hierom in Epiſt. de cuſtod. virgin. ad Euſtochium: Of Chryſoſtom in Hom. 13. in Philipp. c. 4. v. 3. of the interpolator of Ignatius's Epiſtles, in Epiſt. ad Philadelph.

Philip the Apoſtle had three daughters, whom he married, ſays Clemens Alexandrinus, to ſo many huſbands, Strom. l. 3. and Philip the deacon had four daughters, Acts xxi. 9.

After the Apoſtolick age, Clemens Alex. aſſures us that "every Chriſtian in his time, might as himſelf pleaſed, either chuſe or omit marriage;" ibid. And when about the year 170. Pinytus Biſhop of Groſſus in Crete had, under a pretence of greater perfection and purity, endeavoured to impoſe celibacy upon his clergy. Dionyſius Biſhop of Corinth writ to him not to impoſe ſo heavy a burden, as neceſſity of continence, upon the brethren; but to have regard to the infirmity of many; ſee Euſeb. hiſt. Eccl. l. 4. c. 23. which advice was approved and accepted by Pinytus, as Euſebius records, ibid. To theſe I could add a cloud of witneſſes for a married clergy in the firſt and pureſt ages of Chriſtianity, as Polycarp. in Epiſt ad Philip. prope fin. and the example of Tertullian a presbyter of Carthage, ad uxorem, l. 1. near the end edit. Nevertheleſs

Celibacy, and the merits of virginity, began to be highly extolled, and gained great reputation in the third age, by the miſtakes of the orthodox, and artificers of the hereticks, of whom there was ſcarce one down from the Apoſtolick age to the council of Nice, which did not condemn marriage, or at leaſt decry the dignity thereof.

Saturnilus, diſciple of Menander, led the dance; He firſt called marriage the doctrine of the Devil; Theod. Hæret. Fab. l. 1. c. 3. and was herein followed by an infinite rabble of hereticks, Nicolaites, Cerinthians, the ſects of Marcus, Baſildes, Carpocrates, Iſidorus, Marcion, Caſſian, Tatian, and many others, who abſolutely rejected marriage, as unlawful and impure, and beneath the dignity of a ſpiritual and more perfect Chriſtian. To this end, they pretend no leſs ſpecious reaſons, than are at this day alledged by the patrons of celibacy, as, that being freed from the cares of a family, they might attend the better to acts of devotion and piety, vid. Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 3. in init. That it was a noble attempt, and worthy the ambition of a Chriſtian to ſurmount all the inclinations of the fleſh, and by afflicting of it intirely ſubject it to the ſoul; not to yield to the unruly paſſions of the body, but rather by ſuch a mortification increaſe the perfections of the ſoul with faith and knowledge. Nor were theſe their only reaſons: They alſo pretend to tradition, and although immediately after the Apoſtles deaths, intitled their horrid doctrines to thoſe Sacred Names; and to confirm their plea, forged goſpels, acts, and hiſtories under the Apoſtles names, injurious to marriage, and conſonant to their own opinions. But ſo groſs a hereſy, however, backed with great and ſpecious pretences, ſurvived not the middle of the third age. When that declined, other more ſubtil and refined hereticks aroſe in their ſtead, who indirectly and obliquely oppoſe marriage, yet upon the ſame topick of greater purity and perfection. Thus the Montaniſts condemned all ſecond marriages; and reviled the Catholicks, who defended them, with the opprobious title of Prychici, or carnal men. Thus the Novatians revolted from the Church, and accuſed her of licentiouſneſs, becauſe ſhe admitted to communion thoſe Digamiſts, who after a divorce of one wife, for whatſoever cauſe, even for that of adultery, had married another. Laſtly, thus the Manichees, although enjoining celibacy to none, nor forbidding marriage to any, through a miſtaken impurity in the uſe of it, excluded all married perſons from the rank of their elect, or more perfect Chriſtians, and permitted it only to their hearers, or inferior order of their ſect. And when all theſe hereſies were every where exploded by the Catholick Church; the reputation of celibacy ſtill found entertainment in the world, as being more ſpeciouſly and cunningly propoſed, eſpecially by the Euſtathian hereticks, who affixed it only to the clergy, and refuſed to communicate with married prieſts, imagining the Sacraments by them adminiſtred to be wholly ineffectual.

Thus did the celibacy of the clergy gradually advance from a groſs and fooliſh hereſy, to a regular and well formed error: And however, theſe ancient hereticks committed the moſt abominable villanies, and unnatural luſts under pretence of abſolute purity and continence, ſo that what Pope Leo ſaid of the Priſcillianiſts, might juſtly be applied to them all: They deteſted marriage, becauſe there is no liberty for uncleanneſs, where the chaſtity of the nuptial-bed, and the hope of poſterity is preſerved, Epiſt. 93. ad Turrib. cap. 7. notwithſtanding their promiſcuous fornications, and brutiſh luſts, which gave ſcandal to the very Heathens: The glorious pretence of chaſtity and perfection gained infinite applauſe in the world, and drew multitudes of ſectators after them. The very name of Encratites or continent perſons, common to all theſe hereticks, commanded veneration from unworthy people; and all were apt to admire an imaginary perfection, which they found themſelves ſo much wanted. How far the hereſy of theſe Encratites prevailed, and ſecretly corrupted the judgment of Catholicks, I ſhall next enquire.

Firſt then, the relicks of the Euſtathian hereſy ſo far prevailed among the Catholicks, that many of them believed it highly indecent for him to meddle with the adminiſtration of Sacred Things, who indulged himſelf the liberty of marriage, as if he had contracted ſome impurity thereby, and made himſelf unworthy of the Holy Office: An error common to all the patrons of celibacy, which proceeded ſo far in the time of Gregory Nazianzen, that many would not willingly receive Baptiſm, or the Euchariſt from married prieſts; but much farther in the time of Hildebrand, and once again advanced into the formal hereſy of the Euſtathians. From the Montaniſts, the Catholicks received their diſlike of ſecond marriages, one of the moſt palpable errors of antiquity; ſince what the Apoſtle expreſly alloweth, and in ſome caſes adviſeth, moſt of the ancients decry as ſcandalous and inconvenient, of-times as a tolerable evil, and ſometimes even as a grievous ſin. Tertullian hath written whole books againſt it. Athenagoras calls it, a decent adultery, Legat, Chriſt. prope fin. Origen maintains that a Digamiſt, however otherwiſe a perſon of good converſation, and adorned with all other virtues not to belong to the Church, Hom. 17. in Luc. in fin. I might add many other fathers and councils, who impoſed a tedious penance upon Digamiſts: But the things is ſufficiently notorious. This prejudice againſt Digamy was firſt taken up in the end of the ſecond age. Before that time ſecond marriage was thought indifferent, and wholly innocent. Hermes in the firſt age had determined the lawfulneſs of it; (Paſtor, lib. 2. Mandat. 4. ſect. 4.) and Clemens Alexandrinus in the next pleads largely for it, Strom. lib. 3. From the Gnoſticks the Catholicks received an erroneous opinion of ſome impurity and ſinfulneſs, or at leaſt imperfection in the uſe of marriage. They ſcrupled not to uſe the authority of books forged by thoſe hereticks in prejudice of marriage, ſuch as the Goſpel of the Egyptians, the Acts of Paul and Tecla, and the like; and in ſome meaſure adopted their errors; as Origen. Hom. 6. in num. & Hierom. adv. Jovian. l. 1.

Nor did this error expire with thoſe hereſies, from whence they roſe. About the year 600, when Auguſtin, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, deſired of Pope Gregory ſome inſtructions for his new converts in England, and rules of Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline, he gave him this for one. A man after he hath laid with his own wife, ought not to enter into the Church, till he hath waſhed himſelf with water, nor muſt then immediately enter, apud Bedam. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 1. c. 27. Whereas Clemens Alexandrinus, (Strom. lib. 3.) praiſing the ſimplicity of the Chriſtian Religion, inſtanceth in this very ceremony; which although uſed of old by the Jews, he ſaith was no where practiſed in his time by the Chriſtians. Many other erroneous opinions obtained in the ancient Church, which proceeded from no other cauſe but this.

The pre-conceived opinions of the impurity of marriage in all, and great indecency of it in thoſe who adminiſtred Holy Things, tended directly to introduce the celibacy of the clergy. For theſe reaſons, Origen and Euſebius, who were the only orthodox writers before the council of Nice, who openly prefer the celibacy of the clergy to their marriage, deſired it might be introduced. For they rather faintly wiſhed the thing, than dogmatically uſed it; and by their wiſhes manifeſt, that it was not yet introduced.

Theſe miſtakes and prejudices, and reaſons of celibacy founded upon them, were common to both Churches; but there was one reaſon peculiar to the weſtern Church; which however it may ſeem light, was of great efficacy: And that was the unhappy fall of Tertullian into Montaniſm. That great and learned perſon, naturally endowed with an ardent genius, of a ſevere and inflexible temper of mind, infinitely zealous for all outward appearances of religious mortification, and after his fall prompted with that enthuſiaſtick ſpirit, which was the peculiar character of the Montaniſts, ſet himſelf to advance the opinion of his ſect with all imaginable vigour. The unlawfulneſs of Digamy, was the chief tenet of that ſect, and that founded upon an erroneous ſuppoſition of ſome imperfection in the uſe even of firſt marriage. In maintaining and recommending theſe errors to the world, Tertullian employed all the force of his wit and eloquence to debaſe the dignity of marriage, and extol the merits of a ſingle-life, whether widowhood or virginity. The extraordinary reverence and eſteem which his great learning and apparent zeal procured to him in ſucceeding ages, mightily propagated his errors, and corrupted his readers with falſe prejudices and notions of marriage and virginity.

All theſe prejudices were in themſelves unlawful. But there were other reaſons of preferring celibacy in the ancient Church; which might have been allowed, if not attended with ſuch fatal conſequences. And Firſt, many Catholicks openly eſpouſed the cauſe of celibacy, and others winked at their policy, merely to prevent the deluſion of more ſimple Catholicks, by the no leſs glorious than fraudulent pretences of the Encratites, Epiſt. ad Euſtoch. de cuſtod. Virgin. They eſteemed it a laudable policy to prevent the miſchief, by propoſing to the practice of men that very perfection, which the hereticks ſo much boaſted of, and the multitude were apt to admire, as being always eaſier led with great pretences, than ſober truth. A not unlike policy with this, was afterwards uſed by Chryſoſtome againſt the Arians, (Socrat. l. 6. c. 8.) when fearing the people would be ſeduced by their enthuſiaſtical ſinging of hymns, he ſet up the ſame way of ſinging of hymns among the Catholicks, and thereby prevented the deſign of the Arian.

Secondly, the frequent perſecutions of that time, did not a little advance the cauſe of celibacy; it being highly convenient to the Church, that the clergy ſhould ſhew an example of conſtancy and reſolution to all other Chriſtians, which it was believed they would more readily perform, when freed from the incumbrances of a married ſtate, and not with-holden with the temptations of wife and children. For, the fury of the Heathen perſecutors generally fell moſt heavy upon the clergy, and ſometimes was directed againſt them only: So that to be promoted to any eminent place in the Church, was to be expoſed to certain martyrdom. For this reaſon, as Euſebius ſomewhere relates, in the choice of Biſhops, ſingle perſons were commonly preferred before married men, in times of perſecution; which reaſon, God be praiſed, is now no longer. But this cuſtom of the ancient Church, however it may ſeem almoſt equivalent to an impoſition of celibacy, was yet far from it. For, firſt it was not ſo ſtrict and univerſal, as to admit no exception. Marriage was permitted to many, even after the reception of orders, as we ſhall ſhew by and by from the canon of Ancyra; and allowed indifferently to all, if they receded from the execution of their office, and returned to lay-communion, in order to it; as we ſhall alſo hereafter prove. Secondly, If any perſon to be ordained, were not yet married, and did in the leaſt ſuſpect he ſhould not be able afterwards to contain without marriage, he was not only permitted, but even adviſed by the Church, firſt to marry, and then to receive orders: So that they frequently married, whilſt candidates of the prieſthood, and already deſigned to that holy office, perhaps but ſome few days before their admittance into it. So the ſixth general council renewing this very Apoſtolick canon, forbid any to marry after orders once received; and adds, But if any one who comes to be ordained, hath a mind to join himſelf unto a wife with the bond of marriage, let him do it before he be ordained deacon, or ſub- deacon, or prieſt, and then receive orders, can. 6. Conſequently, Thirdly, By allowing to the clergy the free uſe of marriage contracted before their ordination, they acknowledged both the lawfulneſs and decency of their marriage, whether contracted before or after ordination. For, if there be any indecency in marriage, which makes it unbecoming the dignity and holineſs of the prieſthood, it muſt be in the uſe of it, as all confeſs; and if ſo, the uſe of marriage, contracted before as well as after ordination, will become indecent.

In ſome of the clergy, theſe prejudices of the excellency of celibacy, and the inconvenience of marriage to the dignity of their order, prevailed ſo far, that upon pretence of continence and greater purity, they ſequeſtred their wives, although unwilling, from their bed, and ſometimes from their ſociety. The ſuperſtitious and ſcandalous conduct of theſe men was univerſally condemned and cenſured by the Church: Whence, among the Apoſtick canons, this is one; Let no Biſhop, prieſt or deacon, put away his wiſe upon pretence of religion. If he doth, let him be excommunicated; and if he continue obſtinate, be degraded. The error of the impurity of marriage had ſo far obtained in the minds of many, that it was neceſſary for the Church to interpoſe her judgment, and vindicate the cauſe of injured marriage. For, as Ariſtenus truly paraphraſes this canon, A clergyman, by ſequeſtring his wiſe from his bed, ſeems to accuſe marriage, as if he thought the lawful pleaſures of it to be impious, Syntagm. Alphabet. lit. γ. c. 16. And the council of Nice decreed, in the very words of this Apoſtolick canon, That the Clergy ought not every one to put away his wiſe, Galaſius, Cyzic. Hiſt. Concil. Nicæn. l. 2. c. 32.

The determination of the council of Nice ſettled the matter, and put an end to the controverſy about celibacy, in the eaſtern Church at leaſt: So that it paſt thenceforward in profound ſilence in all the acts of the eaſtern Synods, till the Quiniſext council Ann. 692. where Biſhops were forbidden the uſe of marriage.

This was a council aſſembled at Conſtantinople in the year 692, to ſupply the defects of the fifth and ſixth general councils, of which the laſt was held but 11 years before, and neither of them had made canons for the better government of the Church, being wholly taken up with the determination of matters of faith. To remedy this defect, the Quiniſext council was called, which, in truth, was nothing elſe but a continuation of the ſixth council, almoſt the ſame Biſhops being preſent in both; and therefore the canons of it are commonly cited under the name of the ſixth council. A voluntary abſtinence from the uſe of marriage, was now become common to all the Biſhops of the eaſt; which is not at all to be wondered at, for that cuſtom was already taken up, which at this day continueth in the eaſtern Church, of chuſing the Biſhops, not out of the ſecular clergy, but out of monaſteries. This voluntary abſtinence, therefore, being now become univerſal, was in this council formed into a law, upon occaſion of the Biſhops of Africa and Libya, who ſtill retained the uſe of marriage. This the council inhibited (Can. 12.) to them; and all other Biſhops for the future, profeſſing they did it not in derogation of the ancient Apoſtolical Diſcipline, but for the greater edification of the Church: whereby they acknowledge, that the uſe of marriage was permitted even to Biſhops by the Apoſtles, and that permiſſion continued down in the Church till their times.

As for the marriage of prieſts, and all the other inferior clergy, the council only commanded an abſtinence from the uſe of it in the time of the celebration of the more ſacred myſteries of Religion, at which times it had been forbidden alſo to laymen by the canons of many councils. Thus only renewing the third canon of the fifth council of Carthage, in all other things they left to the clergy the free uſe and enjoyment of their marriage. And not only ſo, but condemned alſo the practice of the Church of Rome, in theſe words: Whereas in the Church of Rome, we underſtand it is preſcribed in form of a canon, that thoſe who are to be inveſted with the order of prieſt or deacon, ſhould promiſe perpetual abſtinence from their wives: we, following the ancient canon of Apoſtolical Truth and Diſcipline, enact, that the lawful cohabitation of the clergy with their wives ceaſe not to be accounted valid, not daring to diſſolve the union between them and their wives, nor depriving either of the convenient ſociety (or embraces) of the other. Leſt we ſhould thereby be unavoidably injurious to marriage, which God ordained, and bleſſed with his own preſence; the Holy Goſpel pronouncing this ſentence, What God hath joined together, let no man put aſunder; and the Apoſtle teaching us, that marriage is honourable, and the bed undefiled; and again, Art thou bound unto a wife? ſeek not to be looſed. If any one therefore ſhall preſume againſt the Apoſtolical Canons, to deprive the clergy of the lawful company of their wives, let him be depoſed, Can. 13.

Thus have we brought down the hiſtory of celibacy to the times of Hildebrand, or the middle of the eleventh age: When although the marriage of the clergy was once again become frequent, and connived at over all the weſt, yet the fatal ignorance and ſtupidity of the precedent age had prepared the way to a renewed impoſition of celibacy, by anticipating the judgments of men with falſe prejudices and notions of the nature of marriage and celibacy. All the miſtakes of ancient times were then reſumed and with advantage improved: And the ſuppoſition of ſome hidden impurity in the uſe of marriage, had ſo far prevailed, that it gained belief and reception even among the married clergy. For this I take to have been the only reaſon of that abuſe, frequent in the ninth age, (which Elfric complaineth of in his Epiſtles to Wulfin and Wulfſtan) whereby the prieſts adminiſtring the Euchariſt, communicated not themſelves. Beſides all theſe errors and miſtakes, and the miſerable ignorance and barbarity of thoſe times, which prepared the minds of men: there concurred another great reaſon, which induced the Popes to impoſe celibacy upon the clergy. The Popes of the eleventh age, eſpecially Hildebrand, or Gregory the ſeventh, had formed a deſign of ſubjecting the whole Chriſtian world to the obedience of the ſee of Rome, as well in temporals as in ſpirituals. To this end nothing could be more ſubſervient than to withdraw the clergy from the allegiance due to their princes and affection to their countries, and tye them up wholly to the intereſt of the court of Rome. This could not be accompliſh'd while marriage was permitted to the clergy, ſince the conſideration of wives and children endeared their country to them, and were ſo many pledges of fidelity to their natural princes. This obſtacle therefore was to be removed, and the clergy to be inveſted with a perfect liberty of blindly purſuing the dictates of the ſee of Rome. This obſervation may be hence confirmed, that the ſame Hildebrand endeavoured to ſubject temporal princes to the papal power, and to deprive the clergy of the uſe of marriage. For although ſome Popes of this age attempted the impoſition of celibacy before Hildebrand, yet was the whole attempt deſigned and managed by him, who is known to have exerciſed an abſolute tyranny in Rome more than twenty years before he was made Pope.

Pope Leo the ninth led the way: Who, although he made no formal decree, at leaſt not any now extant, againſt the marriage of the clergy in the weſt, ſent legates to Conſtantinople, in the year 1054. Cardinal Humbert, who fiercely contending there with the Greeks, both by writings and diſputations, among other heads of accuſation, charged them with the hereſy of the Nicolaites, for, permitting marriage to the clergy, and pronounced an Anathema againſt them. How fooliſh and falſe this accuſation was, is evident from what we before ſaid touching the hiſtory of Nicolas the deacon. The cauſe of the Greek Church was defended by Nicetas Pectoratus, a regular prieſt, who, beſides the common right of mankind, the Divine Permiſſion, and the neceſſity of it, alledgeth the conſtant practice and tradition of the Greek Church in all precedent ages in favour of the clergy's marriage. In the year 1056. the council of Tholouſe (Can. 7.) was held by the command and by the legates of Pope Victor the ſecond, which commanded prieſts, deacons, and all other clergymen poſſeſſing eccleſiaſtical dignities, to abſtain from their wives, upon pain of deprivation and excommunication. The next year Pope Stephen the ninth held Leo Oſtienſ. Chron. Caſſin. l. 2. c. 98. ſeveral ſynods at Rome againſt the marriage of the clergy; whoſe acts are loſt. The clergy generally deſpiſed theſe cenſures and canons, and retained their wives in oppoſition to them. This obliged the Popes to invent and make uſe of new ſtratagems. None could be more effectual than to forbid the laity to hear maſs and receive the ſacraments from the hands of the married clergy. This was indeed the very formal hereſy of the Euſtathians condemned of old by the council of Gangra; but the advantage which it might bring to the ſee of Rome, did abundantly in their eſteem compenſate the danger and contagion of its error. Pope Nicolas the ſecond, therefore in a ſynod held at Rome, in the year 1059. decreed, (Can. 3) that none ſhould hear the maſs of a prieſt, whom he undoubtedly knew to have a concubine, (for ſuch the impoſers of celibacy in this age would have the wives of the clergy to be eſteemed) or a houſe-keeper. And that whatſoever prieſts, deacons, or ſubdeacons, after the conſtitution of Leo the ninth, concerning the chaſtity of the clergy, had openly married a concubine, or put her not away when married, ſhould be depoſed from his office and loſe his revenues. In this canon it may be obſerved, that a general and uninterrupted uſe of marriage by the clergy is acknowledged to have obtained in the weſt immediately before the conſtitution of Leo the ninth, and that the univerſal oppoſition of the clergy to the impoſition of celibacy, had forced the impoſers of it to mitigate the penalties of marriage, and inflict only deprivation upon the married clergy. This canon was renewed and confirmed by the council of Tours, Can. 6. in the year 1060. by the Roman ſynod, Can. 3. under Alexander the ſecond in the year 1063. and the latter part of it by the council of Roan, Can. 15. in the year 1072. But all theſe decrees were only the raſh efforts of a furious zeal for celibacy, and met with no ſucceſs or obedience, till reinforced by Hildibrand, now become Pope Gregory the ſeventh, whoſe violent genius left neither any force nor fraud unattempted to compleat his deſigns. He in a ſynod held at Rome in the year 1074. commanded, Can. 3, 4. Lambert. Schafnab. ad Ann. 1074. that the clergy ſhould either put away their wives, or be depoſed: And that none for the future ſhould be ordained, who vowed not perpetual continence and a ſingle life. But when the clergy choſe rather to lie under the ſentence of anathema (as Simeon Dunelmenſis, de geſt. Reg. Angl. and Hoveden, Annal. 1. p. 262. relate) or (as Bromton hath it) when they contemned his cenſures, Chron. ad Ann. 1074. he renewed the next year the decrees of his predeceſſors, that none ſhould hear maſs from, nor communicate with a married prieſt. Theſe conſtitutions he vigorouſly endeavoured to put in execution by force of arms, threats, and flattery, thundering out excommunications againſt thoſe Biſhops who blindly employed not their whole power and intereſt to execute his commands. By theſe violent methods he obtained the confirmation of his decrees from the council of Poictou, Can. 9 in the year 1078. of Iſlebonne, Can. 3. the ſame year of Quintilineburg, Can. 3. in the year 1085. and many other provincial councils. Moſt of the ſucceeding Popes purſued the ſame deſign, and many councils ſeconded them in it, as that of Melphi, Can. 2. in the year 1089. Clermont, Can. 9. 1095. and others not worthy a particular relation.

However, the marriage of the clergy wanted not defenders in this age to maintain its right againſt the calumnies and tyranny of its adverſaries. The decrees of the Popes were condemned by ſome councils, univerſally oppoſed by the clergy of all nations, and gained not ſucceſs till a long and ſharp contention. In the year 1061. the Biſhops of Lombardy, by the inſtigation of Guibert Biſhop of Parma, met in a council at Baſil, wherein they annulled the decrees of Pope Nicolas, and decreed, That no Pope ſhould be obeyed, who would not condeſcend and yield to their infirmities, Damian. de Legat. ad Henric. About the ſame time the clergy of Laon being urged by Petrus Damiani to put away their wives, produced in their defence a decree of the council of Tribur, which permitted the uſe of marriage to the clergy, Ad Epiſt. ad Cunipertum. Several councils were held at Tribur in this age; of whoſe acts we have little or no account left, and therefore cannot determine the time of this council. In the year 1080. Gregory the ſeventh was condemned and depoſed in the council of Brixia, as well for other crimes, as becauſe he had promoted divorces between married perſons, (to uſe the words of the hiſtorian) or had violently ſeparated the married clergy from their wives, Conradus Urſperg. Chron. To theſe we may add the council of Beneventum, held eleven years after by Urban the ſecond.

And Mr. Fox, in his Engliſh Martyrology, has preſerved two apologies for the married clergy. See tom. 2. p. 466. And thus I have given you a full view of the beginning and increaſe of this Popiſh Diſcipline, which they erroneouſly ground upon the authority of this ſeventh chapter to the Corinthians; for it plainly appears, that this is an invention of man, and that the Apoſtle no where encouraged ſuch a doctrine by word or example. But,

To conclude, If I have ſaid any thing injurious to the honour of pure virginity, I here retract it, and profeſs that a great reſpect and veneration is due to that ſtate of life, when it is truly a matter of choice, and not of force; and that conſidered both in the entrance into it, and continuance therein: when undertaken for the increaſe of piety, and advancement of Divine Glory, and not for any wordly ends or advantages; when taken up by thoſe who have the gift of continence, not affected by ſuch as cannot contain. I ſay, with Clemens Alexandrinus, we reverence the happineſs of the gift of continence in thoſe to whom it is beſtowed of God. Strom. l. 3. Thus we diſlike not the virginity of the Romiſh clergy, but ſlight the pretence, and condemn the impoſition of it. Experience demonſtrates the one to be falſe, and reaſon ſhews the other to be unlawful. We affect not the name, but the purity or virginity; we follow the rule of the Apoſtle before us, to impoſe celibacy upon none, neither to deny marriage to any; by which means we promote a voluntary continence in many, and ſecure a real chaſtity in all of the clergy.

CHAP. VIII.

1 To abſtain from meats offered to idols: 8, 9 We muſt not abuſe our Chriſtian liberty, to the offence of our brethren: 11 but muſt bridle our knowledge with charity.

NOW as touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have knowledge. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

2 And if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

3 But if any man love God, the ſame is known of him.

4 As concerning therefore the eating of thoſe things that are offered in ſacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one.

5 For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many)

6 But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him.

7 Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge: for ſome with conſcience of the idol unto this hour, eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conſcience being weak, is defiled.

8 But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither if we eat, are we the better; neither if we eat not, are we the worſe.

9 But take heed leſt by any means this liberty of yours become a ſtumbling-block to them that are weak.

10 For if any man ſee thee which haſt knowledge, ſit at meat in the idols temple, ſhall not the conſcience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat thoſe things which are offered to idols:

11 And through thy knowledge ſhall the weak brother periſh, for whom Chriſt died?

12 But when ye ſin ſo againſt the brethren, and wound their weak conſcience, ye ſin againſt Chriſt.

13 Wherefore if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no fleſh while the world ſtandeth, leſt I make my brother to offend.

This chapter contains the reſolution of the caſe, concerning meat offered to idols, eaten in the idol's temple, in honour of the idol. And,

I. Here he ſhews, that the knowledge of the nature of an idol is not a ſufficient warrant for this practice; becauſe (1.) it puffs up, inſtead of edifying, ver. 1. (2.) becauſe it is not the right kind of knowledge, ver. 2. amplified by ſhewing what kind of knowledge that is, which renders men acceptable to God, ver. 3. Then

II. He grants that ſome do underſtand aright the nature of an idol, and the unity of the true God, ver. 4. amplified by a compariſon between the true God and idols, ver. 5, 6. Yet,

III. He affirms, that all have not the knowledge, and are therefore defiled by eating, ver. 7.

IV. He ſhews that meat in its own nature commends not to God, ver. 8. Yet,

V. That we muſt not eat to the offence of others, ver. 9. (1.) Becauſe thy example will encourage the weak to ſin againſt his conſcience, ver. 10. (2.) Becauſe it tends to the deſtruction of thy brother, ver. 11. and (3.) becauſe it is a ſin againſt Chriſt by conſequence, ver. 12. Whence,

VI. He concludes with a general rule, "that all things indifferent in their own nature, ought to be forborn in caſe of ſcandal," ver. 13.

Ver. 1. — As touching things offered.] The Gnoſticks, as I have noted before, being willing to ingratiate themſelves both with Jew and Gentile, who had embraced the Chriſtian faith, but ſtill retained a ſecret inclination to ſome of their Jewiſh and Heathen ceremonies, tolerated thoſe, who would aſſociate with them in their errors, to uſe their liberty in thoſe things; the Jews to be circumciſed, and the Gentile to be preſent in the idols temples, or to eat of the idol's ſacrifices as they pleaſed. So that

In theſe words the Apoſtle begins to reprove the toleration of that liberty allowed to the Heathen converts by the Gnoſticks.

Ver. 4. As concerning therefore the eating of thoſe things that are offered in ſacrifice unto idols.] Here it is to be noted, that the meats offered to the idols were a part of thoſe ſacrifices which the Heathens offered to their gods; of the remaining portions whereof they uſually made a feaſt in the idol temple, inviting their friends thither, and ſometimes their Chriſtian friends to come along with them, as Dr. Cave obſerveth,

———— We know that an idol is nothing in the world.] Paul here ſpeaks as a Jew; as if he had ſaid, we who were originally Jews, have learned from the Old Teſtaments, that the Heathen deities were Elilim, i. e. nothings, or had no exiſtence; or, or an idol is nothing of a god; yet the Apoſtle urges, that though an idol in this ſenſe be nothing, it is unlawful to frequent their worſhip, as the Gnoſticks allowed, becauſe that worſhip was either paid to devils, or at the leaſt to ſtocks and ſtones, or the like, as to give ſcandal to others, and withdraw the mind from their neceſſary worſhip of the true and only God.

———— There is none other God but one.] This, and the following Scripture, declare to us the unity of God, and conſequently overthrow the Heathen polytheiſm or worſhip of many gods. I therefore Note from theſe words, That God is alone, without any partnerſhip in his eſſence; and this is the eſſential unity of God, in oppoſition to Polytheiſm, or the opinion of a multiplicity of gods.

Of which unity, let it be obſerved, that

Firſt, Some have fancied that the unity of God Almighty conſiſts only, or chiefly, in the unity of his nature; that it is only ſuch a generical unity, as is common to all other natures; that God, or the Divine Nature, is one; as man, or the human nature, is one; or any other nature is one.

Others, again, have thought, that the unity whereby God is one, is only a ſpecifical unity; that he is only ſo one, as any ſpecies is ſaid to be one ſpecies or kind of beings; only that he is eminently one, as the ſupreme of all that kind of beings who partake in common of one Divine Nature. And ſo, when they ſpeak of one God, they mean no more, than as any individual man or woman, which are the two ſpecies or kinds of beings partaking of one common human nature, may be ſaid to be one man, or one woman.

But now, from either of theſe two notions of the Divine Unity, nothing hinders, but that we may infer a plurality of gods. For as there are many men, in one common, or general human nature; ſo there may be many gods, in one general Divine Nature, if the firſt opinion be true. And for the ſecond, as there are not only ſeveral, but even different kinds of beings, ſuch as men and women, in one and the ſame human nature; ſo what ſhould hinder, but that there may be as well, not only ſeveral, but different kinds of gods too, in one common Divine Nature? Therefore, I ſay, from either of theſe notions of the unity of God, ſuppoſing either of them to be true, a multitude of deities may, not without ſome ſhew of reaſon, be inferr'd. Which, as there need not, ſo there cannot be; as will appear hereafter.

That, therefore, which the Scriptures mean, when they ſpeak of the unity of God, is a numerical unity; that God is ſo one, as not only undivided in himſelf, but divided, and different from all other beings whatſoever: that the Divine Eſſence, or nature, is wholly void, and incapable of multiplication or diverſity; and that God is ſo one, and alone, as that beſides him there neither is, nor can be any other God.

Now, that there is but one only God, the Scriptures evidently teach: And that there can be but one God, I ſhall endeavour to evince by ſeveral arguments from reaſon.

Firſt, I ſay, the Scriptures evidently teach one only God.

Thus Moſes ſays to the Iſraelites; Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, Deut. vi. 4. Which is quoted by our Saviour to the Scribe, when he is about to tell him which is the firſt and great Commandment, Mark xii. 29. Again, ſays the ſame Moſes, Unto thee it was ſhew'd, that thou mighteſt know that the Lord he is God; there is none elſe, that is, no god elſe, beſides him, Deut. iv. 35. And ſo again he repreſents God as ſpeaking to them in his own perſon, after this manner; ſee now that I, even I am he, and there is no God with me, Ch. xxxii. 39. as if he had ſaid, I am God alone, and beſides me there is no god.

This ſame truth is alſo taught us in the New Teſtament; where our Saviour of right challenges the firſt hearing, who in his addreſſes to his Father thus beſpeaks him; This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God. For if he be the only true God, there can be no other god beſides him; becauſe no perſon can be God, unleſs he be the true God. And more particularly the Apoſtle in this chapter. As concerning the eating of theſe things that are offer'd in ſacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other god but one. For though there be that are called gods, whether in Heaven or in earth (as there be gods many, and lords many) but, or rather, yet to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, &c. ver. 4, 5, 6. So again in another place; there is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all, Eph. iv. 6. So likewiſe elſewhere, There is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus, 1 Tim. ii. 5. And ſo, laſtly, to the Galatians, to the ſame purpoſe, God is one? Gal. iii. 20. or but one: As if he had ſaid, There is one, and but one only God. But, Secondly, I ſaid, as this truth is evidently taught in Scripture, ſo it may likewiſe be evinced by ſeveral arguments from reaſon. Of which, at preſent, I ſhall only mention three or four. And, Firſt, The prime notion of a God, is, That he is a neceſſary, ſelf-exiſting, independent Being, and of himſelf ſufficient to all purpoſes of ſuch a Being. For no being can be God, who does not exiſt neceſſarily; and no being can have neceſſary exiſtence, unleſs he be abſolutely independent; and whatſoever being is independent of all other beings, muſt alſo be ſufficient to all purpoſes for which he is, and by conſequence, there is no need of any other being, like, or equal to him. For if any ſingle being is ſufficient for all purpoſes, no other being, like or equal to him, can be neceſſary to any purpoſe whatſoever; becauſe, wherever there is all-ſufficiency, there muſt be all perfections: And in whatſoever being there are all perfections, that Being has whatever can be requiſite to denominate a God, and therefore, there can need no more.

And as there need not, ſo neither can there be imagined, with any ſhew of reaſon, more than one ſuch being. For, ſuppoſing more than one, this muſt be grounded on another ſuppoſition, that one is not ſufficient to all purpoſes; and if one is not ſufficient, neither can we be aſſured that an hundred, or a thouſand, or a million can be ſo. For, taking it for granted, as we muſt according to this notion, that every one wants ſome perfection to make him all-ſufficient; we know that ſeveral imperfect beings, be their number what it will, cannot make one perfect being: And if all together are imperfect, as all muſt be, if every one is ſo; then all together cannot be ſufficient; and, by conſequence, ſuppoſing ſuch a multitude of gods, is to ſuppoſe no God at all.

Secondly, If we ſuppoſe more gods than one, every one muſt be ſuppoſed to have ſome peculiar properties belonging to him, whereby he is diſtinguiſhed from all others; that is, as was before obſerved, every one muſt have ſome Divine Perfection, which the reſt have not; and ſo, on the other hand, each muſt want ſome perfection, which the others have: And, by conſequence, ſince neither of them can have all perfections, neither of them can be God; becauſe God cannot be otherwiſe than an all-ſufficient, and, therefore, an abſolutely perfect Being.

Thirdly, If there were more gods than one, each of them might will, not only different, but even contrary things to what the others will. For every one muſt be ſuppoſed to be endued with a free and uncontroulable liberty of willing what he pleaſes; or elſe he is not, neither can be God. But then, ſuppoſing this ſhould happen, what diſorders and confuſions, may we reaſonably preſume, ſuch a diverſity and contrariety of wills muſt needs produce and cauſe in all the world? For, ſuppoſing all of them ſhould ſo agree, as that not one of them ſhould will any thing but what is very good, or, at leaſt, indifferent, as neither good nor evil: Yet, ſince the thing that any one does will is different from what another wills at the ſame time; this may be reaſonably ſuppoſed to cauſe a kind of jangling among them, and put each upon the vindication of his proper liberty of willing and acting as he pleaſes. And to think of ſalving this, by ſuppoſing a ſubordination among thoſe ſeveral deities, and a ſubjection of all the reſt to one ſupreme, is very abſurd and ridiculous: Since wherever there is ſuch ſubordination, there can be no deity; and whoever is ſubject to another, cannot poſſibly be God. For God knows no ſuperiour, but is himſelf ſupreme, over all other beings whatſoever.

Laſtly, To ſuppoſe more gods than one, is the way to baniſh all religion out of the world. For among ſuch a multitude, and variety of deities, it would be very hard for any man to tell which to obey; ſince, as it would be impoſſible to obey them all at once, ſo it would be very difficult to find a reaſon why one ſhould be obeyed before, or rather than another. Beſides, that the nature of Divine Worſhip does require, that it be performed with all the heart: Whereas, if there be many gods, the whole heart cannot poſſibly be given to one only; but among ſuch a variety of objects muſt be wretchedly diſtracted and divided. So that perhaps, inſtead of worſhipping them all, no worſhip would be paid to any one among them.

Therefore, to ſum up all that has been offered on this head: If we conſider the moſt eſſential perfections of the Divine Nature, the being of more gods than one, appears to be not only moſt unneceſſary, but even utterly impoſſible.

Firſt, moſt unneceſſary. “For abſolute perfection, which we aſcribe to God, as the moſt eſſential notion which mankind has always had concerning him, does neceſſarily ſuppoſe unity; becauſe this is eſſential to the notion of a being that is abſolutely perfect, that all perfection meets and is united in ſuch a being: But to imagine more gods, and ſome perfections to be in one, and ſome in another, does deſtroy the moſt eſſential notion which men have of God, namely, that he is a being abſolutely perfect, that is, as perfect as is poſſible. Now to ſuppoſe ſome perfections in one god, which are not in another, is to ſuppoſe ſome poſſible perfection to be wanting in God, which is a contradiction to the moſt natural and moſt eaſy notion which all men have of God, that he is a Being in whom all perfections do meet and are united: But if we ſuppoſe more gods, each of which has all perfections united in him, then all but one would be ſuperfluous and needleſs; and therefore, by juſt and neceſſary conſequence, not only may, but of neceſſity muſt be ſuppoſed not to be; ſince neceſſary exiſtence is eſſential to the Deity; and therefore, if but one God be neceſſary, there can be no more.” But,

Secondly, a plurality of gods is not only moſt unneceſſary, but utterly impoſſible. “For ſuppoſing there were more gods, two for example, and if there may be two, there may be a million, for we can ſtop no where: I ſay, ſuppoſing only two gods; either theſe two would be in all perfections equal and alike, or unequal and unlike: If equal and alike in all things, then, as I ſaid before, one of them would be needleſs and ſuperfluous, and if one, why not as well the other? they being ſuppoſed to be in all things perfectly alike, and then there would be no neceſſity at all of the Being of a God; and yet it is granted on all hands, that neceſſary exiſtence is eſſential to the notion of a God: But if they be unequal, that is, one of them inferior to, and leſs perfect than the other; that which is inferior, and leſs perfect, could not be God, becauſe he would not have all perfection. So that, which way ſoever we turn the thing and look upon it, the notion of more gods than one is by its own repugnancy, and ſelf-contradiction deſtructive of itſelf.

I ſhall not now ſtay to ſhew the folly and abſurdity of that opinion, which has endeavoured to eſtabliſh two firſt principles, or two gods, one good, and the other evil; the former of which is ſuppoſed to be the fountain of all good, and the latter the cauſe of all evil: which is ſo heavy loaden with difficulties and contradictions, that it muſt unavoidably ſink under, as being utterly unable to ſuſtain the burden. For, beſides that it is repugnant to right reaſon, and even to common ſenſe, that any Being ſhould be God, and yet be evil; ſuppoſing two ſuch different and contrary principles, of which neither can be reaſonably ſuppoſed to be inferior, or ſubject to the other, ſince that which is ſo cannot poſſibly be God, no better can with reaſon be expected from them, than perpetual diſorder and confuſion throughout the world.

As for the difficulty which ſome have raiſed from the Doctrine of a Trinity of Perſons in the Godhead; that may be eaſily removed, eſpecially by us, who believe the Scriptures are the word of God, by conſidering, that as he knows his own nature and manner of ſubſiſting infinitely better than we do; ſo, ſince he has expreſly affirmed himſelf to be but one only God, and yet, that in the unity of the Godhead there be three differences or diſtinctions which we call Perſons, becauſe of the perſonal names and properties whereby they are diſtinguiſhed, to wit, God the Father creating, God the Son redeeming, and God the Holy Ghoſt ſanctifying, inſtructing and preſerving mankind; we ought to acquieſce in, and reſt ſatisfied with the account that he has given of himſelf, and belive it to be abſolutely true and certain, though we cannot comprehend it; that is, though we cannot ſee the manner how three Perſons in the Godhead ſhould be but one God, and one and the ſame God three diſtinct Perſons; yet it is our duty to believe it is ſo, becauſe that one God has ſo revealed himſelf unto us in his word, by which we cannot be deceived.

I ſhall conclude all with the words of a learned Prelate of our Church upon this ſubject.

Firſt, ſays he, “ It is neceſſary thus to believe the unity of the Godhead, that, being aſſured there is a nature worthy of our devotions, and challenging our religious ſubjection, we may learn to know whoſe that nature is, to which we owe our adorations, leſt our minds ſhould wander and fluctuate in our worſhip about various and uncertain objects if we ſhould apprehend more gods than one, I know not what could determine us in any inſtant to the actual adoration of any one: for where no difference does appear, (as, if there were many, and all by nature gods, there could be none) what inclination could we have, what reaſon could we imagine, to prefer or elect any one before the reſt for the object of our devotions? Thus, then, it is neceſſary to believe the unity of God, in reſpect of us who are obliged to worſhip.

Secondly, It is neceſſary to believe the unity of God, in reſpect of him who is to be worſhipped. Without this acknowledgment, we cannot give unto God the things that are God's, it being part of the worſhip and honour due to God, to accept of no co-partner with him. When the law was given, in the obſervation whereof the religion of the Iſraelites conſiſted, the firſt precept was this prohibition, Thou ſhalt have no other Gods before me, Exod. xx. 3. and whoever violates this, denies the foundation on which all the reſt depend, as the Jews obſerve. This is the true reaſon of that ſtrict Precept, by which all are commanded to give Divine Worſhip to God, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve, Matt. iv. 10. becauſe he alone is God: Him only ſhalt thou fear, becauſe he alone has infinite power: In him only ſhalt thou truſt, becauſe He only is our Rock, and our Salvation, Pſal. lxii. 2. To him only ſhalt thou direct thy devotions, becauſe He only knows the hearts of the children of men, 2 Chron. vi. 30. Upon this foundation, the whole heart of man is entirely required of him, and engaged to him: Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord: And, or rather, Therefore, thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy might, Deut. vi. 4, 5. In ſhort, whoever were truly, and by nature God, could not chuſe but challenge our love upon the ground of an infinite excellency, and tranſcendent beauty of holineſs: And therefore, if there were more gods than one, and conſequently divided among them; and as our love, ſo alſo the proper effect thereof, our chearful and ready obedience, which, like the child propounded to the judgment of Solomon, as ſoon as it is divided, is deſtroyed. And our Saviour has aſſured us, that in this reſpect, No man can ſerve two maſters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or elſe he will hold to the one, and deſpiſe the other, Matt. vi. 24.

CHAP. IX.

1 He ſheweth his liberty, 7 and that the miniſter ought to live by the Goſpel: 15 yet that himſelf hath of his own accord abſtained, 18 to be either chargeable unto them: 22 or offenſive unto any, in matters indifferent. 24 Our life is like unto a race.

AM I not an apoſtle? am I not free? have I not ſeen Jeſus Chriſt our Lord? are not you my work in the Lord?

2 If I be not an apoſtle unto others, yet doubtleſs I am to you: for the ſeal of mine apoſtleſhip are ye in the Lord.

3 Mine anſwer to them that do examine me, is this,

4 Have we not power to eat and to drink?

5 Have we not power to lead about a ſiſter a wife as well as other apoſtles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas?

6 Or I only and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?

7 Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?

8 Say I theſe things as a man? or ſaith not the law the ſame alſo?

9 For it is written in the law of Moſes, Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen?

10 Or ſaith he it altogether for our ſakes? for our ſakes, no doubt, this is written: that he that ploweth ſhould plow in hope; and that he that threſheth in hope, ſhould be partaker of his hope.

11 If we have ſown unto you ſpiritual things, is it a great thing if we ſhall reap your carnal things?

12 If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheleſs, we have not uſed this power; but ſuffer all things, leſt we ſhould hinder the goſpel of Chriſt.

13 Do ye not know that they which miniſter about holy things, live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar?

14 Even ſo hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the goſpel, ſhould live of the goſpel.

15 But I have uſed none of theſe things. Neither have I written theſe things, that it ſhould be ſo done unto me: for it were better for me to die, than that any man ſhould make my glorying void.

16 For though I preach the goſpel, I have nothing to glory of: for neceſſity is laid upon me; yea, wo is unto me, if I preach not the goſpel.

17 For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if againſt my will, a diſpenſation of the goſpel is committed unto me.

18 What is my reward then? verily that when I preach the goſpel, I may make the goſpel of Chriſt without charge, that I abuſe not my power in the goſpel.

19 For though I be free from all men, yet have I made my ſelf ſervant unto all, that I might gain the more.

20 And unto the Jews, I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law;

21 To them that are without law, as without law, (being not without law to God, but under the law to Chriſt) that I might gain them that are without law.

22 To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means ſave ſome.

23 And this I do for the goſpels ſake, that I might be partaker thereof with you.

24 Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, but one receiveth the prize? ſo run that ye may obtain.

25 And every man that ſtriveth for the maſtery, is temperate in all things: Now, they do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible.

26 I therefore ſo run, not as uncertainly, ſo fight I, not as one that beateth the air:

27 But I keep under my body, and bring it into ſubjection: leſt that by any means when I have preached to others, I my ſelf ſhould be a caſt-away.

In this chapter Paul diſſuades the Corinthians from uſing their Chriſtian liberty in things indifferent, or not neceſſary, to the prejudice of a weak brother, by his own example in two caſes.

I. In not requiring maintenance; where, 1. He aſſerts his right, as an Apoſtle, to require maintenance: And herein he proves his Apoſtleſhip by the author and effects of his miniſtry, ver 1, 2. And then,

(2.) Aſſerts his right to require maintenance (by way of anſwer to an objection) by ſeveral arguments. And, (1.) By a queſtion put to their own conſciences, ver. 3, 4. (2.) By an example of the other Apoſtles who did ſo, ver. 5, 6. (3.) By the unanimous conſent of all perſons in like caſes; that the labourer ſhould be rewarded, as in the caſes of the ſoldier, husbandmen, ſhepherd, ver. 7. (4.) By the equity of the ceremonial law, ver. 8—10. (5.) By the rules of commutative juſtice, which, in this caſe, hold ſo much the more ſtrongly, in regard of the great inequality between the ſeed ſown, and the crop reaped; or the gift and receipt of it, ver. 11. (6.) By the power and right of their ordinary paſtors; much more have the Apoſtles this power. Amplified, by ſhewing his forbearance to uſe this power, with the reaſon thereof, ver. 12. (7.) By the maintenance aſſigned to the Prieſts and Levites under the law, ver. 13. (8.) By Chriſt's own ordinance, ver. 14.

(3.) He declares his own practice, in not making uſe of proper right for the time paſt, and his purpoſe not to do it for the time to come, with the reaſon, that he might not be deprived of his matter of glory, ver. 15. Amplified, by ſhewing, (1.) That the bare preaching of the Goſpel is not matter of glorying, becauſe it is a neceſſary duty in thoſe who are called thereunto, ver. 16. (2.) That preaching freely, or gratis, is the way to obtain a reward, ver. 17. Whereupon, (3.) He fixes his reſolution ſo to do, ver. 18. Amplified by the reaſon, viz.

II. His general practice to abridge himſelf in all things not neceſſary, for the ſake of others, and their benefit. (1.) Generally propounded, ver. 19. And then, (2.) Specified in ſeveral particulars, ver. 20—22. Amplified by his ends herein. (1.) In reference to the Goſpel; the promoting thereof. (2.) In reference to himſelf; a more ample ſhare in the great benefit thereof; everlaſting life; (1.) Propounded, ver. 23. And then, (2.) Illuſtrated by two ſimilitudes of runners and wreſtlers. (1.) Propounded, ver. 24, 25. And, (2.) Applied to himſelf and his own practice, ver. 26, 27.

Ver. 2. —— The ſeal of mine Apoſtleſhip.] Here the Apoſtle ſtiles the converſion of the Corinthians, by his miniſtry, a ſeal, i. e. a confirmation of the truth of his Apoſtliocal miſſion and doctrine.

Ver. 5. Have we not power to lead about a ſiſter, a wiſe, &c.] See the Diſſertation on celibacy, at the end of the ſeventh chapter.

Ver. 8. Say I theſe things as a man?] i. e. As a mere natural man, as the Heathens were, agreeable to the light of nature only, and the laws of nations; or, in other words, from the principles of natural reaſon and equity.

—— Or ſaith not the law [of Moſes] the ſame.] In Deut. xxv. 4.

Ver. 14. Even ſo hath the Lord ordained, that they who preach the Goſpel, ſhould live of the Goſpel.] This is a plain intelligible proof, that it is lawful for the miniſters of the Goſpel to receive a maintenance of their flock, and that the flock are by Divine Inſtitution obliged to maintain their paſtors.

Ver. 17. —— A diſpenſation.] Or, the adminiſtration of the Goſpel to many nations, people and languages.

Ver. 19. —— Though I be free from all men.] As being ſervant to none, but to Chriſt alone, of whom alone I expect my reward for preaching his Goſpel.

—— That I might gain the more.] To the profeſſion of Chriſt.

Ver. 20. Unto the Jews.] i. e. Thoſe Chriſtians, who being converted to the faith in Chriſt, retained many, if not all the ceremonial law, as obligatory under the Goſpel Covenant.

—— I became a Jew.] By circumciſing Timothy for their ſakes, Acts xvi. 3.

—— That I might gain the Jews.] Or, by this indifferent condeſcenſion I might make them profeſs the Goſpel of Chriſt in unity of Spirit, and in the bond of peace.

Ver. 21. To them that are without law.] i. e. Without the Levitical Law; the Gentiles, —— As without law.] Underſtand, I behaved as if I was without law, or I uſed no ceremonies proper to the Jewiſh œconomy.

—— Being not without law to God, but under the law to Chriſt.] i. e. He never accounted himſelf free from the moral law of God, which was not aboliſhed, but reinforced by Chriſt; wherefore (ſays he) though I temporize, as it were, with the Jew-proſelytes in ſome Levitical ceremonies, yet I dare not do any thing contrary to the eternal rule of righteouſneſs which Chriſt came to fulfil.

Ver. 22. To the weak.] See ch. iii. 1.

—— Became I as weak.] By abſtaining from what might hurt their weak conſciences. See ch. iii. and iv.

—— I am made all things to all men.] By compliance with them in all lawful and indifferent ceremonies.

Ver. 24. Know ye not that they which run in a race, run all, &c.] The Apoſtle makes uſe of this compariſon, becauſe racing and wreſtling were noted exerciſes among the Corinthians, for which they would often undergo great abſtinence from meats and pleaſures, and other mortifications, to prepare themſelves for the game, which could not be exerciſed without both much trouble, toil and danger to the racers and wreſtlers, by the ſharp conflicts, wounds and bruiſes, which are the conſequents of thoſe exerciſes. And yet all theſe were ſubmitted to with much chearfulneſs and reſolution, with no other proſpect than to acquire an empty name, and a crown of leaves; a prize which only one, of them all, could obtain. But yet every particular racer and combatant was buoy'd up with a ſure expectation of the prize. Since therefore, ſays the Apoſtle, it was ſo creditable and common a thing among the people of Corinth, to exert themſelves ſo vigorouſly, upon ſo very poor and uncertain proſpects; Why ſhould they decline the like diligence, zeal and perſeverance, where the prize is no leſs than a crown of immortal glory, and may be obtained by each perſon who runs the race that is preſcribed him in the Goſpel of Chriſt.

A Diſſertation on the Letts and Impediments of the Church.

The laws of God and nature have given to all people a title and hereditary claim to their native country, and the liberties and properties belonging to it; and have to that end imprinted a noble inſtinct ardour on their minds, to defend their places of birth and abode, and to reſiſt all foreign power that attempteth to invade them, or any way violently to diſpoſſeſs them. Hence the diſciples of our Lord, when firſt turning to the Gentiles, took care to appriſe them, that they came among them only for their ſouls ſake, and to direct them to a better country, that of Heaven, without meddling with their ſettled portions here on earth; as the diſciples of a ſpiritual Lord and Maſter, whoſe kingdom was not of this world, and who had not where to lay his head in it. This was the main reaſon why thoſe firſt planters of the Goſpel amongſt Jews and Gentiles, never once interpoſed in their preaching or writing, with the particular conſtitution of any country, or the form of government eſtabliſhed in it; nor with the extent of power in any prince; nor with the foundations of property and rights in any people. But leaving ſuch ordinances of men, to their antecedent ſettlement by compact or cuſtom of every place; they taught only the things that made for mutual peace and publick good; that magiſtrates were the miniſters of God for that good, and that Chriſtian People ſhould continue to ſubmit themſelves unto them, not as before only for wrath, but now rather for conſcience-ſake. For had they taught rulers to oppreſs, or ſubjects to rebel, they had not only exceeded their commiſſion, but they had been juſtly to be blam'd for ſowers of ſedition, raiſers of tumult, and even turners of the world upſide down: Much more, had they caſt their congregations into bands and armies, and gone forth to plant their Goſpel by the ſword, and founded their dominion in the grace of that Goſpel of Chriſt: This would have harden'd the Heathens from giving any manner of reception or attention to them. But, I ſay, the practice of the Apoſtles had no appearance of this evil in it: They went about like their Maſter doing good, ſeeking the redemption of loſt ſouls, and renouncing every way of overcoming the world, but by faith and prayers. Paul deſcribes well their ſpiritual warfare in his ſecond Epiſtle to theſe profeſſors at Corinth, vi. 4. In all things approving our ſelves as the miniſters of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes, and ſo on in various trials; yet having no weapons but the word of truth, and the power of God; nor any other armour, but that of "righteouſneſs on the right hand and on the left," Mark xiii. 10. It was thus the Goſpel was firſt publiſhed among all nations.

But alas, in the degenerate ages of the Chriſtian Church, then was Chriſt ſet up for a martial competitor with Mahomet. Then was war firſt called holy; and blood was again ſhed on every ſide of Jeruſalem, to puſh on a conqueſt and new dominion, which God, for that reaſon, would never proſper, but has left that field of contention ſtill in the hands of the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt: Yet the like pride and ambition of the church of Rome went on to offer the kingdoms of the world to the longeſt ſword of her catholic princes, pretending that the donation of her Popes could give a title to any country of infidels or hereticks; and that it was lawful, and even meritorious, to recover by force of arms whatever was ſo conveyed by the power of the keys; and when acquired, the right was in the donor to diſpoſe of all temporals, in order at leaſt to Spirituals.

It is well known that the firſt attempts and acquiſitions of the Spaniards in the Weſt-Indies, were plainly upon this foot; a gift of the Pope to be obtained by military arms; by invading the country, and expelling or enſlaving the inhabitants thereof. See the bull of Pope Alex. VI. granting the iſlands and countries in the new world to Ferdinand and Elizabeth, king and queen of Caſtile.—Dat. Romæ M.CCCC.XCIII.IV. Non. Maii Pont. Primo. So that the Spaniſh Biſhop of Chiapa in Mexico was not able to contain his humanity on this ſubject. He condoled the miſery of the poor Indians, that they were hunted into converſion like beaſts into nets and toils; that their country was conquered and laid waſte by fire and ſword round about them; that the croſs was ſet up for a title of the new Chriſtian poſſeſſion; and that it was death for the natives to remove it. That their beſt condition was to be fugitives and exiles in ſome other land; for that they could ſtay only to be ſlaves and ſacrifices to the will and pleaſure of their new lords and maſters.

The Spaniards commanded the Indians to embrace the Chriſtian religion upon pain of death; they menaced them with cruel ſlavery, or the moſt exquiſite tortures, to force them to turn Chriſtians; as if the Son of God, who died for the redemption of men, had ordained thoſe whom he ſent to preach the Goſpel, and declare the kingdom of God, to conſtrain people that lived peaceably in their own country, to make profeſſion of his doctrine, on pain of being plundered of their goods, of being ſeparated from their wives and children, of loſing their liberty, and of being condemned to a cruel death.—Relation of the Spaniſh voyages and cruelties in the Weſt-Indies, by Barth. des Caſas, Biſhop of Chiapa, 8vo. p. 24.

By theſe conqueſts and uſurpations, in the name of the Church, it is certain that the poor Indians did imbibe a great prejudice againſt Chriſtianity: they could not but abhor a religion that baniſhed them, or murdered them, and took their lands and ſorry houſes in poſſeſſion. That obſtinacy, with which many of them now reſiſt the Goſpel, is owing to this averſion and hatred which they found in their fore-fathers, and which is improved in their minds, by what they ſee, where Popery prevails among them; where the governors, called Chriſtians, are often ſo many executioners and tormentors of them; and where the very miſſionary prieſts are rather worldly tyrants and oppreſſors, than guides and leaders unto Heaven.

II. Let Chriſtian miſſionaries take care not to ſeek any other profit than the good of ſouls; they muſt follow the example of Paul, to be clear of all ſecular intereſt and worldly gain. For,

It ſtands recorded among the mercies, and even among the miracles of our Bleſſed Saviour, (Matt. xi. 5.) That the poor had the Goſpel preached to them, i. e. without price or any mercenary regards. Paul could appeal to all the elders of the Church at Epheſus, that he had coveted no man's ſilver, or gold, or apparel; but had rather made his own hands to miniſter unto his neceſſities, and to them that were with him, (Acts xx. 33) He tells his people of Theſſalonica, being affectionately deſirous of you, we were willing to have imparted unto you, not the Goſpel of God only, but our own ſouls, becauſe ye were dear alſo unto us, (1 Theſſ. ii. 8.) There be many other teſtimonies of a generous and diſintereſted zeal for the gaining of ſouls, in the firſt planters of Chriſtianity; to ſhew, that their pure religion was above all ſordid and ſecular deſigns, was not earthly, to feed the Flock of God for filthy lucre, but with a ready mind, 1 Pet. v. 2. and for a recompence above. The Apoſtle upbraided thoſe falſe teachers, who, through covetouſneſs, made a ſort of merchandize of ſouls, 2 Pet. ii. 3. This was very unworthy the Riches of Chriſt preached among the Gentiles, Epheſ. iii. 8. It was reſerved for the abominations of the ſpiritual Babylon, that among the merchandize of gold and ſilver, and other precious wares, there ſhould be found ſlaves and ſouls of men, Rev. xviii. 30. And, Theſe things have been fulfilled in the Church of Rome, as their own writers have confeſſed: They themſelves (Peter Martyr, Barthol. de Caſas, &c.) tell us, that the Spaniards, in their firſt diſcoveries of that new world, preferred their gain infinitely before any godlineſs whatever; examined the poor people about gold, not about religion; ſeeking not them, but theirs; baptizing them only for a token and mark of property to new maſters; giving them beads and croſſes, as hooks and baits to draw out things of greater value from them; and after all, taking away their lives, if they could not produce ſome reſerved ranſom for them. They confeſs again, that the ſavage Indians were ſenſible of this horrible abuſe put upon them, and did ſhake their heads, and ſhew great indignation at it. They obſerve, that the Spaniſh governors and leaders made uſe of the prieſts and friars, only as ſetters to them; and yet were ſometimes ſo jealous of the prieſts interfering in their profits, that they forbid them entrance into ſome towns of greateſt trade and treaſure; and quarrelled with them often for making their ſlaves idle with prayers, and ſuch as they thought impertinent offices of religion.

The notions the Indians had of them and their religion, were theſe: They looked upon them as a ſort of people entirely eaten up of baſe and covetous deſires; and that they would do any thing for ſordid gain, and therefore they have held up pieces of gold to them in mockery: Ho Chriſtians (ſay they) here's gold, here's gold! Intimating, there was the thing they admired and adored: they knew very well it was the governing idol of their ſouls, and that whatever reſpect they pretended to God Almighty, it was this only that they worſhipped in their hearts; and therefore the Spaniards have heard them ſay, Look upon this gold, and behold your God. It is for this that you have ſubdued us, and done ſo many miſchiefs; it is for this that you game, blaſpheme, curſe, quarrel, ſteal, commit rapes, and practiſe all manner of luſt and villany, &c. See Dr. Harris's Collect. of Voyages, vol. i. p. 798.

Yet I would not be underſtood, that the trade of this nation may not be improved by the advancement of religion in thoſe parts; but that this ought to be left for a happy conſequence, and not propoſed as an immediate view: We labour and pray for the ſucceſs of our labours, expecting no other returns, but our acceptance with God, and our reward in Heaven.

III. Let no miniſter of the Goſpel practiſe injuſtice, fraud and oppreſſion, inſtead of provided things honeſt in the ſight of thoſe Heathens we labour to convert. The good Apoſtles had nothing more at heart, than that the Name of God ſhould not be blaſphemed among the Gentiles. And they were ſenſible that nothing would more tend to it, than for Chriſtians to break the laws of nature, and the rules of Gentile-honour, in doing the baſe things of diſhoneſty and fraud; for this would turn the hearts of the Heathen, alienate their affections from the very faith or profeſſion of ſuch men, who, at every advantage to be caught, would be the deceivers and the robbers of them.

The law of nature has ſet up an even balance in the minds of all rational Pagans, and in their mutual dealings they deſire to be weighed in it, knowing, without any other law, how to be a Law unto themſelves in the equivalents of commerce; and how, in their own thoughts, to judge of right and wrong. Hence it was truly Divine Wiſdom in our Saviour to eſtabliſh his Goſpel upon theſe foundations of the common ſenſe of mankind, the doing unto others, as we would they ſhould do unto us. The diſciples built on the ſame foundation, of having their converſation honeſt among the Gentiles, 1 Pet. ii. 12.) and of providing for honeſt things, not only in the ſight of the Lord, but alſo in the ſight of men; becauſe the contrary arts and tricks would be the greateſt ſtumbling-block and ſtone of offence, that could be caſt at the feet, and before the eyes of the Heathen. Paul therefore recommended his miniſtration to the Gentiles, in that he had renounced the hidden things of diſhoneſty, not walking in craftineſs, not handling the word of God deceitfully, or with a deceitful life and converſation, but by manifeſtation of the truth, commending our ſelves to every man's conſcience, (to the natural conſcience of every infidel) in the ſight of God, 2 Cor. iv. 2. He would have the deceitful workers branded for falſe Apoſtles, 2 Cor. ii. 13. and would have men of corrupt minds thought to be reprobates concerning the faith, 2 Tim. iii. 8. It was the great Antichriſt who was to have the myſtery of iniquity working in him; after the working of Satan, with all deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, 2 Theſſ. ii. 7. Accordingly Babylon the Great had the prophetick character of corrupting the earth with her fornication, and by her ſorceries deceiving all nations, Rev. xix. 2. xviii. 23.

And ſo I doubt has Popery been carried into Heathen countries. "The Spaniards and Portugueſe (ſays a certain writer, letter from a gentleman in York, &c. 1688. 4to.) have acted ſo treacherouſly with the Africans, and the natives of both Indies, that the cruelty of the hiſtory would be incredible, if it were not related by their own hiſtorians. Their leagues and treaties (the moſt ſacred bands under Heaven)" ſays he, were ſoon neglected, and the ſpirit of their religion broke all before it. Indeed by thoſe writers of their own, who were eye-witneſſes in that country, a multitude of inſtances are given of the perfidious treachery of the Spaniards, towards the poor unguarded Indians; that they invited the chiefs of them on ſhipboard, and then ſetting ſail, carried them in tears and out-cries from their country, their wives and children: That they inveigled them to betray their mines and their hidden treaſures, and yet at laſt poured out their blood, when they could make no new diſcovery: That they gave them fair promiſes only to delude them into ſnares; and even made covenants and formal leagues to bind the ſavages, but not themſelves; with a great deal more of abominable falſhood in them. How many millions of theſe innocent creatures were murdered in cold blood, and for paſtime-ſake, with all the variety of torments that the Devil could inſpire into them? How ſoon were the vaſt regions of Mexico, New-Spain, Peru, Hiſpaniola, Braſil, &c. depopulated? Above twenty millions of the poor harmleſs inhabitants being put to death in full peace, &c. See Peter Martyr, Decad. vii. c. 2. page 250. Oh, how did this hinder the Goſpel of Chriſt in that Gentile world! How did thoſe poor ſouls hate, and upbraid, and mock thoſe deceitful creatures called Chriſtians! Some of thoſe taunts and revilings are told by thoſe that heard them, and grieved their hearts for them.

The Spaniſh biſhop of Chiapa writes thus upon his own experience. The Indians ſcarce know what it is to take away one another's goods: They live innocently by their neighbours, without offering them any violence or oppreſſion. And what thoughts muſt ſuch people as theſe have of thoſe that call themſelves Chriſtians, when they ſee them commit all manner of crimes and villanies; when they ſee them guilty of ſo much injuſtice and treachery; and in a word, of all the abominations of which men that are left of God, and have no principle of honour or conſcience, can be capable? This makes many Indians laugh at the God we worſhip, and perſiſt obſtinately in their infidelity. Nay, they believe the God of the Chriſtians to be the worſt of gods, becauſe his worſhippers are the worſt of men, &c.

IV. "Let no one ſo much as think of exerciſing force and cruelty, inſtead of the gentle perſuading and convincing of the unbelievers."

If an honeſt Pagan were to read over the Goſpel of Chriſt, and conſider with himſelf the whole tenour of it, in the precepts or examples of that maſter and his diſciples, he muſt judge it abſolutely impoſſible for Chriſtians to be perſecutors of one another, or of any of the reſt of mankind. And ſo indeed it is impoſſible, according to the Goſpel of Chriſt, the Goſpel of peace and love, in the ſpirit of meekneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering. Such was the ſpirit of the firſt Apoſtles, as a neceſſary qualification for them to go forth and teach all nations. For their religion it ſelf had died at Jeruſalem, if the preachers had gone out with any engines of force and violence to compel men to come into it. But they were content to go forth as their maſter ſent them, as ſheep among wolves, and innocent as doves. They were ambaſſadors of peace and glad tidings only; and as to thoſe who would not receive them, they were only to ſhake off the duſt from their feet, as a teſtimony againſt them. Paul put his converts from Gentiliſm in mind of his tenderneſs toward them. We were gentle among you, even as a nurſe nouriſheth her children, 1 Theſſ. ii. 7. And when he found it needful to exert ſomewhat of his ſpiritual authority, he ſets theſe bounds to it, that it was given him for edification, not for deſtruction, 2 Cor. x. 8. The ſpirit of perſecution was then only in the Jews and Heathens, and in the latter only upon a civil account, for fear of the publick peace and ſafety. For I know not, that any Pagans from the beginning of the world to this day, did ever perſecute their fellow Pagans, for differing from them in mere judgment and opinion, or in outward rites and ceremonies of worſhip. Not but that the Pagans might have had a better plea for the perſecution of each other, nay, a better pretence to perſecute the Chriſtians, than the Chriſtians could have to perſecute them, much leſs their own brethren; the one being guided only by the law of nature depraved, the other by the revelation of the perfect will of God. Sure I am, that Chriſtian perſecutions were utterly unknown, till in the degenerate and diſſolute ages of the Church. Indeed Babylon the mother of harlots, was at laſt to be drunken with the blood of the Saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jeſus; and even that to be wondered at (ſaith the Spirit) with great admiration, Revel. xvii. 6.

Thoſe ſtrange things have been fulfilled in theſe latter times. The horrible ways of converting the poor Indians, by the bigots of the Church of Rome, would draw tears, and make hearts to bleed, at the relation of them. The accounts are incredibly great, that the Romaniſts charge upon their own people in their firſt expeditions to that new world. Men hunted down like beaſts, and devoured by the dogs: Women and children maimed, and hanged, and burnt, in one and the ſame way of execution. Whole iſlands depopulated with the moſt various kinds of death. Cities and countries laid deſolate with fire and ſword. Such ravage and outrage committed by the invaders, as if they had reſolved to extirpate mankind from that part of the face of the earth. And in both the Indies, they ſtill keep up that office of hell, their holy inquiſition; that engine of ignorance and hypocriſy to thoſe that eſcape it, and of torture and deſtruction to thoſe that fall by it: That reproach of religion and human nature, which ſome of the Popiſh countries are aſhamed to admit of, and which will one day deſerve a confederacy of all Chriſtian Powers, to root out and aboliſh it for ever.

This relation is given by a Spaniſh biſhop ſettled in thoſe parts. When the Spaniards firſt landed in the iſles, there were above five hundred ſouls; they cut the throats of a great part of theſe, and carried away the reſt by force, to make them work in the mines of Hiſpaniola.—— As for the continent, 'tis certain, and what I my ſelf know to be true, that the Spaniards have ruined ten kingdoms there bigger than all Spain, by the commiſſion of all ſorts of barbarity and unheard of cruelties. They have driven away or killed all the inhabitants, ſo that all theſe kingdoms are deſolate to this day. —— We dare aſſert, without fear of incurring the reproach of exaggerating, that in the ſpace of theſe forty years, in which the Spaniards exerciſed their intolerable tyranny in this new world, they unjuſtly put to death above twelve millions of people, counting men, women and children. And it may be affirmed without injury to truth, upon a juſt calculation, that during this ſpace of time, above fifty millions have died in theſe countries. —— They valued them leſs, and treated them worſe than beaſts.—— They ripped up women with child, that root and branch may be deſtroyed together. They laid wagers one with another who ſhould cleave a man down with his ſword moſt dexterouſly at one blow. Or who ſhould run a man thro' after the moſt artificial manner. They tore away children out of their mothers arms, and daſhed out their brains againſt the rocks. Others they threw into the rivers; diverting themſelves with this brutiſh ſport, &c. They ſet up gibbets, and hanged up thirteen of thoſe poor creatures in honour to Jeſus Chriſt and his twelve Apoſtles, as they blaſphemouſly expreſſed themſelves; kindling a great fire under thoſe gibbets, to burn thoſe they had hanged upon them, &c.

CHAP. X.

1 The Sacraments of the Jews, 6 are types of ours, 7 and their puniſhments, 11 examples for us. 14 We muſt fly from idolatry. 21 We muſt not make the Lords table the table of devils: 24 And in things indifferent, we muſt have regard of our brethren.

MOreover, brethren, I would not that ye ſhould be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all paſſed through the ſea;

2 And were all baptized unto Moſes in the cloud, and in the ſea;

3 And did all eat the ſame ſpiritual meat;

4 And did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink: (For they drank of that ſpiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Chriſt.)

5 But with many of them God was not well pleaſed: for they were overthrown in the wilderneſs.

6 Now theſe things were our examples, to the intent we ſhould not luſt after evil things as they alſo luſted.

7 Neither be ye idolaters, as were ſome of them; as it is written, The people ſat down to eat and drink, and roſe up to play.

8 Neither let us commit fornication, as ſome of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thouſand.

9 Neither let us tempt Chriſt, as ſome of them alſo tempted, and were deſtroyed of ſerpents.

10 Neither murmur ye, as ſome of them alſo murmured, and were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer.

11 Now all theſe things happened unto them for enſamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come.

12 Wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall.

13 There hath no temptation taken you, but ſuch as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation alſo make a way to eſcape, that ye may be able to bear it.

14 Wherefore, my dearly beloved, flee from idolatry.

15 I ſpeak as to wiſe men: judge ye what I ſay.

16 The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, is it not the communion of the blood of Chriſt? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt?

17 For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread.

18 Behold Iſrael after the fleſh: are not they which eat of the ſacrifices, partakers of the altar?

19 What ſay I then? that the idol is any thing, or that which is offered in ſacrifice to idols is any thing?

20 But I ſay, that the things which the Gentiles ſacrifice, they ſacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye ſhould have fellowſhip with devils.

21 Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lords table, and of the table of devils.

22 Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſy? are we ſtronger than he?

23 All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.

24 Let no man ſeek his own: but every man anothers wealth.

25 Whatſoever is ſold in the ſhambles, that eat, asking no queſtion for conſcience ſake.

26 For the earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof.

27 If any of them that believe not, bid you to a feaſt, and ye be diſpoſed to go; whatſoever is ſet before you, eat, asking no queſtion for conſcience ſake.

28 But if any man ſay unto you, This is offered in ſacrifice unto idols, eat not, for his ſake that ſhewed it, and for conſcience ſake. For the earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof.

29 Conſcience, I ſay, not thine own, but of the others: for why is my liberty judged of another mans conſcience.

30 For if I by grace be a partaker, why am I evil ſpoken of for that for which I give thanks?

31 Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

32 Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God:

33 Even as I pleaſe all men in all things, not ſeeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be ſaved.

In this chapter the Apoſtle,

I. Shews, in the example of the Iſraelites, that Church privileges do not ſecure us from judgment, in caſe of ſin. Where he (1.) gives a recital of their privileges, ver. 1—4. (2.) of their puniſhment, ver. 5. And then (3.) aſſerts the uſe that we ſhould make thereof, viz. to ſhun the like ſins, which they were guilty of, ver. 6—10. amplified by the end and deſign of recording theſe examples, ver. 11. A general caution againſt ſeverity, ver. 12. And a conſolation againſt temptations, both paſt or preſent, and alſo future; and that in reſpect of the meaſure or degree, for they ſhall not exceed our ſtrength; and in reſpect of the time or continuance, which will not be over long, ver. 13.

II. Treats concerning things offered to idols,

(1.) In a religious way; concerning which he lays down (by way of inference from the foregoing diſcourſe) an admonition againſt joining with idolaters in their idolatrous feaſts, ver. 14. Which is amplified by an appeal to themſelves, ver. 15. and proved, that ſuch a practice is communicating with them in their idolatry, (1.) by a parallel inſtance in the Lord's Supper, ver. 16, 17. (2.) By a like caſe in the participation of the legal ſacrifices, ver. 18. Which he vindicates from an exception, that idols have nothing of Divinity in them, and therefore cannot alter the nature of God's creatures, (1.) propounded at ver. 19. and then (2.) anſwered, ver. 20. and further confirmed by other reaſons. (1.) Becauſe of the inconſiſtency of the worſhip of God and Devils, ver. 21. and (2.) becauſe of the danger thereof, ver. 22.

(2.) In a civil and private way; concerning which he lays down a general rule by which we muſt ſquare all our actions in matters of indifferency, viz. Expediency and edification, ver. 23, 24. and then he ſhews how or in what latitude the eating of ſuch things privately is lawful. (1.) In caſe they are bought in the ſhambles, ver. 25. amplified by the reaſon, ver. 26. (2.) At a private feaſt, ver. 27. (3.) He ſhews in what caſe it is not lawful to eat them, viz. in caſe of offence. (1.) Becauſe there are things enough beſides to eat, ver. 28. and (2.) becauſe hereby I ſhall expoſe my Chriſtian liberty to cenſure, ver. 29. (3.) Becauſe I my ſelf alſo ſhall be cenſured as a tranſgreſſor, ver. 30.

III. He concludes this whole ſubject with two excellent rules of general uſe throughout the whole courſe of our lives. (1.) The rule of piety; to do all to the glory of God, ver. 31. (2.) The rule of charity; to do nothing that may offend, ver. 32. enforced from his own example, ver. 33.

——— The ends of the world are come.] This means upon whom the age of the Meſſiah's kingdom is come. See Pezron's Antiquite du Temps.

Ver. 12. Wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall.] Thus the Apoſtle concludes, that we Chriſtians ſhould not value ourſelves ſo much upon our ſacraments and privileges, as upon our faith and practice. For, ſays he, the Iſraelites could boaſt of many and great privileges, but that was no ſecurity to bad livers, who forfeit their right when they break God's commandments. Thus the Jews fell, becauſe they thought it was impoſſible for them to fall.

Ver. 15. I ſpeak to wiſe men.] Or, men whom God hath bleſſed with good natural parts and a competent knowledge of ſenſible things.

Ver. 16. The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs.] Now, after the Apoſtle had declared that the Jewiſh ſacraments had been ſo many types of ours, which Chriſt ordained in his Church; and ſhewn that God had puniſhed thoſe that break or abuſed the uſe of them by luſting after evil things. He concludes with the application: Now all theſe things happened unto them, the Jews, for enſamples, and are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come: Wherefore my dearly beloved! Flee from idolatry, for there is but one God, by whom we live, move and have our being; have a right faith in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, who has redeemed us and reconciled us to the Father's juſtice, with the price of his own blood; and in a full aſſurance of the Divine Aſſiſtance, and an humble debacement of our own ſtrength, pray to God's Holy Spirit, that he will inſpire with holy and pious reſolutions to keep his commandments, and that he will not ſuffer you to be tempted above that ye are able. But he that lives contrary to theſe admonitions, that ſacrifices his heart to the Devil in fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh; that denies God in his Attributes or Perſonality; or breaks his commandments; he has no part with the children of light, but his fellowſhip is with the devils: For he cannot drink of the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils: He cannot be partaker of the Lord's table and of the table of devils: But the cup of bleſſing which we bleſs is the communion of the blood of Chriſt, and the bread which we break is the communion of the body of Chriſt. I ſpeak to wiſe men, judge ye what I ſay. Then follow theſe words, the cup of bleſſing, &c. which demands of me an explication or deſcription of the inſtitution of the Lord's Supper. Therefore let it be obſerved, that in deſcribing any thing there can be no better means to lead one to its real worth, than a right and juſt acquaintance with the character of the Author, and a knowledge of the end and manner of inſtitution. Now,

Paul preſently informs us of the Author of this Sacrament. The Lord Jeſus, ſays he, the ſame night that he was betrayed took bread; 1 Cor. xi. 23. For,

The deſign, hear alſo what Paul ſaith: This is a true ſaying and worthy of all men to be received, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners; which compared with the words of inſtitution, and the manner thereof, we ſhall be more than convinced, that the deſign or end of this ſacrament is, that as many as partake thereof, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. For,

The manner by which Chriſt inſtituted this ſacrament, was by ſuch ſymbols and ceremonies, as plainly beſpoke his intentions thereby, to free us from ſome grievous affliction and bondage; for, he exactly accommodated all the notions and ideas of the ancient Paſſover-ceremonies, that were retained in memory of the deliverance of the children of Iſrael from the Egyptian ſervitude, to this new inſtitution. For,

As in that paſchal ſupper the maſter of the houſe took bread and brake it, and inſtead of the uſual benediction of the bread, he preſented it before them, and gave it to them, ſaying, This is the bread of affliction, which our fathers ate in Egypt, Hammond on Matt. 26. lit. E. Caſaubon. in Matt. xxvi. 16, &c. In like manner in the Sacred Banquet of the Lord's Supper, our Bleſſed Saviour takes bread, the very loaf, according to the Jewiſh cuſtom, breaks it and gives it to his diſciples, ſaying, This is my body which is broken for you. Calling the bread his body, in the ſame phraſe of ſpeech, by which the Jews always called the Paſſover: The body of the Paſchal lamb, Buxtorf. vindic. a Capel. p. 14. Hammond ut ſupra.

After he had diſtributed the bread, the maſter of the houſe took the cup, and giving thanks, gave it to the reſt of the family, ſaying, This is the fruit of the vine, and the blood of the grape: An expreſſion taken from the words of Moſes, when he ratified the ancient covenant between God and the Jews, ſaying, This is the blood of the teſtament, Exod. xxiv. 8. compared to Heb. ix. 20.

In like manner Jeſus Chriſt the Bleſſed, in the inſtitution of this Holy Sacrament, which was to be the ſeal of an eternal covenant between God and all men, was careful, even to a ſcruple, not to be miſtaken in his action or expreſſion, to intend what he did not ſpeak: Therefore He took the cup, bleſſed it, and gave it to his diſciples, ſaying, This cup is the New Teſtament in my blood.

The next act, was the ſinging of an hymn or pſalm. Our Saviour and his diſciples are expreſly ſaid to have done the like, Dr. Lightfoot's obſervations on Matt. xxvi. 26. tom. 2. p. 258, 260.

The Jews were commanded to keep the ancient Paſſover, in memory of their deliverance out of Egypt. The bitter herbs with which it was dreſſed, were a remembrance of the bitter ſervitude they underwent in that bondage. Their wine was red, as a memorial of the blood of the children of Iſrael ſlain by Pharaoh: For ſo they were commanded to do by Moſes, ſaying, Thou ſhalt ſhew thy children by theſe tokens what the Lord hath done for them, Exod. xiii. 8. So when Chriſt inſtituted the Bleſſed Euchariſt, he plainly ſhews he intended it ſhould be for a memorial of that great deliverance which he has wrought for us, in freeing us from the ſlavery of ſin and the Devil, with the loſs and price of his own life and precious blood: Therefore, ſays he, Do this in remembrance of me: For, Paul explains it, as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do ſhew the Lord's death by his coming, 1 Cor. xi. 26.

So clear an alluſion of this inſtitution to the ancient Jewiſh Paſſover, will prove us blinder than the obſtinate Jews, if we deny the analogy, and do not readily conclude that the Euchariſtical ſacrifice has only heightned the deſign, and changed the application of the Paſchal Supper to a more excellent remembrance. To this, if we ſhould add the tradition of the Jewiſh nation, who expected the Meſſiah ſhould come and work out their deliverance, the very ſame night in which God had brought them out of Egypt, the night of the Paſchal Solemnity, if there be any credit to be given to their traditions, will ſtill further add weight to our analogy. But we have no need of traditional proof; we have a more ſure word of Prophecy. The Scripture tells us plainly, that Chriſt was the Lamb of God, a Lamb without blemiſh, and our Paſſover.

Therefore, it is obvious to collect, that Chriſt Jeſus inſtituted the Sacrament of the Euchariſt for a memorial of him, their Bleſſed Lord and Saviour, and of that deliverance he was about to work for them. This clearly appears from the premiſes, and was ſo underſtood by his incredulous diſciples; for though we find they doubted, and demanded his explication of all his parabolical, and of ſome literal expreſſions, inſtantly acquieſced in their knowledge of this inſtitution, ſo analogical to their legal Paſſover.

And as this was the end of the inſtitution; as the nature of this Sacrament is to make us many members one body in Chriſt our head; ſo neither was the time of its inſtitution choſe without its proper ſignification: For,

Chriſt inſtituted this Sacrament in that very night in which he was betrayed: To ſhew that he delighteth not in the death of a ſinner; for, if he had been extreme in making inquiſition for blood, he would never have prepared himſelf for his own perſecution, by preparing a remedy for the ſin of his perſecutors. If he had not ſtrictly practiſed that more than angelical doctrine of doing good to them that hate us; he, about to be betrayed, would never have provided a remedy that ſinners might not die ſuch, if they deſired to repent; and whereby offenders might be reſtored to life and happineſs, if they would not wilfully reject it. For, pardon and deliverance, and freedom from everlaſting death, is offered, tendered, conveyed, and ſealed in this Sacrament to every converted ſinner.

Bread had always been a ſtanding type to the Jews of the Meſſiah; for he muſt be very narrowly verſed in that hiſtory, that knows not that God commanded Moſes to ſet upon the table [of the Temple] ſhew bread before him always; to ſhew that Chriſt was to be the great Mediator, who ſhould always be in the preſence of God, and intercede for us with him face to face. Therefore it is reaſonable to think Chriſt made uſe of bread to confirm that type, and to inform us that this rite of the law reſolved into him, who was the end of all the Law and the Prophecies. But,

If we review the doctrine of our Bleſſed Saviour, who, in word and deed, recommended and commanded his diſciples to love one another; we cannot forbear thinking but he, at this inſtitution, had regard to an old proverb among the Jews, and ſome ancient Heathens, the Pythagoneans; take heed of breaking the loaf; uſing bread or the loaf, as a ſymbol of friendſhip, becauſe many corns are compacted into one loaf, and do perfectly agree: Therefore Chriſt made uſe of bread, not only to tell us, that by eating of this bread we are made the friends of Chriſt, but to hint to us how we, that call our ſelves Chriſtians, ſhould love one another. And, 3dly, As he had publickly ſaid, I am the living bread which came down from Heaven, if any man eat of this bread, he ſhall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world, John vi. 51. So now he inſtitutes the element bread a Sacrament of his Church, whereby we ſhould always be put in remembrance, that he has left us reaſonable means of conviction for the ſaving of our ſouls: For, as in the foregoing Scripture, ſo by this bread in the Sacrament, we are inſtructed to approach unto God by the doctrine of his Son, whoſe privilege it is, intimately to know his mind, without the mediation of any other perſon, John vi. 46. And therefore, ſaid Jeſus to the Jews, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, he that believeth on me hath everlaſting life, ver. 47. So that nothing is wanting to ſecure our Salvation, but our own concurrence and readineſs to eat this heavenly food; nothing, but that we would think who it is that God hath ſent to ſave us, and of what great concern to our ſouls that meſſage is, which he brought from Heaven; namely, that Chriſt the Son of God came into the world to lay down his life for the ſalvation of mankind. This is what we are to learn from the element of bread; the next thing to be conſidered is, the element of wine.

Our Bleſſed Saviour intended our comfort and inſtruction in this, as well as I have ſhewed he did in the other element.

For, as wine, ſays the Pſalmiſt, is to give a man a cheerful countenance, and to make glad his heart, civ. 15. So ſurely our dying Saviour, ſeeing his diſciples ſorrowful and dejected at the news of his approaching death, ſignified by that cup of wine, that he exhorted them to be of good courage, and to let us, as well as them, ſee what joy our ſouls are to expreſs at the remembrance of God's compaſſion and charity, who of an enemy to God and hated by Heaven, the ſcum of Angels and ſport of Devils, condemned, by a guilty conſcience, and in a worſe condition than the beaſts that periſh, has made us by the mediation and the death of his own ſon, his ſervants, his friends, and his adopted children; has reſcued us from the hands of hell, and exalted us to a degree of glory above his Angels. And therefore, he immediately ſaid to his diſciples; I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until the day that I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom, Matt. xxvi. 29. Meaning the actual enjoyment of ſuch delights, ſuch ſpiritual raptures and extaſies, ſuch joys, which eye hath not ſeen, and ear hath not heard, and heart cannot conceive.

To this we may add, that wine is an emblem of wiſdom. It was long before our Bleſſed Saviour's appearance in the fleſh, that the Spirit of Wiſdom cried out to the ſleepy world; Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine that I have mingled, Prov. ix. 5. So that the ſoul muſt be entirely forſaken that cannot collect from the like expreſſion, —— Drink ye all of this wine, that Chriſt calls upon us to abandon the ſlavery of a miſ-ſpent life, and for remiſſion of our ſins, to throw ourſelves into his bleeding arms, which offer pardon and forgiveneſs to as many as ſeriouſly repent and turn unto him. In which reflection I am further aſſiſted by meditating upon the briskneſs and ſpirit that is in wine, and its healing and cleanſing qualifications: For, by this, we are taught, that we muſt not put off our converſion from day to day, much leſs to old age, or a ſick bed, when weakneſs or diſtemper diſables our faculties, and we are no longer able to act with vigour and reſolution.

CHAP. XI.

1 He reproveth them, becauſe in holy aſſemblies, 4 their men prayed with their heads covered, and 6 women with their heads uncovered, 17 and becauſe generally their meetings were not for the better, but for the worſe, as 21 namely in prophaning with their own feaſts the Lord's Supper. 23 Laſtly, he calleth them to the firſt inſtitution thereof.

BE ye followers of me, even as I alſo am of Chriſt.

2 Now I praiſe you, brethren, that you remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you.

3 But I would have you know, that the head of every man is Chriſt; and the head of the woman, is the man; and the head of Chriſt, is God.

4 Every man praying or propheſying, having his head covered, diſhonoureth his head.

5 But every woman that prayeth, or propheſieth with her head uncovered, diſhonoureth her head: for that is even all one as if ſhe were ſhaven.

6 For if the woman be not covered, let her alſo be ſhorn: but if it be a ſhame for a woman to be ſhorn or ſhaven, let her be covered.

7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, for as much as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.

8 For the man is not of the woman: but the woman of the man.

9 Neither was the man created for the woman: but the woman for the man.

10 For this cauſe ought the woman to have power on her head, becauſe of the angels.

11 Nevertheleſs, neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man in the Lord.

12 For as the woman is of the man, even ſo is the man alſo by the woman: but all things of God.

13 Judge in your ſelves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?

14 Doth not even nature it ſelf teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a covering.

16 But if any man ſeem to be contentious, we have no ſuch cuſtom, neither the churches of God.

17 Now in this that I declare unto you, I praiſe you not, that you come together, not for the better, but for the worſe.

18 For firſt of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be diviſions among you; and I partly believe it.

19 For there muſt be alſo hereſies among you, that they which are approved, may be made manifeſt among you.

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eat the Lords ſupper.

21 For in eating every one taketh before other, his own ſupper: and one is hungry, and another is drunken.

22 What, have ye not houſes to eat and to drink in? or deſpiſe ye the church of God, and ſhame them that have not? What ſhall I ſay to you? ſhall I praiſe you in this? I praiſe you not.

23 For I have received of the Lord, that which alſo I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jeſus, the ſame night in which he was betrayed, took bread:

24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and ſaid, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me.

25 After the ſame manner alſo he took the cup, when he had ſupped, ſaying, This cup is the new teſtament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.

26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do ſhew the Lords death till he come.

27 Wherefore, whoſoever ſhall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

28 But let a man examine himſelf, and ſo let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lords body.

30 For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep.

31 For if we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged.

32 But when we are judged, we are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world.

33 Wherefore my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another.

34 And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto condemnation. And the reſt will I ſet in order when I come.

In this chapter the Apoſtle treats of two things,

Firſt, Of the decent habit of men and women in their publick aſſemblies, which general takes up all the former part of the chapter to the 17th verſe.

Secondly, Of the right adminiſtration of the Lord's Supper; which concludes the whole chapter.

Under the firſt head he reproves the Corinthians, becauſe the men among them covered their heads, and the women uncovered theirs, when they prayed or propheſied. But before he comes directly to the reproof, he premiſeth and ſettleth the grand order or conſtitution which is appointed by God, viz. That

Ver. 3. The head of every man is Chriſt, and the head of the woman is the man, and the head of Chriſt is God.] That is, Chriſt, as he is Mediator, is ſubordinate to God the Father; and man is next in dignity to Chriſt, and the woman to the man. Chriſt Jeſus is the head, to whom the man is immediately ſubject, and ought to be governed by, and though Chriſt be the head of the woman alſo; yet it is with the interpoſition or mediation of man, who is as it were her ſubordinate head, viro mediante veluti capite ſubordinato, ſays the learned Eſtius, in loc. And this is the true ſeries of the man's ſuperiority over the woman, which Paul layeth as the foundation of his reproof in this chapter. Chriſt is ſubject to his Father, as he is man, and as he is the miniſter of man's redemption: The man is ſubject to Chriſt, and the woman to the man. Upon this foundation he raiſes this ſuperſtructure afterwards, that a man ought to uncover his head, and a woman to cover hers in the congregation, that the former may not diſhonour Chriſt, nor the latter her husband; for by one, the man ſhews his freedom and dominion, by the other, the woman teſtifies her ſubjection. And here the Apoſtle lays open the diſorder and faultineſs of the Chriſtian Corinthians as to this particular. He complains that that Divine Order before-mentioned was not ſtrictly obſerved by them: For, whereas the woman ought to be ſubordinate to the man as her head and governor, they uſed a cuſtom which was contrary to it. It was this, the women among them after the Heatheniſh way laid aſide their veils in publick and religious aſſemblies, and appeared with their naked heads: And the men took the womens veils, and covered their heads and faces with them. The unfitneſs and unreaſonableneſs of which practiſe (beſides that it was a Pagan uſage, eſpecially among the prieſts and prieſteſſes) the Apoſtle declares in the following words:

Ver. 4. Every man praying or propheſying with his head covered diſhonours his head.] i. e. He diſhonours Chriſt. He acknowledgeth by this covering that Chriſt is ſet by God over him as chief governor, that he is not ſupreme on earth: And conſequently he detracts from his own true worth and eminency, and diſgraces his ſex, as if not Chriſt but ſome other were his head. To be uncovered is a ſign of his ſuperiority, but a covering on the head is a token of ſubjection: Therefore, it is againſt the dignity of his ſex and of Chriſt likewiſe, whom he ſhould repreſent, as a man thus to be covered. And as for the other ſex.

Ver. 5. Every woman that prayeth or propheſieth with her head uncovered diſhonoureth her head.] i. e. Her huſband, or her own head by ſhewing it openly naked. The meaning is, ſhe doth that which is contrary to Divine Order and natural modeſty, for by putting on her veil ſhe ought to acknowledge her inferiority and ſubjection to her huſband; but ſhe throwing that aſide acts in oppoſition to it, and at the ſame time ſhe appears in an immodeſt guiſe in the place of ſolemn worſhip. It follows in the ſame verſe, For that (i. e. having her head uncovered) is even all one as if ſhe were ſhaven, which is moſt undecent and ſhameful. Baldneſs or ſhaving is unnatural, and therefore hateful in a woman, for ſhe ſhould rather nouriſh her hair; of which afterwards. This may give ſome light to that in Deut. xxi. 11, 12. When thou ſeeſt among the captives a beautiful woman, and haſt a deſire to her, that thou wouldſt have her to thy wife, then thou ſhalt bring her home to thy houſe, and ſhe ſhall ſhave her head, and pare her nails, or rather, according to the Hebrew, make her nails, and let them grow. The deſign is to make the captive maid deformed, that the perſon who was taken with her, might have the heat of his affection abated towards her. In order to this, ſhe muſt not only let her nails grow, but ſhave her head, which is a ſhame and deformity, contrary to the κομᾶν, the comely adorning of the head. And it is added, ver. 13. She ſhall put off the raiment of her captivity, i. e. The handſome attire ſhe was in when ſhe was taken captive, and ſhe muſt put on mournful ſordid apparel a full month, as you read in the next words. All which ſheweth that ſhe was to be kept up in the man's houſe (who took her in war) in a neglectful, yea, deformed condition, and that ſhaving her head was part of that deformity: And conſequently, that this is uncomely and diſgraceful, yea, loathſome and unſufferable in that ſex. Therefore our Apoſtle ſubjoins,

Ver. 6. — If the woman be not covered, let her alſo be ſhorn, &c.] i. e. For her to be without a veil, without a covering on her head, is no leſs unſeemly, yea, deteſtable, than if ſhe were ſhorn; ſhe may as well be without any hair at all. But (as he goes on in the ſame verſe) if it be a ſhame to be ſhorn or ſhaven, (as moſt certain it is, ſeeing the having of long hair is her glory, as you read afterwards) let her be covered. Thus much for the woman. As for the man, he ought not to cover his head.

Ver. 7. — For as much as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.] Which is another argument to prove the aforeſaid order or conſtitution, viz. that man is more immediately and properly the image of God, the repreſentation of the Divine Excellency, and therefore muſt be uncovered. In compariſon of the woman he is the glory of God, and that primarily, but the woman is but the image and glory of the man. Again, the Apoſtle argues from the original of man.

Ver. 8. For the man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man.] i. e. Man hath this prerogative to be immediately from God, but the woman was from man. He argues next from the end as well as the origin of man.

Ver. 9. Neither was the man created for the woman, but the woman for the man.] As much as to ſay, the woman was made to be a meet help, to be adminiſtring and ſubſervient to man; conſequently, ſhe is not ſuperior to him, but ſhe is to behave herſelf ſubmiſſively, and therefore to cover her head, which is a ſign of that ſubmiſſion. The Apoſtle pleads for this behaviour as due alſo in reſpect of the Angels, as it follows in the next verſe.

Ver. 10. For this cauſe the woman ought to have power on her head, becauſe of the Angels.] i. e. To have her head covered, leaſt ſhe ſhould give offence to the miniſters and overſeers of the Church, who are ſometimes called Angels in Holy Writ. But although this was the rate of Paul's Divinity, yet in the two next verſes he doth a little moderate his diſcourſe, and qualify what he had ſaid in the 8th and 9th verſes, to which this ought to be annexed. Becauſe he might ſeem to have been ſomewhat too harſh to the women, he prudently and cautiouſly mitigates and tempers his former argument here, that it may not redound to the diſparagement of the ſex.

Ver. 11, 12. Neverthel eſs, ſaith he, neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man in the Lord. For as the woman is of the man, even ſo is the man alſo by the woman: but all things of God.] Having thus ſalved his harſh doctrine, he proceeds to a new topick, namely, the natural congruity and decency of the thing itſelf which he had been urging. And here he appeals to themſelves, and their own judgment concerning the matter he is ſpeaking of, and reproving them for, viz. Mens praying with their heads covered, and women with theirs uncovered.

Ver. 13. Judge in your ſelves, (ſaith he) Is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?] It is ſo reaſonable a thing which I ſpeak of, and now require of you, that I ſubmit it to the natural ſentiments and deciſion of your own minds. And there it follows,

Ver. 14, 15. Doth not nature it ſelf teach you, that if a man hath long hair, it is a ſhame to him? But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her.] Expoſitors have exceedingly varied in their endeavours to join theſe words with the former: Many things very much ſtrained and miſapplied are ſaid by them; but upon a deliberate view of the whole, I take this to be the true and natural coherence of the words. They are brought in here by the Apoſtle, as a reaſon of the precept he gave them, viz. That women muſt be veiled or covered, and men uncovered when they pray. To perſuade and convince them of the reaſonableneſs of this command he appeals to nature, and tells them that this teacheth them that very thing which he enjoins them; and this diſalloweth of that which he forbids them. As if he had ſaid, "your ſelves may in your own minds and conſciences judge of the decency of mens uncovering their heads when they pray, and of the contrary indecency of this practice in women. I have ſhewed you that theſe are founded on the appointment of Heaven, the order of our Univerſal Governor, the principles of nature, the law of reaſon, and the diſtinction which ought to be between the ſexes. This is no infrequent thing that your duty is commended to you, even by the dictates of your reaſonable nature. Several things which may be urged upon you are of this ſort, the very natural light which you are indued with, ſuggeſts the obſervance of them. As now, becauſe I am ſpeaking of covering or uncovering the head, I will inſtance in a thing which is nearly related to it, viz. the manner of wearing the hair of the head, What is commendable in men, and what in women as to this matter? Here the very light of nature ſhines upon you, and directs you what to do. If you will conſult yourſelves, and the natural ſuggeſtions of your minds, you ſhall plainly diſcover what is your duty. Even nature it ſelf teacheth you, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame to him: but if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her."

But all perſons that have commented and treated on theſe words do not ſo eaſily agree about the meaning of them: Yea, there is a very great diſagreement among them. And the reaſon is, becauſe they give different ſenſes of theſe two principal words, [nature] and that other which we tranſlate [to have long hair.] The only difficulty, therefore, lying in theſe two words, I will enquire 1. What is meant by nature.

2. What is meant by having long hair, or rather, what the Greek word, which is here ſo rendred, truly ſignifies.

Firſt, Let us enquire what is meant by nature.

Nature ſometimes ſignifies the natural and inbred corruption of mankind. Thus we are ſaid to be by nature the children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3. i. e. by our common degeneracy and apoſtacy in Adam we are liable to the wrath of God. And ſo generally in the Fathers and Eccleſiaſtical Writers the word is taken, it denotes the corrupt nature of man, the original depravation of the ſons of men. But ſeeing the Apoſtle here ſpeaks of ſomething which is good and laudable that nature teacheth, thence we may infer that this is not, and cannot be the meaning of the word in this place. There are three other ſignifications of it, and one or more of them muſt undeniably be underſtood here.

Firſt, It is taken for the law of nature in general, natural light or knowledge, the inward dictates of reaſon in a man's breaſt. Thus the Gentiles do by nature the things contain'd in the law, Rom. ii. 14. i. e. they have a rational principle in them which prompts them to do thoſe things. This hath its name both in Greek and Latin from its being born with a man, it is the innate and congenite property of the rational ſoul of man; Φύσις, ἀπὸ τοῦ φύεσθαι: Natura a naſcendo. And becauſe God is the God of nature, and it is he that hath planted in our minds reaſons of good and evil, therefore this becomes a Divine Law, and is ſet up in mens hearts as ſuch. What is dictated by right reaſon or the law of nature, may be ſaid to be dictated by God himſelf. Therefore Chryſoſtom on this place ſaith, that when nature is ſaid to teach us, the Apoſtle doth as good as ſay, God teacheth; for it is he that hath contrived and framed nature, Homil. in 1 Cor. 11.

Secondly, It is taken for that particular law or dictate of nature which teacheth a difference of ſexes: as in Rom. i. 26, 27. Their women did change their natural uſe into that which is againſt nature: likewiſe the men left the natural uſe of the women. Here it is evident that φύσις, and φυσικὴ Χρῆσις, and παρὰ φυσιν ſignify the diſcrimination of the ſex, and what is ſuitable or diſagreeable to this diſcrimination. Nature here muſt needs ſignify the diſtinction of ſex, i. e. the particular law of nature concerning that diſtinction, and not the law of nature in general; for though other ſins, as fornication and adultery, are againſt the laws of nature and reaſon, as well as this, yet this is againſt the law of the ſex, and the diſtinction of man and woman, which is a particular and individual law of nature, and wholly different from thoſe others. You will alſo find this to be the ſignification of the word φύσις in Lexicons and Gloſſaries from very good authors, as Thucydides, Joſephus, Philo, &c. Salmaſius proves φύσις to be ſexus: And anſwerably to this meaning of the word παρὰ φύσιν and κατὰ φύσιν are underſtood in Diodorus Siculus, Joſephus and others.

Thirdly, The word φύσις may be rendered cuſtom: And this unqueſtionably is ſometimes the meaning of the word in good Greek authors. The verb πέφυκε is as much as ſolet, and thence the verbal noun φύσις, which is derived thence, ſignifies cuſtom. But this is not the proper and genuine ſignification, but is only a derivative ſenſe, becauſe what is natural is uſual and common; and again, what we uſe our ſelves to, doth as it were become natural to us; thence cuſtom is ſaid to be a ſecond nature, yea, a long and inveterate cuſtom is ſtronger than nature it ſelf. So that according to this three-fold acception of the word, there is a three-fold opinion concerning the meaning of the text.

1. Some hold that it is a law of natural reaſon that a man ſhould not have long hair, i. e. ſuch hair as women have. So Vorſtius and Poimenander (two Belgick Divines) underſtand the words, and their countryman Grotius is not wholly averſe to it, for he is willing to grant that it is a cuſtom founded on natural dictates. Doth not nature it ſelf teach you, that, &c. i. e. Doth not the inbred and natural light in your minds dictate this to you?

2. Others ſay, the text ſpeaks of that particular law of nature which teacheth there muſt be a difference between ſexes. So Salmaſius and Revius interpret the place. Doth not nature it ſelf teach you, that, &c. i. e. the ſex, the difference of ſex, the diſtinction of man and woman teacheth you this, it being the law of nature to put difference between man and woman, as to clothes, and wearing the hair.

3. Some hold that it is cuſtom only which teacheth this. Thus Calvin, Grotius, and Hammond underſtand the words: But it is not well agreed among them whether it was a particular or a general cuſtom, whether it was a cuſtom among all nations, or ſome only. Thus far we have conſidered the firſt principal word in this text.

The other word κομᾶν, which is rendred here, to have long hair, is variouſly taken alſo: But it ſignifies either barely to nouriſh the hair, and let it grow at length, or to bind it up in a neat manner, to dreſs, trim and adorn it. Theſe are the two noted ſignifications of this Greek word. Accordingly I will conſider the Apoſtles words,

1. As they may be meant of long hair:

2. As they may be underſtood of hair that is tied up, trimmed and adorned.

Firſt, taking κομᾶν, for having long hair, let us enquire in the

Firſt place, whether cuſtom teacheth us, that we ought not to wear ſuch hair;

Secondly, let us ſee whether natural reaſon teacheth this: And

Thirdly, What the diſtinction of ſexes dictates in this caſe.

I. If cuſtom be meant by φύσις here, let us examine what cuſtom there is for long hair, and that firſt among the Jews, ſecondly among the Gentiles. Firſt, What was the cuſtom of the Jews? Among them, the Divine Law forbad the prieſts to ſhave either head or beard, Lev. xxi. 5. But though they were not to do this, yet they were not to wear their hair long, but a middle way was preſcribed them, that is, a moderate cutting of the hair, as we read in Ezek. xliv. 20. They ſhall not ſhave their heads, nor ſuffer their locks to grow long, they ſhall only poll their heads. Neither baldneſs nor too long hair were to be uſed, both theſe extremes were to be ſhunned in oppoſition to the Heathens (as you ſhall hear afterwards) who ſometimes cut off all their hair, at other times let it grow neglected and long. But a decency and moderation are here enjoined the prieſts, and they were to be examples to the people. And it is likely, the people did follow this pattern at firſt, and wore their hair of a moderate length, although in this, as well as in other things, they afterwards ſwerved from the rule, and were diſpenſed with becauſe of the hardneſs of their hearts. Thus ſome of the Jewiſh people had very long hair, and the pictures which we have of them repreſent them oftentimes ſo. But from the beginning it was not ſo, for it is probable that the ſame law obliged the people and prieſts, i. e. that they ſhould neither ſhave their heads, nor wear their hair long. But it will be asked, Where is this prohibition? I anſwer, one part of it is expreſly ſet down, and the other is implied. All perſons among them were forbid to ſhave, or cut cloſe their hair, Lev. xix. 27. Ye ſhall not round the corners of your heads, neither ſhalt thou mar the corners of thy beard. They are forbid here the circular cut of their hair, i. e. to cut the hair of their heads or beards after the ſuperſtitious manner of the Pagans, who uſed, (as ſeveral learned writers, Bonfrerius, Bochart, Grotius, Heinſius, inform us) to round the hair of their heads, that is, to cut it off all on the ſides, and to leave only a lock behind, or a tuft at top, which they devoted to ſome god or goddeſs. So then this baldneſs or tonſure at funerals, and other ſad occaſions, was not unlawful among the Jews, only ſo far as it was ſuperſtitious, and in imitation of the idolatrous Gentiles. Therefore that law in Leviticus chiefly reſpects the idolatrous cuſtom of throwing their hair into the ſepulchres of the dead, and devoting them to the departed ſouls, and ſuch like practices among the Pagans. But now from this particular cuſtom of cutting off their hair, or ſhaving in caſe of great mourning, we may gather that at other times they did not cut ſo cloſe; for it is clear that if they did, they would have left nothing to cut when the mourning-time came. It is reaſonable therefore to conclude, that they generally wore their hair of a moderate dimenſion; and as they cut not cloſe, or in that ſpherical way before ſpoken of, ſo they ran not into the other extreme, viz. of indulging un-cut and long hair. And this is as evident as the other, for the practice of the Nazarites is a demonſtration of it. Theſe were a peculiar ſort of devotioniſts among the Jews who ſuffered their hair to grow, and wore it long, and put it in fillets, or knots and locks, as the women then did. Samſon was ſuch a Nazarite; A razor ſhall not come upon his head, ſaith the Angel to Manoah's wife. Some diſtinguiſh between perpetual and temporary Nazarites: Among the former, they reckon this Samſon, Samuel, and John the Baptiſt, among the latter Abſalom, (who cut his hair the thirtieth day of his vow) and Paul, who had made a vow not to ſhave for a time; but this being expired, he cut his hair after a ſolemn manner, as was the cuſtom, and is expreſſed in Acts xviii. 18. Having ſhorn his head in Cenchrea, for he had a vow. (Though it is thought by ſome that this refers to Aquila, juſt before-mentioned, and not to Paul) And ſuch were the Nazarites, ſpoken of in Acts xxi. 23, 24. Yea, Dr. Lightfoot, Horæ Hæbraicæ, is of opinion, that theſe Corinthians, ſome of them at leaſt, in a ſuperſtitious humour affected Nazaritiſm, and that this was the occaſion of the Apoſtle's reproving them for their long hair. But though it be the received opinion, that there were ſome perpetual, and others temporary Nazarites, yet I am not ſatisfied about it; I rather think that they were all left to their liberty to vow as they pleaſed, and that ſome obſerved the vow a longer, and others a ſhorter time. He that peruſeth Numb. vi. will be perſuaded to think ſo, eſpecially if he well weigh the 17th and 18th verſes. Thence it will appear, that it is a miſtake that ſome Nazarites never cut their hair: All Nazarites might, after a ſet ſeaſon, diſpoſe of their hair. But that which I infer from the premiſes, is this, that the law of Nazaritiſm concerning long and un-cut hair (though but for a time) proves that the wearing of long hair was not the common uſage of the Jewiſh people. If it was peculiar to few, and that by vow, then it was not the practice of the general body of the nation. The Nazarites abſtained from cutting their hair: Therefore others, (who were not obliged by the law of Nazaritiſm) did cut their hair, and ſuffered it not to grow long. Nazarites, by vow, wore long hair; therefore thoſe who were not tied by that vow, (as the generality of the Jewiſh people) took up another uſage. Long hair was a thing unuſual and extraordinary in thoſe religious and ſeparate perſons: Therefore it was the uſual cuſtom not to have long hair. Theſe I take to be very rational inferences, This was the firſt thing to be enquired after. And here there is ſomething more to be ſeen and gathered than among other people of the world, becauſe, beſides the law of nature, they had the law of God to direct them in this, as well as in other things.

In the ſecond place, let us ſee the practice of the Gentiles. The Arabians, among whom Job lived, uſed to ſhave their heads in time of mouring and lamentation, as you may gather from his practiſe, Job i. 20. And this was ſo notorious, that Herodotus, in Thalia, teſtifies of them that they were clipped as Apollo was, in a round figure, they cut off all the angles about their temples. Theſe are thought by ſome to be the præciſi angulo, thoſe that are cut off in the corners, in Jer. ix. 26. and xxv. 23. i. e. thoſe that cut their hair round, and left no corners, viz. when they had a ſolemn occaſion of lamenting. From Arabia, if you paſs into Egypt, you may gather from their cuſtom of letting their hair grow long in time of calamity and ſorrow, that they did not nouriſh long hair at other times. Thus Herodotus, lib. ii. c. 36. acquaints us, that the Egyptians (contrary to the Jews) in the days of mourning let their hair grow long on their heads. The truth of which is confirmed to us by the Sacred Records, which tell us that Joſeph cut his hair when he was releaſed from priſon, and was to go into king Pharaoh's preſence, Gen. xli. 14. Short or moderately-grown hair was thought by the Grecians to be beſt, and accordingly they uſed themſelves to it: The Lacedemonians eſpecially were noted for this, though they altered their cuſtom by degrees, and, for ſeveral pretended reaſons, they degenerated into the cuſtom of long hair.

The practiſe of the Romans is next to be enquired into. They did ſometimes, as the Grecians, expreſs their grief by cutting off their hair: eſpecially in time of danger they did this. In a ſtorm at ſea, when they were afraid of ſhipwreck, they ſhaved their heads, as appears from that of Juvenal,

> Tuti ſtagna ſinus gaudent ibi vertice raſo,
> Garrula ſecuri narrare pericula nautæ.

Petronius Arbiter and others confirm this uſage, and perhaps this is the meaning of Paul's words, Acts xxvii. 34. There ſhall not a hair fall from the head of any of you, i. e. The tempeſt at ſea ſhall not be ſo great and dangerous that you ſhall have occaſion to ſhave your heads, as the cuſtom is in ſuch caſes. But this is certain, that the Romans were not ignorant that hair was given by nature for a covering and ornament to mankind, and conſequently they looked upon the being deprived of it as a penal and ſhameful thing. Accordingly ſhaving the head was the badge of a vile light fellow, as Cicero ſaith with a quibble, Idcirco capite & ſuperciliis ſemper eſt raſus, ne unum pilum boni viri habere dicatur. Thus he ſpeaks of a trifling fellow, who had cut him cloſe, and left no hair at all. And that the hair was wont to be cut off in mockery and diſgrace, is evident from what Domitian did to Apollonius Tyanæus: after he had clapt him up in priſon (ſaith Philoſtratus, In vita Apollon. l. 7.) he ſent a barber to cut off his philoſophict beard. Hence it is that Lucian brings in a philoſopher in one of his dialogues, and Charon cutting off his beard. The damnati ad metella, ſaith Cyprian, Epiſt. 77. were ſerved thus, and Tacitus and others tell us, that it was the cuſtom of the Romans to ſhave the heads of their ſervants. Criminals and malefactors had their head ſhorn ſometimes: and at other times they were not permitted to cut their hair. And ſo it was with their ſlaves, among ſome of the Romans, ſhaving was a token of ſlavery, but among others of liberty. Yet moſt commonly the former prevailed, but eſpecially among the Romans, who looked on hair as a great decency and ornament. But when knowledge and manners were cultivated, they lopt their locks. The pictures of the very emperors (even the moſt effeminate of them) preſent them not immoderate as to the hair of their heads. But as for beards, they wore none; Adrian was the firſt, who let his grow, viz. to cover his ſcars. And as for the body of the Roman people, hiſtory teſtifies that theſe (as well as the Grecians) let their children, till they came to be of years, nouriſh their hair to ſome conſiderable length: and then it was the faſhion to offer it to ſome of the deities they moſt affected. When this was done, they, for the moſt part, cut their hair as often as it began to come to an immoderate length, and would not ſuffer it to grow to any extravagant dimenſions

Thus you ſee what was the cuſtom as to mens wearing their hair in reſpect of length and ſhortneſs. If then φύσις hath the ſignification of cuſtom in this place, then you know what the Apoſtle referred to, viz. the practiſe of thoſe nations, which I have ſet before you. He might rightly ſay, "Doth not even cuſtom teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame to him?" The Jews and Egyptians wore moderate long hair generally. The ſober and graveſt among the Greeks and Romans had neither very long nor very ſhort hair, but of a middle ſize. But

II. Taking φύσις here in a ſtricter ſenſe, i. e. as it ſignifies the inward law of nature, or right reaſon in our minds, let us ſee whether, This teacheth that a man ſhould not have long hair. It is granted before I go any further, that long hair, as is the product of nature, as ſuch (I ſay) is not a thing to be condemned; for then it ought to be condemned in women as well as in men. It is not to be denied that nature hath given men long hair as well as the other ſex, if they will let it grow; as is clear from the inſtances of thoſe men (and I have before informed you that there are and have been ſuch) who ſuffer their hair to grow, and came down as low as their feet. Again, I grant, that wearing of long hair is not intrinſically unlawful, and ſinful in it ſelf abſolutely, for what is ſo can never be otherwiſe: but we know that it is lawful in the Nazarites, becauſe it was commanded of God. If long hair had been in its intrinſick nature, and immutably ſinful, it could not have been enjoined by him. Thus you ſee in what ſenſe long hair is not againſt the law of nature. Having premiſed this, (which was requiſite for the underſtanding this matter aright) I will ſhew how it was, and is againſt nature, or the dictates of natural reaſon.

Firſt, you may judge of the law of nature by the practice of men. What do all nations agree in? How do the beſt and wiſeſt of all countries behave themſelves in this affair? Which way doth the reaſon of mankind ſteer it ſelf? This you may be ſatisfied in from what hath been ſaid already. The ſobereſt part of the world every where (Jews and infidels, as well as Chriſtians) wear not their hair at an extravagant length. What was the reaſon that the ſtoicks cut their hair ſo ſhort? It was no other than this; that they who were immodeſt and lewd wore long hair, but thoſe that were modeſt and virtuous, and of good lives, did not. Hence thoſe philoſophers, to gain credit and repute with the people, betook themſelves to this better faſhion, yea they ran into another exceſs, and to avoid long hair ſcarcely left themſelves any.——Supercilio brevir coma.——ſaith the ſatyriſt Juvenal of them; the hair of their head was ſhorter than that of their eye-brows.

Hence their diſciples are called detonſa juventus; Perſius. Thus they did, becauſe ſhort hair was looked upon as a ſign of modeſty and chaſtity, and was in uſe among thoſe that were moſt virtuous. Therefore the contrary uſage, ſo far as it is againſt the practice of the ſobereſt perſons, and ſuch as are the greateſt maſters of natural reaſon, is againſt nature. So that theſe two firſt acceptations of the word φύσις run into one at laſt, cuſtom and nature teach the ſame. You may judge what nature dictates by the cuſtom and practice of rational and ſober men.

Secondly, You may conclude that nature or right reaſon forbids the wearing of long hair to men, becauſe this is againſt the laws of natural decency and comelineſs. Obſerve then, that the Apoſtle here in this chapter, and even to the end of the 14th corrects the miſcarriages of the Corinthians in their publick meetings, and then concludes all thus, Let all things be done decently, ch. xiv. laſt ver. Whence I rightly infer, that indecency (which was accompanied with diſorder) was their great fault. Which one thing is a key to open the meaning of the text, and acquaints us that natural decency is to be underſtood here by nature. Which is further confirmed by the words of the Apoſtle in the verſe immediately before this, Is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered? And from this very notion of decency or comelineſs he continues to argue in theſe words, Doth not nature it ſelf teach you, &c. Is it comely? and, Doth not nature teach you? are the ſame. Let us ſee then what this τὸ πρέπον, this decorum, this comelineſs ſignifies. Πρέπειν, is to follow the order of nature in reſpect of perſons, place, time, ſtate or condition, or any other circumſtance whatſoever, and to act ſuitably according to the variety of theſe. And this decorum is to be obſerved in all external actions, words, geſtures and behaviour. When all theſe are rightly ordered, then a perſon acts decently or fitly: But when theſe are not obſerved, he acts unbecomingly, and what he doth is unſeemly and unfitting. It was thought indecent in grave Socrates to be ſeen riding on a cane, like a little boy. The ſenate of Areopagus, that grave and reverend judicatory at Athens, made this order, that none of the judges of that bench ſhould be permitted to write comedies. The reaſon was, becauſe it was unſeemly and indecent for thoſe grave ſenators to make plays. And ſo this law of congruity and incongruity runs through all the circumſtances of a man's life, as might be ſhewed. This is particularly to be diſcerned in the inſtance which is before us: Short or moderate hair is a thing convenient and ſeemly in men, but the contrary is unſeemly, incongruous, uncomely, becauſe it is not ſuitable to the ſtate and condition of men, who ought to do things agreeable to their rank and quality, who ought to ſhew themſelves manly and grave, who ought to act their part wiſely, who are convinced that there is no time or place for extravagancy and folly, who have natural impreſſions on their minds to encline them to what is ſerious, and who know very well that this garb we have been ſpeaking of, if it be conſidered in all its circumſtances and with all its appendages, is inconvenient and unſeemly. This being ſo, Chriſtians, of all perſons, are to avoid that unſeemly wearing of their hair, becauſe they are obliged by the Apoſtles injunction to do all things decently, and becauſe the indecent length of hair hath, at leaſt, an appearance of evil, which the ſame inſpired writer bids them abſtain from. Thus nature teacheth that it is a ſhame for a man to wear long hair, and that it is honeſt and decent, and becoming the exactneſs of Chriſtianity to obſerve a moderate length. This in general: But more particularly,

Thirdly, Even natural reaſon commends to us the Apoſtle's advice, to think on things which are of good report, Phil. iv. 8. and to provide things honeſt in the ſight of all men, Rom. xii. 17. 2 Cor. viii. 21. Now theſe rules cannot be more uſeful in any caſe than in the wearing of habits, and of hair. Theſe ought to be ſuch as are generally reputed honeſt and laudable, and have the good word of ſober men.

Fourthly, Natural reaſon teacheth us that long hair is unlawful as it is any ways ſubſervient to pride, wantonneſs, and effeminacy.

Fifthly, It might be added that ſo far as long hair may prove incommodious and cumberſome, and be a hindrance to men in their buſineſs, (which they beſt know and are ſenſible of whoſe heads are hung with this troubleſome tackle) it muſt needs be pronounced to be againſt nature, and the law of our rational faculties, for this approves of nothing which really incommodes us, and is an impediment to us in any of the neceſſary offices of our lives.

Laſtly, The natural law of reaſon bids men do nothing that is ſhameful and opprobrious, diſgraceful and diſhonourable; but ſuch is a man's having of long hair. It is, ſaith the Apoſtle, a ſhame to him; or rather, it ſhould have been tranſlated diſhonour, for it is ἀτιμία, in the Greek, and is oppoſed to δόξα in the next verſe, which ſhews this rendring of the word to be moſt proper. If a man wear long hair, it is a diſhonour to him, it being doing that which is unworthy of his peculiar ſex, and ſo is unnatural; which leads me to the next particular.

III. The difference of ſexes, which is another ſignification of the word φύσις, teacheth, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame and diſhonour to him; for wearing the hair in a different manner is one badge of the ſex. Thus the wearing of the hair being through cuſtom agreed upon among all nations to be one diſtinction between the ſexes, it follows that it is natural and reaſonable to obſerve this diſtinction. Now, if a man wear his hair as long as a woman, the ſex is not diſcerned, which is againſt the law and decree of nature, viz. that the diſtinction of ſexes is to be maintained, and not confounded. The very ſum of the firſt part of this chapter to the Corinthians is, that women muſt not be forgetful of their ſex. There is a modeſty and ſhamefacedneſs proper to them, as the conſequent of the ſubjection they owe, which is to be ſhewed by putting on a veil. Though they had ſupernatural gifts (as the Apoſtle here ſuppoſeth,) yet they were to remember their peculiar ſtation and ſex. And ſo here the ſame thing is urged, viz. the difference of ſexes made by God and nature. This teacheth the man that it is unfit for him to wear long hair, for hereby the difference of ſexes would be taken away. We muſt not do things contrary to or unbecoming our ſex. That is decent and ſeemly in a man which is not in a woman, and ſo vice verſa. It muſt needs then be a ſhame to a man to have hair of the length which a woman hath; for then he is truly traveſtie, dreſſed in another's clothes, (which is the import of that French word,) and for which he may be juſtly ridiculed. And this certainly is the ſhame of this age wherein we live, though it is not ſo accounted, but rather, the contrary is thought ſhameful and diſgraceful. We may in our days alter and tranſpoſe the Apoſtle's words, and ſay, If a man hath ſhort hair, it is a ſhame to him: but if a woman have ſhort hair, nay, if ſhe hath none, it is a glory to her. Thus you ſee how nature it ſelf teacheth, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame to him.

Hitherto I have conſidered the word κομᾷν in the firſt ſenſe, i. e. as it denotes having long hair, or looſe hair which hangeth down at length, and is without any artificial ornament. But as this is a frequent ſignification of the word, ſo there is another, viz. to have hair not only long and uncut, but to diſpoſe of it after the manner of women, to deck and adorn it. This is a known ſignification of the Greek word in the text; yea, ſome will have this to be the primary and proper denotation of the word κομᾷν. Here then I will examine, 1. What this κομᾷν was, wherein conſiſted the wearing of hair like women, in reſpect of its dreſs and ornament? 2. Whether the Apoſtle here means hair of this kind? 3. How nature teacheth men that they ought not to wear ſuch hair?

I. What is it to wear hair like women? For we ſhall not be able to tell what men are taught to do, when they are forbid to have ſuch hair, unleſs we know firſt what that hair was, viz. in regard of its compoſure and dreſs. Women heretofore did always wear their hair uncut, and becauſe of its length they did not ſuffer it to hang about their ears, but tied it up, and decently diſpoſed of it: But at laſt this decent ordering of their hair degenerated into an indecent trimming, into a lewd and wanton garniſhing it. It is the former of theſe which is expreſſed here in this one word κομᾷν. This ſignifies the womaniſh ſetting forth and adorning of the hair, the wearing of hair as women wear it. The Grammarians in the propriety and differences of words which they make, tell us that κόμη is properly of women, as θρὶξ & τρίχωμα of men. Coma eſt capillus aliqua cura compoſitus, ſay the maſters of Grammer and Critciſm. And accordingly ſome of them derive it from κομεῖν curare, colere, ornare, to take care of, trim, deck, adorn. Therefore κόμη, is womens hair properly, becauſe it requires great care and art to keep it, dreſs it, and tie it up. So κομᾷν, is to be careful about the hair, decently to gather it together, and to diſpoſe of it: Whence looſe and ſqualid hair is oppoſed in all good authors to κόμη, & κομᾶν. Thus I have done with the firſt demand, what the wearing of hair like women is.

II. I am to ſhew you, that the Apoſtle ſpeaks here of this very wearing of hair. The κομᾶν, which is mentioned twice together (in this, and the next verſe) is meant of the ſame thing; this will not be denied, I ſuppoſe. Now the latter κομᾶν, applied to the woman, cannot be meant of long hair only and ſimply, but alſo of hair which is ordered and faſhioned according to the uſe of women; and that for theſe two reaſons. Firſt, becauſe it is ſaid to be her glory; but it is well known that hair hanging down and diſhevelled is no glory, no ornament, no honour, and never was thought to be any of that ſex. When the Apoſtle ſaith, If a woman doth κομᾷν, it is a glory to her, he cannot intend long hair abſolutely, and ſolely, for that was no comelineſs or decorum, much leſs, glory to the Greek or Roman, or any European women, but on the contrary, it was thought indecent, and was a ſign of neglectfulneſs and ſqualidity; and therefore uſed in caſe of great mourning and lamentation. Secondly, in this ſame verſe it is ſaid, that the woman's hair is given her for a covering. Hence then I gather that this κόμη, muſt not be mere long hair hanging down, and never cut.

It is evident then, that the Apoſtle here ſpeaks againſt thoſe Corinthian men who were effeminate and wanton, who at that time wore their hair after the manner of women, who artificially wrapt it up, and dreſſed and adorned it after the faſhion of that ſex. The Apoſtle forbids the men to wear their hair thus; this is κώμη, coma, properly ſo called, and belongs to a woman. This gathering and tying, and adorning the hair is the womans natural veil or covering for her head, and given her to that purpoſe. Κομᾷν is her proper ornament, and is even ſtiled by the Apoſtle, her glory, as hath been often ſaid. But this, as lawful as it is in women, becomes unlawful and ſinful in the maſculine ſex. If a man makes uſe of it, ἐὰν κομᾷ, If he wears his hair like a woman, i. e. gathered up, and compoſed by art, it is a ſhame to him. Not only long hair, but adorned hair, is not permitted to man, but is againſt nature. Which is the

III. thing I am to undertake, viz. to ſhew how nature teacheth that a man ought not to wear his hair after this manner. And here we will take the word Φύσις in the tripple ſenſe which we took it in before, viz. as it ſignifies cuſtom, natural reaſon, and difference of ſex. Firſt, it is not to be denied that many men among the Gentiles went with the attire of their hair like women. It is eaſily proved out of hiſtory. And Ovid jerks thoſe effeminate men who will not let a hair be amiſs or out of its place,

Quiſque ſuas ponunt in ſtatione comas.

Juvenal Sat. 8. corrects the pride of the Roman gallants in wearing their hair finely dreſſed: And Horace, lib. ii. ode 5. laſhes them for the ſame effeminacy.

The author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, lib. i. cap. 3. ſaith, It is not lawful to nouriſh the hair, and to tie it up in a knot, nor to curl and criſp it, ſeeing the law forbids it. From whence it appears that this vanity and luxury of compoſing the hair in a womaniſh manner was crept in even among Chriſtian men. And this further appears from that ancient canon of the fourth council of Carthage, Clericus nec comam nutriat, nec barbam, which was made againſt the Maſſaliani, a ſort of Hereticks then in Africa who indulged an effeminate wearing of their hair, of whom likewiſe Epiphanius (Hæreſ. 80.) and Auguſtin (De opere monach. cap. 31.) ſpeak. But though this vicious practice ſpread it ſelf among the worſt of Pagans and Chriſtians, yet it did not univerſally prevail, it was no general cuſtom. But the modeſt, wiſe and ſober in all nations and in all ages have oppoſed this practice, it being diſagreeable to the dictates of reaſon in all underſtanding and conſiderate perſons. Which brings me to the next particular.

Secondly, Nature it ſelf, i. e. the dictate of natural reaſon, natures inſtinct and common ſenſe teach this, that a man is not to wear hair like a woman. The manly ſex is forbid by the law of nature to have hair after the manner of the female ſex. Natural reaſon dictates againſt adorned hair in men on the ſame accounts that it was againſt their long hair, viz. becauſe it is indecent, becauſe it is of no good report, becauſe it is ſubſervient to pride and wantonneſs, becauſe it is contrary to the practice of thoſe who are moſt guided by the conduct of reaſon, &c.

Thirdly, Nature, i. e. the difference of ſexes dictates that a man ought not to wear his hair in the faſhion of a woman. This has been proved before. Therefore, I ſhall now only obſerve, That although ſome of theſe things which the Apoſtle mentions in the beginning of this chapter, as mens being uncovered, to denote their ſuperiority, and the womens covering their heads as a ſign of their ſubjection, together with the particular manner of wearing the hair uſed at that time, which the Apoſtle refers to, be not in uſe with us at this day, yet the general rule of keeping up a difference between the ſexes is ſtill valid and obligatory, and will always be ſo. This is certain and fixed, and never to be ſhaken, that nature hath made a difference between the ſexes, and that it is a ſin to confound them. And it is not to be denied that this difference of ſexes is to be manifeſted by different habit and apparel, to which appertain wearing the hair. And this in the times of the Apoſtle was after this manner; hair hanging down, and moderately cut was proper to man, and long hair, but tied up and with ſome art diſpoſed was proper to the woman; for the difference of men and womens hair conſiſted not only in the length; but in the diſpoſing and dreſſing of it. It is manly to cut the hair, and neglect the adorning of it: It is womaniſh to let it grow, to gather it up orderly and with ſome innocent art. This is the difference of ſexes made by the hair which Paul ſpeaks of. This is that which was ſuggeſted by the author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, lib. i. cap. 3. ſpeaking of that law in Leviticus, Thou ſhalt not round the corners of thy head, &c. It behoveth us, ſaith he, not to ſpoil the hair of the head or of the beard, not to change the faſhion of man againſt nature, i. e. to order the hair ſo as to take away in part the natural difference between the ſexes. This is that which an ancient Father, Clem. Alexand. Pædagog. l. 2.) on the like occaſion ſaith, To violate the ſymbol (or ſign) of the virile nature is impious. The wearing of hair is ſuch a ſymbol, and therefore to confound this in the ſexes, that is, for a man to wear his hair after the womaniſh way, and for the woman to wear hers after the way which is proper to men, is unchriſtian, impious, and unnatural. This, in conjunction with what I have ſaid before, I take to be the Apoſtle's meaning in theſe words, Doth not even nature it ſelf (and with it cuſtom) teach you, that if a man hath long hair, and diſpoſes of it in that manner which women do, it is a ſhame, it is a diſhonour to him? But if a woman have long hair, and wears it after that way of dreſs which is proper to her ſex, the law of nature, together with the uſage of the ſober part of the world teacheth that it is a glory to her. This I offer as the full and complete ſenſe of the Apoſtle in this text. For,

Paul writing to the Grecians, (for ſo the Corinthians were) followed the Grecian cuſtom, among whom it was uſual to be bare-headed at Divine Worſhip. And though the Romans were covered at the ſervice of their gods, yet at other times they generally were uncovered. To go with the head bare, was ſo far from being a badge of inferiority and ſubjection, that it was rather a token of honour and ſuperiority, and was accordingly uſed by perſons of the greateſt quality among them. And we are ſure that covering the head, in ſome caſes, was a ſign of ſubmiſſion and ſhame, and what was worſe; elſe caput obnubito had not been part of the common form of ſentencing and condemning malefactors among them. Here then the Apoſtle, who uſed great prudence, nay craft, as he himſelf is pleaſed to ſay, 2 Cor. xii. 16. thought fit to make uſe both of the Grecian and Roman cuſtoms, viz. the practice of the former in their religious worſhip, which was the mens uncovering their heads, and the uſage of the latter in their ordinary and common converſe, which was the ſame, and might now not ſeem unacceptable to the Corinthians, ſince the Roman tongue, and moſt of the faſhions of that people, were grown common among the Greeks, as interchangeably the Greek tongue, and many of their cuſtoms, were in good repute among the Romans. Paul therefore is pleaſed to introduce and adopt this cuſtom into the Chriſtian Church, and to enjoin the converts and believers of Corinth to make uſe of this in their Divine Worſhip and Service of God. It is not to be doubted that this practice which the Apoſtle here urgeth, is founded even on a civil cuſtom which obtained at that time among the perſons the Apoſtle wri to. For the eccleſiaſtical order and 'Ευταξία may be accommodated and conformed to the civil uſages of a place, if they have nothing of evil in them. Particularly in Prayer and Divine Service this may be obſerved. The civil poſture uſed in ſupplicating kings and great ones, is lawfully uſed in religious ſupplication of God. By the ſame geſture and habit wherewith we teſtify our reſpect to men, we may expreſs our reverence to God. All the Chriſtians of Europe generally do ſo, which, by the bye, gives us the true account why the rites and obſervances of ſeveral Churches vary from one another. The reaſon is, becauſe civil cuſtoms vary in ſeveral countries: accordingly eccleſiaſtical rites do ſo too. But obſerve here, that the Apoſtle, who takes this particular cuſtom uſed in common and civil converſation, and transfers it to a religious uſe, yet would not let the other cuſtom, viz. of covering the head, which ſo generally prevailed in the Roman and Jewiſh worſhip, be made uſe of in the Chriſtian one. For it is reaſonable to think, that the Apoſtle here rebukes the cuſtom of the Corinthians about the mens being covered, becauſe it was borrowed from the Roman idolaters, and from the Jews. The Corinthian Church uſed the like in their ſolemn aſſemblies, and therefore they are juſtly reprehended, becauſe they conformed to a cuſtom which was ſo general and prevalent among thoſe ſuperſtitious worſhippers, who were then covered and veiled at their devotions. Firſt, He would not have them cloud their heads at their ſervice, as the Gentiles did at the worſhip of their idols. It hath been intimated before, that the ſervile fear of their gods made thoſe worſhippers veil and hide their heads; but the Apoſtle would have the worſhip of Chriſtians to be free and ingenuous, and void of that ſlaviſh fear and dread. Beſides, this would be an imitating of the Jews, who, without any preſcription and order from God, wrapt up their heads in veils when they were at their publick worſhip. The Apoſtle would by no means allow the Chriſtians to follow this practice of praying with their faces covered, it being ſo great a piece of Jewiſh ſuperſtition. He would not ſuffer them to ape the Jewiſh people in this kind of hood-winked devotion. For theſe reaſons, and for others ſuggeſted in this chapter, Paul's will is, that the Corinthian men, who were converts and ſaints, ſhould be bare-headed in their religious aſſemblies. And from Paul, all Chriſtians generally have received and practiſed this uſage, though not upon the very ſame grounds and reaſons for which he urged this practice. For the Chriſtian Churches at this day conform to this uſage, becauſe, among them generally, the token of reſpect or reverence to men is uncovering the head, and therefore they obſerve this alſo in their addreſſes to God, and expreſs their adoration and worſhip by having no covering on their heads. And herein they follow the Apoſtle himſelf, who (as I have ſuggeſted) made choice of the civil uſage of the Grecians and Romans, and brought it into the Church.

Hitherto I have ſpoken only of the covering or uncovering uſed by men. In the next place, becauſe the Apoſtle adds, Every woman that prayeth or propheſieth with her head uncovered, diſhonours her head, I muſt adjoin a few words concerning the injunction, which is included in theſe words, viz. that the Chriſtian women were to cover and veil their heads when-ever they were employed in religious worſhip. The covering or veiling the head among that ſex is no new thing. It was an ancient cuſtom to bring the wife to the husband covered with a veil, as we expreſly read of Rebekah when ſhe was brought to Iſaac, Gen. xxiv. 65. and thence, likely it was, that Jacob was beguiled by Laban, and thought he had Rachael when he was in poſſeſſion of Leah. The Rabbins tell us, that he that joined the man and woman in marriage, uſed to cover the head of the bride with the end of the linnen which hung down from the bridegroom's neck. To which, they ſay, Ruth referred, when ſhe ſpoke to Boaz to ſpread his skirt, (the end of his garment) over her, Ruth iii. 9. And hence marriage itſelf is called Chuppah, from Chippah, to cover. The Jewiſh women generally, after they were married, uſed a veil; they went covered with this into the temple and ſynagogues, and they wore it wherever they appeared publickly. As for the women among the Romans, it is well known that Nubere, which is the proper word for their marrying, is as much as Obnubere, becauſe ſhe clouded, or covered her head: For, thoſe that are acquainted with the Roman cuſtoms, know that the bride was brought home covered with a veil. To this our Engliſh, or rather Norman laws, may allude perhaps, which call a married woman a femme covert; and by it, they underſtand the womans being ſub poteſtate viri, (as they ſpeak) under the power of her husband. A woman, when ſhe marries, puts her ſelf into a ſtate of ſubjection; and this, without doubt, was ſignified heretofore by the veiling her. Thus it was among the Jews and Romans, and thus it was among the Grecians (who imitated the Romans, as I ſaid before, in many things) at leaſt it was thus among the Corinthians, whom the Apoſtle wrote to; the women went veiled to ſhew their humility and ſubjection. And, indeed, this cuſtom remains ſtill, not only among the Turks, but moſt eaſtern countries, yea, in moſt parts of the world. This canon, then, of the Apoſtle, (as the other concerning mens uncovering their heads) is taken from the civil uſage among women at that time, (not excluding the other reaſons aſſigned by the Apoſtle in this chapter, on which he grounds this practice.) All modeſt and honeſt matrons, wives, and even virgins, wore certain veils or coverings on their heads, and they never uſed to appear publickly without them. And the Apoſtle liked this cuſtom ſo well, that he would have it obtain in the worſhip of God. The modeſty which women ſhew at other times, muſt much more be expreſſed in the Sacred Aſſemblies. If they go with veiled heads in all other places, certainly it is unfitting to come unveiled and uncovered into the publick congregation. Hence he enjoins, that a woman praying or propheſying be covered. This propheſying of women was foretold by the Prophet Joel, ch. ii. 28. and we read ſome inſtances of it in Acts xxi. 9. Some of theſe propheſying women were in the Church of Corinth, and being extraordinarily gifted (which was the peculiar donation of thoſe firſt times of the Goſpel) they prayed and preached publickly, (which latter eſpecially was a manly office) and they proceeded to uſurp on the cuſtom which was proper to the men, i. e. they uncovered their heads, and would needs have their faces ſeen, as well as their voices heard. The Apoſtle ſoon took notice of this bold diſorder, and here enjoins them (together with all other women) a modeſt veil, or rather, he doth but bid them practice the known cuſtom uſed by that ſex.

Thus I have finiſhed the conſideration of theſe words. The ſum is this, that the Apoſtle is deſirous thoſe Chriſtians at Corinth, who had been converted by his miniſtry, ſhould walk orderly, and as became the profeſſors of the Goſpel. Wherefore he blames the men for covering their heads, and the women for laying aſide their veils in time of religious worſhip; and again he chides both ſexes for another diſorder, viz. that the men wore their hair like women, and that theſe appeared in the guiſe of men as to their hair. He lets them know that both theſe kinds of diſorders are repugnant to the inſtitution of God and the dictates of reaſon. But eſpecially the latter of theſe practiſes is confuted here by an appeal to nature, which is a comprehenſive topick, and you may underſtand by it the general dictate of natural reaſon, and the particular law of nature concerning diſtinction of ſexes, as alſo uſage and cuſtom which is a ſecond nature. According to the direction of theſe the Apoſtle would have them walk, ſuggeſting that not only the length, but the adorning of the hair, are uncomely and indecent, and therefore unnatural in the manly ſex, but are comely and decent, yea, even proper and natural in the other. In a word, a man muſt not be like a woman, either as to her veil and covering, or as to her long and dreſſed hair, becauſe he is taught otherwiſe by the law of reaſon, and by that of the ſex, and even by practice and cuſtom of the ſobereſt part of the world, which are all compriſed in the large extent of the word Nature in this place of the Apoſtle.

Ver. 18. Diſciples.] i. e. Schiſms.

Ver. 19 For there muſt alſo be hereſies among you.] Theſe are the σκάνδαλα which our Bleſſed Saviour foretold ſhould come or ariſe among his diſciples after his departure. Now, it

if theſe hereſies were the ſcandals which our Saviour ſaid ſhould come; Matth. xviii. 7. and Luke xvii. 1. which appears to be ſo from the manner of Paul's expreſſing himſelf, There muſt be, &c. i. e. Chriſt has foretold it and it muſt be ſo: Then

Let it be remarked, that an offence or ſcandal, which is here called hereſy, (ſee the former part of this chapter) is commonly diſtinguiſhed into datum and acceptum, given and taken. Now,

An offence given is, when ſuch things are ſaid or done, as have a natural tendency to the drawing men into ſin. Such was the caſe of the Corinthians in this place; ſee ver. 14. An offence taken, or taken and not given, is, when the words or actions that are well intended, and in themſelves either good or lawful, are ſo conſtrued as to be made an occaſion of ſinning. And in this acceptation of the word offence, the beſt actions that ever were done may accidentally become offences or ſcandals; and the beſt men that have ever lived may happen to be offenders, or ſcandalizers. Our Saviour himſelf (as appears from Matt. xviii. 7.) was one from whom offence came, and that mighty offence too; he there being ſaid, to be made a ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence, even to them which ſtumble at the word. And this was predicted concerning him by old Simeon, Luke ii. 34. This child is ſet for the fall, and riſing again of many in Iſrael. As for the riſing of many, ſo for the fall of many; but not ſo ſet for their fall, as for their riſing; for he was deſignedly ſet for the riſing of many, but he accidentally became an occaſion of the fall of many, through the offence they cauſeleſly took at him, upon ſeveral accounts.

Now both theſe ſorts of offences, viz. thoſe given and thoſe only taken, are to be underſtood in the ſaying in that text, Wo to the world becauſe of offences; and in this too, for it muſt needs be that offences come. But that offence only which is given, ſcandalum datum, is to be underſtood in the laſt words, but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh. For no wo can juſtly be pronounced againſt him from whom an offence cometh, upon the account thereof, if he be but a mere accidental cauſe of the offence; and it be wholly the fault of the offended that offence is taken at him: which as we ſaid, was the caſe of our Bleſſed Lord himſelf. And indeed no one that ever appeared in the world was ever ſo great an accidental cauſe of peoples being offended, as he was.

II. I proceed to ſhew, from whence the unavoidableneſs of offences doth ariſe. Matthew ſaith, that it muſt needs be that offences come, ἀνάγκη γὰρ ἐστιν ἐλθεῖν τὰ σκάνδαλα, there is a neceſſity of the coming of offences. And Luke, chap. xvii. 1. doth thus expreſs this paſſage, It is impoſſible but that offences will come. So that there is no preventing them, as unhappy things as in both theſe places we underſtand they are, by the woes pronounced on the account of them. And ſo the Apoſtle ſays in this text.

But we are now to enquire, from whence the unavoidableneſs of them, the neceſſity of their coming, the impoſſibility of their not coming doth proceed.

And to this I anſwer, that it proceeds from theſe two cauſes conjunctly.

1. From the world's being ſo full of folly and wickedneſs, as it is; and every part thereof.

2. From God's determination for great ends not to prevent by his omnipotency the natural effects of theſe.

1. From the world's being ſo full of folly and wickedneſs, as it is; and all parts of it. I need not go about to convince you, that the generality of men in all places are far from being wiſe; are raſh, heady and inconſiderative; acted by prejudice and blind paſſions: And that the number of thoſe who are calmly and ſedately conſiderative, in their own actings, and in paſſing judgment upon the actions of others, is exceeding ſmall. And conſequently, moſt men muſt needs be extremely prone to give offence, and no leſs liable to the taking of offence, when offence is given, and when alſo it is not given.

Nor need I go about to convince you, that all places abound with wickedneſs as well as folly. The whole world, ſaith John, 1 Ep v. 19. So it was in his time, and ſo it hath done, ever ſince the firſt apoſtaſy, to our times. Moſes gives a lamentable account of the depravedneſs of the old world; which provoked God Almighty to overflow it with a deluge of waters; Gen. vi. 5. There he ſaith that God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great upon the earth, and that every imagination, and the thoughts of his hearts were only evil continually. And Paul gives a like ſad account of the new world, both Gentile and Jewiſh, Rom. iii. from the 9th verſe. He there ſetteth forth the general fearful depravation, both of the Gentiles and Jews, as if it were univerſal. And I need not tell you that, though the buſineſs of Chriſt's coming into the world, was to deſtroy the works of the Devil; and to redeem us from all iniquity, yet his grace is received in vain, and turned alſo into wantonneſs, by the generality of thoſe that profeſs faith in him. So that the Jews could not more vie with the Gentiles in wickedneſs, than the Chriſtians may vie with both Jews and Gentiles. And, to our great grief and ſhame be it ſpoken, this may too truly be affirmed, of thoſe that paſs under the name of Proteſtant and Reformed, as well as of Popiſh profeſſors of Chriſtianity. And although all ages have not been alike wicked, nor all countries in any age, yet the far greater part of all ſocieties of men in all ages have hitherto greatly corrupted their ways. And, which is never ſufficiently to be laid to heart, this preſent age is in divers reſpects more debauched than many, if not than all, the foregoing: And this nation is more ſo, than it hath been known to be in former times; notwithſtanding the bleſſed means of grace we have enjoyed, above moſt other people in the world; and notwithſtanding too the very heavy judgments, which have come ſo thick upon us.

Now then, conſidering the great wickedneſs of the world, and how full all places are of wicked men, it muſt needs be that offences come: And 'tis impoſſible but that very many in all ages and places will be ſcandalized, and fall into ſin, by the means of them. It is impoſſible but all places muſt be full of ſtumbling-blocks, and 'tis impoſſible too but that many will fall over them, and break their necks; as will be ſhewn anon. We add hereunto that,

2. It muſt needs be that offences come, becauſe God Almighty hath, for great ends, determined, not to prevent theſe natural effects of folly and wickedneſs; not to interpoſe by his Omnipotency in hindring the folly and wickedneſs, which are in mens hearts, from being the cauſes of offences. Upon which account we read in the propheſy of Ezekiel, chap. iii. 20. of God's laying a ſtumbling-block before him that turns from his righteouſneſs and committeth iniquity. And it is an idiom of the Hebrew language, which we find often in the Holy Scriptures, to expreſs that as done by another, which is only permitted to be done. To give but one inſtance of this, God is ſaid in one place, to move David to number the people, whereas 'tis ſaid in another, that Satan moved David hereunto; ſo that the meaning of God's doing it, muſt be that he permitted Satan, for great and wiſe reaſons, to do it. Now,

1. One reaſon wherefore God hath determined not to hinder the folly and wickedneſs of men from being the cauſes of offences, is the ſame that is given, why there muſt be hereſies, or why he will permit hereſies to be. The Apoſtle ſaith, here in this text, There muſt be alſo hereſies among you, that they which are approved, may be made manifeſt among you. Even ſo, there muſt be offences and ſcandals, that there may be a manifeſt difference and diſcrimination made, between the ſincere and the inſincere profeſſors of religion: For this reaſon hath God determined not to reſtrain fooliſh or wicked men, from the laying of ſtumbling-blocks. The cauſe of this neceſſity is far from being his immutable decree, that men ſhall do fooliſh or wicked things, and ſo cauſe ſcandals; God forbid we ſhould entertain ſo impious a thought: But the cauſe thereof is the folly and wickedneſs of men, occaſioned by the abuſe of their liberty, and God's determining not to prevent their cauſing ſcandals; his determinating this for great reaſons: One of which, I ſay, is, that by them a tryal may be made, who are upright-hearted, and who hypocritical, in the profeſſion of religion. Who have the power of godlineſs, and who the external form only. That a difference may be made, between thoſe wiſe builders, who have founded their houſes upon a rock, and thoſe fooliſh ones, who have built them on the ſand: Between thoſe who have embraced religion for its own ſake, and thoſe who have embraced it for the ſake of their temporal intereſt, and are engaged in the ways thereof, from corrupt motives and carnal principles.

Thus did God Almighty permit falſe prophets to work wonders by the power of the Devil, to draw the people into idolatry, in order to the making of this diſcrimination; as may be ſeen, Deut. xiii. 1, 2, 3. If there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a ſign or a wonder, and the ſign or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee, ſaying, Let us go after other gods, which thou haſt not known, and let us ſerve them: Thou ſhalt not hearken unto the voice of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: For the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your ſoul. That is, the Lord your God permitteth this ſtone of ſtumbling to be laid in your way, that it may be, as it were, a touch-ſtone, for the tryal of your love to him; that a diſcrimination may be hereby made, between thoſe who ſincerely love him, and thoſe who only pretend to love him.

For the ſame reaſon likewiſe, did not God reſtrain Jeroboam, Ahab, or the other wicked kings, who made Iſrael to ſin, from laying before their people the great offences and ſcandals of the golden calves, &c. and temptations to idolatry by their precepts and examples: And by this means, an apparent difference was actually made, between thoſe who were only Jews outwardly, and thoſe who were Jews inwardly. By this means were thoſe ſeven thouſand, who hated idolatry, diſtinguiſhed from the reſt of the people. I have, ſaith God by the Prophet, reſerved unto me ſeven thouſand, who have not bowed the knee to Baal.

2. Another reaſon, why God hath determined the not reſtraining of men from giving offence, or being the cauſes of ſcandals, is, that by them the obdurate may, in his juſt judgment, be more hardned. For inſtance, he permitted Simon Magus and his followers, to be the authors of ſuch mighty ſcandals, for this reaſon; as we read 1 Theſſ. ii. 11. For this cauſe God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, (or ſhall permit them to be ſent) that they may believe a lie (or that the hypocritical profeſſors of Chriſtianity may believe a lie) that they all might be damned, who believed not the truth, but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs.

And we may be aſſured, that for both the reaſons now given, God hath permitted the Roman hierarchy to bring ſo horrible a ſcandal upon the Chriſtian Religion, for ſo many ages paſt; by debauching it with ſuch corrupt and damnable principles and practices. But wo to the man by whom the offence cometh.

That the caſe of ſuch is moſt deplorable, will be ſeen by what our Saviour ſaith, Matt. xviii. 6. viz. But whoſo ſhall offend one of theſe little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a milſtone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the ſea. And Mark relateth the ſame words, ch. ix. 42. and ſo doth Luke too, ch. xvii. 2. that the greater regard may be given unto them. And this is the meaning of theſe words; he that ſhall either by words, or deeds, diſcourage the very meaneſt of Chriſt's diſciples, from holding on in his Chriſtian practice, ſhall cauſe him to fall into ſin; it will be better for him to have a great heavy weight hanged about his neck, and to be therewith caſt into the ſea; whereby he will be hurried to the bottom of it, and never ſuffered to riſe again. What an emphatical expreſſion is this, of the moſt woful ſtate, which that perſon is in by whoſe means offences, or ſcandals, come! And mark, the condition of that man is declared to be thus dreadful, who hath cauſed to offend any one, and that of the meaneſt and weakeſt of thoſe that believe in Chriſt. How unexpreſſibly ſad and diſmal then, ſhall his puniſhment be, who in this ſenſe hath offended many! I mean upon ſuppoſition, he prevents it not, by timely repentance and reformation.

Ver. 26. For as often as you eat this bread, and drink this cup, &c.] See the notes on ch. x. ver. 16. And to what has been ſaid there in regard of the inſtitution of this Holy Sacrament, I ſhall now add a few cautions and conſiderations; and authorities for the doctrine taught by us concerning this Sacrament.

Do not ſay, the Table of the Lord is contemptible, or imagine that the bread of God, that which is offered to him as figures of the precious body and blood of Chriſt, and which he returns to us for a ſpiritual banquet, full of life-power: Do not imagine, I ſay, that this is common bread and wine; but conſider who inſtituted this ſacrifice, by whoſe commiſſion it is celebrated, for what end it was appointed, and the promiſe Chriſt has made of being with his commiſſioned officers in the celebration of it.

Firſt, Conſider who inſtituted this Chriſtian Sacrifice, this Divine Worſhip and Service of the Chriſtian Church. It was our Lord Chriſt himſelf, the Founder and Supreme Head of the Church, who in the ſame night that he was betrayed, took bread and wine, and when he had bleſſed them, ſaid, This is my body given for you, this is my blood ſhed for you: Do this for a memorial of me. The Author of Salvation is the Founder of this ordinance; his ordinance therefore muſt not be deſpiſed, but attended to by all who would be ſaved by him: For he is the Author of Salvation to them that obey him, not to thoſe who diſobey him. Remember, that from the beginning God hath enjoined poſitive duties: Adam himſelf was under the injunction of poſitive duty, and loſt paradiſe by the breach of it.

2*dly*, Conſider by whoſe commiſſion this Divine Service is celebrated. The materials of this Holy Feaſt cannot be deemed common bread and wine, in that they are dedicated to God in memory of Chriſt, with prayer for a Divine Bleſſing, by a commiſſioned officer of Chriſt. When our Saviour had took bread and wine, and bleſſed them, and ſaid of them, This is my body given for you, this is my blood ſhed for you; he commanded and commiſſioned his Apoſtles, and in them their ſucceſſors and ſubſtitutes, the biſhops and prieſts of the Chriſtian Church, deriving their commiſſion from them, to make a memorial before God of his death and paſſion, in the appointed repreſentations of his body and blood. And can you think that this memorial is not accepted by God, and beneficial to us, when it is made by ſuch as are appointed to that Holy Office by a proper commiſſion, and ſo according to the will, and by an authority, derived originally from our Lord Chriſt?

3*dly*, Conſider for what end this Divine Service was appointed, viz. for a memorial to God, i. e. to repreſent and ſhew forth Chriſt's death to him, that he may ſee it, and behold it in the appointed memorials thereof, and remember it for our good. Do this, ſays our Lord, for a memorial of me, to bring my death and paſſion into remembrance before God: Not as if God could forget it, or has any need to be put in mind of it, as if his memory could fail him; but that by this appointed memorial, we may engage him to remember the Covenant of Grace, founded on the ſacrifice and prieſthood of Chriſt, and that he may be propitious to us in the pardon of our ſins, and in confirming to us the other benefits of Chriſt's paſſion, for the ſake of the grand ſacrifice itſelf, which we then commemorate and repreſent to him, in the manner Chriſt has appointed. Remember then, that this Divine Service being the appointed memorial, the inſtituted repreſentation made to God of his ſon's death and paſſion, to engage him to be favourable and gracious to us; it is therefore, by virtue of the grand ſacrifice commemorated and repreſented by it, available to the pardon of ſin; for does not our Lord ſay of the wine, This is my blood of the New Teſtament, or covenant, ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins: It is alſo the means of deriving to us the grace of the Divine Spirit; for does not our Lord ſay, concerning his ſacramental body and blood, It is the Spirit that quickneth; and the words that I ſpeak unto you, they are Spirit and they are life: Hence it is the conveyance of a principle of immortality; for has not our Lord ſaid, Whoſo eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raiſe him up at the laſt day; for my fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. Is not this Divine Service therefore the appointed claim of the Covenant of Grace? Is it not the means of renewing covenant, and holding communion with God? Shall we therefore deſpiſe that, which is an appointed memorial to God, and by conſequence the means of Divine Grace and Favour to us?

4*thly*, Conſider the promiſe Chriſt has made to be with his commiſſioned officers in the celebration of this Divine Service. When he had his Apoſtles to make a repreſentation of his death to God, in the appointed memorials of his body and blood, ſaying unto them, Do this for a memorial morial of me; he afterwards promiſed, that he would be with them, and with their ſucceſſors and ſubſtitutes, in the execution of all parts of their office, and therefore in the execution of this, even unto the end of the world; ſaying unto them, Matth. xxviii. 20. Lo! I am with you, you my Apoſtles, whom I have commiſſioned to baptize, to adminiſter the Euchariſt, &c. even unto the end of the world: And therefore with their ſucceſſors and ſubſtitutes unto the end of the world; ſince they themſelves were not to continue in perſon unto the end of the world. Will you then deſpiſe that Holy Feaſt, which Chriſt himſelf inſtituted, which he commanded his Apoſtles to continue for a memorial of him, before God, and in the celebration of which he promiſed to be with them, and their ſucceſſors and ſubſtitutes, even unto the end of the world? Will you deſpiſe that of which Chriſt ſaid, This is my body given for you, this is my blood ſhed for you? which, he ſaith, is the meat that endureth unto everlaſting life; which he calleth the bread of God, and the life giving bread? I ſay, will you deſpiſe that which Chriſt dignifies with the name and title of his fleſh and blood, and which he aſſures us, is ſo in life and ſpirit, in power and effect, by the enlivening energy of the Holy Spirit? Certainly if theſe things be duly conſidered you will not deſpiſe it! But and then will you neglect it? Many, though they cannot deny but that it is a main duty of Chriſtianity to attend the Holy Euchariſt, yet live in the neglect of it: They think it a very good thing to frequent it, but yet do not think the neglect of it is a ſin, that will certainly undo them. But they muſt be undeceived in this matter. To which purpoſe, be pleaſed to conſider what follows. If we believe it to be a duty, can we with any manner of reaſon expect to be ſaved by Chriſt, when we live in the neglect of that, which he made to be our duty? The Scripture ſaith, Heb. v. 9. He is the author of ſalvation to all them that obey him: But is this to obey him, to live in the neglect of what he hath made our duty? Certainly, you will not ſay it is.... Can we expect to be ſaved, if we wilfully neglect the means of ſalvation? But do not we neglect the means of ſalvation, if we neglect to feed upon that food, which endureth unto everlaſting life? Is there any effectual way of pleading Chriſt's merits before God, but that way which himſelf hath appointed for the ſhewing forth his death unto God? And can we expect to be ſaved without pleading Chriſt's merits?.... We cannot merit happineſs, nor lay claim to it, by our own deſervings; we have no title to it, but by covenant; and can we expect the benefit of the covenant, when we are not careful to renew it, and to keep up the communion with God?... Conſider what a ſtreſs our Saviour lays upon this duty, Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, except ye eat the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you, John vi. 53. He poſitively makes the receiving of this ſacrament neceſſary to all, who are capable of receiving it. Theſe are words which every Chriſtian man or woman ſhould have in their mind, who go out of the Church when the Sacrament is to be adminiſtred, or refuſe to receive it: For when our Lord ſaith, Except ye eat the fleſh of the ſon of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; he doth not mean eating it now and then, or once or twice in a year, or perhaps in our life-time: The word is τρώγω, which ſignifies to feed upon a thing as conſtant food: And therefore the thing that he requires of us, is to feed upon it conſtantly, as often as we have opportunity. And it deſerves to be conſidered, whether at the day of judgment, Chriſt may not ſay unto ſuch as deſpiſe or neglect this Holy Sacrament; "Did not I tell you the way to happineſs? Did I not ſay unto you moſt expreſly, Verily, verily, except ye feed on the fleſh of the ſon of man, and make his blood your drink, ye have no life in you? How then can you expect eternal happineſs, when you neglected the means which I appointed for attaining it?" In a word, all God's favours and bleſſings are free, and we muſt be content to lay hold of them without them. If we will not be ſaved in the manner he has appointed, there is no help for it; God is not bound to depart from his rule, or to ſave us in a manner of our own chuſing: He has no where promiſed it, and therefore we have no reaſon to expect it, but the contrary.

But that no one may think, the ſtreſs is laid upon a mere outward formality, upon the bare action of eating and drinking the Holy Euchariſt, we muſt remember, that there is a certain manner of eating and drinking this Divine Food, that it may be ſalutary to us, the ſeal of pardon, and the conveyance of Divine Grace; that is to ſay, this holy food muſt be eaten in a ſpiritual manner, which, in the ſenſe of the Primitive Church, implies theſe two things. Firſt, That we eat and drink it, not as mere bread and wine, or as bare empty repreſentations, but as the body and blood of Chriſt in power and effect, by means of the enlivening energy of the life-giving Spirit, communicating itſelf to, and conveying itſelf by the holy ſymbols, or the ſacramental body and blood. And, 2dly, That we eat and drink with that preparation and devotion of mind, which befits ſo ſolemn and Divine an Inſtitution, i. e. with humble and penitent, and believing and thankful hearts and reſolutions to live in all reſpects, as becomes the Goſpel of Chriſt. Then, as Auſtin ſpeaks, will the body and blood of Chriſt be life to every man, if that which is viſibly taken, be ſpiritually eaten and ſpiritually drunk; if it be eaten in a ſpiritual manner, that is to ſay, if the outward ſymbols be eaten and drunk, as that, which is the body and blood of Chriſt in power and effect, and with penitent hearts, and ſincere deſires of growing in grace and goodneſs, and of living up to the Goſpel of Chriſt.

All which is confirmed to be orthodox, and the true Chriſtian interpretation of the text, by the following teſtimonies. Thus,

Clemens Romanus, about the year of our Lord 65. In his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, ch. xliv. he ſays thus; "It will be no ſmall crime, if we eject thoſe from the epiſcopal office, who offer the gifts in an unblameable and holy manner."

Ignatius, A. D. 101, in his Epiſtle to the Epheſians, ch. x. ſays thus; "Let no man deceive himſelf, he who is not within the altar, is deprived of the bread of God." Now, that the bread of God ſignifies in Scripture, a material ſacrifice offered to God, the reader may be ſatisfied by conſulting Lev. xxi. 6—8—17. and Lev. xxii. 5.

Juſtin Martyr, A. D. 140, in his dialogue with Trypho, ſays thus; "In this Prophecy, (Iſaiah xxxiii. 16) he clearly ſpeaks of the bread, which (bread) our Chriſt has inſtructed us to offer (ϖοιεῖν) for a memorial of his incarnation, for the ſake of them that believe in him, &c."

Irenæus, Biſhop of Lyons, A. D. 167, in lib. iv. cap. 32. ſays thus, "Our Lord inſtructing his Apoſtles to offer firſt-fruits to God, of his own creatures, not as if he wanted, but that they might not be unfruitful nor ungrateful, took bread, (which is a creature of God) and gave thanks, ſaying, This is my Body; and in like manner he declared the cup, (which is alſo a creature of God) to be his Blood, and ſo taught the new oblation of the New Teſtament, which the Church receiving from the Apoſtles, offers to God throughout the whole world."

Tertullian, A. D. 192, (de Oratione, cap. xiv.) ſays thus; "On the ſtationary, (i. e. faſting) days, many think they ought not to be preſent at the prayers of the ſacrifices, leſt their faſt ſhould be broken by receiving the body of our Lord; Does therefore the Euchariſt ſlacken our due devotion to God, or rather bind us faſter to God? Will not your ſtation be more ſolemn, if you attend at God's altar? By taking the body of our Lord, and reſerving it, (viz. to be eaten when your faſt is done) both will be ſecured, viz. the partaking of the ſacrifice, and the performance of your duty.

Origen, about A. D. 230, in his book againſt Celſus, ſays; "Let Celſus, as one that knows not God, offer his Euchariſtic ſacrifices to dæmons; but we, appeaſing the Creator of all things, eat loaves offered with thankſgiving and prayer over the gifts, they being made a certain holy body by means of prayer."

Cyprian, archbiſhop of Carthage, about A. D. 248, in his 63d Epiſtle, ſays; "Jeſus Chriſt, our Lord and God, was the author and inſtitutor of this ſacrifice. —— And who was more the Prieſt of the Moſt High God, than our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who offered up a ſacrifice to the Father, the ſame ſacrifice which Melchiſedek had offered before him, that is, bread and wine, to wit, his body and blood? —— And if Jeſus Chriſt, our Lord and God, be himſelf the great High-Prieſt of God the Father, and accordingly firſt offered his own Perſon, as a ſacrifice to his Father, and afterwards directed us to do the like in commemoration of him, the prieſt then offers up to God the Father, in his Church, the trueſt and compleateſt ſacrifice, if he celebrates it in the manner, wherein he is aſſured Chriſt himſelf did celebrate it."

Euſebius, Biſhop of Cæſarea, about A. D. 315, in lib. viii. in Gen. xlix. 12, ſays, "Chriſt himſelf delivered to his diſciples the ſymbols of the Divine Oeconomy, commanding them to offer the image of his own body."

Athanaſius, Biſhop of Alexandria, in Orat. de Melchiſedek, ſays; "He (viz. Melchiſedek,) was the firſt example of offering the unbloody ſacrifice, (viz. Bread and Wine) therefore it was ſaid to our Saviour, thou art a Prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedek."

Cyril of Jeruſalem, about A. D. 350, in Catechiſm. Myſtogog. ſays; "We beſeech God, the lover of man, "to ſend his Holy Spirit upon the gifts laid before him, (ἐπὶ τὰ ϖροκείμενα) that he may make the bread the body of Chriſt, and the wine the blood of Chriſt."

Macarius, about A. D. 373, Hom. 27. ſays, "At that time the great men, and righteous, and Prophets knew that a Redeemer was coming;—— but they knew not that bread and wine were to be offered in the Church, as the antitypes of his body and blood."

Ambroſe biſhop of Milan, A. D. 374. in lib. i. de Officiis, cap. xlviii. ſays; formerly a lamb was offered, a calf was offered, now Chriſt is offered, and he offers himſelf as a prieſt for the forgiveneſs of our ſins: In an image here (on earth) in the verity there, where he interpoſes as an advocate with the Father."

Jerome, about A. D. 378, in his Commentary on Matthew xvi. ſays; "When our Saviour had fulfilled the typical paſſover, he takes bread which ſtrengthens man's heart, and paſſes to the true ſacrament of the paſſover; that as Melchiſedeck, the prieſt of the Moſt High God, to prefigure him, had offered bread and wine, ſo he alſo might repreſent the verity of his own body and blood."

Auſtin biſhop of Hippo, A. D. 369, de civitate dei, lib. xvi. cap. 22, ſays; "When Melchiſedeck bleſſed Abraham, then firſt that ſacrifice appeared, which is now offered by Chriſtians throughout the world. And lib. xvii. cap. 17. The prieſthood and ſacrifice of Aaron is baniſhed, and what Melchiſedeck brought forth when he bleſſed Abraham, is every where offered under the prieſthood of Chriſt. And lib. xx. cap. 18. Chriſtians celebrate the memory of that ſacrifice by the moſt holy oblation, and participation of the body and blood of Chriſt.

Fulgentius, A. D. 525. lib. de fide ad Pet. cap. ix. ſays; "In the time of the Old Teſtament, living creatures were offered——Now in the time of the New Teſtament the holy Catholic Church, throughout the world, ceaſes not to offer the ſacrifices of bread and wine in faith and charity. For in thoſe carnal ſacrifices the fleſh of Chriſt was figured, which he was to offer, and his blood, which he was to ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins. But in this ſacrifice, there is giving of thanks, and a commemoration of the fleſh of Chriſt, which he hath offered, and of his blood which he hath ſhed for us. In thoſe ſacrifices therefore, what was to be given, was ſignified in a figure: But in this ſacrifice, is evidently ſhewn what is already given. In thoſe ſacrifices, the Son of God, it was foretold, ſhould be ſlain for ſinners; In this he is declared and publiſhed, as actually ſlain for them."

The reader may find more teſtimonies, from thoſe I have now mentioned, and from others of the ancient Fathers, in the Appendix to Johnſon's Unbloody Sacrifice. To theſe teſtimonies from the Fathers, I ſhall add ſome from the antient Liturgies. In the Clementine Liturgy, the oldeſt Liturgy that is extant, we read thus; "Wherefore having in remembrance his (Chriſt's) paſſion, &c. we offer to thee our king and our God, according to his inſtitution, this bread and this cup, &c. And ſend thy Holy Spirit, the witneſs of the ſufferings of the Lord Jeſus on this ſacrifice, that he may make this bread the body of thy Chriſt, and this cup the blood of thy Chriſt: That all who ſhall partake of it, may be confirm'd in godlineſs, may receive remiſſion of their ſins, may be delivered from the Devil and his wiles, may be fulfilled with the Holy Ghoſt, may be made worthy of thy Chriſt; and may obtain everlaſting life: Thou, O Lord Almighty, being reconciled to them."

In the Liturgy of James, which was anciently uſed in the Church of Jeruſalem, the firſt Chriſtian Church, the prieſt ſays thus; "Wherefore having in remembrance his (Chriſt's) life-giving paſſion, &c. we ſinners offer to thee, O Lord, this tremendous and unbloody ſacrifice, &c. Send down upon theſe gifts, which are here ſet before thee, thy moſt Holy Spirit; that by his holy, good, and glorious preſence, he may ſanctify and make this bread the holy body of thy Chriſt, and this cup the precious blood of thy Chriſt: That all who are partakers thereof, may obtain remiſſion of their ſins, and eternal life, may be ſanctified in ſoul and body, &c."

In the Liturgy of Mark, being the ancient Liturgy of the Church of Alexandria, of which Mark was the firſt Biſhop, and which was uſed throughout that Patriarchate, containing Egypt, Libya, Pentapolis, and Ethiopia, the prieſt ſays thus; "ſhewing forth therefore, O Lord Almighty, Heavenly King, the death of thine only begotten Son, &c. We have ſet before thee thine own, out of thine own gifts, &c. Send down thy Holy Spirit upon us, and upon theſe loaves and theſe cups, that the Almighty God may ſanctify and throughly conſecrate them, making the bread the body, and the cup the blood of the New Teſtament of our Lord himſelf, our God, our Saviour, and Supreme King Jeſus Chriſt: That they may be to us who partake of them, the means of faith, &c. and the remiſſion of our ſins."

In the Liturgy of John Chryſoſtom, which is the Liturgy uſed in the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople, the prieſt ſays thus; "In remembrance therefore of this command of our Saviour, &c. We offer to thee thine own out of thine own gifts, &c. We offer to thee this reaſonable and unbloody worſhip, and beg, pray, beſeech, thee to ſend down thine Holy Spirit upon us, and upon theſe gifts, lying before thee —— Make this bread the precious body of thy Chriſt, and what is in this cup, the precious blood of thy Chriſt; that it may be to thoſe who partake of it for ſobriety, the remiſſion of ſins, the communication of the Holy Ghoſt, &c."

In the Liturgy of Baſil, which is uſed upon ſome of the great feſtivals, throughout the Patriarchate of Conſtantinople, the prieſt ſays thus; "Wherefore we alſo, O Lord, having in remembrance, &c. offer to thee thine own out of thine own gifts —— and laying before thee theſe ſymbols of the Holy Body and Blood of thy Chriſt, we pray and beſeech thee, O thou Holy of Holies, of thy Gracious Goodneſs, to ſend down thine Holy Spirit upon us, and upon theſe gifts, to bleſs, to ſanctify, to perfect them —— Make this bread the precious body of our Lord, our God, and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, &c."

In the Liturgy of Baſil, as it is uſed throughout the Patriarchate of Alexandria, the prieſt ſays thus; "In remembrance therefore, &c. we offer to thee thine own, out of thine own gifts —— We beſeech, pray and bow down ourſelves to thee, that of thy Gracious Goodneſs, thou wilt ſend down thine Holy Spirit upon us thy ſervants, and upon theſe gifts lying before thee, to bleſs them —— that he may make this bread the Holy Body of our Lord, our God and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of our ſins and everlaſting life, to all thoſe who partake of it; and this cup the precious blood of our Lord, our God and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſins, and everlaſting life to all who partake of it, &c."

In his Liturgy of the Church of Ethiopia, a great country beyond Egypt, the prieſt ſays thus; "And now, O Lord, celebrating the memorial, &c. we offer to thee this bread and this cup, &c. We pray thee, O Lord, we beſeech thee to ſend down thy Holy Spirit and Power upon this bread, and upon this cup, that he may make them both the body and blood of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt."

Likewiſe in the Gothic miſſal, which was uſed in Spain, and in thoſe churches of Gallia which was under the government of the Goths; and in the antient Gallican miſſal, which was uſed in all the churches of Gaul and Britain, before the Goths conquered any part of the Roman empire, and continued to be uſed in ſome parts of Gaul and Britain for ſeveral ages after; and in the Mozarabic miſſal, which was antiently uſed in Africa, and afterwards in Spain, from the time it was conquered by the Moors, about the year of our Lord 714, till about the year 1080; in all theſe, the element are offered to God with prayer for the preſence and bleſſing of the life-giving ſpirit upon them.

I proceed, in the laſt place, to give ſome farther teſtimonies, from the ancient councils. The ſecond, alias third of thoſe canons, called Apoſtolical, which are the moſt antient of the canons which are come down to us, provides, that no biſhop or prieſt do offer any thing in ſacrifice on the altar, beſides what our Lord hath commanded: And what thoſe things are which our Lord commanded to be offered, the reader has ſeen from the foregoing teſtimonies.

The ſynod of Ancyra, (A. D. 315,) in the 5th canon, requires, that "they who had eaten things offered to idols, but with tears in their eyes, thereby ſignifying their inward averſion, ſhould after having been penitents for three years, be received to communion, but without the oblation."

By the eleventh canon of the firſt œcumenical council of Nice (A. D. 325.) it is provided, that they who have tranſgreſſed, i. e. done ſacrifice to idols, without compulſion, ſhall continue three years among the hearers, be ſubſtrators ſeven years, and for two years communicate with the people in prayer, without the oblation.

The ſynod of Gangræ, (A. D. 340.) in the 4th canon, cenſures thoſe, who refuſe to partake of the oblation, when it is made by a married prieſt.

The 4th canon of the 3d, alias 6th council of Carthage, (A. D. 397.) provides, that in the ſacraments of the body and blood of Chriſt, nothing be offered, but what the Lord hath delivered, that is, bread and wine mixed with water.

Theſe are ſome of the many teſtimonies that have been brought from antiquity, in proof and for the confirmation of the repreſentative ſacrifice of the body and blood of Chriſt, under the ſymbols of bread and wine in the Holy Euchariſt: And thus reader you ſee, if Scripture and antiquity be good proofs of any doctrine, we have them both on our ſide, for the repreſentative ſacrifice of the body and blood of Chriſt in the Holy Euchariſt, under the ſymbols of bread and wine.

CHAP. XII.

1 Spiritual gifts 4 are divers, yet all to profit withal. 8 And to that end, are diverſly beſtowed: 12 That by the like proportion, as the members of a natural body tend all to the 16 mutual decency, 22 ſervice, and 26 ſuccour of the ſame body: 27 ſo we ſhould do one for another, to make up the myſtical body of Chriſt.

NOW concerning ſpiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.

2 Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto theſe dumb idols, even as ye were led.

3 Wherefore I give you to underſtand, that no man ſpeaking by the Spirit of God, calleth Jeſus accurſed: and that no man can ſay that Jeſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt.

4 Now there are diverſities of gifts, but the ſame Spirit.

5 And there are differences of adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord.

6 And there are diverſities of operations, but it is the ſame God, which worketh all in all.

7 But the manifeſtation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

8 For to one is given by the Spirit, the word of wiſdom; to another the word of knowledge by the ſame Spirit;

9 To another faith by the ſame Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the ſame Spirit;

10 To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another diſcerning of ſpirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues.

11 But all theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit, dividing to every man ſeverally as he will.

12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: ſo alſo is Chriſt.

13 For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

14 For the body is not one member, but many.

15 If the foot ſhall ſay, Becauſe I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

16 And if the ear ſhall ſay, Becauſe I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? if the whole were hearing, where were the ſmelling?

18 But now hath God ſet the members, every one of them in the body, as it hath pleaſed him.

19 And if they were all one member, where were the body?

20 But now are they many members, yet but one body.

21 And the eye cannot ſay unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

22 Nay, much more thoſe members of the body which ſeem to be more feeble, are neceſſary.

23 And thoſe members of the body, which we think to be leſs honourable, upon theſe we beſtow more abundant honour, and our uncomely parts have more abundant comelineſs.

24 For our comely parts have no need, but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked:

25 That there ſhould be no ſchiſm in the body; but that the members ſhould have the ſame care one for another.

26 And whether one member ſuffer, all the members ſuffer with it: or one member be honoured, all the members rejoyce with it.

27 Now ye are the body of Chriſt, and members in particular.

28 And God hath ſet ſome in the church, firſt apoſtles, ſecondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diverſities of tongues.

29 Are all apoſtles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles?

30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all ſpeak with tongues? do all interpret?

31 But covet earneſtly the beſt gifts: And yet ſhew I unto you a more excellent way.

In this chapter the Apoſtle treats concerning the right uſe of ſpiritual gifts in their Church aſſemblies, ſhewing negatively, that they muſt not be uſed in a way of ſtriſe, envy, pride, and the like; but notwithſtanding the diverſity of gifts, they ſhould all be ſerviceable one to another. Herein

I. We find a preface; ſhewing (1.) that they ought to be well inſtructed in the nature of thoſe gifts; ver. 1. (2.) What their condition was before their converſion; ver. 2. (3.) That the right uſe of them for the owning and worſhipping of Chriſt proceeds from the ſpirit only; ver. 3.

II. His diſcourſe concerning thoſe gifts, ſhewing (1.) the author of them; the ſeveral perſons of the Trinity, as the Spirit, at ver. 4. Chriſt, at ver. 5. and the Father, at ver. 6. (2.) The end why they are given, viz. for the edification of the Church; ver. 7. (3.) The different ſorts of gifts beſtowed; ver. 8—10. (4.) A repetition of the author of them, ver. 11. (5.) The uſefulneſs and neceſſity of thoſe gifts for the Church, illuſtrated by a compariſon taken from the natural body, propounded at ver. 12. to the 26th incluſive, and applied in ver. 27. (6.) The ſeveral ſorts of offices that God hath ſet in the Church; ver. 28. amplified by ſhewing, that theſe different gifts are diſtributed to ſeveral perſons; not all to one; ver. 29, 30. (7.) He exhorts them to covet the beſt gifts. (8.) Propoſes a more excellent attainment than gifts, viz. charity; ver. 31. All which will be properly illuſtrated by the following Diſſertation.

A Diſſertation on Intellectual Virtue.

And now, for the explanation of the term before us; intellectual virtue ſignifies, in general, any virtue properly belonging to, and ſeated in the underſtanding. And it is diſtinguiſh'd from practical, or actual virtue, as it is antecedent and in order to it; as knowledge is to practice, whereof the former muſt be had, before the latter can with reaſon be expected: And no man can perform what he does not in ſome meaſure underſtand; as will be ſhewn more fully under another head.

By Intellectual Virtue, therefore, muſt be meant, what the Apoſtle calls ſpiritual underſtanding; Col. i. 9. By which, undoubtedly, he muſt intend ſomething more than the bare knowledge of our duty; for, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter, it implies not only that, but faith, and wiſdom alſo; and therefore, it muſt ſignify all theſe; and that in the higheſt ſenſe, that is, in the utmoſt degree of perfection that human nature is capable of in this imperfect ſtate.

Indeed, the Apoſtle, in that place, joins wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding cloſe together; and ſo ſeems to make them one and the ſame thing: But they are plainly divers, in that wiſdom ſignifies ſuch an apprehenſion of, and aſſent unto the Sacred Myſteries of religion, or the things pertaining to faith and a good life, as renders men piouſly inclin'd, both firmly to adhere to the one, and conſtantly, uniformly, and impartially to practiſe the other: Whereas ſpiritual underſtanding is the parent both of knowledge, and of faith and wiſdom; for no man can be ſaid to know what he does not underſtand, I mean, he does not know it as he ought; nor can it be expected that any man ſhould be ſo wiſe, as to believe and practiſe what he does not know. At leaſt, ſuppoſing theſe were poſſible, 'tis certain, that as all practice, without faith; ſo all faith, without knowledge, and all knowledge without underſtanding, are equally vain and unprofitable: The former being nothing but credulity, not faith; and the latter but a mere pretence to knowledge, not the thing it ſelf; and neither of the two having any rational ſupport, or ſure foundation, but being both alike built upon the ſand of either a changeable opinion, or a no-leſs uncertain and fallible report.

In ſhort, then, by ſpiritual underſtanding, which, I ſay, is the ſame thing with Intellectual Virtue, muſt be meant the utmoſt ſenſe and apprehenſion of things Spiritual and Divine, of which human nature is capable in this ſtate; whereby reaſon is aſſiſted and enabled to determine, concerning the truth or falſhood, good or evil of any thing propos'd unto our choice, more clearly, and more certainly than 'tis poſſible it ſhould by nature's light alone; and whereby we are inclin'd more ſtrongly, becauſe upon much better grounds, to embrace and follow what is true and good, and to reject and totally abſtain from what is falſe and evil, than we can be by ſuch underſtanding of theſe things as we have by nature only.

Indeed, as I ſaid before, all virtues properly belonging to, and ſeated in the underſtanding, are Intellectual Virtues; but by Intellectual virtue here, I mean, not any virtue in, but the virtue of the underſtanding: That is, that property, or act, or habit of the ſoul, by which it firſt diſcerns and apprehends all moral things, and then diſplays them in their proper colours, with their peculiar marks and characters upon them; that the truth or falſhood, good or evil of them may be known; and that, when known, the truth may be believ'd, and the good embrac'd and follow'd; and that what is falſe and evil may be rejected and avoided. And ſo much may ſuffice, to ſhew both what is meant by Intellectual Virtue, and to what end it ſerves.

Now, I ſhall conſider the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of it to that end. And both theſe will appear from the following conſiderations.

Firſt, That if we do not underſtand, neither can we properly be ſaid to know the things that ought to be believ'd and practis'd by us. For as no man can be thought to underſtand the things he does not know; ſo neither can any man be ſaid to know what he does not underſtand.

And now, to explain my ſelf a little, I deſire it may be obſerv'd, That when I ſay, No man can be thought to underſtand the things he does not know; I mean, unleſs he has, ſome way or other, ſuch previous information of the things, on which his underſtanding is to act, as is needful to ſuch action of the underſtanding: And when I ſay, on t'other hand, That no man can be ſaid to know what he does not underſtand; I mean, that no man can know any thing ſo clearly as he ought to know it, in order to either faith or practice, unleſs he rightly underſtands it.

Suppoſe, for inſtance, that ſome article of faith, or point of duty, were the matter to be treated of, and the queſtion in debate were this, Whether we ſhould believe the one, or do the other? The very putting of this queſtion does of neceſſity ſuppoſe ſome previous information had, concerning ſuch a matter; and that, upon ſuch information, the underſtanding is to act its part, according to its meaſure and capacity, that we may have as clear and certain knowledge of the thing to be believ'd or done, as 'tis poſſible for men to have in this imperfect ſtate. And thus the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of Intellectual Virtue, or the right underſtanding of any article of faith, or point of duty, does appear from the neceſſity of as clear and perfect knowledge, as can by any means be had in this life, of the thing to be believ'd or practis'd by us. But, Secondly, It may alſo be conſider'd, That where there is no underſtanding of the thing propos'd, there can be no rational faith; that is, whatever matter is propos'd as an article of faith, we ought to underſtand the matter rightly, before we venture to believe it: For otherwiſe we do not act like men endu'd with reaſon, nor agreeably to his deſign, who has endow'd our nature with it. Nay, to believe at all adventures, when we do not underſtand the thing propos'd to be believ'd, is to act like creatures wholly void of reaſon, who run wherever they are driven, without knowing what they do, or why they do it. This is to act by ſuch a raſh and heedleſs principle, as ſhews us more like brutes than men; ſuch an implicit faith, as God has not requir'd, nor any man, or body of men have power to require of us; and by which we may, and many do believe, not only the moſt reaſonable, but even the moſt abſurd and unreaſonable things in nature: In either of which reſpects, our believing is credulity, not faith; becauſe it is a believing without any reaſon ſo to do, as not underſtanding, nor having any certain knowledge of the thing to be believ'd.

Not that I would be underſtood, as if I hereby meant, That we ſhould in ſuch a manner underſtand all things propos'd, as articles of faith, as perfectly to comprehend the nature and the manner of them: For this, in moſt inſtances, if not in all, is utterly impoſſible for men to do. And it would be moſt unreaſonable to deny our aſſent to any matter, only becauſe we are not able ſo perfectly to comprehend it. But my meaning is, That we ought ſo to uſe our underſtanding, as not at all adventures to believe without it; that is, not to aſſent to any matter, without underſtanding ſo much of it, as is needful to enable us to judge whether it be fit to be believed; ſo much, I mean, as we in this imperfect ſtate are capable of underſtanding to that end. For otherwiſe, our faith will be not only without knowledge, but without reaſon alſo; and that is much the ſame, at leaſt it will be alike unprofitable to us, as if it were againſt reaſon.

I ſhall only give one inſtance, to make this matter plain, and put it out of doubt; and that is, what the Author to the Hebrews tells us: Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: For he that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is, &c. Heb. xi. 6. Here the neceſſity of faith, in order to our pleaſing God, is as plainly aſſerted as words can aſſert it; in that it is impoſſible to pleaſe him without it: And the Apoſtle inſtances in the grand fundamental article of all religion, to wit, the belief of God's exiſtence; He that cometh to God, that is, he that would do any thing in the ſervice of God, ſo as to pleaſe him, and be accepted and rewarded by him, muſt firſt believe that he is. Now the firſt thing neceſſary to a right and firm belief of this propoſition, that there is a God, or, to uſe the Apoſtle's phraſe, that God is, is the right underſtanding of it, and of the terms of which it does conſiſt; that is, we muſt, according to our meaſure, and the helps that are afforded us, firſt underſtand what is meant by God, that is, what kind of Being that is, which men call by that name, before we can reaſonably believe that there is ſuch a Being: And for any one to go about to perſuade men to believe the Being of God, without endeavouring to acquaint them, firſt, with the nature and attributes of ſuch a Being; is to endeavour to perſuade men to believe they know not what, and to aſſent to ſomething as an undoubted truth, which they underſtand nothing of; and he that can aſſent to this, or any other truth, upon ſo ſlender grounds, is fit for any impreſſion, and will, in all likelihood, as eaſily be wrought upon to believe and aſſent to any doctrine, true or falſe, upon any motives whatſoever.

This therefore is another conſideration, whereby the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of Intellectual Virtue, or a right underſtanding of any thing propoſed, is manifeſt, that we can neither reaſonably believe any neceſſary article of faith, nor with reaſon reject any erroneous doctrine, unleſs we ſo far underſtand the thing propoſed, as to be able, in ſome meaſure, to diſcover the truth or falſhood of it, and by conſequence to judge, according to the rules we have to judge by, whether it may, or ought not to be believed.

Thirdly, Another, and the laſt conſideration I ſhall mention, has relation to our actions; that as we cannot reaſonably believe, ſo neither can we reaſonably do any thing, unleſs we rightly underſtand it. Our practice muſt be rational, as well as our faith; that is, both one and the other muſt be the effect of a good underſtanding, or it neither is, nor can be good, becauſe not a reaſonable faith or ſervice, ſuch as God requires of us. Nay, if we do not underſtand our duty, we cannot do it rightly; for no man can perform what he does not underſtand, that is, not as it ought to be performed: And that is a blind obedience at beſt, which is not accompanied with the underſtanding; as well as that of a lame obedience, which is not to the utmoſt of our skill and power.

To give one inſtance to illuſtrate this; prayer is a neceſſary and a reaſonable duty, provided it be performed with underſtanding; which the Apoſtle makes ſo neceſſary to a right performance of it, that he does almoſt affirm the ſpirit of prayer to be nothing, or to no purpoſe, without it. For, ſays he, I will pray with the Spirit, and I will pray with the Underſtanding alſo, ch. xiv. 15. As if he had ſaid, I will ſo pray with the Spirit, as not only to underſtand my prayers my ſelf, but that others may alſo underſtand them, and be advantaged by them. He that prays, and does not underſtand his prayers, does neither know to whom, nor yet for what he prays; and, by conſequence, the man that prays in ſuch a manner, can have no reaſonable hopes of obtaining what he asks of God: Becauſe he neither knows whether he prays to God, or not, nor whether the things he asks in prayer be good or evil, ſuch as are fit for God to give, or for himſelf to have. The Apoſtle is ſpeaking there, againſt that abuſe of the gift of tongues, which was, it ſeems, too frequent in the Church of Corinth at that time; to wit, ſome perſons uſing it, only to ſhew they had it, but not with the deſign for which it was given them, namely, for the edification of the people: And he ſhews, that while they prayed in an unknown tongue, the people could neither join in, nor be at all edified by their prayers, becauſe they did not underſtand them; and that this was ſuch an abuſe of the gift of tongues as ought not to be ſuffered. For God required that the people ſhould join in heart and affection with their teachers, in the publick prayers and praiſes that were daily offered up unto him, and, for ought we know to the contrary, in the very words of prayer alſo; but how could they do either, when they did not underſtand them? They were to come to Church, not only to exerciſe a general devotion, and only with an intention to pray unto, and praiſe their God and Saviour; but it was required of them to join heart and voice, in all the prayers and praiſes that were offered up, at leaſt, to ſhew they did ſo, by ſaying Amen at the end of every one; and ſo were, every one for himſelf, to exerciſe a particular devotion. But how could they do this, when thoſe prayers and thoſe praiſes were made and offered in a language that they did not underſtand?

In ſhort; let the duty be what it will, and however performed, that is, in what language ſoever, if we do not underſtand the nature of it, or the manner of performance, we cannot perform it as reaſonable creatures ſhould, that is, not acceptably, nor to any ſaving purpoſe of performing it; becauſe we underſtand not what we do, and may, for ought we know, be doing any thing elſe, inſtead of our duty.

And now, the inferences that I ſhall draw from this diſcourſe, are, briefly, theſe:

1. That ſince intellectual virtue, or the virtue of the underſtanding, is ſo neceſſary, and ſo uſeful to a right performance of our duty, in all inſtances, whether as to matters of faith, or matters of practice; we ſhall certainly be very much to blame, if we do not make that good and prudent uſe thereof, for which God has endowed our nature with it. For to what purpoſe have we underſtanding, if we will not uſe it, as we may, eſpecially in matters of religion, but are contented to exert a mere implicit faith, and perform a blind obedience, without underſtanding what it is we are required either to believe, or do? God expects we ſhould believe and act like reaſonable creatures, that is, with, and according to our underſtanding; and if we do not ſo, we abuſe his goodneſs to us, in that, when he has made us men, not brutes, we chuſe to act like brutes, and not like men.

2. Since intellectual virtue is ſo neceſſary, and of ſo great uſe, it is undoubtedly the duty of every man to do what in him lies, by making uſe of all thoſe means that are within his reach and power, towards the due improvement of it. And this, in other matters, is no more, than what all men are inclined to by nature; they cannot but deſire an increaſe of that, which they find to be of great advantage to them: And one would think, they ſhould more earneſtly deſire the improvement and increaſe of that, which is of ſuch advantage to them in an affair of the greateſt moment. And ſuch is the knowledge of all ſaving truth, in order to a firm belief, and a regular and ſteady practice of it. Now the way to improve in knowledge, is to endeavour, firſt, to improve our underſtanding to the higheſt pitch it can be brought to in this imperfect ſtate. And the means to be made uſe of to this end, are, briefly, theſe.

Firſt, meditation, or our having and maintaining a frequent and familiar internal converſation with the things that are needful to be underſtood, in order to their being fully known, firmly believed, and duly practiſed by us. This is a means which puts us to no charge; and the pleaſure of it does abundantly compenſate the trouble we are at, if there be any, in the uſing of it. It is natural to every man to think, and meditation is but thinking; and when our thoughts are moſt intent, on Divine Affairs eſpecially, they are generally moſt delightful to us. The more we think of any matter that concerns the welfare of our ſouls, the better we ſhall underſtand it; and pleaſure riſes to perfection, as the underſtanding does, and always bears a due proportion to it.

A ſecond means, whereby our underſtanding may be much improved, is the maintaining a frequent correſpondence, either by word of mouth, or writing, with men of underſtanding, men that are able to inform us of the truth of things, and ſet us right, if any doubt ariſes in our minds concerning any matter, whether of faith, or duty. And this, though the charge and trouble of it may be ſomewhat more, yet the advantage of it will ſufficiently recompenſe, and make us full amends: The improvement of our underſtanding being a matter of ſuch vaſt importance to us, that the purchaſe of it cannot be too dear; but it will prove to be much more than equivalent to the greateſt charge and pains we can be at.

Thirdly, another means to be made uſe of to this end, by all that are capable of uſing it, is reading. And this I mention, chiefly, with relation to our duty to be converſant in the written word and will of God, contained, and plainly revealed in the Holy Scriptures. It is the Apoſtle's advice, That we be not unwiſe, but underſtand what the will of the Lord is. And what more rational and effectual courſe can be taken, to underſtand the will of God, than by frequently converſing with thoſe Sacred Writings, in which we know it is contained? And it is ſpiritual underſtanding, that we ought chiefly to endeavour after, and for the acquiring and improvement of which our utmoſt care and pains and ſtudy ought to be exerted; certainly, the eaſieſt, beſt and ſureſt means, whereby we may attain it is, by reading often, and uſing all the neceſſary helps to a right underſtanding of thoſe Sacred Oracles, which were undoubtedly given by the Holy Spirit. And in order thereunto,

The laſt means I ſhall mention, which ought always to be added to the reſt, is prayer. That as the Apoſtle prayed for the Coloſſians, ſo we for our ſelves, ſhould daily make it our requeſt to God, That by the influence and illumination of his grace and Holy Spirit, we may be filled with the knowledge of his will, in all wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding, Col. i. 9. by which means only we are able to obtain thoſe ſpiritual gifts, and find out that moſt excellent way, which the Apoſtle ſays he taught the Corinthians.

Ver. 1.——Concerning ſpiritual gifts.] Theſe gifts which you read of in this chapter, are not called ſpiritual, from the ſoul or ſpirit of man, wherein they were as in their ſubject, but from the author of them, who is the ſpirit of God, the Paraclete whom our Saviour promiſed to ſend to his diſciples, otherwiſe, inſtead of pneumetica they had been called phyſica. Again, it is to be obſerved, that as there are two ſorts of ſpiritual gifts in this acceptation, ſuch as are common, and others that are ſpecial, which are different in their nature, extent and uſe, we muſt here underſtand thoſe of the latter ſort, viz. ſuch as the gift of tongues, the power of working miracles, the ſpirit of Propheſy, &c. which are not neceſſary for the Church, but in certain caſes of great emergency; and which, when they are really neceſſary, are not given, like the moral virtues jointly to all, but ſeverally to each.

Ver. 3.——Calleth Jeſus accurſed.] Excludes thoſe who profeſs the name of Chriſt, from their religious aſſemblies; as the Jews did the blind man, who, having been blind from his birth, was cured by Jeſus. Or, ſpeaks in derogation of him; inſinuating that he was an impoſtor and a deceiver, and as ſuch to be ſhunned and abhorred.

Ver. 5.——Adminiſtrations.] The adminiſtrations of the ſpirit are the miniſtry of the Goſpel; as Apoſtles, &c. ſee ver. 28.

Ver. 6.——Operations.] i. e. Prophecy, working of miracles, &c. ſee ver. 8, 9, 10, and 30.

Ver. 7.——To profit withal.] Or, that by them he may edify and profit the Church of Chriſt, by thoſe gifts beſtowed upon him.

Ver. 11.——As he will.] This proves the Holy Ghoſt to be a diſtinct perſon in the Godhead, becauſe here we find a will aſcribed unto him. It alſo proves that he is a God, becauſe no creature can enable others to do thoſe works. And beſides, as all the diverſities of operations is aſcribed to the ſame God, ver. 6. ſo it is here ſaid, All theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame ſpirit.

Ver. 28.—— Apoſtles.] Men ſent forth immediately by Chriſt, to lay the foundation of all Chriſtian Churches, and upon whom the care of all the Churches lay.

—— Prophets.] Perſons immediately inſpired with the knowledge of future things; ſuch as Agabus in Acts xi.

—— Teachers.] Thoſe that were by the Apoſtles appointed to expound the word of truth to the Churches.

—— Miracles.] Or, ſome perſons who in the infancy of Chriſtianity, were endowed with an extraordinary power to work miracles for the conviction of infidelity, and the confirmation of all believers.

—— Gifts of healing.] i. e. Such perſons who were enabled by the Spirit of God to heal diſeaſes without the help of phyſick, in a miraculous way.

—— Helps.] Deacons; ſee Acts vi.

—— Government.] Church rulers and ſpiritual guides.

—— Diverſities of tongues.] Men who were inſpired to ſpeak many languages, without the help of ſtudy, for the better and more ſpeedy propagation of the Goſpel; ſee Dr. Hammond on this text.

Ver. 31.—— A more excellent way.] Not a better way than the Goſpel of Chriſt, but a more excellent way of miniſtring to the welfare of the Church, and of edifying your own ſouls, even by Chriſtian love one towards another. For by that alone we muſt prove ourſelves to be the children of God or diſciples of Chriſt; ſee the next chapter.

CHAP. XIII.

1 All gifts, 2, 3 how excellent ſoever, are nothing worth without charity. 4 The praiſes thereof, and 13 prelation before hope and faith.

THough I ſpeak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as ſounding braſs, or a tinkling cymbal.

2 And though I have the gift of propheſy, and underſtand all myſteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, ſo that I could remove mountains, and have no charity, I am nothing.

3 And though I beſtow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

4 Charity ſuffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not it ſelf, is not puffed up,

5 Doth not behave it ſelf unſeemly, ſeeketh not her own, is not eaſily provoked, thinketh no evil,

6 Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoyceth in the truth:

7 Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

8 Charity never faileth: but whether there be propheſies, they ſhall fail; whether there be tongues, they ſhall ceaſe; whether there be knowledge, it ſhall vaniſh away.

9 For we know in part, and we propheſy in part.

10 But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part ſhall be done away.

11 When I was a child, I ſpake as a child, I underſtood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childiſh things.

12 For now we ſee through a glaſs darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then ſhall I know even as alſo I am known.

13 And now abideth faith, hope, charity, theſe three; but the greateſt of theſe is charity.

In this chapter the Apoſtle treats of charity; ſhewing,

I. The neceſſity of it; by comparing it with other gifts, as eloquence, ver. 1. Propheſy, and a miraculous faith, ver. 2. And with other works, as alms, and martyrdom itſelf, none of which ſays the Apoſtle are either capable or profitable without charity, ver. 3.

II. The nature of it; in reſpect of its excellent properties and effects, ver. 4—7. and its durableneſs or continuance above all gifts for edification, ver. 8. amplified by ſhewing (1.) the imperfection of thoſe gifts here in this world, ver. 9. (2.) The ceaſing of them in the world to come, ver. 10. and (3.) the imperfection of our knowledge, illuſtrated by a compariſon between a child's knowledge, and a man's, ver. 11. and explained by ſhewing the difference between our knowledge here and in Heaven, ver. 12. And therefore he gives it the preference to all other ſanctifying graces, ver. 13.

Should I here pretend to give a particular deſcription of all thoſe encomiums by which the Apoſtle extols charity in this chapter, it would not only be needleſs, becauſe he has done it ſo well that it is impoſſible to do it better, but it would be too tedious, and multiplying words without any neceſſity. Therefore, I ſhall only illuſtrate this Apoſtolical encomium of charity by a note on the contrary vice, which he has ſet down at

Ver. 4. —— Charity envieth not.] Now envy is a trouble or uneaſineſs of mind ariſing from the conſideration of any advantage we think our neighbour enjoys above ourſelves; whether it be in the endowments of body or mind, or in their outward condition, perſons uſe to envy others, either becauſe they think them, or at leaſt they may be reputed by others to be more handſome, or more wiſe, or more virtuous; to thrive better in the world, or to enjoy more honour, or a greater reputation than they. But then it is to be conſidered that there are ſeveral caſes in which men may be concerned at the good things and advantages which others enjoy, without this ſin of envy.

1. I may very lawfully be concerned at the proſperity of another, who gets what he has by my wrong and injury; for this is to be troubled at my own evils, and not at another man's proſperity; which if it be immoderate, may indeed be ſinful, but however is not the ſin of envy.

Again, if one man get any place of honour or advantage, which another had an eye upon, or a probability of attaining; the concern that ſometimes follows upon this may be more or leſs ſinful before God, according to the degrees or other circumſtances of it; but is rather to be reputed a trouble for his own diſappointment, than an evil eye at the happineſs of the other; becauſe it may be, that had it happened in any other caſe or inſtance, he would have been ſo far from being troubled at it, that it would have been matter of rejoycing to him.

2. For the ſame reaſon it is not the ſin of envy to be ſorry for the advancement of one that is our enemy, if he has by that a power of doing us a miſchief; becauſe a man may lawfully have ſome concern at what is like to do him harm. And therefore as, for the ſame reaſon, he may endeavour by all lawful methods to hinder the advancement of ſuch a perſon; ſo he may lawfully have ſo much uneaſineſs after it as a man may have for what is a prejudice to himſelf. But in both theſe caſes we muſt have a care that we be not moved by enmity or reſentment, that we do not endeavour to hinder or be troubled at any man's proſperity, merely becauſe he has done us an injury; for that is utterly inconſiſtent with Chriſtian charity and forgiveneſs: But what we do, in this caſe, muſt always have reſpect to what evils or injuries may come upon us for the future, which we may very juſtly be concerned at, and uſe all lawful means to prevent it.

3. It is not the ſin of envy to be troubled at any man's proſperity, which is like to be a prejudice to the publick. If a man be in publick employment who is unfit for it, or like to do harm in it; if he keep out a worthy perſon, or receive that encouragement which is due only to merit and virtue: In theſe, and all other caſes of the ſame nature, where miſchief is done, or good hindered by the advancement or proſperity of any perſon, we may lawfully wiſh that, if it pleaſed God, things were otherwiſe, and have ſome concern to ſee them ſo. But then we muſt have a care that an evil eye, or a regard to ourſelves, do not corrupt our judgments, and make us think men unworthy of what they have, becauſe they keep us or our friends from it: And after all, ſince it is other peoples work to take care of theſe matters, we ſhould not be too quick in our cenſures, though things do not go exactly according to thoſe meaſures we would lay down.

The laſt caſe I ſhall lay down, is this, that the ſeeing any advantage in another perſon, may ſometimes, without the ſin of envy, cauſe trouble in us, by making us reflect upon our ſelves, as being without that thing which we admire in him. But then to keep this trouble innocent, it muſt have theſe two qualifications.

(1.) That the thing which occaſions our trouble, which our neighbour has, and we want, be really ſomething that is worthy the care of a Chriſtian; not that the other perſon is more handſome, or better dreſs'd, or has more money, or more admirers, or any thing of this kind; becauſe the not having theſe things ought not to be matter of trouble to any Chriſtian, or be the cauſe of emulation among each other; they being things of no great moment in themſelves, and ſuch, for the moſt part, as God gives freely to whom he pleaſes! And therefore, as thoſe who have them ſhould not be proud of them; ſo thoſe who have them not, ſhould not be for that reaſon uneaſy or diſcontented. But if I ſee a great degree of piety or virtue, or wiſdom, or any other real excellency in my neighbour; this may ſometimes very juſtly occaſion trouble, to conſider how little I have improved in theſe things myſelf under ſuch opportunities as I have had.

2. But then muſt come in the ſecond qualification, that this trouble and concern ſhould be, not becauſe our neighbour has theſe things, but becauſe we ourſelves are without them, who ought to have them as well as he: And therefore, we muſt be ſure to take care that we do not malign, or hate, or backbite, or undervalue our neighbour, by that to bring him down to our level; nay, we muſt not ſo much as in our thoughts wiſh that he were without thoſe good things, becauſe they hinder our glory or reputation; but we ought, by the conſideration of his improvement, to be aſhamed of our own negligence to grow more diligent and careful, and induſtrious for the future. And herein lies chiefly the difference betwixt that hateful ſin of envy, and that generous emulation which is ſometimes ſeen in great minds; that the one tends to improve our ſelves, makes a man uneaſy at his own defects, and ſpurs him on to induſtry; the other would bring his neighbour down, and therefore leads commonly to heart-burnings, and jealouſies, and defamation, and ſupplanting, and other wicked practices of the ſame kind.

Thus much may ſerve in ſhort to ſhew what this vice of envy is, and wherein it conſiſts; but to illuſtrate the matter a little more fully, I would before I proceed take notice of one or two inſtances of it recorded in Scripture. The firſt that I ſhall mention is the hiſtory of Joſeph and his brethren; their father Jacob ſeemed to have carried himſelf with love and kindneſs enough to all his children; but becauſe the ſon Joſeph was more favoured than the reſt, kept in better cloaths, and more tenderly regarded, the reſt envy him, and are reſolved to get rid of this favourite, and ſo conſpire to kill him, and had done it but that they met with an opportunity of ſending him where they thought he would never more be heard of; which, by the way, ſhould be a warning to parents how they prefer one child before another in their favour, becauſe it not only does commonly ſpoil the child they are thus fond of, but may raiſe ſuch jealouſy, and hatred, and emulation among the reſt toward that, as may have very ill effects; as we ſee this partiality of Jacob to his ſon Joſeph had, which deprived him for ſo many years of that child whom he chiefly loved, and had like to have involved all the reſt in the guilt of innocent blood, and that the blood of their brother. The other inſtance I would take notice of, is in the parable of the labourers in the vineyard: They that came to work in the morning had agreed with the Lord for ſo much, and are repreſented to have been well enough ſatisfied to receive what they had agreed for; but when they ſaw others receive as much, who they thought had not deſerved it ſo well as themſelves, then they murmur againſt the good man of the houſe, and go away quite diſpleaſed with what otherwiſe would have ſatisfied them very well; whereas they had no other cauſe of uneaſineſs, but only the goodneſs of the maſter that employed them, who had done them no wrong; but was only kind to other people in diſpoſing as he pleaſed with his own.

And this is a very common cauſe of diſcontent and uneaſineſs in the world, when men diſlike their own condition, for no other reaſon but becauſe it is not quite ſo good as that of ſome of their neighbours, and ſo the goodneſs of God is very often the true reaſon why he loſes the thanks, and men the comfort of what is more than enough to make them happy, and would have made them ſo, had not God been kind to other people.

But I now proceed to ſhew the great unreaſonableneſs and ſinfulneſs of this vice of envy.

And 'tis a ſin certainly the moſt unreaſonable of any in the whole catalogue of vices; a ſin for which we cannot ſo much as think of any reaſon, becauſe it does not conſiſt in pleaſing but in diſquieting and vexing a man's ſelf: And whatever temptation men may have to diſturb others, no man can have any to diſturb himſelf, ſo that the whole matter muſt be upon this account very abſurd. But beſides, 'tis vexing our ſelves to no purpoſe, upon the account of that which does us no harm, and where, with all our vexation, we can do our ſelves no good. What our Saviour applies to another purpoſe, is as true in this caſe, that with all our thought we cannot add one cubit to our ſtature, nor take away one from our neighbour; though, if we could, I do not ſee we ſhould be any thing the better for it. In ſhort, If the good things which God has given others do us no good, yet at leaſt they do us no harm; we are never the poorer for their riches, but we really are the poorer when we come to envy them; for then we loſe the comfort and benefit of what we have, and are really as poor as if we had nothing in the world.

To conclude this head, it is unreaſonable to envy others, becauſe the greateſt part of thoſe who are the common objects of envy, are really in a condition not to be envy'd. The beſt condition in this world is only a mixture of good and evil: And as every ſtate has its proper conveniences, ſo it has its proper inconveniences too; and theſe ſo mix'd together, that, upon conſidering things to the bottom, it will be a hard matter to judge what condition of life lies moſt adequate for happineſs. We ſee indeed the pomp, and ſplendor, and gaiety of a great eſtate, or great place; and ſuch a proſpect is agreeable enough to the pride of mens hearts, and the corrupt inclinations of fleſh and blood: But thoſe who have theſe things, feel a vanity in them that we cannot ſee; of which this is a plain evidence, that thoſe who have moſt of this world, yet are forc'd, for ſatisfaction, to ſet their hearts upon ſomething or other which they have not, and could they get all the world, would be ſtill as far to ſeek as ever.

Before we envy any body, we ſhould conſider the whole of his condition; not chuſe out the bright ſide, but conſider the good and the bad together. And we ſhould not only conſider the outſide of his condition, but what is the temper of his mind; for upon that chiefly depends mens happineſs. It may be the perſon we envy has a perplexed uneaſy ſoul, and then nothing can make him happy; it may be his conſcience is tormented with guilt and horror; it may be his mind is diſtracted with hopes or fears, or immoderate deſires; it may be he is weary of what he has, and longs after ſomething that he has not; or it may be he envies ſomebody elſe as much as we envy him: And after all, he that is in a flouriſhing condition to day, may be otherwiſe to morrow. The world is very changeable, and we are not yet come to the concluſion of things; and therefore the Philoſopher ſaid, No man ſhould be accounted happy before his death, becauſe till then he was liable to the revolutions of fortune. Thus if we conſider things only with an eye to this world, 'tis abſurd enough to envy any body; but it is much more ſo if we conſider things as Chriſtians, and with the eye of faith. And 'tis plain, that our religion lays very little ſtreſs upon the things of this world, but takes the eſtimate of happineſs or unhappineſs of men with relation to eternity. If a man fear God, and have his ſins pardon'd, and upon that account be in a way to be happy for ever, when this ſhort ſcene of things is ended, that man is happy, let his condition be what it will here; but then it is very abſurd to envy him, becauſe it is a happineſs that all may have as well as he, if they pleaſe. But on the other ſide, if a man be wicked, and upon that account have no hope beyond this world, though he ſhould have it in his power to be clothed in purple and fine linnen, and to fare ſumptuouſly every day, and have every thing his heart can wiſh; yet we have more reaſon to pity and pray for him than to think of envy: For it is not a condition to be envy'd, to look great for a day, and then be miſerable for ever.

Upon all theſe accounts this ſin of envy muſt be very abſurd and unreaſonable. But I now proceed to ſhew you the great wickedneſs and ſinfulneſs of it.

To this end I deſire you would conſider firſt, That this is a vice which is very frequently condemn'd in Scripture, and almoſt always reckon'd among the works of the fleſh. Thus, Gal. v. 21. The works of the fleſh are envyings, murders, &c. And Paul, when he was taking notice of the great depravity of nature, which God had ſuffer'd the Heathen world to fall into as a puniſhment for their idolatry, reckons this vice as one of the chief, being full of envy, murder, debate, Rom. i. 29. But James goes further yet; James iii. 16. Where envy and ſtrife is, there is confuſion and every evil work. And indeed one would expect nothing better from it, if we do but conſider the chief cauſes from whence it ſprings, which are pride and ſelf-love, the great enemies to God, and every thing that is good. The reaſon why men envy others, is becauſe they would engroſs and monopolize all that's good to themſelves, and ſet up themſelves as idols, that all the reſt of the world may fall down and worſhip them: which is a ſpirit ſo directly contrary to that ſubmiſſion of ſouls we owe to God, and to that charity and juſtice we owe to men, that we may well expect that where this is, there can hardly be any thing that is good, but ever evil work.

2. And this brings me to another conſideration, that this vice is utterly inconſiſtent with our duty both to God and men, and is often the occaſion of many ſins and diſorders in the world.

It is inconſiſtent with that due ſubmiſſion we owe to God, as it involves great unthankfulneſs for the mercies we have received; for no man can be thankful for that condition he is uneaſy under and repines at, as every man muſt do who envies his neighbour. But further, the ſetting up for our own honour, or our own glory, which is the very foundation of this vice, is a ſort of idolatry; 'tis taking that honour to our ſelves which is due to God, to whom belongs all the praiſe and glory of whatever is good whether in our ſelves or others. But the envious perſon would not only uſurp the honour of what he has already, but is angry that God ſhould divert any other way, or do good to others, for fear it ſhould eclipſe his glory: which is ſo preſumptuous and exorbitant a conceit, that one would wonder it ſhould ever come into the head of any creature.

And as it is inconſiſtent with our ſubmiſſion to God, ſo it is as much with charity to men. The text tells us, that charity envieth not; envy is indeed the perfect reverſe to that great Chriſtian duty, as you may ſee in that deſcription Paul gives of it, 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5, 6. ——Charity ſuffers long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not it ſelf; is not puffed up, doth not behave it ſelf unſeemly, ſeeketh not her own, is not eaſily provok'd, thinketh no evil, &c.——Now if we take the direct contrary to all theſe, we have a full deſcription of the ſin of envy.

Indeed this vice is inconſiſtent with juſtice as well as charity; for juſtice requires that every man ſhould quietly enjoy what is his own, and that we ſhould not ſo much as in our thoughts diſturb his peaceable poſſeſſion of it; but it is much more inconſiſtent with juſtice, if we conſider what are the common outward effects of it. The Apoſtle, as I quoted before, tells us, That where envy is, there is confuſion and every evil work. And I believe if we look abroad and ſee what's done in the world, we ſhall find that many of the murders, contentions, underminings, bitter reflections, libellings, animoſities, and the like, proceed from this ſin of envy. Indeed ſo many ſins as there are, to which pride, and ſelf-love, and ill-nature may carry men, ſo many the envious perſon is in danger of. Not that I think that every man, who may be juſtly charged with this vice, muſt preſently run into all theſe exceſſes: No, there are degrees in this, as in all other ſins; ſuch a degree as may make a man uneaſy in himſelf, may not always be powerful enough to carry him to other ſins; ſuch a degree as may make a man ſlander or defame his neighbour, may not be temptation enough to murder him. It was not a ſmall degree of it, that could perſuade Joſeph's brethren to imbrue their hands in their brother's blood, and yet we ſee that had like to have been done. But pride and ſelf-love, and an invenom'd ſpirit, are very dangerous ſnares, and too apt to carry men through any thing that ſtands in their way.

But if this ſhould not carry us to all theſe exceſſes, yet however it is very contrary to the true ſpirit of the Chriſtian Religion, to that ſpirit of love and humility, and heavenly-mindedneſs, which are the great characters of Chriſt's diſciples; and muſt very much unqualify us for that happy ſtate, where love and joy, joy in God, and joy in each other's happineſs, will be our entertainment to all eternity.

Thus I have ſhew'd you the great unreaſonableſs, and the great ſinfulneſs of this vice. There are ſeveral other conſiderations, which I cannot now tarry to inſiſt upon at large, and therefore ſhall but juſt name them.

The firſt thing I would ſuggeſt is this, That envy ſeems moſt of any vice, to partake of the nature of the Devil: Its his work to make men miſerable, and to delight in it, and to keep as many from being happy as he can; he ſees what condemnation he is under, and by all that we know of his nature and actions, he envies that mankind ſhould be happier than he; and ſince he cannot riſe himſelf, makes it ſome comfort, to bring as many as he can into the ſame ſtate of condemnation.

2. Let us conſider, that the envious perſon is a publick enemy to mankind, not only in that envy is a great diſcouragement to every thing that's good and great, and damps abundance of deſigns very much for the good of the world; but in this chiefly, that he muſt needs wiſh and deſire, that there were none in the world better or happier than himſelf: which is a thing may very juſtly make him hateful both to God and men. It may juſtly make him hateful both to God, as an enemy to his honour, the honour of his gifts, and the honour of doing good; and it may juſtly make him hateful to men, as an enemy to all that is good or great, and of every man's happineſs but his own. What a ſad place would the world be, were it ſuch as he moſt delights to ſee? That is, were there none in it who is better or happier than himſelf.

3. But that which adds to the odiouſneſs of this vice, is, what I would take notice of in the third place; that the trouble of the envious perſon ariſes chiefly from the proſperity or good things of thoſe who are his friends, or acquaintance, or relations, or of the ſame calling or profeſſion with himſelf. The happineſs of a ſtranger is no great eye-ſore to him: As no man is much concerned, who are preferred in Turkey or India, or in other parts remote from us. But if good happens to his acquaintance, or thoſe he moſt converſes with, this ſets envy at work; I ſuppoſe for this reaſon chiefly, becauſe theſe are the perſons he compares himſelf with, and therefore cannot bear that they ſhould be in any reſpect better than himſelf. But this is an inhuman and a barbarous thing, for by this a man is the greateſt enemy to thoſe of his own houſhold, to thoſe he ought chiefly to love, and delight in any good that befals them.

The laſt conſideration I would ſuggeſt at preſent, is this, that if men once give up themſelves to this vice, it is hardly in the power of Providence to cure them by any change in their condition; becauſe let a man have all the advantageous circumſtances that can reaſonably be ſuppoſed to concur in any one perſon, yet if his mind be not changed, he will ſtill have eye-ſores before him; he will find ſome, that in ſomething or other, in ſome endowment of body, or mind, or fortune, will be before him, or at leaſt rival him, which will ſpoil the happineſs of what he has, and very likely make him uneaſy and unthankful as long as he lives. And, indeed, unleſs his mind be changed, what can ſuch a perſon do even in Heaven it ſelf? The more happy any place is, the more matter he is like to find for envy to work upon. If we could ſuppoſe any ſuch perſon to get thither, with the ſame pride and ſelf-love which he now has; he muſt be for ingroſſing the happineſs and glory of that place too, and be diſcontented at the ſight of every ſoul that ſhines brighter than his own, and, if we could, be for turning them out of Heaven, that they may not eclipſe his glory. But this is ſuch an abſurd ſuppoſition, and ſo contrary to the love, and joy, and happineſs of that place, that we may be ſure no ſuch perſon can ever get thither.

Now the beſt means to prevent or cure this vice, is,

Firſt, to endeavour as much as we can to overcome, and get above that narrow principle of ſelf-love, and to raiſe and enlarge our ſouls with the noble principle of univerſal love and charity. The text tells us, that charity envieth not. This will incline us not only to weep with them that weep, that is, to commiſerate the afflictions of our neighbours, and to do what we can to relieve and make them eaſy: but alſo to rejoice with them that rejoice, to be pleaſed and joyful at the good things that befal them. This latter, though it does not ſo commonly go under the name of charity as the former, yet is as certainly the effect of true love to our neighbour, and as much our duty, and I doubt more hard to be practiſed. The truth is, that charity to the poor is not ſo certain a ſign of true love, as charity to the rich and great, if I may ſo expreſs it, to thoſe that thrive and proſper in the world more than we do. When we give our money to the poor, to thoſe that are below us, and humble themſelves to us, it is an act of ſuperiority; and there may be ſomething in it beſides love to our neighbour, which gratifies a paſſion that ſticks very cloſe to us: And therefore Paul ſuppoſes that a man may give All his goods to feed the poor, and yet not have charity. True charity is to be pleaſed with the happineſs of our neighbour, to do what lies in us to make him happy, and to rejoice if Providence has made him ſo without our aſſiſtance: This is the truly charitable temper, and is, indeed, a temper of ſoul truly noble and generous, very pleaſing to the bountiful Creator of the world; who is delighted with the happineſs of his creatures, and is never better pleaſed with us, than when he ſees us imitate this Divine perfection.

2. The next thing I would adviſe, is, that we endeavour fully to poſſeſs our hearts with the ſenſe of this great truth, that it is God that governs the world, and who aſſigns to every man his proper rank and ſtation, and condition in it; and that therefore it becomes us, who are poor depending creatures, to ſubmit with modeſty and cheerfulneſs to whatever he ſhall pleaſe to order, both with reſpect to our ſelves and others, and not ſo much as in our thoughts to murmur or repine at it. Whatever ſeeming inequalities there may be in the diſpenſations of Providence, yet we ought to take for granted, that an All-wiſe God has wiſe reaſons for whatever he ſhall think fit to order, and that he is not bound to acquaint us with them: However, that he is a great Lord, the abſolute Proprietor both of us, and of every thing in the world; and can diſpoſe as he pleaſes with his own, and that it muſt be the higheſt preſumption for us to think to controul him in it. Whenever, therefore, we meet with any thing of this kind, that begins to diſturb us, let us overlook all inferior cauſes, and look up to God, and ſay to our ſelves, It is the Lord, let him do what ſeemeth him good. This thought will tend very much to quiet us under all his diſpenſations, both to our ſelves and others; and I believe, that there is nothing ſo likely to engage God to favour us, and to do us good, as ſuch a ſubmiſſion of ſoul to him.

. The laſt advice I would give, is, that we would endeavour, from the great conſiderations of the other world, to mortify all our inordinate appetites to any thing in this, eſpecially that we would endeavour to free our ſouls from pride and vain glory and ambition, and covetouſneſs, which are the great ſources of this ſin of envy. To this end, let us often conſider, that this world is not the place that muſt finally determine our happineſs or miſery; that be our condition never ſo good or ſo great here, we muſt quickly leave it, and be it never ſo bad, that alſo muſt ſoon have an end; and that we muſt all enter upon a new unchangeable ſtate, where all theſe things will ſignify nothing.

Let us ſometimes, in order to help our meditations in this matter, caſt our eyes back upon all the ages of mankind; and let us conſider a little what was the paſt, and what is the preſent condition of all thoſe that have lived before us; that on the one ſide all the great monarchs, and great ſtateſmen, the rich and the mighty, the learned and the wiſe, that were thought happy by the world, and perhaps thought themſelves ſo. Theſe are all now dead and gone, deprived for ever of all thoſe things for which they were valued or envied here, and not ſo much as the name of one in a thouſand of them remains behind; and on the other ſide all the poor and the miſerable, the ſlaves and the beggars are dead too, and are entred upon that ſtate, Where the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and where the weary are at reſt, where the priſoners reſt together, they hear not the voice of the oppreſſor, the ſmall and the great are there, and the ſervant is free from his maſter.

Theſe are all now divided into two great ranks, the good and the bad, and therefore the happy and the miſerable. Thoſe of them who took care to pleaſe God, and to improve the condition he had placed them in, whether it were high or low, are now aſſigned to thoſe happy manſions, which the great Creator of the world provided for them upon their leaving the body; but thoſe of them who forgot God, and took more care to pleaſe themſelves than to pleaſe him, are now reſerved unto chains of darkneſs to the Judgment of the Great Day.

We are at preſent in the condition of neither of theſe; yet we cannot but be ſenſible, that we are haſtening apace towards it, and muſt all, in a little time, one after another, enter upon it; and then it will be with us as it is now with them, we ſhall be quite inſenſible of all the conveniences or inconveniences of this preſent ſtate, as if we had died a thouſand years ago; and muſt enter upon that new eternal ſtate, either good or bad, which the great Judge of the world ſhall aſſign us to, according as we have behaved our ſelves here.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Prophecy is commended, 2, 3, 4 and preferred before ſpeaking with tongues, 6 by a compariſon drawn from muſical inſtruments. 12 Both muſt be referred to edification, 22 as to their true and proper end. 26 The true uſe of each is taught, 29 and the abuſe taxed. 34 Women are forbidden to ſpeak in the Church.

FOllow after charity, and deſire ſpiritual gifts, but rather that ye may propheſy.

2 For he that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, ſpeaketh not unto men, but unto God: for no man underſtandeth him; howbeit in the ſpirit he ſpeaketh myſteries.

3 But he that propheſieth, ſpeaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort.

4 He that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, edifieth himſelf: but he that propheſieth, edifieth the church.

5 I would that ye all ſpake with tongues, but rather that ye propheſied: for greater is he that propheſieth, than he that ſpeaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying.

6 Now, brethren, if I come unto you ſpeaking with tongues, what ſhall I profit you, except I ſhall ſpeak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by propheſying, or by doctrine?

7 And even things without life giving ſound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a diſtinction in the ſounds, how ſhall it be known what is piped or harped?

8 For if the trumpet give an uncertain ſound, who ſhall prepare himſelf to the battle?

9 So likewiſe you, except ye utter by the tongue words eaſy to be underſtood, how ſhall it be known what is ſpoken? for ye ſhall ſpeak into the air.

10 There are, it may be, ſo many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without ſignification.

11 Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I ſhall be unto him that ſpeaketh, a barbarian; and he that ſpeaketh ſhall be a barbarian unto me.

12 Even ſo ye, foraſmuch as ye are zealous of ſpiritual gifts, ſeek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

13 Wherefore let him that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, pray that he may interpret.

14 For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my ſpirit prayeth, but my underſtanding is unfruitful.

15 What is it then? I will pray with the ſpirit, and I will pray with the underſtanding alſo: I will ſing with the ſpirit, and I will ſing with the underſtanding alſo.

16 Elſe when thou ſhalt bleſs with the ſpirit, how ſhall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned, ſay Amen at thy giving of thanks, ſeeing he underſtandeth not what thou ſayeſt?

17 For thou verily giveſt thanks well, but the other is not edified.

18 I thank my God, I ſpeak with tongues more than you all:

19 Yet in the church I had rather ſpeak five words with my underſtanding, that by my voice I might teach others alſo, than ten thouſand words in an unknown tongue.

20 Brethren, be not children in underſtanding: howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in underſtanding be men.

21 In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips, will I ſpeak unto this people: and yet for all that will they not hear me, ſaith the Lord.

22 Wherefore tongues are for a ſign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but propheſying ſerveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all ſpeak with tongues, and there come in thoſe that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not ſay that ye are mad?

24 But if all propheſy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all:

25 And thus are the ſecrets of his heart made manifeſt; and ſo falling down on his face, he will worſhip God, and report that God is in you of a truth.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a pſalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done to edifying.

27 If any man ſpeak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the moſt by three, and that by courſe; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no interpreter, let him keep ſilence in the church; and let him ſpeak to himſelf and to God.

29 Let the prophets ſpeak two or three, and let the other judge.

30 If any thing be revealed to another that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his peace.

31 For ye may all propheſy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 And the ſpirits of the prophets are ſubject to the prophets.

33 For God is not the author of confuſion, but of peace, as in all churches of the ſaints.

34 Let your women keep ſilence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to ſpeak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as alſo ſaith the law.

35 And if they will learn any thing, let them aſk their husbands at home: for it is a ſhame for women to ſpeak in the church.

36 What? came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only?

37 If any man think himſelf to be a prophet, or ſpiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Wherefore, brethren, covet to propheſy, and forbid not to ſpeak with tongues.

40 Let all things be done decently, and in order.

In this chapter the Apoſtle ſhews the right uſe of ſpiritual gifts, poſitively (as he had done negatively before in ch. xii.) That they muſt be uſed for edification; and conſequently, that they muſt ſhun ſuch a uſe of them as may be an hindrance thereto. Wherein,

I. He ſpeaks concerning the language to be uſed in publick aſſemblies; beginning with an exhortation to a purſuit of propheſying rather than other gifts, ver. 1. and then giving a compariſon between propheſying and the gift of tongues, where he ſhews the unprofitableneſs of the one, and the profitableneſs of the other, in that (1.) one is not underſtood; the other ſpeaks to edification, ver. 2, 3. (2.) One edifies himſelf only, the other the Church alſo, ver. 4. amplified by his wiſh in this caſe, with the reaſon, ver. 5. (3.) They would not like ſuch a practice in him, becauſe it would be unprofitable, ver. 6. (4.) The unprofitableneſs of ſpeaking with languages, is ſhewn by a compariſon taken from muſical inſtruments, ver. 7, 8, 9. (5.) It renders men barbarians one to another, ver. 10, 11. Then

He concludes this part, (by way of exhortation) to labour for ſuch gifts as are for edification, ver. 12. To which he ſubjoins

An exhortation (by way of inference from the foregoing diſcourſe) to him that ſpeaks in an unknown tongue, to endeavour to interpret, ver. 13. enforced by ſeveral motives and reaſons. (1.) The unfruitfulneſs of ſuch an exerciſe, ver. 14. amplified by his reſolution to practiſe accordingly, ver. 15. (2.) otherwiſe the unlearned cannot give an underſtanding aſſent, ver. 16. (3.) He cannot be edified, ver. 17. (4.) His own example, ver. 18, 19. Therefore

He exhorts them not to be ſo deſirous of the gift of tongues, ver. 20. (1.) Becauſe it is moſt proper for unbelievers illuſtrated by the contrary, that propheſying is chiefly for believers, ver. 22. (3.) To infidels it has a reſemblance of madneſs, ver. 23. illuſtrated by the contrary benefit of propheſying, the conviction and converſion of unbelievers, ver. 24, 25.

II. Concerning the number of ſpeakers, he lays down ſeveral rules, as (1.) that all be done to edifying, ver. 26. (2.) That they ſpeak in courſe. (3.) That one interpret, or elſe to keep ſilence, ver. 27, 28. (4.) That they ſpeak but two or three at one exerciſe, ver. 29.

III. Concerning order and method they were to obſerve, as (1.) that the ordinary miniſter ſhould give way to the extraordinary, ver. 30. (2.) That the ordinary give place to one another by turns, ver. 31. (3.) That they ſubmit their doctrine to the cenſure and direction of others, ver. 32. amplified by reaſon, ver. 33.

IV. Concerning the perſons ſpeaking, including (1.) a prohibition of womens ſpeaking, either by way of teaching or learning, ver. 34. (2.) A direction for them to learn of their husbands at home, ver. 35.

V. The concluſion of this ſubject; wherein we find (1.) a ſharp reproof of them for their pride and abuſe of their ſpiritual gifts, ver. 36. (2.) An eſtabliſhment of the authority of theſe injunctions and directions, ver. 37. (3.) A ſlighting of the contentious, ver. 38. (4.) A repetition of the exhortation concerning Prophecy, ver. 39. (5.) A general rule for all their publick adminiſtrations, ver. 40.

Ver. 2.— For he that ſpeaketh in an unknown tongue, ſpeaketh not unto men, &c.] You may obſerve from the preceding Analyſis, that this former part of the chapter is taken up in ordering the language which ought to be uſed in the ſervice of the Church of Corinth. It appears as if the Corinthian ſchiſmaticks had introduced the Hebrew tongue inſtead of the Greek, the intelligible language of the place, which Paul here blames, and orders them, and in them, all Churches to pray in a language which the people underſtand. Therefore, I ſhall, by way of Diſſertation, confute the Latin Service, which the Church of Rome obliges all her diſciples to uſe, whether they underſtand it or no.

A Diſſertation on a ſervice in an unknown tongue.

The ſtate of the queſtion touching the performance of Publick Service in Latin, where it is not underſtood by the common people.

The Trent Council hath determined, that "albeit the maſs containeth great inſtruction of the faithful people, yet doth it not ſeem expedient to the fathers that it ſhould every where be celebrated in the vulgar tongue: Wherefore the ancient cuſtom of every Church being every where retained, and the cuſtom approved by the Romiſh Church, which is the mother and miſtreſs of all Churches, leſt the ſheep of Chriſt ſhould hunger, and the little ones deſire bread, and there be none to break it to them, the holy ſynod commands paſtors, and all that have the care of ſouls, by themſelves, or others, whilſt the maſs is celebrated, to expound ſomewhat of that which in the maſs is read." Seſſ. 22. c. 8. Where,

1. Obſerve, that the cuſtom then uſed, and approved by the Romiſh Church, and other Churches then ſubject to her, was that of celebrating maſs in Latin only, ſo that this council doth in effect decree, that every where the cuſtom of celebrating maſs only in the Latin tongue, ſhould be retained in the whole Weſtern Church.

2. Obſerve, that not only the leſſons are read, but alſo all the prayers and praiſes which are uſed in the publick ſervice of the Church of Rome, are ſaid in Latin, that is, in a tongue no where vulgarly underſtood, the cuſtom therefore of performing the whole publick ſervice of that Church in Latin, muſt be that cuſtom, which by this definition of the Trent Council is to be retained.

3. Obſerve, that it is confeſſed by theſe fathers that the maſs contains matter of great inſtruction to the faithful people; ſo that were it celebrated in a tongue known unto them, it would certainly miniſter great inſtruction to them, when pronounced audibly; it is alſo certain, that the maſs celebrated in ſo low a voice, as it is not poſſible they ſhould hear it, as a great part of it is, and in a tongue unknown to the vulgar, who moſt need inſtruction, (as the Latin is to the generality of them) can miniſter no inſtruction to them. Theſe fathers therefore muſt be ſuppoſed to determine.

That it was inexpedient to celebrate the maſs to the people, ſo as that it might miniſter great inſtruction to them, and that they judged it better ſo to celebrate it, as that to them, who did moſt need it, it could miniſter no inſtruction.

So far are the Jeſuit Fiſher and Dr. Vane from miſrepreſenting their Church, when they tell us that "the drift of the Church in appointing Liturgies, or ſet forms of publick prayer, and readings in the maſs, was not for the peoples inſtruction, ſo Vane; (Vane p. 35.) and that the drift of the Church in appointing Liturgies at the oblation of the Euchariſtical ſacrifice, was not the peoples inſtruction, but for other reaſons;" ſo Fiſher. See White, p. 374.

In the 9th canon of that Seſſion it is thus decreed, If any man ſay that the cuſtom of the Romiſh Church, which recites part of the canon, and the words of conſecration with a low voice, is to be condemned, or that the maſs ought to be celebrated only in the vulgar tongue, let him be Anathema.

In oppoſition to theſe decrees, and the concurring practice of the Church of Rome, the Church of England hath declared, That it is a thing plainly repugnant to the word of God, and the cuſtom of the primitive Church, to have publick prayer in the Church, or to miniſter the ſacraments in a tongue not underſtanded of the people, Art. 24.

The homily concerning Common Prayer and Sacraments, beareth this title. An homily wherein is declared that Common Prayer and Sacraments ought to be miniſtred in a tongue that is underſtood of the hearers, Book of Homilies, p. 133. In the body of the homily it is aſſerted, p. 137. that of neceſſity it is required that the Common Prayer be had in a tongue that the hearers do underſtand. And that ſhould we adminiſter it otherwiſe, we ſhould by that means bring all our Church Exerciſes to frivolous ſuperſtition, and make them altogether unfruitful, ibid. At the entrance upon this queſtion the enquiry, p. 136. runs thus, Let us ſee whether the Scriptures, and examples of the primitive Church will allow any vocal prayer, or any manner of Sacrament, or other publick or common rite or action pertaining to the profit and edifying of the unlearned, to be miniſtred in a tongue unknown, or not underſtood of the miniſter or the people; to which queſtion, ſaith the homily, we muſt anſwer, No; and it ends thus, p. 140. Let us therefore conclude with God, and all good mens aſſent, that no Common Prayer, or Sacraments ought to be miniſtred in a tongue that is not underſtod of the hearers.

Now that it may be evident to all indifferent perſons, how repugnant is that eſtabliſhed practice of the Church of Rome, to the avowed practice of the Church of Chriſt for many ages, confirmed by Scripture, and by reaſon. I ſhall endeavour to demonſtrate.

"1. That the publick ſervice of ſinging, praying, reading, was for the firſt ſix centuries, and more, performed by the Church of God, in a tongue underſtood by the people.

2. That the fathers do expreſly teach, that it was neceſſary that the publick ſervice of prayer, ſinging and reading ſhould be ſo performed.

3. That they condemned the contrary practice of celebrating the publick worſhip in a tongue not underſtood by the common people, as oppoſite unto the word of God, and to the ends for which the publick ſervice was appointed."

That the publick ſervice of ſinging, praying, reading was for the firſt ſix centuries, and more, performed by the Church of Chriſt in a tongue underſtood by the people, is ſo extremely evident, that divers learned Romaniſts confeſs the thing, or at the leaſt do in the general acknowledge, that the practice of the primitive Church was ſuitable to what the Proteſtants do practiſe and contend for.

John Beleth ſaith, It was forbidden in the primitive Church that any man ſhould ſpeak in an unknown tongue, unleſs there were ſome body to interpret. Hence that laudable cuſtom obtained in ſome parts of the Church, that the Goſpel being pronounced according to the letter, it was preſently expounded in the vulgar tongue. Sum. de div. offic. in proem.

Eraſmus in his Book de Modo Orando ſaith, It were much to be deſired, that the whole Divine Service were ſaid in a language underſtood by all the people, as it was wont to be practiſed in ancient times, p. 64 and 70.

Caſſander in his Liturgicks, c. 28, and 36. ſaith, that the ancients did ſo read the canonical prayer, and eſpecially the conſecration of the body and blood of our Lord, that the people might underſtand and ſay Amen to them, and that they both read and prayed in a tongue underſtood by the people, he proves by teſtimonies of a much later date than I aſſign.

We deny not, ſaith Johannes Hoffmeiſterus, (Com. in 1 ad Cor. p. 272.) but that the publick prayers in the Church were for a long time celebrated in the vulgar tongue. He adds, that in the time of Chryſoſtom, the ſolemn publick prayers were made in the vulgar tongue, that ſo the Chriſtian people might imitate in their minds the prayer of the prieſt. And indeed the words of Chryſoſtom upon the ſubject are a convincing demonſtration that in his time this practice every where obtained. For, ſaith he, in the prayers you may obſerve the people introducing many things together with the prieſt, for the prayers which are made for the Energoumenoi, the penitents, are common to the prieſt and to the people, and they all ſay the ſame prayer. Again, when we drive from the Sacred Curtains them that partake not of the Holy Table, another prayer is to be made, and then we all do in like manner fall down upon the pavement, and do all riſe up again. Our thankſgivings are alſo common, for neither doth the prieſt give thanks alone, but all the people with him. In 2 Ep. ad Cor. Hom. 18. p. 647. Ed. Savil.

Nor is it to be wondred that men of learning, who had peruſed the writings of the ancient fathers, ſhould thus ingenuouſly confeſs, that which is with ſuch frequency and plainneſs delivered by them, that he who runs may read it: For Juſtin Martyr, who lived in the ſecond century, declareth, that it was the cuſtom of the Chriſtians, when any perſon was baptized, to bring him to their aſſemblies, where they were gathered together putting up common prayers for themſelves, for the baptized perſon, and for all others throughout the world with an attentive mind. And the ſame perſon deſcribing the Chriſtians Sundays exerciſe, ſpeaks thus; "We come together all into one place, and hear the writings of the Prophets and Apoſtles read unto us, and when the reader hath performed his part, the preſident of the aſſembly exhorts us to the imitation and practice of the good things read. This being done, we all riſe up together, and pour forth our ſupplications, and when we ceaſe from praying, the bread and wine is brought, which the preſident taking, gives praiſe and glory to God the Father by the Son and Holy Ghoſt. Which prayers and thankſgivings he having finiſhed, all the people approve of them, by ſaying, Amen. And the prieſt having finiſhed his thankſgiving, and all the people having ſignified their approbation of it, the deacons proceed to diſtribute, &c." Apol. 2. p. 97, 98. From which paſſages it is evident, that all the Chriſtians then aſſembled did pray together, that they thus prayed with a mind intent upon the things which they petitioned for, ſaith the Latin; that all the Chriſtians preſent did approve of, or ſignify their conſent unto the prayers and the thankſgivings of the preſident, by ſaying Amen to them, which ſaith Paul, 1 Cor. xiv. 16. the man who underſtandeth not theſe prayers, and theſe thankſgivings, cannot do; they therefore all did underſtand them, becauſe they all confirmed them with their approbation, or wiſhing, ſo be it. And whoſoever will conſult even the moſt ancient forms of Liturgy, and compare them with the account this Martyr gives us of the joint practice of the Chriſtians of his age, cannot doubt but that the Chriſtians joined in, and underſtood the prayers mentioned by the apologiſt.

For whereas Juſtin M. ſaith, that when any one declared his belief of what the Chriſtians taught, and promiſed to live accordingly, the Chriſtians faſted and prayed together with him, Apol. 2. p. 93. The conſtitutions Apoſtolical declare in like manner, that before the prayer for the perſon to be baptized, the Deacon ſaid to the faithful thus, Let us all who are faithful pray earneſtly for them, that the Lord would make them worthy, who by baptiſm are initiated into the death of Chriſt, to riſe with him, and to be made partakers of his kingdom; l. 8. c. 7.

Whereas Juſtin adds, that when ſuch perſons are baptized the Chriſtians aſſembled, put up common prayers for themſelves, for the baptized, and for all throughout the world; ibid. c. 10. the prayer for the faithful, extant in thoſe Conſtitutions, ſhews this punctually true: For there they are ſaid to pray for the Holy Catholic Church in general, and for her ſeveral members, for the newly baptized perſons in particular, and for thoſe that were without; and that the people underſtood, and joined in this prayer is plain from theſe words uttered by the Deacon, to prepare them ſo to do. Let all the faithful kneel, let us pray to God through Jeſus Chriſt, let us all earneſtly, (or, with one voice) call upon God through his Chriſt; cap. 9.

And laſtly, Whereas Juſtin adds, that the prayers and thankſgivings made by the preſident, concluded with the approbation and Amen of all the faithful. Theſe Conſtitutions ſhew that the laity had their ſhare in thoſe prayers and praiſes, that they uſed the ſame reſponſes which are in our Liturgy in the conſecration of the Sacrament, that they all ſaid together, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hoſts, &c. cap. 11. that they all anſwered Amen, cap. 12. p. 349. at the concluſion of the prayer. So that it cannot in the leaſt be doubted, but that in thoſe times the faithful underſtood the ſenſe and meaning of thoſe prayers in which the Deacon called upon them to join with ſo much earneſtneſs and devotion.

Clemens of Alexandria is a ſecond witneſs of this age, that in his time the Church of Chriſt uſed a language known to the faithful in her publick offices: For giving an account of the altars of Chriſtians, he ſaith, Stro. 7. p. 717. A. that the terreſtrial altar of the Chriſtians is the aſſembly of them who join in prayers, having as it were one voice, and one mind, or ſentence. That there may be properly ſaid to be in the Church σύμπνοια, one breath, or one conſent, for the ſacrifices of the Church is the word that doth aſcend as incenſe from holy ſouls, their whole minds together with their ſacrifice, being diſcloſed to God. But the Heathens, ſaith he, will not believe us when we tell them, that the truly holy altar is the juſt ſoul, and that an holy prayer is the incenſe which aſcends up from it, ibid. p. 717. And again, The ſacrifices we offer to God muſt not be ſumptuous but acceptable to him, and the incenſe compoſed in the law, viz. that of prayer, compoſed of many tongues and voices, or rather of divers nations and cuſtoms, p. 719. Now, how can they be properly ſaid to have one mind, or ſentence, or properly even to join in prayer, who do not know the meaning of each others prayers? How can it truly be affirmed that there is σύμπνοια ἐν ἐκκλησία, a conſent, or as it were, a breathing together of the Church in prayer which moſt of them underſtand not? How can that prayer be ſaid to aſcend from holy ſouls, and be a diſcloſure of the mind to God, of which the mind has no conception, becauſe no underſtanding? Why muſt men be gathered together for praiſes with a pure mind, ib. why muſt they pray with many tongues and voices, if they may pray as well in a tongue barbarous and unknown?

Add to this the teſtimony of his ſucceſſor Origen, who lived in the 3d cent. which will give light unto it, who to the accuſation of Celſus, that the Chriſtians aſcribed virtue to barbarous names, thus anſwers, "Let him ſhew whom we name barbarouſly as calling upon him for help; No, ſaith he, Celſus here vainly objects theſe things to us, and unreaſonably applies that to Chriſtians which belongs to others, for we Chriſtians do not ſo much as uſe in our prayers the Scripture names recorded there by God; but the Greeks (in their prayers) uſe the Greek, the Romans the Latin tongue, and ſo every one of us prays to God according to his own dialect, and celebrates his praiſes as he can, and he who is Lord of all dialects hears them praying in every tongue, hearing them as if it were one voice manifeſted from divers tongues according to the things ſignified by them: For the great God is not one who hath choſen one tongue, Greek, or barbarous, before others, as either not knowing, or not regarding what was ſpoken to him in other languages;" lib. cont. Celſ. p. 402. ſo certain is it, that this ancient rite of every Church, as the Trent Council calls their Latin Service, was not yet come into the Church of Chriſt.

Tertullian in his Apology gives this account of the Chriſtian Aſſemblies, We meet together, that with our prayers we may encompaſs God as with a band of men; c. 39. now that this band of men all underſtood all the things they prayed for, we learn from what elſewhere he teacheth, that prayer muſt be our reaſonable ſervice, de orat. c. 12. that it muſt be free from all confuſion of mind, and ſent from ſuch a ſpirit as is that ſpirit to whom it is directed, c. 10. and who looks upon, and hearkeneth not to the voice, but to the heart, c. 13. For ſure that ſervice cannot be duly ſtiled rational in which the reaſon bears no part, there can be no intention, or freedom from confuſion in that prayer, where there is no perception of what things are pray'd for, nor can the heart join with the voice in ſuch petitions.

Cyprian ſaith, Ed. Ox. p. 140. that when we come together with our brethren, and celebrate Divine Sacrifices with the Prieſt of God, we muſt be like to Anna, who ſpake not with her voice, but with her heart; becauſe, as he had learned from his maſter Tertullian, God is the hearer not of the voice, but of the heart. He adds, p. 152. that we muſt watch, and apply our ſelves to prayer with our whole hearts, that the heart then muſt think of nothing but what it prays for. And that we may be ſure he ſpeaks this of the publick ſervice of the Church, He adds, that for this end the prieſt, before they betake themſelves to prayers, prepares the mind of the brethren by ſaying, Lift up your hearts; and when the people anſwer, we lift them up unto the Lord; they thereby are admoniſhed, that they ought then to think of nothing but the Lord; as conſidering, that then we ſpeak to God. And of this we ought to be more careful, becauſe the enemy oft diverts our minds from God, ſo that we have one thing in our hearts, another in our mouth; whereas, it is not the ſound of the voice, but our mind and ſenſe which with ſincere intention ought to pray to God; ibid.

Athanaſius in the 4th cent. informs us, that when his Church was beſet with the army of Syrianus, he commanded the Deacon to recite that pſalm, For his mercy endureth for ever; and the people to hearken to it. And he declares, that it is beſt for the people to meet together in a place capable of them all, becauſe this ſhews the concord of their ſouls, and will the ſooner procure audience; for if according to our Saviour's promiſe, where two concur in one petition, it ſhall be granted; how much more, when there is one voice of ſo great a multitude ſaying Amen? Apol. ad Conſtant. p. 683.

Baſil in his Epiſtle to the Clergy of Neocæſarea, who were incenſed againſt him and his Monks, upon ſuſpicion that they had changed the ancient way of pſalms and melody, Ep. 63. p. 95. returns this anſwer; p. 96. that the way they uſed was conſonant to the cuſtom of all the Churches of God. For the people riſing by night, go to the houſe of prayer, making confeſſion to God with affliction, and with a confluence of tears; then riſing up from prayers, they fall to ſinging, ſometimes alternately, then ſtrengthning their meditations of the oracles, and moving themſelves to attention, and undiſtractedneſs of heart; at other times permitting one to begin the melody, the reſt ſing after him; and ſo betwixt praying and ſinging they divide the night. And the day dawning, we all in common, as from one mouth and heart, offer a pſalm of confeſſion to God, every one making the penitential words his own; And if, ſaith he, you avoid us for theſe things, you muſt fly alſo the Egyptians, both the Libyas, thoſe of Thebes, Paleſtine, Arabia, Phœnicia, Syria, and them that dwell near Euphrates; and in a word, all by whom prayers, and vigils, and pſalmodies are prized, ib.
